WALES is bounded on all sides with the Sea, except towards England, on the East; from which separated by the river Dee, and a line drawn to the River Wie. Anciently it extended Eastwards to the River Severn, till the puissance of Offa, the great King of the Mercians, the Welch or Britans were driven out of the plain Countries beyond that River, aud forced to betake themselves to the Mountains: where he caused them to be shut up and divided from England, by an huge Ditch, called in Welch, Claudh Offa; i. e. Offa's Dike: Which Dike beginning at the influx of the Wie, into the Severn, not far from Chepstow; extendeth 84 miles in length, even as far as Chester, where the Dee is mingled with the Sea. Concerning which Ditch, there was a Law made by Harald, That if any Welchman was found with a weapon on this side of it, he should have his right hand cut off by the Kings Officers.

The name of Wales some derive from Idwallo, the Son of Cadwallader, who with the small remainder of his British Subjects, made good the fastnesses of this Countrey, and was the first who had the title of King of Wales. Others conceive that the name of Welch, and Wales, was given them by the Saxons: who having possessed themselves of all the rest of the Countrey, called the Britans, who lived here, by the name of Walsh, which in their language signifieth as much as Aliens; because they differed from them both in Laws, and Language: which is the general Opinion. Most probable it is, that as the Britans derive their Pedigree from the Gals (as before was proved) so they might still retain the name; and were called Wallish by the Saxons, instead of Gallish: the Saxons using in most words W. for G. as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and the like. And this to be believed the rather, because the Frenchmen to this day, call the Countrey Galles; and the Eldest Son of England, Le Prince de Galles: as also that the Dutch or Germans (of whom the Saxons are a part) do call such Nations as inhabit on the skirts of France, by the name of Wallons.

The antient Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, before it had the name of Wales, were the Silures, possessing the Counties of Hereford, Brecknock, Radnor, Monmouth, and Glamorgan, all Glocester-

Glocesterſhire beyond the Severn, and the South parts of Worceſterſhire on the ſame ſide alſo: their chief Towns, Ariconium, now Hereford, (not reckoned ſince the time of Offa as a part of Wales;) Balleum, now Buelth, in Brecknock; Gobannium, now Abargevenny, in Monmouth; Magni, now New Radnor, in the County ſo named; and Bovium, now Boverton, in Glamorgan. 2 The Dimetæ, poſſeſſing Cardigan, Caermarthen; and Pembrokeſhires, whoſe chief Towns were, Loventium, now New-Caſtle, in Caermarthen; Maridunum, or Caermarthen it ſelf: and Octopitæ, where now ſtands S. Davids, by the Welch called Menew, whence that Biſhop hath the name of Menevenſis in Latine. 3 The Ordovices, inhabiting the Counties of Merioneth, Carnarvon, Angleſey, Denbigh, Flint, and Montgomery; with the North part of Worceſterſhire beyond the River Severn, and all Shropſhire, on the ſame ſide of the River. Their chief Towns were, Segontium, now Caer Seont, in Carnarvonſhire; Cononium, now Conwey, in the ſame County; Bonium, where after ſtood the famous Monaſtery of Banchor, in Flintſhire; and Mediolanium, now Llanvillin, in the County of Montgomery. By theſe three Nations was all that tract poſſeſſed, which lyeth on the other ſide of the Severn, A very ſtout and hardy people, and ſo impatient of the yoke, that two of the three Legions which the Romans kept conſtantly in Britain, as before is ſaid, were planted in and neer theſe people, the better to contain them in due obedience: that is to ſay, the ſecond Legion at Caer Leon upon Uſk, of which more anon; and the twentieth at Deuvana, where now ſtands Weſt Cheſter. So difficult a thing it was to make this Nation ſubject to the power of Rome; and no leſs difficult to bring them under the command of the Saxons: whom they withſtood, when all the reſt of Britain had been conquered by them; and lived to ſee their Victors overcome by the Normans, before themſelves had yeelded to a forrain yoke. Wales.

The Chriſtian Faith planted amongſt the Britans, in the time of Lucius, they ſtill retained, when all the reſidue of the Iſland had been relapſed to Paganiſm: and they retained it not in ſecret, as afraid to own it, but in a well conſtituted Church. Inſomuch that Auguſtine the Monk, when he firſt preached the Goſpel to the Engliſh Saxons, found here no fewer than ſeven Biſhops; that is to ſay, Herefordenſis, Tavenſis, Paternenſis, Banchorenſis, Elwienſis, Wiccienſis, and Morganenſis, (or rather Menevenſis): all which, excepting only Paternenſis, do ſtill remain amongſt us, though in other names, Hereford and Worceſter (Wiccienſis) reckoned now in England; S. Davids or Menevenſis, Tavenſis or Landaff, Bangor, and Elwyenſis or S. Aſaph, in Wales, according to the preſent boundaries and limits of it: And as they did retain the Faith, ſo they retained it after the tradition of their Predeceſſors; neither ſubmitting unto Auguſtine as Archbiſhop of Canterbury, nor to the Pope from whom he came, as Oecumenical, or chief Paſtor of the Church of Chriſt; nor receiving any new doctrines or traditions from them: but ſtanding on thoſe principles of Liberty, and Religion, which they were poſſeſſed of; till all the world almoſt had yeelded to that powerful See. Not manumitted from the vaſſalage and thraldom to it, till they embraced the Reformation of the Church of England, in Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Worſhip: the Liturgy whereof was by the command of Queen Elizabeth, tranſlated into the Welch or Britiſh; as the Bible alſo was by vertue of an Act of Parliament in the fifth of that Queen; the care thereof committed to the Biſhop of Hereford, and the four Biſhops of Wales. But becauſe the Bible then ſet forth was only in the large Church volume; it was in the beginning of the Reign of King Charles reduced to a more portable Bulk, at the coſt and charge of my Couſin Mr. Rowland Heylyn, one of the Aldermen of London; who alſo cauſed the book called The Practice of Piety to be printed in that language for the inſtruction of the People; and a Welch or Britiſh Dictionary to be made and publiſhed, for the underſtanding of the Language.

But to return unto the Church, and affairs thereof, for the better ordering of the ſame, it hath been long ago divided into four Dioceſes (beſides that of Hereford) for the exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; thoſe Dioceſes ſubdivided into 9 Archdeaconries, as before in England: all ſubject heretofore to their own Primate or Archbiſhop, reſiding in the City of Iſca Silurum, the Metropolis of the Province of Britannia Secunda; called by the Welch or Britans, Caer Leon, or the City of the Legion, from the ſecond Legion fixt there for defence of the Province; and Caer-Leon upon Uſk, becauſe ſituate on the River ſo named. But this City being too much expoſed to the fury of the Saxons, the Archiepiſcopal See was tranſlated to Menew, ſtanding on a Promontory in the extreme Angle of Pembrokeſhire, by David then Archbiſhop thereof, and neer of kin to Arthur that renowned King of the Britans: from whom, in tract of time, the name of Menew being left off, the See and City came to be called S. Davids. From David unto Samſon, tha 26 Archbiſhop of the Welch, (being above 400 years) did they hold this dignity: but then the Peſtilence extremely raging in theſe parts, Archbiſhop Samſon caried with him the Epiſcopal Pall, and therewith the dignity it ſelf, to Dole in Bretagne. After which time we hear of no Archbiſhop in Wales, in name and title, though the power proper thereunto ſtill remained amongſt them: the Welch Biſhops acknowledging no other Primate, nor receiving conſecration from any other hands, than their own Biſhop of S. Davids; till Biſhop Bernard was compelled to ſubmit himſelf to the power and juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the time of King Henry the firſt.

But it's time to look upon the face of the Countrey as it ſtands at the preſent, which we find mountainous and barren; not able to maintain its people, but by helps elſewhere. To make amends for which defect, there were ſome Silver mines diſcovered in it not long ſince, by Sir Hugh Middleton, Knight and Baronet; not only to the great honor of his own Countrey, but to the profit and renown of the whole Iſland of Great Britain. Their chief commodities are courſe Clothes, entituled commonly by the name of Welch Freeze, and Cottons; which Merchandiſe was heretofore brought to Oſweſtre (the Wales. (the furtheſt Town of Shropſhire) as the common Emporie; and there bought by the Merchants of Shrewſbury. But the Welch coveting to draw the Staple more into their own Countrey, occaſioned the Merchant to hold off from buying their commodities: till in the end the Merchant got the better of them, and inforced them to ſettle the whole trade at Shrewſbury, where it ſtill continueth.

To ſpeak of Mountains in a Countrey which is wholly mountainous, were a thing unneceſſary: yet of moſt note are thoſe of 1 Snowdon, 2 Brechin, 3 Rarduvaure, and 4 Plinlimmon. Not much obſervable but for their vaſt height, and thoſe many notable Rivers which iſſue from them. The principal whereof are, 1 Dee, in Latine called Deva, ariſing out of Rarduvaure hils in Merionethſhire; and running into the Sea not far from Cheſter. Over this River Edgar King of England was rowed triumphantly in his Barge, by eight inferior Kings, Vaſſals and Tributaries to him, that is to ſay, Kenneth King of the Scots, Maleolm King of Cumberland, Mac-cuis King of the Iſles, Dufwall, Gryffith, Howel, Jago, and Indethel, Princes or Kings of Wales: uſing theſe words to ſuch as attended on him, that then his Succeſſors might call themſelves Kings of England, when they did the like. This was in the year 973, and the laſt of his reign. 2 Wie, in Latine called Vaga, ariſing from Plinlimmon hils, and emptying it ſelf into the Severn at Chepſtow. More in the heart of the Countrey (for theſe are but borderers for the greateſt part of their courſe) 3 Conwy, which riſing in Merionethſhire, and dividing the Counties of Denbigh and Carnarvon, mingleth with the Sea at Abur Conwey. 4 Tyvie, which riſing in Montgomeryſhire, and paſſing between the Counties of Cardigan, Pembroke, and Carmarthen; runneth into the Sea a little below Cardigan. 5 Chedlady, which running quite through Pembrokeſhire, emptieth it ſelf into Milford Haven; one of the moſt capacious and ſafeſt havens, not of England only, but of all the world.

The men are of a faithful carriage towards all men, eſpecially towards one another in a ſtrange Countrey, and towards ſtrangers in their own. Of a temper queſtionleſs much inclining to choler, as being ſubject to the paſſion by Ariſtotle called ἀκρασκολία, by which men are quickly moved to anger, and as ſoon appeaſed: of all angers the beſt and nobleſt. Their Language (the old Britiſh) hath the leaſt commixture of forein words of any in Europe; and by reaſon of its many Conſonants and guttural Letters, is not ſo pleaſing as ſome others in the Pronunciation. A Language not much ſtudyed by thoſe of other Nations; in regard that ſuch of the Inhabitants who have addicted themſelves to learning, have rather choſe to expreſs themſelves in the Latine or Engliſh tongues, than that of their own Native Countrey. The principal of which (not to ſay any thing of Merlin, the Tages of the Welch or Britiſh) were 1 Gildas, for his great knowledge ſurnamed Sapiens; 2 Geofry of Monmouth, and 3 Giraldus Cambrenſis, the Hiſtorians; and of later times, 4 William Morgan, the Tranſlator of the Bible into Welch, for which performance moſt deſervedly made Biſhop of Landaff. 5 Sir John Price the Antiquary. 6 Owen the Epigrammatiſt, &c.

The whole Countrey (not taking the Counties of Shropſhire and Monmouth into the reckoning) contain in it 12 Shires only: of which, ſeven were ſet out by King Edward the firſt, that is to ſay, Glamorgan, Pembroke, Carmarden, Cardigan, Merioneth, Angleſey, and Carnarvon. The other five, viz. the Counties of Denbigh, Flint, Montgomery, Radnor, and Brecknock, were after added out of the Marchlands, by King Henry the 8th. Theſe 12 Shires are again contracted or ſubdivided into 4 Circuits, for the adminiſtration of Juſtice. Of which the firſt containeth the Counties of Montgomery, Flint, and Denbigh; the ſecond thoſe of Carnarvon, Angleſey, and Merioneth; the third thoſe of Carmarden, Cardigan, and Pembroke; and the fourth thoſe of Glamorgan, Brecknock, and Radnor.

In theſe 12 Shires are reckoned one Chaſe, 13 Foreſts, 36 Parks, 230 Rivers, and an hundred Bridges. They contain alſo 1016 Pariſhes, amongſt which, four Cities, 55 Market-Towns, and 41 Caſtles of the old erection. The Cities ſmall, poor, and inconſiderable. The Market-Towns, thoſe ſpecially on the Marches and out-parts of the Countrey, very fair and ſtrong; as being not only built for commerce and trade, but fortified with Walls and Caſtles to keep in the Welch: and ſo employed, till the incorporating Wales with England, took away all occaſion of the old hoſtilities. And for the Caſtles in the In-lands, partly by the iniquity of time, which is edax rerum, but chiefly by the policy of the Kings of England, who would not ſuffer any places of ſtrength to remain in a Countrey almoſt inacceſſible, and amongſt men apt to take the advantage offered; the very ruines of them are now brought to ruine.

But to proceed more particularly; the four Cities (or Epiſcopal Sees) are 1 S. Davids, formerly the Metropolitan of Wales, ſituate on the promontory in Pembrokeſhire, by the Antients called Octopitæ; in a ſafe place, and far enough from the Saxons, whom the Welch moſt feared; but incommodious enough for all the reſt of the Clergie to repair unto it: and not ſo ſafe neither unto the Inhabitants of it, in reſpect of ſundry other Nations, who have often ſpoyled and defaced it. For ſtanding neer the Sea, it hath been frequently viſited and ſpoyled, by the Danes, Norwegians, and other Pirats; inſomuch that the Biſhops were inforced to remove their dwelling to Caermarthen; which brought the City, (ſmall enough before, when it was at the biggeſt) to the condition of a Village. 2 Llandaffe, upon the River Taffe, whence it took the name, Llan in the Welch or Britiſh ſignifying a Church; Llandaffe, the Church upon the Taffe: the Biſhops whereof derive their Lineal ſucceſſion from thoſe of Caer-Leon upon Usk; though the Primacy or Archbiſhops See were removed to Menew. A ſmall Town now it is, God wot, nothing to rank it for a City, but the Cathedral Church, and the Prebends houſes. 3 S. Aſaph, a ſmall Town in Flintſhire, ſo called from S. Aſaph, the ſecond Biſhop hereof; left here by Kentigern a Scot, by whom the Cathedral Church was founded, about the year 560. Situate on the banks of the River Elwy, thence called Llan-Elwy by the Welch, the Biſhop Elwyenſis in ſome Latine Writers.

4 Bangor,

4 Bangor, upon the Menai, a branch of the Iriſh Sea, of no more beauty and renown than the other three; but only for the Cathedral founded here, by the firſt Biſhops, defaced by Owen Glendower, and afterwards reedified by Henry Dean, Biſhop hereof, An. 1496.

Towns of chief note, (for theſe Cities have not ſo much in them which is worth the noting) are, 1 Shrewsbury, counted now in England, but heretofore the ſeat of the Princes of Powys-land, who had here their Palace: which being burnt in ſome of their broyls with England, is now converted into Gardens for the uſe of the Townſmen. The Town well traded and frequented by the Welch and Engliſh, the common Empory of both; well built, and ſtrongly ſituate on a riſing ground, almoſt encompaſſed with the Severn; that part thereof which is not fenced with the River, being fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, the work of Roger de Montgomery the firſt Earl hereof, An. 1067. Over the River for convenience of paſſage, it hath two Bridges, and but two, the one towards England, and the other called the Welch-bridge, which is towards Wales; built by Leoline, or Llewellen the firſt, one of the Princes of North-Wales; whoſe they conceive to be that Statua, which is there ſtanding on the Gate. Remarkable ſince the times of King Henry the ſixth, for giving the title of Earl to the Noble Family of the Talbots: a Family of great honor, and as great an Eſtate, till the parcelling of the lands betwixt the Daughters and Co-heirs of Gilbert Talbot, late Earl hereof; according to the ill cuſtom of England, where many times the Eſtate goes to the Females, and the Honor (with nothing to maintain it) to the next Heir Male. 2 Banchor, by Beda called Bancornaburg, a famous Monaſtery of the Britans; containing above 2000 Monks, attending their devotions at the times appointed, at other times labouring for their livelyhood: moſt cruelly and unmercifully ſlaughtered by the Saxons, at the inſtigation of Auſtin the firſt Archbiſhop of Canterbury, offended that they would not yeeld unto his autority. 3 Carnarvon, on the Menai before mentioned, not far from Bangor (the Monaſtery of Banchor being in Flintſhire); well walled, and fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, by King Edward the firſt, after his conqueſt of the Countrey; formerly much reſorted to, for the Chancery and Exchequer of the Princes of North-Wales. 4 Denbigh, well ſeated on the banks of the River Iſtrad, which from thence runs into the Cluyd; the faireſt River of all thoſe parts. A Town well traded and frequented, eſpecially ſince it was made by King Henry the 8th the head-Town of a County: before which time of great reſort, as being the head-Town of the Baronie of Denbigh, conceived to be one of the goodlieſt territories in England; having more Gentlemen holding of it than any other. 5 Matravall, not far from Montgomery, heretofore a fair and capacious Town, honored with the Palace, and made the chief Seat of the Princes of Powys-land, thence called Kings of Matravall; now a poor Village. 6 Caermarthen, Maridunum antiently, whence the modern name, the Britans adding Caer unto it: not called ſo from Caer-Merlin, or the City of Merlin, inchanted by the Lady of the Lake, in a deep Cave hereabouts, as old Fablers and Romances tell us. A fair large Town, beautified with a Collegiate Church; to which there was a purpoſe in the time of King Edward the ſixth, of removing the Epiſcopal See from S. Davids. Not far off, on the top of an Hill, ſtands Dinevour Caſtle, the chief Seat of the Princes of South Wales, thence called Kings of Dinevour; who had their Chancery and Exchequer in the Town of Caermarthen. 7 Haverford Weſt, ſituated in the Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iſland of Pembrokeſhire, by the Welch called Roſs, by the Engliſh, Little England beyond Wales, by reaſon of the Engliſh tongue there ſpoken: a Town the beſt traded and frequented of all South-Wales. 8 Milford, in the ſame County of Pembroke, famous for giving name to the moſt ſafe and capacious Haven in all the Iſland; conſiſting of ſundry Creeks, Bays, and Roads for Ships, which make it capable of entertaining the greateſt Navy: the landing place of Henry the 7th when he came for England. 9 Monmouth, ſituate at the mouth or influx of the River Munow (where it falleth into the Wie) whence it had the name. A Town belonging antiently to the Houſe of Lancaſter, the birth place of King Henry the fift, called Henry of Monmouth. That one particular enough to renown the place, and therefore we ſhall adde no more. 10 Ludlow, a Town of great reſort, by reaſon of the Court and Councel of the Marches, kept here for the moſt part, ever ſince the incorporating of Wales with England, for the eaſe of the Welch, and bordering Subjects, in their ſuits at Law. Situate on the confluence of the Temd, and Corve, and beautified with a very ſtrong Caſtle: the Palace heretofore of ſome of the Princes of Wales of the blood Royal of England, at ſuch times as they reſided in this Countrey (of which more anon); and of late times, the ordinary Seat of the Lord Preſident of Wales: now reckoned, as all Shropſhire on that ſide the Severn, as a part of England. Of Angleſey and the Towns thereof, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter; now taking notice only of Aberfraw, the Royal Seat ſometimes of the Princes of North-Wales, called thence Kings of Aberfraw.

The Story of the Britans till the time of Cadwallader their laſt King, we have had before. After whoſe retirement unto Rome, the whole name and Nation became divided into three bodies; that is to ſay, the Corniſh-Britans, the Britans of Cumberland, and the Britans of Wales. The Corniſh-Britans governed by their own Dukes, till the time of Egbert the firſt Monarch of England; by whom ſubdued, An. 809. and made a Province of that Kingdom. The Britans of Cumberland had their own Kings alſo (ſome of whoſe names occur in Story) till the year 946. when conquered by Edmund King of England, the Son of Athelſtan; their laſt King being named Dummilus, as Matthew of Weſtminſter informs us. But the main body of them getting into the mountainous parts beyond the Severn, did there preſerve the name and reputation of their Countrey; although their Princes were no longer called Kings of Britain, but of the Walliſh-men or Welch; and much adoe they had to make good that title: all the plain Countrey beyond Severn being taken from them, by Offa King of the Mercians; and themſelves made Tributaries for the reſt by Egbert before mentioned, by Athelſtan afterwards. Which laſt impoſed a tribute on them of 20 pounds of Gold, 300 pounds of Silver, and 200 head of Cattel Wales. yearly; exchanged in following times for a tribute of Wolves. But howſoever, they continued for a time the title of Kings, whoſe names are thus ſet down by Glover, in his Catalogue of Honour, publiſhed by Miles.

720	2	Rodorick, Son of Idwallo 25.	843	5	Rodorick II. ſurnamed the Great, Son of Mervin, who divided his Kingdom, ſmall enough before, amongſt his Sons: giving Guinedth, or North-Wales, to Amarawdh his eldeſt Son; to Cadel his ſecond Son, Deheubarth or South-Wales; and Powis-land to his youngeſt Son, Mervin: conditioned that the two younger Sons, and their Succeſſors, ſhould hold their Eſtates in Fee of the Kings of North-Wales, and acknowledge the Soveraignty thereof, as Liegemen and Homagers. According unto which appointment, it was ordained in the Conſtitutions of Howell Dha, the Legiſlator of Wales, that as the Kings of Aberfraw were bound to pay 63 pounds in way of tribute to the Kings of London; ſo the Kings of Dynevour, and Matravall, ſhould pay in way of tribute the like ſum to the Kings of Aberfraw. But notwithſtanding the Reſervation of the Soveraignty to the Kings of North-Wales, Roderick committed a great Solœciſm in point of State, by this diſmembring of his Kingdom; eſpecially at a time when all the Kingdoms of the Saxons were brought into one, and that one apt enough upon all occaſions to work upon the weakneſs of the neighbouring Welch: which had they continued under one ſole Prince, might have preſerved their Liberty, and themſelves a Kingdom; as well as thoſe of Scotland, for ſo long a time, againſt the power and puiſſance of the Kings of England. Yet was not this the worſt of the miſchief neither; his Succeſſors ſubdividing (by his example) their ſmall Eſtates into many parcels, inſomuch that of the eight tributary Kings which rowed King Edgar on the Dee, five of them were the Kings or Princes of Wales. But Roderick did not think of that which was to come, whom we muſt follow in our ſtory, according to the Diviſion of the Countrey made by him into three Eſtates, of North-Wales, South-Wales, and Powys land.

1. NORTH-WALES, or Guinedth, contained the Counties of Merioneth and Carnarvon, the Iſle of Angleſey, and the greateſt parts of Denbigh and Flint-ſhires. The chief Towns whereof are Bangor, Denbigh, Carnarvon, Aberfraw; ſpoken of before; and ſome in Angleſey, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter. The Countrey (Angleſey excepted) the moſt barren and unfruitful part of Wales; but withall the ſafeſt, and furtheſt from the danger of the incroaching Engliſh: which poſſibly might be the reaſon why it was ſet out for the portion of the Eldeſt Son, in whom the Soveraignty of the Welch was to be preſerved, by the Kings or Princes of North-Wales.

1099	6	Gryffith ap Conan.	1246	11	Llewellen II. Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David ap Llewellen, the laſt Prince of Wales of the Britiſh Race. Of whom it is ſaid, that once conſulting with a Witch, he was told by her, that it was his deſtiny, to be caried in triumph through London, with a Crown on his head. Herepon making ſome excurſions on the Engliſh Borders, he drew upon himſelf the whole power of King Edward the firſt, which not being able to withſtand, and the King as willing on the other ſide not to fight with Mountains; Commiſſioners were appointed to conclude the differences: Robert Lord Tiptoff, and ſome others, for the King of England; for the Welch Prince, Grono ap Heylyn, a great man of that Countrey, deſcended from Brockwell Skythrac, one of the Princes of Powys-land, (from whom, if Camden Clarentieux be of any credit, the Author of theſe Papers doth derive his Pedegree) under whom that Family had the Office of Hereditary Cup-Bearer, and from thence their name; (Heylyn, Promus, ſive à poculis, quæ vox in proprium nomen abiit, ſaith the Welch Dictionary) By thoſe Commiſſioners it was concluded and agreed on, that Llewellen ſhould enjoy a part of the Countrey with the title of Prince, during his life: the reſt in preſent, and the whole after his deceaſe, to be ſurrendred over to the King of England. But David the Brother of Llewellen, finding himſelf excluded by this agreement, from the hope of ſucceſſion, incenſed his Brother and the Welch to a new Revolt: the iſſue whereof was the taking of David, executed by the hand of juſtice; and the death of Llewellen, ſlain in Battail, neer the Buelth in Brecknockſhire. Whoſe head being pitched upon a ſtake, and adorned with a Paper-Crown, was by a Horſeman caried triumphantly through London, An. 1282. And ſo the Propheſie was fulfilled. In him ended the Line of the Princes of North-Wales, after they had for the ſpace of 405 years reſiſted not only the private undertakers and Adventurers of England, but the Forces of many puiſſant Monarchs; whoſe attempts they always made fruſtrate, by retiring into the heart of their Countrey, and leaving nothing for the Engliſh to encounter with, but their Woods and Mountains. But now the fatal period of the Britiſh Liberty being come, they were conſtrained to yeeld to the ſtronger. What followed after this, we ſhall ſee anon.

The

The Arms of theſe Princes was quarterly Gules and Or, four Lions Paſſant gardant counterchanged. Wales.

2 POWIS LAND contained the whole Counties of Montgomery, and Radnor, all Shropſhire beyond the Severn, with the Town of Shrewsbury, and the reſt of Denbigh and Flint-ſhires; comprehending by the eſtimate of thoſe times, 15 Cantreds or hundreds of Villages: the word Cant ſignifying an Hundred, and Tiet a Village. The principal Cities or Towns of it, were, S. Aſaph, Shrewsbury, Matravall, ſpoken of before. A Countrey more partaking of the nature and fertility of England, than the parts belonging unto Guinedth, or North-Wales; but alwayes lying in harms way, by reaſon of the Neighbourhood of the more potent Engliſh: and therefore given by Roderick to Mervin, his youngeſt Son, partly becauſe he was the youngeſt; but chiefly becauſe he was a man of approved valour, and ſo more fit to have his portion upon the Borders. In his Line it continued a long time together, but much afflicted and diſmembred by the Earls of Cheſter, and Shrewsbury, who took from them a good part of Flint, Denbigh, and Shropſhire; and by the Princes of North-Wales, who caſt many a greedy eye upon it. Of the Succeſſors of Prince Mervin, I find no good Conſtat, more than of Brockwell, Skythrac, before remembred. The laſt that held it all entire was Meredyth ap Blethyn, who following the ill example of Roderick Mawr, divided it betwixt Madoc, and Gryffith, his two Sons. Of which Madoc dyed at Wincheſter, An. 1160. in the time of King Henry the ſecond; his part hereof depending after his deceaſe, on the Fortunes of Guynedth: and Gryffith was by Henry the firſt made Lord of Powys (the ſtile of Prince left off as too high and lofty.) In his race it continued till the time of King Edward the firſt: to whom at a Parliament holden in Shrewsbury, Owen ap Gryffith the fifth from Gryffith ap Meredith before mentioned, ſurrendred his place and title; and received them of the King again to be holden in Capite and free Baronage, according to the cuſtom of England. Avis, or Hawis, Daughter and Heir of this Owen ap Gryffith, was maried unto John Charleton, Valect (or Gentleman of the Privy Chamber) to King Edward the ſecond, by whom, in right of his Wife, he was made Lord Powis. Edward the fifth alſo of this Line of the Charletons, was the laſt of that Houſe; his Daughter Jane conveying the Eſtate and Title to the Houſe of the Greyes: and of them alſo five enjoyed it, the laſt Lord Powis of the Line or Race of Mervin, being Edward Grey, who dyed in the days of our Grand-Fathers. And ſo the title lay extinct, until revived again in the perſon of Sir William Herbert of Red caſtle, deſcended from the Herberts, Earls of Pembroke; created Lord Powys by King Charles the firſt, An. 1629.

The Arms of the Princes of Powyſland, were Or, a Lyon Rampant, Gules.

2 SOUTH-WALES, or Deheubarth, contained the Counties of Monmouth, Glamorgan, Caermarden, Cardigan, and Brecknock; the greateſt and moſt fruitful part of all Wales, but more expoſed to the invaſion of Forrein Nations, Engliſh, Danes, Flemings, and Norwegians, by whom the Sea-Coaſts were from time to time moſt grievoully plagued: Inſomuch that the Kings and Princes hereof were inforced to remove their ſeat from Caermarthen, where it was fixt at firſt; unto Dynevour Caſtle, as a place of greater ſtrength and ſafety: where it continued till the Princes of it were quite extinct, called from hence Kings of Dynevour, as before is ſaid. The chief Towns of it, Caermarthen, Monmouth, Landaffe, S. Davids, ſpoken of already. The Kings and Princes, as far as I can find upon any certainty, are theſe that follow.

The Princes of South Wales.

had with great ſtrugling maintained their liberty for the ſpace of 300 years and upwards: but ſo, that though they ſtill preſerved the title of Princes, they loſt a great part of their Countrey to the Norman-Engliſh. For in the reign of William Rufus, Bernard de Newmark a Noble Norman, ſeized upon thoſe parts which now make the County of Brecknock, being then a fair and goodly Lordſhip: and Robert Fitz-Haymon, with ſome other noble adventurers, made themſelves maſters of Glamorgan; in which the poſterity of ſome of them are ſtill remaining. Incouraged by their good ſucceſs, Arnulph of Montgomery, in the time of King Henry the firſt, won from the Welch a great part of Dyvet, which we now call Pembrokeſhire; as the Earls of Warren, and Lord Mortimer, about the ſame times did prevail exceedingly in the conqueſt of Cardigan, and Monmouth. So that the poor Princes had no one Countrey left intire, but Caermarthen only; too little to maintain them in ſo a high a title. And though this laſt Gryffith, in the time of the wars in England, betwixt Maud the Empreſs, and King Stephen, had recovered a great part of this loſt Eſtate; yet neither he nor his did enjoy it long; himſelf deceaſing ſhortly after, and his two Sons, Cymmerick and Meredith being taken by King Henry the ſecond, who moſt cruelly put out their eyes: Yet did the Welch, as well as poſſibly they could, endevour to preſerve the liberty which their Fathers left them; till the felicity and wiſdom of King Edward the firſt, put an end unto the war of Wales, and ſetled them in ſome degree of peace and quiet.

But before we come to ſpeak of this, we are to ſhew another Catalogue of the Kings and Princes of Wales, different from the ſucceſſion of them before laid down; and made according to the Hiſtory

Wales. of Wales writ by Humfrey Lloyd: this Catalogue containing the Succeſſion of the greater and predominant Princes, whether of Guynedh, Deheubarth, or Powyſland; ſuch as gave law unto the reſt, and had the honor to be called Kings of Wales, though Princes only of their own proper and particular Countries; as formerly we had a Catalogue of the Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons, made out of the Predominant Princes of the Saxon Heptarchie. Only we ſhall find ſome in the following Catalogue, who were not naturally and lineally Princes of any of the three, and therefore not expreſſed in the former Tables: but ſuch as by ſtrong hand had intruded into thoſe Eſtates, to the prejudice of the right heirs, over-powered by them.

The Kings and Princes of Wales, according to the Welch Hiſtory.

1169	23	David ap Owen Prince of Guinedh, the youuger Son of Owen Guinedh.
1194	24	Llewellen, Son of Jorwerth, Eldeſt Son of Owen Guinedh, excluded by David his younger Brother.
1242	25	David ap Llewellen Prince of Guinedh, Son of Llewellen ap Jorwerth.
1246	26	Llewellen, Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David, the laſt Soveraign Prince of Wales, of the race of Cadwallader; overcome and ſlain in battel by King Edward the firſt, An. 1282. as before is ſaid: by means whereof the Principality of Wales was added to the Crown of England.

When King Edward had thus fortunately effected this great buſineſs, he gave unto his Engliſh Barons and other Gentlemen of note, many fair Signeuries and Eſtates; as well to reward them for their ſervice in the conqueſt, as to engage ſo many able men, both in purſe and power, for the perpetual defence and ſubjugation of it. As for the Lordſhip of Flint, and the Towns and Eſtates lying on the Sea-coaſts; he held them in his own hands, both to keep himſelf ſtrong, and to curb the Welch: and (wherein he dealt like the politick Emperor Auguſtus) pretending the eaſe of ſuch as he had there placed; but indeed to have all the Arms, and men of employment under himſelf only.

This done, he divided Wales into ſeven Shires, viz. 1 Glamorgan, 2 Carmarden, 3 Pembroke, 4 Cardigan, 5 Merioneth, 6 Carnarvon, and 7 Angleſey, after the manner of England. Over each of theſe, as he placed a particular Engliſh Lieutenant, ſo he was very deſirous to have one general Engliſh Vicegerent, over the whole body of the Welch. But this when they mainly withſtood, he ſent for his wife, then great with child to Carnarvon: where ſhe was delivered of a Son. Upon the news whereof, the King aſſembled the Britiſh Lords, and offered to name them a Governor born in Wales, which could not ſpeak one word of Engliſh, and whoſe life no man could tax. Such a one when they had all ſworn to obey, he named his young Son Edward; ſince which time our Kings Eldeſt Sons are called Princes of Wales. Their Inveſtiture is performed by the impoſition of a cap of eſtate, and a Coronet on his head that is inveſted, as a token of his Principality; by delivering into his hand a verge, being the Emblem of government; by putting a ring of gold on his finger, to ſhew him how now he is a Husband to the Countrey, and a Father to her Children; and by giving him a patent, to hold the ſaid Principality, to him and his heirs Kings of England. By which words, the ſeparation of it from the Crown is prohibited; and the Kings keep in themſelves ſo excellent an occaſion, of obliging unto them their eldeſt Son, when they pleaſe. In imitation of this cuſtom, more ex Anglia tranſlato (ſaith Mariana) John the firſt of Caſtile and Leon, made his Son Henry Prince of the Aſturia's; which is a countrey ſo craggie and mountainous, that it may not improperly be called the Wales of Spain. And all the Spaniſh Princes even to theſe times, are honored with this title of Prince of the Aſturia's. Wales.

Notwithſtanding this provident care of Edward the firſt, in eſtabliſhing his Empire here; and the extreme rigor of Law here uſed by Henry the 4th, in reducing them to obedience, after the rebellion of Owen Glendower: yet till the time of Henry the 8th, and his Father, (both being extract from the Welch bloud) they ſeldom or never contained themſelves within the bounds of true Allegiance. For whereas before they were reputed as Aliens, this Henry made them (by Act of Parliament) one Nation with the Engliſh, ſubject to the ſame Laws, capable of the ſame preferments, and privileged with the ſame immunities. He added alſo 6 Shires to the former number, out of thoſe Countries which were before reputed as the Borders and Marches of Wales; and enabled them to ſend Knights and Burgeſſes unto the Engliſh Parliaments: ſo that the name and language only excepted, there is now no difference between the Engliſh and Welch; an happy Union.

The ſame King Henry eſtabliſhed for the eaſe of his Welch Subjects, a Court at Ludlow, like unto the ordinary Parliaments in France: wherein the Laws are miniſtred according to the faſhion of the Kings Courts of Weſtminſter. The Court conſiſteth of one Preſident, who is, for the moſt part, of the Nobility, and is generally called, the Lord Preſident of Wales; of as many Counſellors as it ſhall pleaſe the King to appoint; one Attourney, one Sollicitor, one Secretary, and the four Juſtices of the Counties of Wales. The Town it ſelf (for this muſt not be omitted) adorned with a very fair Caſtle, which hath been the Palace of ſuch Princes of Wales, of the Engliſh blood, as have come into this Countrey, to ſolace themſelves among their people. Here was young Edward the 5th, at the death of his Father; and here dyed Prince Arthur, Eldeſt Son to Henry the 7th: both being ſent hither by their Fathers to the ſame end, viz. by their preſence to ſatisfie and keep in order the unquiet Welchmen. And certainly, as the preſence of the Prince was then a terror to the rebellious, ſo would it now be as great a comfort to this peaceable people.

What the Revenues of this Principality are, I cannot ſay: yet we may boldly affirm that they are not very ſmall, by theſe reaſons following, viz. 1 By the Compoſition which Llewellen, the laſt Prince of Wales, made with Edward the firſt: who being Prince of North Wales only, and diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of that, was fain to redeem the reſt, of the ſaid King Edward, at the price of 50000 Marks (which comes to 100000 pounds of our preſent money) to be paid down in ready coin; and for the reſidue to pay 1000 l. per annum. And 2dly, by thoſe two circumſtances, in the mariage of the Lady Katharine of Spain, to the above named Prince Arthur. For firſt, her Father Ferdinando being one of the warieſt Princes that ever were in Europe, giving with her in Dowry 200000 Ducats; required for her Joynture, the third part only of this Principality, and of the Earldom of Cheſter. And ſecondly, after the death of Prince Arthur, the Nobles of the Realm perſwaded Prince Henry to take her to Wife; that ſo great a Treaſure as the yearly Revenue of her Joynture, might not be carried out of the Kingdom.

The Arms of the Princes of Wales differ from thoſe of England, only by the addition of a Labell of three points. But the proper and peculiar device, and which we commonly, though corruptly, call the Princes Arms, is a Coronet beautified with three Oſtrich Feathers, and inſcribed round with ICH DIEN, that is, I ſerve: alluding to that of the Apoſtle, The Heir while he is a child differeth not from a Servant. This Coronet was won by that valiant Prince, Edward the black Prince, at the battel of Grecie, from John King of Bohemia; who there wrote it, and whom he there ſlew. Since which time it hath been the Cognizance of all our Princes.

I will now ſhut up my diſcourſe of Wales, with that teſtimony of the people, which Henry the 2d uſed in a Letter to Emanuel Emperor of Conſtantinople; The Welch Nation is ſo adventurous, that they dare encounter naked with armed men; ready to ſpend their blood for their Countrey, and pawn their life for praiſe: and adding only this, that ſince their incorporating with the Engliſh, they have ſhewed themſelves moſt loyal, hearty, and affectionate Subjects of the State: cordially devoted to their King; and zealous in defence of their Laws, Liberties, and Religion, as well as any of the beſt of their fellow-ſubjects; whereof they have given good proof in theſe later times.

There are in Wales

The Borders.

The BORDERS.

BEfore we come into Scotland, we muſt of neceſſity paſs through that Battable ground, lying betwixt both Kingdoms; called THE BORDERS; the Inhabitants whereof are a kind of military men, ſubtile, nimble, and by reaſon of their often skirmiſhes, well experienced, and adventurous. Once the Engliſh Border extended as far as unto the Fryth, or Strait of Edenburgh on the Eaſt, and that of Dunbritton on the Weſt (the firſt Fryth, by the Latines called Bodotria, and the latter Glotta:) betwixt which, where now ſtandeth the Town of Sterling, was an antient Bridge, built over the River which falleth into the Fryth of Edenburgh; on a Croſs ſtanding whereupon, was writ this Paſport.

I am Free march as paſſengers may ken,
To Scots, to Britans, and to Engliſh men.

But when England groaned under the burden of the Daniſh oppreſſion, the Scots well husbanded that advantage; and not only enlarged their Borders to the Tweed, but alſo took into their hands Cumberland, Northumberland, and Weſtmorland. The Norman Kings again recovered theſe Provinces, making the Borders of both Kingdoms to be Tweed, Eaſt; the Solway, Weſt; and the Cheviot hils in the midſt. Of any great wars made on theſe Borders, or any particular Officers appointed for the defence of them, I find no mention till the time of Edward the firſt; who taking advantage of the Scots diſagreements, about the ſucceſſour of Alexander the 3d, hoped to bring the Countrey under the obedience of England. This Quarrel betwixt the two Nations he began, but could not end; the Wars ſurviving the Author: ſo that what Velleius ſaith of the Romans and Carthaginians, I may as well ſay of the Scots and Engliſh; for almoſt 300 years together, aut bellum inter eos populos, aut belli præparatio, aut infida pax fuit. In moſt of theſe conflicts the Scots had the worſt. So that Daniel in his Hiſtory ſeemeth to marvail how this Corner of the Iſle could breed ſo many, had it bred nothing but men, as were ſlain in theſe wars. Yet in the Reign of Edward the 2d, the Scots (having twice defeated that unhappy Prince) became ſo terrible to the Engliſh Borderers, that an hundred of them would fly from three Scots. It is a cuſtom among the Turks, not to beleeve a Chriſtian or a Jew complaining againſt a Turk except their accuſation be confirmed by the Teſtimony of ſome Turk alſo; which ſeldom hapning, is not the leaſt cauſe why ſo little Juſtice is there done the Chriſtians. In like manner, it is the Law of theſe Borderers, never to beleeve any Scots complaining againſt any Engliſh-man, unleſs ſome other Engliſh-man will witneſs for him; and ſo on the other ſide. Ex jure quodam inter limitaneos rato (ſaith Camden in his Elizab.) nullus niſi Scotus in Scotum, nullus niſi Anglus in Anglum, teſtis admittitur. This Cuſtom making void in this faſhion, all kinds of accuſations; was one of the greateſt cauſes of the Inſolencies of both ſides committed. Beſides, there were divers here living, which acknowledged neither King; but ſometimes were Scots, ſometimes Engliſh, as their preſent crimes and neceſſities required protection, or pardon. To keep in this people, and ſecure the Borders, there were in each Kingdom three Officers appointed, called the Lords Wardens of the Marches: one being placed over the Eaſt, the other over the Weſt, the third over the middle Borders. In England, the Warden of the Eaſt Marches had his Seat at Barwick (a Town of great ſtrength, and which for the conveniency of its ſituation, was the firſt thing which the Engliſh took care to defend, and the Scots to ſurpriſe) of which he was alſo Governor. The Warden of the Weſt Marches, had his Seat in Carlile, which Henry the 8th for that cauſe well fortified. The Warden of the middle Marches had no ſet place of reſidence, but was ſometimes in one place, ſometimes in another, according as occaſion required; the Office being executed for the moſt part, by the Wardens of the Eaſtern or Weſtern Marches. But Imperii medium eſt, terminus ante fuit, by the bleſſed mariage of the Kingdoms, that being now the middle of one, which was then the bounds of two Empires; theſe Officers, and the cauſe of them, the wars, are quite extinguiſhed.

SCOTLAND.

SCOTLAND is the Northern part of Britain, ſeparated from England by the River Tweed and Solway; and the Cheviot Hils, extending from the one to the other. It is in length (according to Polydore Virgil) 480 miles, but of no great breadth; there being no place diſtant from the Sea above 60 miles, and the Countrey ending like the ſharp point of a Wedge. And for the length aſſigned unto it by Polydore, it muſt be made up by meaſuring the crooks and windings of the ſhores, every where thruſting out with very large Promontories, and cutting deep Indentures into the Land. For meaſuring in a ſtrait Line from North to South, the length thereof from Solway Frith to the Straitby-head, amounteth but unto three hundred and ten Italian miles; and from Barwick unto Straitby-head, is a great deal ſhorter. So that there is no ſuch over-ſight in the Maps of Britain, nor ſuch neceſſity to correct them, as was ſometimes thought.

It

Scotland.

It was once called Caledonia, from the Caledonii a chief People of it: sometimes Albania, from Albanie or Braid Albin, a principal Province in the North. But the most usual name is Scotia, or Scotland; though the reason of the name be not agreed on. Some fabulous Writers of their own fetch it from Scota, the Daughter of an Ægyptian Pharaoh; of whom more when we come to Ireland. Others with better reason (though that none of the best) from the Scoti, Scitti, or Scythi, a German, or Sarmatian people, of noted fame; whom they will have to seize first on some parts of Spain, from thence to transplant themselves into Ireland; and out of Ireland into the Hebrides or Western Islands, now parts and members of this Kingdom. The more probable opinion is; that they were no other then meer Irish, (whose language, habit, and the most barbarous of their customs, the Highlanders, or natural Scots do still retain) united in the name of Scot, about the declination of the Roman Empire: the word Scot signifying in their Language, a body aggregated into one, out of many particulars; as the word Alman in the Dutch. *Scot illud dicitur, (*saith Camden out of Matthew of Westminster) quod ex diversis rebus in unum acervum aggregatur. First mentioned by this name in some fragments of Porphyrie (who lived about the time of the Emperor Aurelian) as they are cited by S. Hierome: after the death of Constantine much spoken of in approved Authors, as the confederates of the Picts, in harassing the Roman Province.

The whole divided commonly into the Highlands, and the Lowlands. The Highlanders or Irish Scots, inhabiting the Hebrides, and the West parts of the Continent adjoyning to them, more barbarous than the Wild Irish at this day: not to be civiliz'd (as King JAMES observed in his most excellent Basilicon Doron) but by planting Colonies of the more Inland, orderly Scots among them. The Lowlanders or English Scots (as I well may call them) inhabiting on this side the two Frythes of Dunbritton and Edenburgh, and the plainer Countries all along the German Ocean; are the more civil of the two, as being of the same Saxon race with the English. This is evident, first, by their Language, being only a broad Northern English, a Dialect only of that tongue: 2ly, by the testimony of the Highlanders themselves, who are the true Scots, and speak the old Irish language, by whom the Lowlanders and the English are called by the same name of Saxons: 3ly, by the general consent of all Historians, affirming that the Kingdom of the Northumbers or English Saxons beyond Humber, extended as far Northwards as the two Frithes before-mentioned; and there continued for the space of 300 years: and 4ly, by the confession of some ingenuous Gentlemen of that Nation, who grant it for a probable Tenet, that the Saxons and the Scots invading Britain much about the same time; the Saxons might extort the Eastern shore, lying next their Countrey, from the old Inhabitants; as well as the Scots did all the Western parts which lay next to Ireland, and the Hebrides or Western Islands, from whence they first passed into Britain.

The Countrey for the most part, especially beyond the limits of the Roman Province, is very barren and unfruitful, not able to afford sustenance for the Natives of it; were they not a people patient of want and hunger; temperate in diet, and not accustomed unto that riot and excess, used commonly in richer and more plentiful Countreys. Fruit they have very little, and not many trees either for building or for fewel: the people holding, as in France, at the Will of the Lord, and therefore not industrious to build, or plant. Their chief Commodities are course cloth, Fish in great abundance, Hides, Lead, and Coal; of which two last their mountains do afford some rich undecaying Mines.

The people have been noted by their best Writers, for some barbarous customs entertained amongst them. One of which was, if any two were displeased, they expected no law; but bang'd it out bravely, one and his kindred, against the other and his: and thought the King much in their common, if they granted him at a certain day to keep the peace. This fighting they call their Feides, a word so barbarous, that were it to be expressed in Latine, or French, it must be by circumlocution. These deadly Feides, King James in his most excellent Basilicon Doron adviseth his Son to redress with all care possible; but it pleased God to give him so long a life as to see it in his own days remedied: wherein he got a greater victory over that stubborn people, than ever did any forein Prince, or any of his Predecessors could do before him; an act indeed truly royal, and worthy himself. Another custom they had of that nature, that the like was hardly ever heard of amongst the Heathen, and much less in Christendom, which took beginning as the Scottish Historians affirm, in the reign of Ewen the 3d, who is the fifteenth King in their Catalogue, after the first Fergus. This Ewen being a Prince much addicted, or wholly rather given over unto lasciviousness, made a Law, that himself and his successors should have the maidenhead, or first nights lodging with every woman, whose husband held land immediately from the Crown: and the Lords and Gentlemen of all those, whose husbands were their tenants or homagers. This was, it seems, the Knights service which men held their states by; and continued till the days of Malcolm Connor: who at the request of his wife Margaret, (she was the sister of Edgar Atheling) abolished this Law; and ordained, that the tenants by way of commutation, should pay unto their Lords a mark in money; which tribute the Historians say is still in force. It was called Marcheta mulieris: but whether from Mark, a horse in the old Gallique, (implying the obscene signification of Equitare) as Mr. Selden thinks; or from Marca, the sum of money by which it was afterward redeemed, I cannot determine. Certain I am that this last custom was of such a barbarous and brutish nature, that the custom of the Indians in giving to the Bramines the first nights lodging with their Brides; and that of many Savage unconverted Nations in prostituting their Wives and Daughters to the lusts and pleasure of their Guests; have not more unchristianity in them, than this of those Scottish Christians, if I may so call them.

These Customs shew the antient Scots to be rude and barbarous, partaking little of the civility of the neighboring Nations; nor are they so broken of the former, but that they are observed by a modern Writer, to be still greedy of revenge where they find means to take it; as also to be a subtile and politick people, inclined to Factions and Seditions among themselves; which he that reads their Stories cannot Scotland. cannot chooſe but ſee. A people, as King James obſerveth in his Baſilicon Doron, ever weary of the preſent ſtate, and deſirous of novelties; accuſtomed to judge and ſpeak raſhly of their Kings and Princes; towards whom they have always caried themſelves with ſuch untractableneſs, that more Kings have been betrayed, murdered, and depoſed by the Scots; than by all the Nations in the world. But take them in themſelves without theſe relations, and they are ſaid to be an induſtrious people, capable of all Sciences which they give their minds to, and generally well verſed in Grammatical Learning, of which moſt of their Gentry have a ſmattering. And of moſt note in point of Learning, have been 1 Marianus (ſurnamed) Scotus, and 2 Hector Boetius, the Hiſtorians; 3 John Major, a well-known Schoolman, for the times before the Reformation. And for the times that followed, 4 George Buchannan, an ingenious Poet, but an unſound Stateſ-man; whoſe Hiſtory, and Dialogue De jure Regni, have wrought more miſchief in the World, than all Machiavels works. Not to have been remembred here, but becauſe he was Pædagogue to 5 King James, of moſt famous memory; whoſe printed works declare his large abilities in all kinds of Learning. 6 Napier, the Laird of Marchiſton. 7,8 Barclay, the Father and the Son. 9 John Skene, the beſt Antiquary of this Nation. 10 Doctor John Maxwel, the late learned Biſhop of Roſs, and my very good friend; beſides ſome others of leſs note.

The Chriſtian Religion was here planted by divers men, according to the ſeveral Nations who did here inhabit; amongſt the Low-Landers, or Saxon-Scots, by Aidan, the firſt Biſhop of Lindisfarn, or Holy Iſland; amongſt the Picts, inhabiting the South-Eaſtern parts, by Ninias, Biſhop of Candida Caſa, or Whit-herne, in Galloway; amongſt the Northern-Picts, An. 555. and finally amongſt the Scots, by Palladius a Deacon of Rome, ſent to them hither for that purpoſe by Pope Celeſtine, An. 435. or thereabouts. And for the Reformation of Religion, overgrown with the ruſt and rubbiſh of the Romiſh Church, (degenerated from it ſelf in the later days) it was here made by a ſtrong hand, according to the judgement of Knox and others: not taking counſel with the Prelates, nor ſtaying the leiſure of the Prince, as they did in England; but turning Prince and Prelates out of all autority; made by that means, more naturally ſubject unto alterations than it had been otherwiſe; or only to be made good by the ſame violence, which firſt introduced it. Tis true, that for a while, being in danger of the French, and of neceſſity to ſupport themſelves by the power and favour of the Engliſh; they bound themſelves by a ſolemn Subſcription, to adhere only to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and to obſerve that form of Worſhip, which was there eſtabliſhed. Religionis cultui, & Ritibus cum Anglis communibus ſubſcripſerunt; as is affirmed by Buchannan, their own State-Hiſtorian. But no ſooner was that danger over, but they found opportunity and leiſure to effect their ends; and have endevoured ever ſince by practices, and correſpondency with that party here, and finally by force of Arms, to thruſt their own Conſtitutions and Form of Worſhip on the Church of England.

As for the Government of the Church, it was originally by Biſhops, (as in all parts elſe); but ſo as they exerciſed their Functions and Juriſdictions in all places, equally, whereſoever they came: The Kingdom not being divided into Dioceſes, till the time of Malcolm the third, An. 1070, or thereabouts. Nor had they any Archbiſhops till the year 1478. The Archbiſhop of York being accounted and obeyed before that time, as the Metropolitan of Scotland. But being once ſetled in an orderly and conſtant Hierarchy, they held the ſame until the Reformation began by Knoxe: when he and his aſſociats approving the Genevian plat-form, took the advantage of the Minority of King James the ſixth, to introduce Preſbyterian Diſcipline, and ſuppreſs the Biſhops; forbidding them by their own ſole autority, to intermeddle any more in matters which concerned the Church, and Cantoning the Kingdom into Preſbyteries of their own aſſigning. And that the King might not be able to oppoſe their doings, they kept him under by ſtrong hand, impriſoned him at Sterlin, made him fly from Edenburgh, removed from him all his faithful ſervants, and ſeized upon his principal Fortreſſes: and in a word ſo baſled and affronted him upon all occaſions, that he was minded many times to have left the Kingdom, and retire to Venice. Which doubtleſs he had done, (as I have heard affirmed by ſome of great place and power) had not the hopes of coming at the laſt to the Crown of England, made him ſtay it out: So that his Maxim of No Biſhops no King, was not made at random, but founded on the ſad experience of his own condition. And though upon the ſenſe of thoſe inconveniencies, which that alteration brought upon him; he did afterwards with great both Policy and Prudence, reſtore again the Epiſcopal Order, and ſetled it both by Synodical Acts, and by Acts of Parliament: yet the ſame reſtleſs ſpirit breaking out again in the reign of his Son, An. 1638. did violently eject the Biſhops, and ſuppreſs the calling; and ſet up their Presbyteries throughout the Kingdom, as in former times.

The famous or miraculous things rather of this Couutrey are, 1 the Lake of Mirton, part of whoſe waters do congeal in Winter, and part of them not. 2ly, That in the Lake of Lennox, being 24 miles in compaſs, the Fiſh are generally without Fins, and yet there is great abundance of them. 3ly, That when there is no wind ſtirring, the waters of the ſaid lake are ſo tempeſtuous, that no Mariner dares venture on it. 4ly, That there is a ſtone called the Deaf ſtone, 12 foot high and 33 Cubits thick; of this rare quality, that a Muſket ſhot off on the one ſide, cannot be heard by a man ſtanding on the other. If it be otherwiſe (as he muſt have a ſtrong Faith who believes theſe wonders) let Hector Boetius bear the blame, out of whom I had it.

Chief Mountains of this Kingdom are the Cheviot Hils upon the Borders; and Mount Grampius ſpoken of by Tacitus; the ſafeſt ſhelter of the Picts, or Northern Britans againſt the Romans, and of the Scots againſt the Engliſh; now called the hils of Albany, or the mountainous Regions of Braid-Albin. Out of theſe ſpringeth the 1 Tay or Taus, the faireſt River of Scotland, falling into the Sea about Dundee, in the Eaſt ſide; and 2 the Cluyd, emptying it ſelf into Dunbritton Frith, on the Weſtſide of the Kingdom. Other Rivers of moſt note, are, the 3 Banoc, emptying it ſelf into the Frith of Edenburgh; on the banks whereof was fought that fatall battell of Banocks-bourn, of which more anon. 4 Spey, 5 Dee, the Ocaſa of Ptolemie: none of them of any long courſe, by reaſon that the Countrey Northward is but very narrow. Scotland.

In reference to Eccleſiaſtical affairs, this Kingdom hath been long divided into 13 Dioceſes, to which the Dioceſe of Edenburgh (taken out of that of S. Andrews) hath been lately added: and in relation to the Civil, into divers Seneſchalſies and Sheriffdoms, which being for the moſt part hereditary, are no ſmall hinderance to the due execution of Juſtice. So that the readieſt way to redreſs the miſchief (as King James adviſed) is to diſpoſe of them as they fall or Eſcheat to the Crown, according to the laudable cuſtom (in that caſe) in England.

The greateſt Friends of the Scots, were the French, to whom the Scots ſhewed themſelves ſo faithful, that the French King committed the defence of his perſon to a ſelected number of Scottiſh Gentlemen: and ſo valiant, that they have much hindered the Engliſh Victories in France. And certainly the French feeling the ſmart of the Engliſh puiſſance alone, have continually heartned the Scots in their attempts againſt England, and hindered all means of making union betwixt them: as appeared, when they broke the match agreed on, between our Edward the ſixth, and Mary the young Queen of Scots. Their greateſt enemy was the Engliſh, who overcame them in many battels, ſeized once upon the Kingdom, and had longer kept it, if the mountainous and unacceſſible woods had not been more advantagious to the Scots, than their power: for ſo much King James ſeemeth to imitate in his ſpeech at Whitehal, 1607. And though, ſaith he, the Scots had the honour and good fortune never to be conquered, yet were they never but on the defenſible ſide; and may in part thank their hils and inacceſſible paſſages, that ſaved them from an utter overthrow, at the hands of all them that ever pretended to conquer them. But

Jam cunctì gens una ſumus, ſic ſimus in ævum:

One only Nation now are we,
And let us ſo for ever be.

The chief Cities are Edenburgh (of old called Caſtrum Alatum) in Lothien, where is the Kings Palace, and the Court of Juſtice. It conſiſteth chiefly of one ſtreet, extending in length one mile, into which run many prety lanes; ſo that the whole compaſs may be nigh three miles: extending from Eaſt to Weſt on a riſing ground, at the Summit or Weſt end whereof ſtandeth a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle, mounted upon a ſteep and precipitious Rock, which commandeth the Town; ſuppoſed to be the Caſtrum Alatum, ſpoken of by Ptolemie. Under the command or rather the protection of which Caſtle, and through the neighbourhood of Leith, ſtanding on the Fryth, and ſerving as a Port unto it; and finally by the advantage of the Courts of Juſtice, and the Court Royal called Holy-Rood-Houſe, it ſoon became rich, populous, well-traded, and the chief of the Kingdom: but withall factious and ſeditious, conteſting with their Kings, or ſiding againſt them upon all occaſions. No way to humble them, and keep them in obedience to their Soveraign Lords, but by incorporating Leith, indulging it the priviledges of a City, and removing thither the Seat Royal and the Courts of Judicature; which they more fear then all the Plagues that can befall them. It belonged in former times to the Engliſh Saxons, (as all the reſt of the Countrey from the Fryth to Barwick) from whom, oppreſſed by the tyranny of the Danes, it was taken by the Scots and Picts, Ann. 800. or thereabouts. 2. Sterling, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Forth or Fryth, in the Sheriffdom ſo called; a ſtrong Town, and beautified withall with a very fair Caſtle, the birth-place of King James the ſixt, the firſt Monarch of Great Britain. Neer to which Town, on the banks of the River Bannock, hapned the moſt memorable diſcomfiture that the Scots ever gave the Engliſh: who beſides many Lords, and 700 Knights and men of note, loſt in this Fight (as the Scotiſh Writers do report) 50000 of the common Souldiers (our Engliſh Hiſtories confeſs 10000, and too many of that) the King himſelf (Edward the 2d) being compelled to flie for his life and ſafety. Some of the Scotiſh Writers tell us, that the purer ſort of ſilver, which we call Sterling money, did take name from hence; they might as well have told us, that all our ſilver Bullion comes from Bovillon in Luxemburgh, or from the Port of Boulogne in France; the truth being, that it took that name from the Eaſterlings, or Merchants of Eaſt Germany, drawn into England by King John, to refine our Coin. 3. Glaſco, in Cluidsdale, honoured with an Archbiſhops See, and a publick School (to which ſome give the name of an Univerſity) founded here by Archbiſhop Turnbal, Anno 1554. 4. S. Andrews, the chief Town of Fife, an Archiepiſcopall See, and an Univerſity; by the Latines called Fanum Reguli: which, and the Engliſh name, it took from the bones of S. Andrew the Apoſtle, tranſlated firſt from Patras in Peleponneſus where he ſuffered death, unto Conſtantinople; and thence brought hither by a Monk called Albatus Regulus, in the year 378 (if they be not miſtaken in the time, who made the ſtory.) Over which Relicks he is ſaid to have built a Monaſtery, which after grew to be a City: called from the Founder, Fanum Reguli; in honour of the Saint, S. Andrews. The Biſhop hereof is the Metropolitan of all Scotland; the City ſeated on the Ocean, neer the fall of the Ethan, overlooked with a ſtrong and goodly Caſtle, the Archbiſhops ſeat. 5. Falkland, in the ſame Province of Fife, beautified with a retiring houſe of the Kings, reſorting often thither on receſs from buſineſs, or for the commodity and pleaſure of hunting, which the place affords. 6. Dundee, in Latine, Taodunum, a rich and noted Port at the mouth of the Tay, the chief Town of Anguis. 7. Aber-don, at the mouth of the River Done, whence it hath the name, (the word Aber in the Britiſh ſignifying the mouth or influx of a River) an Univerſity, and Biſhops See. 8. Perth, or St. Johns Town, ſeated on the Tay, but in the middle of the Kingdom; walled and repleniſhed with an induſtrious people: the chief Town of the Sheriffedom of Perth. 9. Scone, on

the

Scotland. the further side of the Tay, adorned heretofore with a famous Monastery; the usuall place for the Inauration of the Scotish Kings: the fatall stone, on which they did receive the Crown, (the Palladium of the Scotish Kingdom) here kept, till the removall of it unto Westminster, by King Edward the first. Upon which stone there were of old ingraven these Verses.

Ni fallat fatum, Scoti quocunque locatum
Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.

Translated in old Meeter thus;

The Scots shall brook that Realm as natif ground,
If Weirds fail not, whaire ere this Stane is found.

Most happily accomplished in the Succession of King James the sixth, to the Crown of England. 10. Dunbritton (Britannodunum in the Latine) seated in a grassie Plain, at the fall or influx of the River Levin into the Cluyd, upon two steep and precipicious Rocks, flanked on the West with the said two Rivers, and on the East with a myery Flat, drowned at every full Sea: the strongest hold of all the Kingdom, and thought to be impregnable but by Famine or Treason, and the chief Town of the West side of Scotland; the name hereof communicated to the Fryth adjoyning.

The Antient Inhabitants of this Countrey dwelling within the limits of the Roman Province, were the Gadeni, possessing Tevidale, Twedale, Merch, and Lothien, whose chief City was Castra Alata, now Edenburgh. 2 The Damnii, dwelling in Cluydsdale, Lennox, Sterling, and Menteith, whose chief City was Vanduara, now Renfraw; Lindum, now Linlithquo. 3 The Selgovæ, inhabited in Liddisdale, Eusedale, Eskdale, Annandale, and Nidisdale, whose chief place was Carbantorigum, now Caer-Laverock: and 4 the Novantes, containing Galloway, Carrick, Kyle and Cunningham; principal places of the which were, Leucopibia, now Whit herne, and Berigonium, now Bargenie. Without the Province, amongst the Picts or barbarous Britans, divided generally into Caledonii and Meatæ, the Nations of most note were, 5 the Caldedonii properly so called, taking up all Strathern, Argile, Cantire, Albanie, Lorn, Perth, Angus, and Fife. 6 The Vermines of Mernis and Mar. 7 The Taizali of Buquhan. 8 The Vacomagi of Loquhabre and Murray. 9 The Cantæ of Ross and Sutherland. 10 The Cantini of Gathness; and 11 the Cornubii of Strathnavern, the furtheft Countrey Northward of all the Island. Chief Towns of which were, Tamia, Banatia, Orca, Devana, and Tuesis; which we know not where to find upon any certainty.

The fortunes of this people, as they related to the Romans, hath been shewn before. On the withdrawing of whose Forces, so much hereof as formerly had belonged to that Empire, was possessed by the Saxons, the residue thereof, as formerly, by the Scots and Picts: save that the Saxons not content with that which the Romans held, made themselves masters also of the plain Countries, lying on the German Ocean, to which the passage out of Germany was both short and easie. By which accompt, besides those places in the East, they were possessed of the Counties or Sheriffdoms of Teifidale, Tweedale, Merch, Lothien, Liddisdale, Eusedale, Eskdale, Annandale, Nidisdale, Cluydsdale, Galloway, Carick, Kyle, Cunningham, Lennox, and Sterling, being the richest, and most flourishing part of the modern Scotland. The Scots for their part, had the Counties of Cantire, Argile, Braid-Albin, (or Albanie) Lorn, Loquhabre, and Strathnavern, lying on the West and North: the other Northern moity (excepting some parts neer the coast of the German Ocean possessed by the Saxons) containing the now Counties of Gathness, Southerland, Ross, Murray, Buquhan, Marre, Mern, Angus, Athol, Perth, Fife, Strathern and Menteith, being only left unto the Picts. From whence the Saxons and Scots came into these parts hath been shewn already. And for the Picts, (to omit here the refutation of those who will have them to descend from the Agathyrsi, a people of Scythia) they were no other than such of the naturall Britans, as never were brought under the Roman Empire, but still preserved their Countrey in its former Liberty; called therefore by Tertullian, inaccessa Romanis loca, as indeed they were: and using still their antient custom of painting their bodies, after the rest of their Countreymen had conformed themselves to more civill courses, were by the Romans called Picti; and by that name first mentioned in the Panegyrick of Eunomius, in the time of Constantine the Great. They long possessed these parts without an Inmate, even till the year 424. when the Irish-Scots wanting room at home, and having formerly possessed themselves of the Western Isles, first set foot in Britain: with whom they had continuall Warre, till in the end the Scots prevailing, compelled the Picts to abandon to them the Western parts, and withdraw themselves into the Eastern. Afterwards growing into better terms with one another, and willing to enlarge their borders toward the more flourishing South; they contracted an Offensive and Defensive League against the Britans; whom on all sides they most miserably tortered, till vanquished and beat back by the conquering Saxons, against whom they contracted a new Confederacy. Taking the advantage of the death of Etheldred, King of the Northumbers, and the invasion of the Danes on the rest of England; they got into their hands all Bernicia, or so much of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians, as lay on the North of Twede, and Solway; reckoned from that time forward as a part of their Dominions. But this good neighbourhood held not long betwixt these two Nations. It hapned at the last, that Achaius King of the Scots, maried Fergusia, Sister unto Hungust King of the Picts, and had by her a Son called Alpine, who after the death of Hungust, dying without issue, and having none of a neerer kindred, was in the judgement of the Scots, to succeed in that Kingdom. But the Picts, alleging a Law of not admitting Aliens to the Crown, chose one Ferreth of their own Nation, to be their King: with whom Alpine contended in a long War, victorious for the most part, in conclusion slain. The quarrell notwithstanding did remain betwixt the unfriendly Nations, till at the last, after many bloudy battels, and mutual overthrows (the Scots being for the moſt part on the loſing ſide) Kenneth, the ſecond of that name, vanquiſhed Donsken, the laſt King of the Picts, with ſo great a ſlaughter of his People, that he extinguiſhed not their Kingdom only, but their very name; paſſing from that time forwards under that of Scots. No mention after this of the Pictiſh Nation: unleſs perhaps we will believe that ſome of them paſſed into France; and there, forſooth, ſubdued that Countrey which we now call Picardy. Scotland.

As for the Catalogue of the Kings of the Scots in Britain, I ſhall begin the ſame with Fergus, the ſecond of that name in the Accompt of their Hiſtorians: leaving out that rabble of 38 Kings (half of them at the leaſt before Chriſts Nativity) mentioned by Hector Boetius, Buchannan, and others of their Claſſick Authors. Neither ſhall I offend herein, as I conjecture, the more judicious and underſtanding men of the Scotiſh Nation, (and for others I take little care) ſince I deal no more unkindly with their firſt Fregus, and his Succeſſors, than I have done already with our own Brutus, and his. The firſt Scotiſh King that ſetled himſelf in the North of Britain, is, according to the above named Hector Boetius, one Fergus, which in the time that Coyle governed the Britans, came (forſooth) into theſe parts out of Ireland. From him, unto Eugenius, we have the names of 39 Kings in a continued ſucceſſion: which Eugenius, together with his whole Nation, is ſaid to have been expelled the Iſland, by a joynt confederacy of the Romans, Britans, and Picts. Twenty and ſeven years after the death of this Eugenius, they were reduced again into their poſſeſſion here, by the valour and conduct of another Fergus, the ſecond of that name. To this Fergus I refer the beginning of this Scotiſh Kingdom in Britain, holding the ſtories of the former 39 Kings, to be vain and fabulous. Neither want I probable conjecture for this aſſertion, this expedition of Fergus into Britain, being placed in the 424 year of CHRIST; at what time the beſt Writers of the Roman ſtory for thoſe times, report the Scots to have firſt ſeated themſelves in this Iſland.

The Kings of chief note in the courſe of the whole Succeſſion are, 1 Achaius, who died in the year 809 and in his life contracted the offenſive and defenſive league with Charles the Great, between the Kingdoms of France and Scotland. The conditions whereof were, 1 Let this league between the two Kingdoms endure for ever; 2 Let the enemies unto one, be reputed and handled as the enemies of the other; 3 If the Saxons or Engliſh-men invade France, the Scots ſhall ſend thither ſuch numbers of Souldiers as ſhall be deſired, the French King defraying the charges; 4 If the Engliſh invade Scotland, the King of France ſhall at his own charges ſend competent aſſiſtance unto the King of Scots. Never was there any league, which was either more faithfully obſerved, or longer continued, than this between theſe two Kingdoms: the Scots on all occaſions ſo readily aſſiſting the French, that it grew to a proverb, or by-word, He that will France win, muſt with Scotland firſt begin. 2 Kenneth the ſecond, who having utterly ſubdued and deſtroyed the Picts, extended his Dominions over all the preſent Scotland, deſervedly to be accompted the firſt Monarch of it: the Picts (being either rooted out, or ſo few in number, that they paſſed afterwards in the name and accompt of Scots) from that time forwards never mentioned in any Author. 3 Malcolm the firſt, who added Weſtmorland, and Cumberland, unto his Dominions; given to him by King Edmund of England, the Son of Athelſtane, to have his aid againſt the Danes, or to keep him neutrall. After which time, thoſe Counties were ſometimes Scotiſh and ſometimes Engliſh, till finally recovered by King Henry the ſecond, and united to the Crown of England; never ſince disjoyned. 4 Kenneth the third, who by conſent of the Eſtates of his Realm, made the Kingdom hereditary, to deſcend from the Father to his Eldeſt Son; before which time (keeping within the compaſs of the Royall Family) the Uncle was ſometimes preferred before the Nephew; the eldeſt in years, though further off, before the younger Kinſman, though the neerer in bloud. After which time (the oppoſition and interruption made by Conſtantine the third, and Donald the fourth, excepted only) the Eldeſt Sons of the Kings, or the next in birth, have ſucceeded ordinarily in that Kingdom. This Kenneth was one of thoſe Tributary and Vaſſal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, neer Cheſter, in ſuch pomp and majeſty. 5 Macbbeth, of whom there goeth a famous ſtory, which ſhall be told at large anon. 6 Malcolm the third, the Son of Duncane, who lived in England during the whole time of Macbbeths tyranny; and thence brought into Scotland at his return, not only ſome Civilities of the Engliſh garb; but the honourary titles of Earls and Barons, not here before uſed. At the perſwaſion of the Lady Margaret his wife, (Siſter of Edgar, ſurnamed Atheling, and after his deceaſe the right Heir of the Crown of England) he aboliſhed the barbarous cuſtom ſpoken of before. He did homage to William the Conquerour for the Crown of Scotland, but afterwards ſiding againſt him with the Engliſh, was ſlain at Alnwick. 7 David, the youngeſt Son of Malcolm the third, ſucceeded his two Brothers, Edgar and Alexander (dying without iſſue) in the Throne of his Father; and in right of his Mother the Lady Margaret, Siſter and Heir of Edgar Atheling, and Daughter of Edward the Eldeſt Son of Edmund the ſecond, ſurnamed Ironſide, King of England, had the beſt title to that Kingdom alſo: but diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Norman Conquerours; with whom, by reaſon of the great puiſſance of thoſe Kings, and the little love which the Engliſh bare unto the Scots, not able to diſpute their Title by force of Armes. From Maud the Siſter of this David, maried to Henry the firſt of England, deſcended all the Kings of England (King Stephen excepted) to Queen Elizabeths death: from David all the Kings of Scotland, till King James the ſixth, who on the death of Queen Elizabeth, ſucceeded in the Crown of England, in right of his deſcent from another Margaret, the eldeſt Daughter of King Henry the ſeventh. So that in his perſon there was not an union of the Kingdoms only, under the Title of Great Britain, but a reſtoring of the old Line of the Saxon Kings (of which he was the direct and indubitate Heir) to the Crown of England; the poſſeſſion whereof had for ſo long time continued in the Poſterity of the Norman Conqueror. And upon this deſcent it followeth moſt undeniably, that though the Norman Conquerer got the Crown of England by the power of the Sword, from the true Heirs of Edmund Scotland. the second, surnamed Ironside; and that his Successors had enjoyed it by no other Title till Queen Elizabeths death: yet James, the first Monarch of Great Britain, succeeded by a right descent from the Saxon Line: without relation to the Conquest of the Norman Bastard. 8 William, the Brother of Malcolm the fourth, and Nephew of David before mentioned by his Son Prince Henry (who died in the life of his Father) being taken prisoner at the Battail of Alnwick; did homage to King Henry the second for the Crown of Scotland, and was thereupon restored to his Liberty, and his Realm to peace. What doth occur concerning the succeeding Kings, when their affairs with England and the World abroad became more considerable, we shall see anon.

In the mean time proceed we to the story of Macbeth, than which for variety of action, and strangeness of events, I never met with any more pleasing. The story in brief is thus. Duncan King of the Scots had two principall men, whom he employed in all matters of importance; Macbeth, and Banquho. These two travelling together through a Forrest, were met by three Fairies, Witches (Weirds the Scots call them) whereof the first making obeysance unto Macbeth, saluted him Thane (a title unto which that of Earl afterward succeeded) of Glammis: the second, Thane of Cawder; and the third, King of Scotland. This is unequal dealing, saith Banquho, to give my friend all the honours, and none unto me; to which one of the Weirds made answer, That he indeed should not be King, but out of his loyns should come a Race of Kings, that should for ever rule the Scots. And having thus said, they all suddenly vanished. Upon their arrival to the Court, Macbeth was immediately created Thane of Glammis; and not long after, some new service of his requiring new recompence, he was honoured with the title of Thane of Cawder. Seeing then how happily the prediction of the three Weirds fell out in the two former; he resolved not to be wanting to himself in fulfilling the third: and therefore first he killed the King, and after, by reason of his command among the Souldiers, and common people, he succeeded in his Throne. Being scarce warm in his seat, he called to mind the prediction given to his Companion Banquho: whom hereupon suspecting as his supplanter, he caused him to be killed, together with his whole Posterity; Fleance one of his Sons, escaping only with no small difficulty, into Wales. Freed, as he thought, from all fear of Banquho and his issue, he built Dunsinan Castle, and made it his ordinary seat: and afterwards on some new fears, consulting with certain of his Wizards about his future Estate; was told by one of them, that he should never be overcome, till Bernane Wood (being some miles distant) came to Dunsinan Castle; and by another, that he should never be slain by any man which was born of a woman. Secure then, as he thought, from all future dangers, he omitted no kind of libidinous cruelty, for the space of 18 years, for so long he tyrannized over Scotland. But having then made up the measure of his iniquities, Mac-duffe the Governour of Fife, associating to himself some few Patriots, equally hated by the Tyrant, and abhorring the Tyranny; privily met one evening at Bernane Wood: and taking every one of them a bough in his hand, (the better to keep them from discovery) marched early in the morning towards Dunsinan Castle, which they took by Scalado. Macbeth escaping was pursued by Mac-duffe, who having overtaken him, urged him to the combat; to whom the Tyrant, half in scorn, returned this Answer, That he did in vain attempt to kill him, it being his destinie never to be slain by any that was born of a Woman. Now then said Mac duffe, is thy fatal end drawing fast upon thee, for I was never born of Woman, but violently cut out of my Mothers belly: which words so daunted the cruell Tyrant, though otherwise a valiant man and of great performances, that he was very easily slain; and Malcolm Conmer, the true Heir of the Crown, seated in the Throne. In the mean time Fleance so prospered in Wales, that he gained the affection of the Princes Daughter of that Countrey; and on her begat a Son called Walter; who flying out of Wales, returned into Scotland; and his descent once known, he was not only restored to the Honours, and Estates of his Ancestors, but preferred to be Steward of the house of Edgar, the Son of Malcolm the third, surnamed Conmer; the name of Stewart, growing hence hereditary unto his Posterity. From this Walter descended that Robert Stewart, who succeeded David Bruce in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Progenitor of nine Kings of the name of Stewart, which have Reigned successively in that kingdom. But it is now time to leave off particulars, and look into the generall Succession of 994 11 Conſtantin IV. an Intruder, againſt the Law, and Line of Kenneth the 3d.

1004 12 Malcolm II. Sonne of Kenneth the 3d. oppoſed by Grime, the Nephew of Duffe.
1035 13 Duncan, Sonne of Grime, ſucceeded Malcolm the 2d dying without iſſue.
1040 14 Macbeth, the Tyrant and Uſurper.
1057 15 Malcolm III. Son of Duncan.
1096 16 Donald IV. ſurnamed Ban, Brother of Malcolm the 3d.
1198 17 Edgar, Son of Malcolm the 3d.

1124 19 David, Brother of Alexander.
1133 20 Malcolm, Son of David.
1166 21 William, Brother of Malcolm the 4th.
1213 22 Alexander II. Son of William.
1250 23 Alexander III. Son of Alexander the 2d. after whoſe death, dying without any iſſue, An. 1285. began that tedious and bloody Quarrell about the ſucceſſion of this Kingdom, occaſioned by ſundry Titles and Pretendants to it: the principal wereof were Bruce, and Baliol, deſcended from the Daughters of David, Earl of Huntingdon, younger Son of William, and Great Uncle of Alexander the 3d, the laſt of the Male iſſue of Kenneth the 3d, thoſe of neerer Kindred being quite extinct. And when the Scots could not compoſe the difference, among themſelves; it was taken into conſideration by King Edward the firſt of England, as the Lord Paramouus of that Kingdom: who ſelecting 12 Engliſh, and as many of the Scots to adviſe about it, with the conſent of all adjudged it to John Baliol Lord of Galloway, Son of John Baliol and Dervorguilla his Wife, Daughter of Alan Lord of Galloway, and of the Lady Margaret, the eldeſt Daughter of the ſaid David; who having done his homage to the ſaid King Edward, was admitted King.
1300 24 John Baliol, an Engliſh-man, but forgetfull both of Engliſh birth, and Engliſh Favours, invaded the Realm of England in Hoſtile manner, and was taken priſoner by King Edward. Who following his blow, made himſelf Maſter of all Scotland, which he held during the reſt of his life, and had here his Chancery, and other Courts. 6.
1306 25 Robert Bruce, Son of Robert Bruce Lord of Annandale (Competitor with Baliol for the Crown of Scotland in Right of Iſabel his Mother, the ſecond Daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon, and conſequently a degree neerer to the King deceaſed than Baliol was, though deſcended from the elder Siſter) was crowned King in the life-time of King Edward the firſt; but not fully poſſeſſed thereof untill after his death: confirmed therein by the great defeat given to Edward the ſecond, at the fight of Bannocks-bourn, not far from Sterling, ſpoken of before. But he being dead, Anno 1332. Edward the third confirmed the Kingdom on 1332 26 Edward Baliol, Son of John Baliol, rejected by the Scots for adhering ſo firmly to the Engliſh; who thereupon harried Scotland with fire and ſword. 10.
27 David Bruce the Son of Robert, reſtored unto his Fathers Throne by the power of the Scots, and a great enemy to the Engliſh. Invading England, when King Edward was at the ſiege of Calice, he was taken Priſoner by Q. Philip, the Wife of that King, and brought to Windſor; where he was Priſoner, for a while, with King John of France. Releaſed at laſt on ſuch conditions as beſt pleaſed the Conquerour. 29.
1371 28 Robert II. ſurnamed Stewart, King of the Scots by deſcent from the eldeſt Siſter of David Bruce, was extracted alſo from the antient Princes of Wales (as was ſaid before): reſtoring thereby the Britiſh blood to the Throne of Scotland.
1390 29 Robert III. Sonne of Robert the ſecond, called John before he came to the Crown; in which much over-awed by his own brother the Duke of Albanie, who had an aim at it for himſelf. 16.
1406 30 James, Son of Robert the third, taken priſoner by King Henry the fourth of England, as he was croſſing the Seas for France, to avoid the practiſes of his Uncle. Reſtored unto his Countrey in the beginning of the reign of King Henry the ſixth, after 18 years abſence, he was at laſt moſt miſerably murdered by the Earl of Athol, claiming a right unto that Crown. 42.
1448 31 James II. ſlain by the Engliſh at the Siege of Roxborough Caſtle. 24.
1462 32 James III. ſlain by his own rebellious Subjects. 29.

Scotland. 1491 33 James IV. maried Margaret, the eldeſt Daughter of King Henry the ſeventh, but at the ſoliciting of the French, (againſt the Peace between the Nations) he invaded England (in the abſence of King Henry the eight) with 100000 men: but was met with by the Earl of Surry (having 26000 men in his Army) nigh unto Flodden; where he was ſlain, together with two Biſhops, twelve Earles, fourteen Lords, and his whole Army routed. 23.

1514 34 James V. ſon of James the fourth, and the Lady Margaret, kept for a time ſuch good correſpondencie with the Engliſh, that in the year 1536, he was created Knight of the Order of the Garter. But afterwards inheriting his Fathers hatred againſt them, he invaded their Borders in the year 1542: and was met by the Lord Wharton, then Warden of Weſt Marches. The battels being ready to joyn, one S. Oliver Sincleer the Kings favorite, though otherwiſe of no great parentage, was by the Kings directions proclaimed General: which the Scotiſh Nobility took in ſuch indignation, that they threw down their weapons, and ſuffered themſelves to be taken priſoners; there being not one man ſlain on either ſide. The principal priſoners were the Earls of Glencarn, and Caſſiles; the Barons Maxwell, Oliphant, Somerwell, Flemming, with divers others: beſides many of the principal Gentry. 28.

1542 35 Mary, the Daughter and only lawfully-begotten child of James the fifth, ſucceeded in her Cradle unto the Throne; promiſed in mariage to King Edward the ſixth of England; but by the power of the Hamiltons carried into France, where maried to Francis, then Daulphin, afterwards King of the French, of that name the ſecond. After whoſe death, ſhe maried Henry Lord Darnly, eldeſt Son of Matthew Earl of Lennox. Outed of her Dominions by a potent Faction, ſhe was compelled to flie into England; where after a tedious impriſonment, ſhe was put to death in Fotheringhay Caſtle in Northamptonſhire, and interred at Peterburg, Anno 1586.

1567 36 James VI. The Son of Mary Queen of Scots, and of Henry Lord Darnly, was crowned King in his Cradle alſo. He maried Anne, the Daughter of Chriſtiern the third, King of Denmarke; was choſe of the Order of the Garter, Ann. 1590. and ſucceeded Queen Elizabeth in the Realm of England, March 24. Ann. 1602. And here I cannot omit the prudent foreſight of Henry the ſeventh, who having two Daughters, beſtowed the Eldeſt (contrary to the mind of his Councell) on the King of Scots, and the younger on the King of the French: that ſo, if his own Iſſue male ſhould fail, and that a Prince of another Nation muſt inherit England; then Scotland as the leſſer Kingdom would depend upon England, and not England wait on France, as upon the greater. In which ſucceſſion of the Scots to the Crown of England, the Prophecie of the fatall Stone, ſpoken of before, did receive accompliſhment. And ſo perhaps might that aſcribed in the Polychronicon to an holy Anchoret living in King Egelreds time, which is this, Engliſhmen, for that they wonneth them to drunkenneſs, to treaſon, and to retchleſneſs of Gods houſe, firſt by Danes, and then by Normans, and the third time by Scots, whom they holden leaſt worth of all, they ſhall be overcome. Then the world ſhall be unſtable, and ſo divers and variable, that the unſtableneſs of thoughts ſhall be betokned by many manner diverſity of Clothing. For on this union of the Kingdoms, this prediction ſeems to have been accompliſhed; the circumſtances mentioned in the ſame ſo partly agreeing, and the Scots never ſubduing England, but by this bleſſed Victory. Unleſſe perhaps the Accompliſhment thereof be ſtill to come; or that it was indeed more literally fulfilled in the great defeat at Banocks-bourn, in which was ſlain 50000 Engliſh, as the Scotiſh Writers do report, and the name of Scot growing ſo terrible for a time, that an hundred of the Engliſh would flie from three Scots, as before was noted.

The Revenues of this Crown Boterus eſtimateth at 100000 Crowns, or 30000 ſterling, and it is not like that they were much more, if they came to that: here being not commodity in this Kingdom to allure ſtrangers to traffick: the Domain or Patrimony of the Crown, but mean; the Countrey in moſt places, barren; and many of the Subjects, thoſe eſpecially of the Out-Iſles, and the Weſtern parts, ſo extremely barbarous, that they add very ſmall improvement to the publick Treaſury.

And anſwerable to the ſhortneſs of their ſtanding Revenue, were their Forces alſo. For though the Countrey be very populous, and the men generally patient both of cold and hunger, and inured to hardſhip; yet in regard the Kings hereof were not able to maintain an Army under pay, their Forces ſeldom held together above 40 days; and then, if not a great deal ſooner, did diſband themſelves. For the Nobility and Gentry being bound by the Tenure of their Lands, to ſerve the King in his Wars, and to bring with them ſuch and ſo many of their Vaſſals, as the preſent ſervice did require: uſed to provide for themſelves and their followers, tents, money, victuals, proviſion of all ſorts, and all other neceſſaries; the King ſupplying them with nothing. Which being ſpent, they uſually diſbanded, and went home again, without attending long on the Expedition. Which I conceive to be the reaſon, why the Scots in the time of hoſtility betwixt the Nations, made only ſudden and tumultuary incurſions into England; without performing any thing of ſpecial moment: and that they have not acted any thing elſewhere in the way of conqueſt; but only as Mercenaries to the French and other Nations that have hired them. And though it be affirmed that the Army of King James the fourth, when he invaded England in the time of King Henry the eighth, being then in France) conſiſted of 100000 fighting men; yet this I look on only as an argument of their populoſity: few of thoſe men being armed or trained up to ſervice; and therefore eaſily diſcomfited by a far leſſe Army. It's true, that in the year 1643 the Scotiſh Covenanters raiſed an Army conſiſting of 18000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons; with Armes, Artillery and Ammunition correſpondent to it: which was the gallanteſt Army, and the beſt appointed, that ever that nation did ſet out in the times foregoing. But then it is as true withal, that this Army was maintained and payed, by the two Houſes of the Parliament of England, at the rate of 30000 l. per menſem, and an advance of 100000 l. before-hand, the better to invite them to embrace the action, and prepare neceſſaries of it; without any charge unto themſelves. And though the Army which they ſent into England above five years after, under James Duke Hamilton of Arran, was little inferiour unto this in number, but far ſuperiour to it both in Horſe and Arms, and other neceſſary appointments: yet it is well known, that the Scots brought nothing but their own bodies to compound that Army; the Horſe and Arms being ſuch as they had gotten out of England, in the former war. Scotland.

In point of reputation amongſt forain Princes, the Kings of the Scots, and their Ambaſſadors and Agents, had place in all General Councels, and Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, before [thoſe of Caſtile: and by the Statiſts of late times, have been reckoned (with the Kings of England, France, and Spain) for abſolute Monarchs. But I conceive that this was only ſince the firſt years of King Edward the third, when they had quitted that ſubjection and vaſſallage to the Crown of England. For that antiently the Scots were Homagers to the Kings of England, may be apparently demonſtrated by theſe following Arguments. 1 By the Homages, and other ſervices, and duties, done by the Kings of the Scots unto thoſe of England: Malcolm the third doing Homage unto William the Conquerour; as William one of his Succeſſors, did to K. Henry the ſecond: and that not only for the three Northern Counties, or the Earldom of Huntingdon (as by ſome pretended) but for the very Crown it ſelf: Kenneth the third, being alſo one of thoſe eight Tributary or Vaſſal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, as before was noted. 2ly, By the interpoſing of King Edward the firſt, and the ſubmiſſion of the Scots to that interpoſing, in determining the controverſie of ſucceſſion betwixt Bruce, and Baliol: as in like caſe, Philip the Fair adjudged the title of Artoys, which was holden of the Crown of France, and then in queſtion betwixt the Lady Maud, and her Nephew Robert; or as King Edward the third, in the right of the ſaid Crown of France, determined of the controverſie betwixt John Earl of Montford, and Charles of Blois, for the Dukedom of Bretagne. 3ly, By the confeſſion and acknowledgment of the Prelates, Peers, and other the Eſtates of Scotland, ſubſcribed by all their hands and ſeals in the Roll of Ragman; wherein they did acknowledge the ſuperiority of the Kings of England, not only in regard of ſuch advantages as the ſword had given him, but as of his original and undoubted right. Which Rol was treacherouſly delivered into the hands of the Scots, by Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, in the beginning of the reign of King Edward the third. 4ly, By the tacit conceſſion of the Kings themſelves, who in their Coins, Commiſſions, and publick Inſtruments, aſſume not to themſelves the title of Kings of Scotland, but of Reges Scotorum, or the Kings of the Scots: and thereby intimating that though they are the Kings of the Nation, yet there is ſome ſuperiour Lord (King Paramount as we may cal him) who hath the Royalty of the Land. 5ly, By the Judgements and Arreſts of the Courts of England, not only in the times of King Edward the firſt, but in ſome times ſince. For when William Wallis a Scotiſhman by birth, and the beſt Souldier of that Countrey, was taken Priſoner and brought to London, he was adjudged to ſuffer death as a Traytor: which had been an illegal and unrighteous judgement, had he been a Priſoner of War, and not looked on by the Judges as a Subject to the Crown of England. The like done in the caſe of Simon Frezill, another of that Kingdom, in the ſame Kings reign. In like manner, in the time of King Edward the third, it was reſolved by the Court, in the Lord Beaumonts caſe, when it was objected that one of the Witneſſes was a Scot, and therefore as an Alien not to give his evidence; that his teſtimony was to be allowed of, becauſe the Scots in the Law of England, did not go for Aliens. And when one indicted for a Rape in the 13th of Queen Elizabeths reign, deſired a Medietatem linguæ, becauſe he was a Scotchman, and ſo an Alien; it was denied him by the Court, becauſe the Scots were not reputed here as Aliens, but as Subjects rather. So alſo, when Robert Umfranville, Lord of Kyme, was ſummoned to the Parliament of England, in the reign of King Edward the third, by the name of Robert Earl of Angus, (which is a dignity in Scotland); and after in a Writ againſt him was called only by his own name of Umfranville, without any addition of that honour; the Writ was judged to abate: which I conceive the learned Judges had not done, if Scotland had not been reputed to be under the Vaſſalage of the Kings of England. 6ly, and laſtly, by a Charter of Lands and Arms, (which I have in my cuſtody) granted by King Edward the firſt, in the laſt year of his reign, to Peter Dodge of Stopworth in the County of Cheſter, one of the Anceſtors of my Mother: in which it is expreſſed, that the ſaid Lands and Arms were conferred upon him by that King, for his eminent ſervices, encontre ſon grand Enemy et Rebel, Baliol, Roy d' Eſcoſſe et Vaſſal de Angleterre; that is to ſay, againſt his great Enemy and Rebel Baliol King of Scotland, and Vaſſal of England. A thing ſo clear, that if King James had not been extremely tender of the honour of his native Countrey, he needed not to have put his Lawyers to the trouble of a New invention, in hammering the Caſe of the Poſt-nati for him; to make the Scots inheritable unto Lands in England. The acknowledgement and Reviver of their old Subjection would have ſerved his turn. But of this argument enough, and perhaps too much. I only add, that upon conference which I once had with an honourable perſon of that Kingdom of Scotland, employed unto the Court in a buſineſſe of no mean conſequence to the peace and quiet of his Countrey: I found him ſo ſenſible of the inconveniences of their preſent Government, by reaſon of the Kings abſence, and the frequent diviſions and partialities of his Councell there; that he confeſſed that Nation could Ireland. be never rich or happy, till they were made a Province of the Engliſh Empire; and governed by a Vice-Roy, as Ireland was.

The principal Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of S. Andrew, inſtituted by Hungus, King of the Picts, to incourage his Subjects in the war againſt King Athelſtane of England. The Knights did wear about their necks a Collar, interlaced with Thiſtles, with the picture of St. Andrew appendant to it: The Motto, Nemo me impunè laceſſit. It took this name becauſe after the battle, Hungus and his Souldiers went all bare-foot to S. Andrews, and there vowed that they and their Poſterity would thenceforth uſe his Croſſe as their Enſign (which is a Saltire Argent in a Field Azure) whenſoever they took in hand any warlike enterpriſe.

2 But this Order being expired many Ages ſince, there is now no Order of Knighthood in it, (except Knights Bachelers) but that of Nova Scotia; ordained by King James, Ann. 1622. for the planting of that Countrey by Scotiſh Colonies; in imitation of the order of Baronets in England, for the plantation of Ulſter. Hereditary, as that alſo is, but the Knights hereof diſtinguiſhed by a Ribband of Orange-Tawnie.

The Arms are Sol, a Lion Rampant Mars, within a double Treſſure counter-flowred: Which Treſſure counter flowred was added to the Lyon by Achaius King of the Scots, at what time he contracted the League with France: ſignifying (ſaith Hector Boetius one of their Hiſtorians) Francorum opibus Leonem exinde muniendum; that the Scoteh Lion ſhould be guarded by the riches of France.

IRELAND.

IRELAND is invironed on all ſides with the Ocean; parted from Britain by a violent and unruly Sea, called S. Georges Chanel. Situate on the Weſt of Britain, next unto which it is the biggeſt Iſland of Europe, containing in length 300, and in breadth 120 miles: and is ſeated under the 8th and 10th Climates; the longeſt day being 16 hours and an half in the Southern, and 17 hours 3 quarters in the Northern parts.

It was once called Scotia, from the Scots who did there inhabit; and Scotia Minor, to difference it from Scotland, in the Iſle of Britain. But the generall name hereof is Ireland; by the Latins called Hibernia, by the Greeks, Iernia. And though ſome frame a wreſted Etymologie from Iberus, a Spaniſh Captain and ſome from Irnaulph, once a ſuppoſed Duke hereof; as others ab Hyberno aere, the Winter-like and inclement air: yet probably the name proceeded from Erinland, which ſignifyeth in their own language a Weſtern land. And yet I muſt not pretermit the Etymon given us by Bochartus, (more neer the name than moſt of his other Fancies) who will have it called Hibernia, from Ibernae, a Phœnician word, ſignifying the furtheſt Habitation: there being no Countrey known amongſt the Antients, which lay Weſt of Ireland.

Their own Chronicles, or Fables rather, tell us, how Cæſarea, Noahs Neece, inhabited here before the Flood; and how 300 years after the Flood, it was ſubdued by Bartholanus, a Scythian, who overcame here I know not what Giants. Afterward Nemethus another Scythian Prince, and Delus a Grecian, came hither: and laſt of all Gaothel, with his Wife Scota, one of Pharaohs Daughters; who muſt needs name this Iſland Scotia. But not to honour ſuch fopperies with a confutation, doubtleſly the firſt inhabitants of this Iſland came out of Britain. For Britain is the nigheſt Countrey unto it, and ſo had a more ſpeedy waftage hither; Secondly, the antient Writers call this Iſland a Britiſh Iſland; and thirdly, Tacitus giveth us of this Countrey this verdict; Solum, cœlumque cultus & ingenia hominum, haud multum à Britannia differunt; the Soil and Air, the habits and diſpoſition of the people, were not much unlike the Britans. For further evidence whereof, it was obſerved, at the reduction of Wales to the Crown of England, by King Edward the firſt, that many of their Laws and Cuſtoms were thoſe of the Iriſh: which ſhews that they did both deſcend from the ſame Original. But then we muſt obſerve withall, that they were counted far more barbarous and ſavage by moſt antient Writers, than thoſe of Britain are deciphered at the firſt diſcovery: ſaid by Strabo to be man-eaters; accuſtomed (as Solinus telleth us) to drink the blood of thoſe whom they ſlew in fight. Nor were the women, though the ſofter and more tender Sex, free from ſuch wild and ſavage cuſtoms: it being a conſtant courſe amongſt them, when they were delivered of a man childe, to put ſome meat into the mouth of it, on the point of a ſword; wiſhing therewith it might not die but in the middeſt of Arms, and the heat of battel. Both Sexes uſed to trim themſelves with the Teeth of Fiſhes, white as the driven Snow, or the poliſhed Ivory; and therein placed the greateſt part of their pride and bravery.

Nor

Ireland.

Nor are the modern Iriſh much abhorrent from ſuch barbarous cuſtoms, as plainly ſhew from what Originall they deſcend; altered but litele by converſe with more civill Nations. Of naturall conſtitution generally ſtrong and nimble of body, haughty of heart, careleſs of their lives, patient in cold and hunger, implacable in enmity, conſtant in love, light of belief, greedy of glory: and in a word, if they be bad, you ſhall no where find worſe; if they be good, you ſhall hardly meet with better. The Diet, eſpecially of the meer Iriſh, is for the moſt part, on herbs, roots, butter mingled with oat-flowre, milk, and beef-broth: eating fleſh many times without bread, which they digeſt with Uſquebaugh; and give their bread-corn to their horſes in ſtead of Provender. But more particularly, thoſe of the richer ſort in all parts, and of all ſorts thoſe which inhabit within the Pale (as they themſelves call it) and in ſuch places where the Engliſh Diſcipline hath been entertained; comformable to civility, both in behaviour and apparell: The Kernes (for by that name they call the wild Iriſh of the poorer and inferiour ſort) moſt extremely barbarous; not behaving themſelves like Chriſtians, ſcarcely like men. All of them ſo tenacious of their antient cuſtoms, that neither power, nor reaſon, nor the ſenſe of the inconveniences which they ſuffer by it, can wean them to deſert or change them. A pregnant evidence whereof, is their uſe of Ploughing, not with ſuch geares or harneſs, as in other places; but by tying the hindmoſt horſes head to the tayl of the former: which makes the poor Jades draw in a great deal of pain; makes them unſerviceable by the ſoon loſing of their tails; and withall is a courſe of ſo ſlow a diſpatch, that they cannot break up as much ground in a week, as a good Teem well harneſſed would performe in a day; yet no perſwaſion hath been able to prevail upon them for the changing of this hurtfull and ridiculous cuſtom. And when the Earl of Strafford, the late Lord Deputy, had damned it by Act of Parliament, and laid a penalty on ſuch as ſhould after uſe it: the people thought it ſuch a grievance, and ſo injurious to the Nation, that among other things demanded towards a Pacification of the preſent troubles, their Agents and Commiſſioners inſiſted eagerly on the abrogation of this Law. An humour like to this in the point of Husbandry, we ſhall hereafter meet with, in another place. Neer of kin to which, is a lazie cuſtom that they have of burning their ſtraw (rather then put themſelves to the pains to threſh it) by that means to part it from the corn. From which no reaſon can diſſwade them, nor perſwaſions win them. They have among them other cuſtomes as abſurd, though leſſe inconvenient: as placing a green buſh, on May-day before their doores, to make their kine yeeld the more milk; kneeling down to the New Moon as ſoon as they ſee it, deſiring her to leave them in as good health as ſhe found them; and many others of like nature.

They uſe a language of their own, but ſpoken alſo in the Weſt of Scotland, and the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſlands; which though originally Britiſh, or a Dialect of it, by reaſon of their intermixture with Norwegians, Danes, Eaſterlings or Ooſt-mans, and Engliſh-Saxons; hath no affinity with the Welch, for ought I can learn.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached among them by S. Patrick, affirmed to be the Nephew of S. Martin of Tours, Anno 435. Reformed in the more civill parts, and the Engliſh Colonies, according to the platform of the Church of England: but the Kernes, or naturall wild Iriſh, (and many of the better ſort of the Nation alſo) either adhere unto the Pope, or to their own ſuperſtitious fancies, as in former times. And to ſay truth, it is no wonder that they ſhould; there being no care taken to inſtruct them in the Proteſtant Religion: either by tranſlating the Bible, or the Engliſh Liturgie, into their own Language, as was done in Wales; but forcing them to come to Church to the Engliſh Service, which the people underſtand no more then they do the Maſs. By means whereof, the Iriſh are not only kept in continuall ignorance, as to the doctrine and devotions of the Church of England, and others of the Proteſtant Churches: but thoſe of Rome are furniſhed with an excellent Argument, for having the Service of the Church in a Language which the common Hearers do not underſtand. And therefore I do heartily commend it to the care of the State (when theſe diſtempers are compoſed) to provide, that they may have the Bible, and all other publick means of Chriſtian inſtruction, in their natural tongue.

The Soil of it ſelf is abundantly fruitfull, but naturally fitter for graſs and paſturage, then it is for tillage: as may be ſeen in ſuch places where the induſtry of man is aiding to the natural goodneſs of the Soil. But where that wanteth, the Countrey is either over-grown with Woods, or encombred with vaſt Boggs and unwholeſom Mariſhes; yeelding neither profit nor pleaſure unto the Inhabitants. In ſome places, as in the County of Armagh, ſo rank and fertill; that the laying of any ſoil or compoſt on it, doth abate its fruitfulneſſe, and proves the worſt Husbandry that can be.

It hath been antiently very famous for the Piety and Religious lives of the Monks. Amongſt whom I cannot but remember Columbus, and of him this memorable Apophthegm: when offered many fair preferments to leave his Countrey, he returned this Anſwer, It becomes not them to imbrace other ments goods, who for Chriſts ſake had forſaken their own. Of no leſſe piety, but more eminent in point of Learning, was Richard Fitz-Rafe, Archbiſhop of Armagh, commonly called Armacanus, who flouriſhed about the year 1350. A declared enemy of the Errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome.

It is affirmed of this Iſland that (amongſt other privileges which it hath above other Iſlands) it foſtereth no venomous Serpent, and that no ſuch will live here, brought from other places. Hence of her ſelf we find her ſpeaking in the Poet.

Ireland.

Illa ego ſum Graiis Glacialis Hibernia dicta;
Cui Deus, & melior rerum naſcentium Origo, Jus commune dedit cum Creta altrice Tonantis,
Angues ne noſtris diffundant ſibila in oris.

I am that Iſland which in times of old
The Greeks did call Hibernia, ycie-cold:
Secur'd by God and Nature from this fear,
Which gift was given to Crete, Joves Mother dear;
That poiſonous Snakes ſhould never here be bred,
Or dare to hiſs, or hurtfull venom ſpred.

The other miracles of this Iſland, are, 1 That there is a Lake in the County of Armagh, into which if one thruſt a piece of Wood, he ſhall find that part of it which remaineth in the Mud to be turned into Iron; and that which is in the Water, to be turned into a Whet-ſtone: richly deſerved by him, if the tale be falſe, who did firſt report it. 2 That the Kine will yield no Milk, if their Calves be not by them; or at leaſt their Calves skins ſtuffed with ſtraw or Hay. It is ſaid alſo, that all the breed of this Country are of leſs ſize than they be in England, except Women and Greyhounds, and thoſe much bigger then with us.

As for the Clergy of this Countrey, they have been little beholding to their Lay-Patrons, in former times: ſome of their Biſhops being ſo poor, that they had no other Revenues then the Paſture of two Milch-beaſts. And ſo far had the Monaſteries and Religious houſes invaded by Appropriations, the Churches rights; that of late times in the whole Province of Connaught, the whole ſtipend of the Incumbent was not above 40 ſhillings, in ſome places not above 16. So that the poor Iriſh muſt needs be better fed then taught: for ad tenuitatem Beneficiorum, neceſſariò ſequitur ignorantia Sacerdotum; Poor Benefices will be fitted with ignorant Prieſts, ſaid Panormitan rightly. But this is remedied in part by his Sacred Majeſty King CHARLES, the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain, who liberally (at the ſuit of the late Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury) reſtored unto this Church all the Impropriations and Portions of Tithes, which had been veſted in the Crown. An action of moſt ſingular piety, and Princely bounty.

Principall Rivers of this Countrey, are, 1 The Shannon (the Senas of Ptolemie) which ariſing in the Mountains of Letrim in the County of Connaught, and making many fair Lakes as it paſſeth forwards; loſeth it ſelf, after a courſe of 200 miles (of which 60 navigable) in the Weſtern Ocean. 2 The Liff, by Ptolemie called Libnius, neighboured by the City of Dublin. 3 Awiduffe, or Blackwater, as the Engliſh call it. 4 Sione, ſuppoſed to be the Medona of the antient Writers. 5 The Showre. 6 The Slanie, &c. Of which, and others of like note, take this following Catalogue, out of the Canto of the mariage of the Thames and Medway, in the Faierie Queen.

There was the Liffie rowling down the lea,
The ſandie Slane, the ſtony Aubrian,
The ſpacious Shenin ſpreading like a ſea,
The pleaſant Boyne, the fiſhie-fruitfull Banne,
Swift Awiduffe, which of the Engliſhman
Is call'd Blackwater; and the Liffar deep,
Sad Trowis that once his people over-ran,
Strong Allo tumbling from Slewlogheer ſteep,
And Mallo mine, whoſe waves I whilom taught to weep.

There alſo was the wide-embayed Mayre,
The pleaſant Bandon crown'd with many wood;
The ſpreading Lee, that like an Iſland fair
Incloſeth Cork with his divided flood;
And baleſull Oure, late ſtain'd with Engliſh blood,
With many more, ——

So the renowned Spencer in his Canto of the mariage of Thames and Medway.

But beſides theſe Rivers, this Iſland is in moſt places well ſtored with Lakes, yeelding great plenty of Fiſh to the parts adjoyning. The principal of which, 1 Lough-Erne, containing 15 miles in breadth, and 30 miles in length; ſhaded with woods, and ſo repleniſhed with fiſh, that the Fiſhermen complain of too much abundance, and the often breaking of their nets. It hath alſo in it many Iſlands, one moſt remarkable for the ſtrange and horrid noiſes which are therein heard; called therefore by the Vulgar St. Patricks Purgatory. Almoſt as big as this is 2 the Lake of Corbes, which loſeth it ſelf in the Sea not far from Galloway. A Lake of 26 miles in length, and four in breadth; ſaid to have in it 30 Iſlets, abounding with Pine-trees. 3 Lough-Foyle, ſuppoſed to be the Logia of Ptolemie. 4 Lough-Eaugh, out of which the River Banne, abundantly well ſtored with Salmons, hath its firſt Originall. And beſides theſe and many others of leſſe note, there are ſaid to be three Lakes in the Province of Meth, not far aſunder, and having an entercourſe of waters: but of ſo different a temper, that the

the Fish which are proper to the one (for each of them hath its proper and peculiar sorts) will not live in the other: but either dieth, or by some secret conveyances, find a way to their own Lake out of which they were brought. Ireland.

It was divided antiently into five Provinces, each one a Kingdom of it self; that is to say, 1 Leinster, 2 Meth, 3 Ulster, 4 Connaught, and 5 Mounster: but of late time the Province of Meth is reckoned for a Member or part of Leinster.

1 LEINSTER, by the Latines called Lagenia, hath on the East, the Irish Channel, (commonly called S. Georges Channel) by which parted from the Isle of Great Britain; on the West, the River Newrie, (Neorus, as the Latines call it) which divides it from Mounster; on the North, the Province of Meth; and the main Ocean on the South. The Soil more fruitful generally then the rest of Ireland, because better cultivated and manured, as having been longest in the possession of the English: from whom a great part of the Inhabitants doe derive themselves, and for that reason more conformable to the civilities and habit of the English Nation. Well watered, besides a large Sea-coast, with many fair and pleasant Rivers, the principal whereof, 1 the Barrow, called in Latine Birgus; 2 the Newrie, 3 the Showre, and 4 the Liffie, (the Libnius of Ptolemie) neighbouring Dublin the chief City.

It containeth Counties of 1 Dublin, 2 Kilkenny, 3 Caterlough, 4 Kildare, 5 Lease, or Queens County, 6 Ophalie, or Kings County; and 7 Weisbford: in which are comprehended 34 Towns of note, and 88 Castles, well fortified, and able to make good resistance against an Enemy; the English being forced to fortifie themselves in their Plantations with strong holds and fortresses, against the incursions of the Natives.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Dublin, supposed to be the Eblana of Ptolemie; by the Irish called Balacleigh, because being seated in a fennie and moorish soil, it was built on piles, as the word doth signifie in that language. Situate at or neer the mouth of the River Liffe, which affordeth it a commodious Haven, but that the entrances thereof are many times encumbred with heaps of Sand. The City very rich and populous, as being the Metropolis of all the Island, the Seat of the Lord Deputy, an Archbishops See, and an University, besides the benefit redounding from the Courts of Justice. In those respects well-fortified against all emergencies; and adorned with many goodly buildings, both private and publique. The principal of which, are the Castle, wherein the Lord Deputy resideth, built by Henry Loandres once Archbishop here; a College founded by Queen Elizabeth, to the honor, and by the name of the blessed Trinity; the Cathedral Church dedicated to S. Patrick, the Apostle of the Irish Nation; a fair Collegiate Church called Christ Church; besides thirteen others destinated to Parochial meetings. Being destroyed almost to nothing in the Danish wars, it was re-edified by Harald, surnamed Harfager, King of the Norwegians, then Masters of most parts of the Island; and after the subjection of it to the Crown of England, was peopled with a Colonie of Bristol men. 2 Weisbford or Wexford, the Menapia of Ptolemie, situate on the mouth of the River Slane, supposed to be the Modona of the same Author: the first of all the Towns in Ireland which received a Colonie of English 3 Kilkenny, on the River Newre, the chief Seat of the Bishop of Osserie, and the fairest Town of all the Inlands: so called, quasi Cella Canici, the Cell or Monastery of Canicus, a man of great renown for piety, in these parts of the Countrey. 4 Kildare, an In-land Town also, and a Bishops See; but of more note for giving the Title of an Earl to the antient Family of the Fitz-Geralds, of long time honored with this Title. One of which being much complained of to King Henry the 8th, as a man of so unquiet and turbulent a nature, that his Adversaries closed their charge against him with this expression; Finally, all Ireland cannot rule this Earl; the King replyed, that then this Earl should rule all Ireland: and so for his Jests sake made him Lord Deputy of the Kingdom. 5 Resse, once populous, well traded, and of large Circumference, now a ruine only; nothing remaining but the Wals, which were built by Isabell, the Daughter of Richard Strongbow Earl of Pembroke, the fortunate Conqueror of this Island for King Henry the second. 6 Philips Town, the principal of the County of Ophalie, or Kings County; so called in honor of King Philip; as 7 Marieburg, the chief of Lease, or the Queens County, was in honor of Queen Mary. 8 Leighlin, a place of great importance, well walled and fortified against the incursion of the Irish, by the Lord Deputy Bellingham. 9 Caterlogh, commonly, but corruptly Carlough, a Town of great strength, and the chief of that County. 10 Rheban, not otherwise of note, but that it is conceived to be the Rheba of Ptolemie.

2 METH, by the Latines called Media, by Giraldus, Midia; because situate in the midst of the Island, hath on the South Leinster; on the West, Connaught; on the North, Ulster; on the East, the Irish Sea, or S. Georges Channel. A small, but rich and pleasant Province: well stocked with people, and stored with all things necessary for their sustentation; and for a sweet and wholesom air, not inferiour to any. Divided into three Counties only, that is to say, 1 East Meth, 2 West-Meth, and 3 Long ford; containing 13 Towns of note, and 44 Castles of good esteem. By reason of which strength, it is called by some writers, the Chamber of Ireland.

Towns of most consequence herein, are 1 Trim, the chief Town of the County of East-Meth, the antient Baronie of the Lacies; possessed in former times of a fair Revenue in this County, and the Lords of the greatest part of Ulster. 2 Tredah, more properly Droghedah, situate on the River Boine on the edge of Ulster, to which Province belongs so much of the Town as lieth on the North side of that River: a very fair and populous City, as well by Art as Nature very strongly fortified, and furnished with a large and commodious Haven. It took the name of Droghedah from the Bridge there built upon the River, for the conveniency of passage (as the word signifieth in that Language) and therefore called Pontana by some Latine writers. 3 Mulinga, the Ireland. the chief Town of West-Meth. 4 Delvin, in the same County also, the Barony of the Nagents, an antient Family in this tract. 5 Longford, of most note in the County so named, but not else observable.

As for the fortunes of this Province (for Leinster since the first Conquest of it, hath been inseparably annexed to the Crown of England) it was first granted in Fee-Farm by King Henry the second, to Hugh Lacy, a man of great merit and imployment in the Conquest of Ireland; who left it unto Walter, his younger Son. By Margaret and Matilda, the Neeces of this Walter by his Son Gilbert, one moity hereof came to the Mortimers Earls of March, and in their right unto the Crown in King Edward the fourth: and the other moity to the Verduns, by whom dispersed and scattered into divers Families. Accompted for one County only till the time of King Henry the 8th, in whose reign it was divided into East-Meth, and West Meth; to which the County of Longford was after added, as it continueth to this day.

3 ULSTER, by the Latines called Ultonia, is the largest Province of all Ireland, bounded on the South, with Meth, and Connaught; on the West, with the vast Irish Ocean; on the North, with that part of the Northern Ocean, to which Ptolemie gives the name of Hyperborean; and on the East, with S. Georges Channel. A Countrey fruitful of it self, but in most places formerly over-grown with woods, and drowned in Marishes and great bogs, by the natural slothfulness of the people: made more responsal to the husbandman both for corn, and pasturage, since the late Plantation of the British, than in times foregoing.

It is divided into the Counties of, 1 Louth, 2 Cavon, 3 Fermanath, 4 Down, 5 Monaghan, 6 Armagh, 7 Colrane, 8 Tirconnel, 9 Tir-Oen, and 10 Antrim. In which are comprehended 14 Towns of note for Commerce and Traffick, and 30 Castles for the defence of the Countrey, and keeping under the wild Irish; wilder and more untractable in these Northern parts, than the rest of Ireland. The whole well watered with a large and spacious Sea, on three sides thereof; many great Lakes in the body of it, besides the Rivers of 1 Boyne, called in Latine Boanda, which divides it from Meth, 2 the Bann, 3 Moandus, and 4 the Eyn, belonging to this Province wholly.

Places of most importance it, 1 Armagh, on or neer the River Kalin, the chief Town of the County so called, and the See of an Archbishop, who is the Primate of all Ireland. An antient City, but so miserably defaced by fire in Tir-Oens Rebellion, that it can scarse preserve the reputation of a Market-Town. 2 Carlingford, and 3 Dundalk, both situate on the Sea side, and both within the County of Louth. 4 Knock-Fergus, the chief of Antrim, more properly Rock Fergus, (and in that sense called Carig-Fergus by the Irish) so called from Fergus one of the Kings of the Irish Scots, who there suffered Shipwrack. Seated upon a large and capacious Bay (the Vinderius of Ptolemie) which giveth it both a safe and commodious Port; as well by natural situation, as the works of Art, very strongly fortified; by reason of the neighbourhood of the Scots in Cantire, from which little distant. 5 London-Derry, a Colonie of the Londoners, best built of any Town in the North of Ireland. 6 Dungannon, the principal seat and residence in former times, of the great Oneales. 7 Dunfall, the principal of Tir-Connell. 8 Robogh, a small Village at present, but antiently a Bishops See: fit to be mentioned in this place in regard it still preserveth some footsteps of the old Robogdii, an Irish Tribe, and placed by Ptolemie in this tract, where they gave name unto the promontory by him called Robogdium, now the Faire-Fore-land; as is probably conceived by the learned Camden.

This, as it is the largest Province of all this Kingdom, so was it with most difficulty subjected to the Crown of England, and reduced to good order and civility. First conquered by John Curcie a valiant Englishman, in the reign of King Henry the second, by whom created Earl of Ulster. But being maligned for his eminent vertues, and after proscribed by King John, this Title and Estate were both conferred upon Hugh Lacie, the Lord and Conqueror of Meth, whom before we spake of. By an Heir General of the Lacies, it came unto the Burghs then Lords of Connaught; and by the mariage of Elizabeth Daughter and Heir of Richard de Burgh, the last Earl of that Family, it came to Leonel Duke of Clarence, the second Son (then living) of King Edward the third; as by his Daughter, Philip to the Earls of March, from them by the like mariage to the house of York, and in the person of King Edward the 4th, to the Crown again. But being neglected by the English, in the whole course of their Government, especially in the Wars betwixt York and Lancaster, it was cantoned into many Estates and Principalities, by the great Lords of the natural Irish, (who had born too great sway here in the former times): and so estranged from the civilities of England, and their Allegiance to that Crown, as if it had never been in subjection to it. In which estate it did continue (the Kings of England having here no more power or profit, than the great ones of the Countrey were pleased to give them): till the Rebellion first, and afterwards the vanquishment of Hugh Oneal, the then Earl of Tir-Oen, brought it in full subjection to the English government, of which more hereafter.

4 CONNAUGHT, in Latine called Connacia; by the Irish, Connaght, is bounded on the North, with Ulster; on the West, with the main Ocean; on the South, with Munster, from which parted by the River Shanon; and on the East, with Meth, and some part of Leinster. So called from the Nagnatæ, an old Irish Nation, or from Nagnata a Port-town; both placed by Ptolemie in this tract. The soil of the same temper with that of Ulster; as woody and as full of bogs till these later times, in which indifferently well cleared of both inconveniencies.

It hath been also called by our English Writers, the County of Clare, from Thomas de Clare, one of the younger Sons of Gilbert de Clare Earl of Glocester, on whom it was conferred by King Edward the first: and is divided at the present, into these five Shires, that is to say, 1 Letrim, 2 Roscommon, 3 Maio, 4 Slego, 4 Slego, and 5 Galloway and Twomond. In which are comprehended but ſix Towns of any conſequence, for commerce and traffick, (an argument of the imperfect plantation of it by the Engliſh Conquerors); and about 24 Caſtles, for defence of the Countrey, of old erection, beſides ſuch Fortreſſes as have been raiſed occaſionally in theſe later troubles.

Places of moſt note and obſervation, 1 Toam, an Archbiſhops See. 2 Athenry, an antient Town, but decayed and ruinous; of moſt renown for being the Baronie of John de Bermingham, a noble Engliſhman, who had great poſſeſſions in this tract. 3 Letrim, the chief Town of the County ſo named, neighbored by the Curlew-Mountains, unfortunately memorable for the great defeat there given the Engliſh, in Tir-Oens rebellion; and by the Spring or Fountain of the River Shenin or Shanon, whoſe courſe we have before deſcribed. 4 Slego, and 5 Roſcommon, the chief Town of their ſeveral Counties. 6 Athlone, a peece of great ſtrength, and the Key of Connaught. 7 Twomond, not otherwiſe much obſervable, but for giving the title of an Earl to the noble Family of O-Brian, (deſcended from the Kings of Connaught) advanced unto that honor by King Henry the 8th. 8 Galloway the principal of this Province, a Biſhops See, and the third City of the Kingdom for beauty and bigneſs. Situate neer the fall of the great Lake or River of Corbes, in the Weſtern Ocean, defended on that ſide from the turn of the Sea, and the fear of invaſions, by the interpoſition of ſome Iſlands (called the Iſles of Arran) very ſtrongly fortified. A noted Emporie, and lately of ſo great fame with forein Merchants, that an out-landiſh Merchant meeting with an Iriſhman, demanded in what part of Galloway, Ireland ſtood; as if Galloway had been the name of the Iſland, and Ireland only the name of ſome Town.

This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, as the reſt of thoſe Provinces; the laſt King whereof was Rodorick, ſurnamed the Great, who having a great hand over the reſt of the Roytelets, entituled himſelf ſole Monarch or King of Ireland. But being forced to ſubmit himſelf to King Henry the ſecond, his Countrey at the laſt was brought into ſubjection to the Crown of England, by the valour and good fortune of William de Burgh, Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloceſter, William de Bermingham, and other noble Adventurers of the Engliſh Nation. And though all of them did partake of the fruit of their labours; yet the greateſt part of the ſpoyl, together with the title of Lords of Connaught, fell to the Family of the Burghs; from them to Lionel Duke of Clarence, and by degrees unto the Crown, as before was ſhewn. Cantoned again amongſt the Iriſh and degenerate Engliſh, as Ulſter was, by the ſupine neglect of the Kings of England: till the Rebellion of Tir-Oen, involving all the Chiefs of the Iriſh Nation in the ſame cauſe with him, involved them alſo conſequently in the ſame deſtruction.

5 MOUNSTER, by the Latines called Momonia, is bounded on the North, with Connaught; on the Eaſt, with Leinſter; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick or Weſtern Ocean; and on the South, with the Vergivian. By the natural Iriſh it is called Mown, whence the Engliſh had the name of Mounſter. A Province, which for rich Towns, commodious Havens, fair Rivers, and the fertility of the ſoyl, yeelds not to any in the Kingdom.

It is divided into ſix Counties, viz. 1 Limerick, 2 Waterford, 3 Cork, 4 Deſmond, 5 Kerry, and 6 Tipperarie; which two laſt antiently enjoyed all the rights of a County Palatine: And in theſe Shires are comprehended (beſides many ſafe Stations and Rodes for Shipping) 24 Towns of note and trading, and 66 Caſtles of old erection.

Places of moſt obſervation, 1 Coſſiles, in the County of Limerick, an Archbiſhops See, advanced unto that honor by Pope Eugenius the third, about the year 1150. 2 Limerick, the principal of that County, and the fourth in eſtimation of all the Kingdom: Situate in an Iſland compaſſed round about with the River Shanon, by which means well fortified; a well frequented Emporie, and a Biſhops See; diſtant from the main Ocean about 60 miles, but ſo accommodated by the River, that Ships of burden come up cloſe to the very wals. The Caſtle and the Bridge peeces of great both ſtrength and beauty, were of the foundation of King John, exceedingly delighted with the ſituation. 3 Clonmel, in the County of Tipperarie, of great ſtrength and conſequence. 4 Holy Croſs, in the ſame County alſo, once flouriſhing by reaſon of the great reſort of Pilgrims, to ſee & worſhip there a peece of the holy Croſs, as it was ſuppoſed: which ſuppoſition as it drew much wealth unto the Town, ſo it obtained the rights of a County Palatine for the County alſo. 5 Thurles, in the ſame County, which gives the title of a Vicount to the Earls of Ormond, but not elſe obſervable. 6 Waterford, on the River Showre, a well traded Port, a Biſhops See, and the ſecond City of the Kingdom. Of great fidelity to the Engliſh ſince the conqueſt of Ireland, and for that cauſe endowed with many ample priviledges. Firſt built by ſome Norwegian Pirates, who though they fixed it in one of the moſt barren parts and moſt foggy air of all the Country, yet they made choyce of ſuch a ſafe and commodious ſite for the uſe of ſhipping, that of a neſt of Pirats it was eftſoons made a Receipt for Merchants, and ſuddenly grew up to great wealth and power. 6 Cork, (by the Latines called Corcagia) the principal of that County, and a Biſhops See: well walled, and fitted with a very commodious Haven; conſiſting chiefly of one ſtreet reaching out in length; inhabited by a civil, wealthy, and induſtrious people. 7 Dunk-Eran, an old Epiſcopal See, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Ivernia of Ptolemie, but not elſe obſervable. 8 Kinſale, upon the mouth of the River Bany, a commodious Port, oppoſite to the Coaſts of Spain, and fortified in Tir Oens Rebellion by a Spaniſh Garriſon, under the command of Don John de Aquilar: but ſoon recovered (after the deſeat of that Grand Rebel neer the wals hereof) by the valour and indefatigable induſtry of Charles Lord Mountjoy, the then Lord Deputy of this Kingdom. 9 Baltimore, 10 Youghall, and 11 Bere-haven, all upon the Sea, and all provided of ſafe Roads or convenient Havens. 12 Leſmore, of old a Biſhops See, now annexed to Waterford, in which Shire it ſtandeth. Nothing in point of ſtory ſingular which concerns this Province; but that it was ſo carefully looked to by the Kings of England, that there was appointed over it a peculiar Officer (in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in power and place next to the Deputy himſelf) called the Lord Preſident of Mounſter: by whoſe vigilancy there have hapned fewer Rebellions here, than in any Province of this Iſland.

The antient Inhabitants of this Iſland, being originally Britans (as before is ſaid) were in the time of Ptolemie, diſtinguiſhed into the Nations of Rhobognii, Darnii, Voluntii, Venicnii, and Erdini, poſſeſſing the Northern parts, now Ulſter, the Auteri, Gangani, and Nagnatæ, inhabiting Connaught: the Velibori, Uterni, Vodii, and Coriondi, in the South, now Mounſter; and the Menapii, Cauci, Blanii, Brigantes, taking up the Provinces of Meth and Leinſter. Principal Cities of the which, were, Eblana, now Dublin; Menapia, now Waterford; Nagnata, which Ptolemie honored with the title of Urbs inſignis; Rhigia, Rheba, Macolicum, Laberus, Ivernis, &c. not eaſily diſcernible by what means we may call them now: this Countrey never being ſo happy as to come under the power of the Romans, the great Maſters of Civility and good Letters in the Weſt of Europe: and by that means, the actions and affairs thereof buried in ignorance and ſilence. Towards the falling of which Empire we find the Nation of the Scots to be ſeated here, and from hence firſt to take poſſeſſion of the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſles, next of the Weſtern part of Britain on the North of Solway. Afterwards ſome of the Saxon Monarchs caſt their eyes upon it, and made themſelves maſters of Dublin, and ſome other places; but being incumbred with the Danes could not hold them long: being hardly able to defend their own againſt that people. The next that undertook the conqueſt, were the Northern Nations, Danes, Swedes, and Normans, all paſſing in the Chronicles of that time, under the name of Norwegians: who firſt only ſcowred along the Coaſts in the way of Piracy. But after finding the weakneſs of the Iſland, divided amongſt many petit and inconſiderable Princes, they made an abſolute conqueſt of it under the conduct of Turgeſius, whom they elected for their King: ſoon rooted out by the policy of the King of Meth, the only Iriſh Prince who was in favour with the Tyrant. This petit King, by name Omo-Gaghlon, had a daughter of renowned beauty, whom Turgeſius demanded of her Father to ſerve his luſts: and he ſeeming willing to condeſcend to the motion, as it honored by it, made anſwer, That beſides his Daughter, he had at his diſpoſing many others of more exquiſite beauties, which ſhould all be ready at command. Turgeſius ſwallowing this bait, deſired him with all ſpeed to effect this meeting. But the King of Meth attiring in the habits of Women, a company of young Gentlemen, who durſt for the common liberty adventure their ſeveral lives; conducted them to the Tyrants Bed-chamber. And they according to the directions given them, (when for that little modeſty ſake he had in him, he had commanded all his attendants to avoid the room) aſſaulted him, now ready for, and expecting more kind embraces, and left him dead in the place. The Methian King had by this time, acquainted divers of the better ſort with his plot; all which upon a ſign given, ruſh into the Palace, and put to death all the Norwegians, and other attendants of the Tyrant. After this, the Roytelets enjoyed their former Dominions, till the year 1172. in which Dermot Mac Morogh King of Leinſter, having forced the Wife of Maurice O Rock King of Meth, and being by him driven out of his Kingdom; came to the Court of England for ſuccour. To this Petition, Henry the ſecond then King, condeſcended; ſending him aid under the leading of Richard de Clare, ſurnamed Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, who reſtored King Dirmot, and brought a great part of the Iſland under the Engliſh ſubjection. John, King of England, was the firſt who was entituled Lord of Ireland; which ſtile was granted him by Pope Urban the third, who for the ornament of his royalty, ſent him a plume of Peacock Feathers: and when Tir-Oen ſtiled him Defender of the Iriſh Liberty, he was by Clement the 8th honored with the like plume. But here we are to underſtand, that though the Kings of England uſed no other title then Lords of Ireland; yet were they Kings thereof in effect and power, Lords Paramount, as we uſe to ſay. And though themſelves retained only the name of Lords, yet one of them gave to one of his Engliſh Subjects, the honorable, but invidious title of Duke of Ireland. And they retained this title of Lords, till the year 1542; in which Henry the 8th, in an Iriſh Parliament, was declared King of Ireland, as a name more ſacred, and repleat with Majeſty, than that of Lord: at which time alſo he was declared to be the Supreme Head under God, of the Church of Ireland; and the pretended juriſdiction of all forein Powers, eſpecially the uſurped autority of the Pope of Rome renounced by Law, though ſtill acknowledged by too many of this ſuperſtitious and untractable People.

The Government of this Countrey, ſince the firſt Conqueſt by the Engliſh, hath been moſt commonly by one Supreme Officer, who is ſometimes called the Lord Lieutenant, moſt generally the Lord Deputy of Ireland; than whom no Vice-Roy in all Europe hath greater power, or comes nearer the Majeſty of a King in his Train and State. For his aſſiſtance he hath a Privy Councel attending on him, though reſident for the moſt part at Dublin: and in emergencies, or caſes of more difficult nature proceedeth many times in an arbitrary way, without formalities of Law. And for their Laws, which are the ſtanding Rule of all civil Government, they owe their being and original to the Engliſh Parliaments. For in the reign of King Henry the 7th, Sir Edward Poynings, then Lord Deputy, cauſed an Act to paſs in the Iriſh Parliament, whereby all Laws and Statutes, which were made in England before that time, were to be entertained and ſtand in force as the Laws of Ireland. On which foundation they have raiſed many Superſtructures both of Law and Government, enacted in their own Parliaments, ſummoned by the Lord Deputy at the Kings appointment: in which, by an other Statute made in the time of the ſaid Poynings, the people are enabled to make Laws for their own good Governance, conditioned they were firſt tranſmitted to the Court of England to be conſidered of by the King, before they were Voted to in either of the Houſes of the Iriſh Parliaments. Which Laws commonly called Poynings Laws, have hitherto continued in force amongſt them; though the laſt much ſtomacked and repined at; not only as a badge of their Subjection to the Crown of England, but as a Curb or Martingil to hold them in.

Yet

Yet notwithſtanding theſe goods Laws, and the ample power of their Commiſſion, the Lord Deputies could never abſolutely ſubdue the Iſland, or bring the people to any civil courſe of life; the Fathers inflicting an heavy curſe on all their poſterity, if ever they ſhould ſow corn, build houſes, or learn the Engliſh tongue. To this indiſpoſition of the Iriſh themſelves, let us adde the defects of the Kings of England, and Iriſh Deputies, in matters of civil policy, as I find them particularized by Sir John Davies, in his worthy and pithy diſcourſe of this Subject. I will only glean a few of them. Firſt then ſaith he, a barbarous Countrey is like a field over-grown with weeds, which muſt firſt be well broken with the Plough, and then immediatly ſown with good and profitable ſeed: ſo muſt a wilde and uncivil people, be firſt broken and ploughed up by war, and then preſently ſown with the ſeed of good Laws and diſcipline; leſt the weeds revive in the one, and ill manners in the other. Here then was the firſt defect in our Engliſh Kings, not to tame and take down the Stomachs and pride of this people, though either civil or forrein wars perhaps occaſioned this neglect: and alſo the Iriſh Deputies, who at ſuch times as the people upon a ſmall diſcomfiture, were creſt-faln, neglected the ſo keeping of them by ſeverity of diſcipline. The ſecond overſight concerneth particularly our Kings, who gave ſuch large poſſeſſions and regalities unto the firſt Conquerors, that the people knew no Autority in a manner, above their own immediate Lords. The Laws of England were not indifferently communicated to all the Iriſhrie, but to ſome particular Families and Provinces only: inſomuch as there were but five great Lords of the natural Iriſh, who had the benefit and protection of the Laws of England, that is to ſay, O Neal in Ulſter, O Connohor in Connaught, Mac Morrough in Lemſter, O Malaghlin in Meth, O Brian in Twomond; known by the name of Quinque Sanguines in ſome old Records. By means whereof the reſt of the people being in the condition of Out-laws, or at the beſt of Aliens, had no incouragement either to build, or plant, or manure their Land, or to behave themſelves as Subjects. A fourth defect was more particularly in the Deputies or Lords Lieutenants, who having made good and wholeſom Laws againſt the barbarous cuſtoms of the Common people, and the mercileſs oppreſſions of the Lords, never put any of them in execution; as if they had been made for terror, not for reformation. Fifthly, adde unto theſe (which Sir John Davies hath omitted) the little care which was too often taken by the Kings of England in the choyce of their Deputies: ſometimes conferring that high Office as a Court-preferment, without Relation unto the merits of the perſon; and ſometimes ſending men of weak or broken fortunes, who attended more their own profit than their Maſters ſervice, and were more bent to fleece than to feed this flock. Sixthly, And yet beſides theſe Errors of the Kings and Deputies in point of Government, there was another, and as great in the Planters themſelves: who building all their Forts and Caſtles in the open Countries, abandoned the Woods and Bogs, and other Faſtneſſes to the natural Iriſh; the ſtrength whereof not only animated them to Rebel upon all occaſions: but ſerved too fitly to continue them in their antient Barbariſm.

Ireland.

In theſe terms of wildneſs and non-ſubjection ſtood Ireland, till the later end of Queen Elizabeths reign; at what time the rebellion of Hugh O Neal Earl of Tir Oen had engaged almoſt all the Iriſhrie in that deſperate action: which ending in the overthrow of that ingrateful Rebel, and all his partizans, not only cruſhed the overmuch powerableneſs of the Iriſh Nobility; but made the final and full conqueſt of the whole Nation. So true it is, that Every Rebellion when it is ſuppreſt, doth make the Prince ſtronger, and the Subjects weaker. Ireland thus broken and ploughed up, that glorious Queen died a victor over all her enemies, and left the ſowing of it unto her ſucceſſor King James, who omitted no part of a skilful Seedſman. 1 Then there was an ἀμνηστία or Act of Oblivion made, whereby all the offences againſt the Crown were remitted, if by ſuch a limited day the people would ſue out their Pardons, and by the ſame Act, all the Iriſhrie were manumitted from the ſervitude of their Lords, and received into the Kings immediate protection. 2ly, The whole Kingdom was divided into Shires and Judges itinerant appointed to circuit them: whereby it hath followed that the exactions of the Lords are laid aſide, the behaviour of the people narrowly looked into, the paſſages before unknown unto our Souldiers, are laid open by our Vnder-Sheriffs and Bayliffs; and the common people ſeeing the benefit and ſecurity they enjoy by the Engliſh Laws, and loth to plead always by an Interpreter, begin to ſet their children to School, for the learning of the Engliſh tongue. 3ly, The Iriſh were not rooted out, as in the firſt plantation in Lemſter, and the Engliſh only eſtated in their rooms; but were only removed from the woods, bogs, and mountains, into the plain and open countrey; that being like wild trees tranſplanted, they might grow the milder, and bear the better fruit. And 4ly, whereas there was but one Freeholder in a whole Countrey, which was the Lord himſelf, the reſt holding in villenage, and being ſubject to the Lords immeaſurable taxations; whereby they had no encouragement to build or plant; now the Lords eſtate was divided into two parts, that which he held in demain to himſelf, which was ſtill left unto him; and that which was in the hands of his Tenant, who had eſtates made in their poſſeſſions, according to the Common Law of England, paying in ſtead of uncertain Iriſh taxations, certain Engliſh rents: whereby the people have ſince ſet their minds upon repairing their houſes, and manuring their lands, to the great increaſe of the private and publick revenue.

But that which moſt advanced the reduction of Ireland to a ſetled and civil Government, and rooted it in a ſubjection to the Crown of England, was the voluntary flight of the Earls of Tyrone, & Tirconnel, Sir John Odaughertie, and other great men of the North, poſſeſſed of large territories and great juriſdictions. Who being both uncapable of Lyalty, and impatient of ſeeing the Kings Judges, Juſtices, and other Miniſters of State, to hold their Seſſions, and execute their Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, within the parts where they commanded: without more provocation, or the fear of any danger but a guilty Conſcience, forſook the Countrey, and left their whole eſtates to the Kings diſpoſing. By whoſe directions, their Lands were ſeized upon and ſold to ſeveral Purchaſers, the City

ot London infeoffed in a great part of them, a great plantation made in Ulster of Engliſh, Welch, and Scots, by the united name of a Britiſh Plantation; and a new Order of Knights Baronets erected in the Kingdom of England for raiſing money to advance and indear the work. Which had it been as cordially affected by the Engliſh, as it was by the Scots; if more of this Nation had gone thither, and not abandoned ſo great a part of it to the power of the other, it had been better for both Kingdoms, in the conformity of each to one form of Government (which the Scots, being factious for another, did not eaſily brook) and the uniting of both people in the bonds of amity: the Iriſh looking on the Scot as a meer Intruder, but on the Engliſh as his old Maſter, or his Fellow-Subject. Howſoever, ſo great a part of the Countrey (and that which heretofore was the neſt of the Rebels) being thus diſpoſed of, it came to paſs, that Ireland, which before ſerved only as a grave to bury our beſt men, and a gulf to ſwallow our greateſt treaſures; being governed neither as a Countrey Free, nor conquer'd: was brought in ſome hope, by the prudence and policy of her laſt Kings, and late Lord Deputies, to prove an orderly Commonwealth; civil in it ſelf, profitable to the Prince, and a good ſtrength to the Britiſh Empire. For to ſuch Order it was reduced, in a little time, that the wayfaring men might travel without danger, the ploughman walk without fear, the laws adminiſtred in every place alike, the men drawn unto Villages, the woods and faſtneſſes left to beaſts; and all reduced to that civility, as our fathers never ſaw, nor could we well ſample out of antient Hiſtories.

The revenues of this Kingdom are ſaid by Walſingham, in the time of Edward the 3d, to have been yearly 40000 pounds; but his ſucceſſors, till of late, have ſcarce got ſo much as the keeping of it coſt them: King Richard the ſecond being by the ſame Walſingham reported to have ſpent 30000 marks out of his own purſe, over and above the money which he received thence. Whether this Countrey were ſo profitable to Edward the third, or no, I determine not, though I find good reaſons to perſwade me, that Walſingham was not well acquainted with the ſtate of that Exchequer. But ſure I am that the Revenues of the Crown are more than double what they were in the ſaid Kings reign, and more duly paid into the Exchequer of that Kingdom than ever formerly; the profits of the Cuſtomhouſe amounting to 30000 per Annum, in the laſt year of King James his reign. Not to ſay any thing of the great improvements which were made by the Earl of Strafford, in the time of his Government, becauſe they fell together with him.

The ſtrength of this Kingdom conſiſteth partly in the ſituation of it, begirt about with difficult and dangerous Seas; partly in the many Caſtles firſt built and fortified by the Engliſh Planters; and partly in a ſtanding Army continually kept up by the Kings of England, for defence of their hold and intereſts againſt the Rebellions of the Natives. What Forces it is able to raiſe both of Horſe and Foot, could never be conjectured at till now of late. For formerly the Kings of England being actually poſſeſſed only of thoſe four Counties which they called the Pale, that is to ſay, the Counties of Dublin, Louth, Kildare, and Meth (which laſt hath ſince the time of King Henry the 8th been ſubdivided into three) were not able to raiſe any great power out of that Eſtate, but were forced to ſend Souldiers out of England (as occaſion was) to preſerve their Soveraignty in Ireland. The greateſt Levie which I read of, was that of 1500 Iriſh, led by the Prior of Kilmainham to King Henry the fifth, then being at the ſiege of Harflew in Normandie. And on the other ſide, the great Lords of the natural Iriſh, and degenerate Engliſh, being divided into factions amongſt themſelves, and never joyned in any one principle of common intereſt; were more inconſiderable, than the weak but united forces of the Kings of England. And though moſt of them at the laſt, were drawn into a confederacy with the Earl of Tir-Oen, to make good his rebellion: yet find I not that their Army did exceed at any time, the number of 8000 men; and thoſe not well appointed neither. So that the beſt eſtimate which can be made of the forces of Ireland, muſt be meaſured by the Armies raiſed in the late Rebellion, when the Iriſhrie had both time, and leiſure, to get themſelves ſome reputation in the world, and make proviſion for a War. In proſecution of which, he who conſiders the many Armies they have raiſed, ſince their firſt muſtering under the command of Sir Phelim O Neal; the many defeats which have been given them, and thoſe as many new recruits after each defeat; all of them raiſed out of the bodies of their own people, without ſupply from other Countries (beſides ſuch as have ſerved againſt them for the King): muſt needs conclude that they want not men enough for ſervice; nor ſkill nor courage to attempt the moſt difficult enterpriſes.

The Arms of Ireland are Azure, an Harpe Or, ſtringed Argent. Which Coat, King James, (to ſhew himſelf the firſt abſolute King of Ireland) firſt cauſed to be marſhalled with the Royal Arms of Great Britain.

The

The LESSER ISLANDS.

AND now we come at laſt to the LESSER ISLANDS, diſperſed in ſeveral parts of the Britiſh Ocean. The chief whereof are, 1 The Orcades, 2 Schetland, 3 The Hebrides, 4 Man, 5 Angleſey, 6 The Iſlands of the Severn Sea, 7 The Sorlinges or Iſles of Silly, 8 Wight, 9 Thanet, 10 Sunderland, 11 Holy Iſland.

I. The ORCADES or Iſles of Orkney are in number 32, ſituate over againſt Cathneſs, the moſt Northern Countrey of all Scotland; and ſeparate from one another by ſome narrow Straights. The ſoil indifferently fruitful, exceedingly well ſtored with Barley, and great Herds of Cattel; plentiful in Hares and Conies, as of Cranes and Swans: but deſtitute of Wheat, and unfurniſhed both of woods and trees. But their chief commodity is their Fiſh, which the inhabitants catch upon the coaſts in great abundance. Thoſe of moſt note in all the cluſter, are, 1 Heth, conceived to be the Ocetis of Ptolemie: as 2 Fair Iſle, on good reaſon thought to be the Dumna of Plinie; the chief Town of it being ſtill called by the name of Dumo. 3 Hey, taken or miſtaken for the Dumna of Plinie, but not elſe obſervable. 4 Pomona, the chief of all, in length about 26 miles, in breadth, where it is broadeſt, ſix. The chief Town of it Kirkwall, honored with a Biſhops See, and ſtrengthened with two Caſtles. This Iſland is well ſtored with Tin and Lead, and is at this day by the inhabitants called Mainland.

The people of theſe Iſles (according to Maginus) are great drinkers, but no drunkards; bibaciſſimi ſunt incolæ, nunquam tamen inebriantur. They uſe the Gothiſh Language, which they derive from the Norwegians, in whoſe poſſeſſion they once were; and of whoſe qualities they ſtill retain ſome ſmack. The Iſles themſelves in the time of Solinus were not inhabited, baing then overgrown with ruſhes; (now in a meaſure, populous and fertile, as before was ſaid) and were firſt diſcovered by Julius Agricola, the firſt that ever ſailed about Britain. In later times they were poſſeſſed by the Normans or Norwegians, who held them till the year 1266; when Magnus King of Norwey ſurrendred them up to Alexander King of Scotland, which ſurrendry ſome of the ſucceeding Kings did afterwards ratifie: the claim hereto being finally relinquiſhed by Chriſtiern the firſt, King of Denmark and Norwey, on the marriage of his Daughter Margaret with King James the third, An. 1474. ſome money being added to make good the contract, without which the Danes would not forgoe their pretenſions to them.

II. Two days ſayling North of theſe Orcades, lyeth SCHETLAND, an Iſland belonging to the Crown of Scotland: and is by many learned men, upon very good reaſons, ſuppoſed to be the Thule of the Antients. For firſt it ſtandeth in the 63 degree of latitude, in which Ptolemie placed Thule. 2ly, It lieth oppoſite to Bergen in Norwey; againſt which Pomponius Mela hath ſeated it. And 3ly, Caſper Peucerus hath obſerved, that this Schetland is by Mariners called Thylenſell; a name in which that of Thule is apparently couched. That Iſe-land was not Thule (as moſt ſay) we ſhall ſhew you when we come to Norwey, and the Northern Iſlands. Here we adde only, that the Antients did report many ſtrange things of it, and ſome of them beyond all belief. Plinie affirming that they had no day here for all the winter (nulli per brumam dies, as his own words are): with whom agree Solinus and many others, as to that particular. Iſidore addes (Origen. lib. 14. c. 6.) nullum ultra eam diem eſſe, that beyond this Iſle there was no day in any place; as if here had been the end of the world and nature. But Pytheas in Polybius goes beyond them all, reporting that in this Iſle there was no diſtinction of Earth, Air, and Water: ἀλλὰ σύγκριμά τι ἐκ τούτων, but a confuſed mixture of all together, like the primitive Chaos of the Poets. The reaſon of which ſtrange reports, was the audaciouſneſs of thoſe who had ſeen the Iſland, and thought that whatſoever they ſaid of it would not be diſproved, becauſe of the remoteneſs of it from more civil Countries. So truly and judiciouſly ſpoken was that of Syneſius, a right learned Prelat, Ἡ Θόλη δέδοται τοῖς διαπλέουσιν αὐτὴν ἀνευθύνως καὶ ἀνελέγκτως ψεύδεσθαι. Thule (ſaith he) gave thoſe who had ſailed unto it, the opportunity of lying without control. An opportunity which many of our Mariners and vulgar Travellers have made too much uſe of in theſe laſt times alſo.

III. The HEBRIDES, HEBUDAE, or Weſtern Iſlands, ſituate on the Weſt of Scotland, are in number about 44. The chief whereof, 1 Ella, 24 miles long, and 16 in breadth; plentiful in Wheat, Cattle, and herds of Deer. 2 Jona, famous for the Sepulchres of the old Scotiſh Kings; whoſe chief Town is Sodore, once a Biſhops See, called hence Sodorenſis; his juriſdiction comprehending theſe Iſlands with the Iſle of Man; his See erected by Pope Gregory the 4th, An. 840. or thereabouts. His dwelling for the moſt part in the Iſle of Man, as the wealthier and more pleaſant part of his Dioceſe; till the conqueſt of it by the Engliſh; at what time thoſe of the Weſtern Iſlands, withdrew themſelves from his obedience, and had a Biſhop of their own: both of them for a long time called Sodorenſes; but at laſt this took the name of Inſulanus, Biſhop of the Iſles, which he ſtill retains. 3 Mela, by Ptolemie called Maleos, (that of Ila before-mentioned being his Epidia) mountainous and hilly, but affording good mines of Lead and Copper; 25 miles more in compaſs than that of Ila. 4 Leunes, or Leviſſa, the largeſt of all the Hebrides, ſaid to be 60 miles in length, and 30 in breadth, the more Weſtern of the two Ebudaes ſpoken of by Ptolemie: the other being now called 5 Skye, famous for multitude of Sea-Calves in the Creeks thereof. 6 Racline, the Recina of Ptolemie, the ſmalleſt of the Hebrides, and moſt neer to Ireland. The reſt of leſs note, not known, or not inhabited in the time of the Romans, and not very well peopled at the preſent, I forbear to name: ſome of them rather Rocks than Iſlands, others ſcarſe having graſs enough to hide their bareneſs. The people of them all, as well in language as behaviour, reſemble

Man. semble the wild-Iriſh, and are called Redſhanks: a people, as King James affirmeth in his Baſilicon Doron, utterly rude, and without all ſhew of Civility; ſuch as endure not to be governed by Laws, or kept under by Diſcipline. Legum ſeveritate, & judiciorum metu, ſe alligari non patiuntur, ſaith judicious Camden. Such as they are, they came unto the Crown of Scotland by a contract betwixt Magnus King of Norwey, and King Alexander the third: the Orcades being bargained for at the ſame time alſo.

South of the Hebrides, in the Bay of Dunbritton Frith, lieth the Iſle of Rothſay (now called Buthe) which gives the title of a Duke to the Prince of Scotland: and the Iſle of Arran, which gives the title of an Earl, to the chief of the Hamiltons.

IV. MAN is ſituate juſt over againſt the Southern part of Cumberland, from which it is diſtant 25 miles; and was judged to belong to Britain rather than to Ireland, becauſe it foſtered venemous Serpents brought hither out of Britain. By Ptolemie it is called Monœda, or the further Mona, to difference it from that which we call Angleſey; by Plinie, Monabia; Menavia, by Oroſius and Beda; Eubonia, by Gildas an old Britiſh Writer. The Welch at this day call it Menaw, the Inhabitants Maning, and the Engliſh Man. It is in length 30 miles, in breadth 15, and 8 in ſome places. The people hate theft, and begging; and uſe a Language mixt of the Norwegian and Iriſh tongues. The ſoyl is abundant in Flax, Hemp, Oats, Barley, and Wheat; with which they uſe to ſupply the defects of Scotland, if not the Continent it ſelf, yet queſtionleſs the Weſtern Iſles, which are a member of it. For thus writeth the Reverend Father in God John Mericke late Biſhop of this Iſland, in a letter to Mr. Camden, at ſuch time as he was compoſing his moſt excellent Britannia. Our Iſland (ſaith he) for cattel, for fiſh, and for corn, hath not only ſufficient for it ſelf, but ſendeth alſo good ſtore into other Countries: Now what Countries ſhould need this ſupply (England and Ireland being aforehand with ſuch proviſion) except Scotland, or ſome members thereof, I ſee not.

Venerable Bede numbred in it 300 Families, and now it is furniſhed with 17 Pariſh Churches. The chief Towns are, 1 Balacuri, and 2 Ruſſin, or Caſtle-Town, the ſeat of a Biſhop, who though he be under the Archbiſhop of York, yet never had any voice in the Engliſh Parliament. In this Iſland is the hill Sceaful, where on a clear day one may ſee England, Scotland, and Ireland: here alſo are bred the Soland Geeſe, of rotten wood falling into the water. This Iſland was taken from the Britans by the Scots, and from them regained by Edwin King of Northumberland. Afterwards the Norwegians ſeized on it, and made it a Kingdom; the Kings hereof ruling over the Hebrides, and ſome part of Ireland. From them taken by Alexander the 3d of Scotland, by a mixt title of Arms and purchaſe. After which time it was ſometimes Engliſh, ſometimes Scotiſh, as their fortunes varied; till in the end, and about the year 1340. William Montacute Earl of Salisbury, deſcended from the Norwegian Kings of Man, won it from the Scots, and ſold it to the Lord Scrope; who being condemned of Treaſon, Henry the fourth gave it to Henry Piercy Earl of Northumberland, but he alſo proving falſe to his Soveraign, it was given to the Stanleys, now Earls of Darby.

in effect, though but Lord in title, as having here all kind of Civil power and jurisdiction over the inhabitants, under the Feife and Soveraignty of the Crown of England; together with the nomination of the Bishop, whom he presents unto the King for his Royal assent, then to the Arch bishop of York for his consecration. And this I take to be the reason why the Bishop of Man was no Lord of Parliament, none being admitted to that honor, but such as held immediately of the King himself; nor was it reason that they should. Angleſey.

V. ANGLESEY, is an Island situate in the Irish Sea, over against Carnarvonshire in North-Wales, from which it is divided by a narrow Straight, which they call the Menai. By the Britans themselves, as by the Welch at this day, it was called Mon, from whence the Romans had their Mona: but being conquered by the English, it obtained the name of Angleſey, as one would say, the Island of the English Men, (eye in the Saxon language signifying an Island) A place of such a fair revenue to the Princes of it, that Llewellen the last Prince of Wales being stripped of almost all the rest of his Estates by King Edward the first, paid to that King a tribute of 1000 per Annum for this Island only.

And to say truth, the Island is exceeding fruitful both in Corn and Cattle; from whence the Welch are liberally stored with both: and therefore it is said Proverbially, Mon Mam Cymri, that Angleſey is the Mother of Wales. In length from East to West, about 20 miles, and 17 in breadth. Containing in that compass 74 Parishes, divided into six hundreds, and hath in it only two market Towns: that is to say, 1 Beaumaris, seated on a flat or marish ground, near the Menai, built by King Edward the first to secure his Conquest: by whom well walled and fortified as the times then were. 2 Newburg, a Town of no great antiquity, as the name doth intimate, by the Welch called Rossur: in former times it had an Haven of some good receipt, but now choaked with sand. The other places of most note are, 3 Aberfraw, a small village now, but heretofore the Royal seat of the Kings of Wales: and 4ly, Holybead, seated on an head-land or Promontory thrusting into the Sea, made holy (or thought so at least) by the religious retirement of Saint-Kuby, or Kibius, one of the Disciples of St. Hilarie of Poictiers; from whence by the Welchmen called Caer Cuby: of most note for the ordinary passage betwixt Wales and Ireland. Antiently this Island was the seat of the Druides, and brought with no small difficulty under the power of the Romans, by Suetonius Paulinus: the people fighting in other parts of Britain, for their liberty only; but here pro Aris & focis too, for their Religion, Liberty, and their Gods to boot: Being deserted by the Romans with the rest of the Britain, it remained in the possession of its own natural Princes, till the fatal period of that State; when added to the Crown of England by the puissance of King Edward the first, by whom made one of the shires of Wales, as it still continues.

Not far from Angleſey, somewhat inclining to the South, is the Isle of Bardsey, by Ptolemie called Edri, by Plinie Adros, by the Welch Enlhy; extending towards the East with a rocky Promontory, but rich and fruitful towards the West: the retiring place of many godly and devout Hermits in the former times. Southwards from hence, and over against St. Davids, are two other Islands, the one called Selame, plentiful of wild honey; the other named by the Welch Lymen, by the English Ramsey; thought to be the Limni of Ptolemie, the Silimnum of Plinie, but not else remarkable.

VI. THE ISLANDS OF THE SEVERN SEA are four in number; of no great note, but I must take them in my passage to the Isles of Silly. Of those the first is Flat-Holm; for the flat and level; the 2 Stepholm, from the steep and craggie disposition of it: both by the Welch called Echni, and both situate over against the County of Somerset. More towards the opening of the Channel, lyeth the Isle of 3 Chaldey, called by the Welchmen Inis Pir, of as small note as the other: and at the very mouth thereof the Isle of 4 Lundey, over against Devonshire, the principal Island of this Sea: extending two miles every way; of excellent pasturage, well stored with Conies, and great plenty of Pigeons. Situate a good distance from any part of the land, in the midst of the salt and brackish Ocean, and yet yeeldeth many Springs of Fresh-Water for the use of the people; inhabiting for the most part in a Town of the same name with the Island. A place of very great strength and safety; begirt about with dangerous unapproachable Rocks; and having but one way of access into it, and that so narrow that two men cannot go a breast.

VII. The Isles of SILLY, in number 145, are situate over against the most Western Promontorie of Cornwall, from which distant 24 miles; and lie round together in the manner of a ring or Circle. Discovered first by the Silures, a Phœnician Colony in Spain, opposite against which they lie; thence called Silures by Solinus: much traded and resorted to by the said Phœnicians from the Isle of Gades; invited thereunto by the unexhaustible Mines of Tinne, which they found amongst them. A Trade so great and gainful to them, that they held it a great point of State: κρύπτειν ἅπασι τὸν πλοῦν, to keep it as a secret from all the world, as we find in Strabo: who addes the story of a Carthaginian or Phœnician Merchant, incountred in his voyage hither by some Roman Vessels; and splitting his ship on the next shore (where he knew the Romans would not follow him) rather than let them know to what place he was bound; rewarded for his honest care, and recompensed for the loss of his ship & goods, out of the publick Treasury. From this abundance of Tinne, the Græcians when they came to know them, called them Cassiterides: (Cassiteros in that language signifying Tynne) accordingly Herodotus ὅτι νήσους οἶδα Κασσιτερίδας ἐούσας ἐν τῷ πρὸς ἑσπέρην ἡμῖν φοιτῷ, affirming that he knew not those Islands called Cassiterides, from whence Tynne was brought. The richness of this commodity, the pleasures of the place, and the Western situation of them; makes many of the Grecians call them the Hesperides: mistaking them for the Fortunate Islands. By Solinus they are called Silures, as before is said, Sigdeles in the corrupt Copies of Antoninus; insulæ Sillinæ, by Severus Sulpitius, from whence we have the name of the Isles of Silly. The Flemings, I know not why, call them the Sorlings. All of them very fruitful in Corn and Herbage, besides the treasures hid within: well stored with Conies, Cranes, Swans, and most sorts of wilde Fowl. Ten of them them more esteemed than the rest, are called by the names of 1 Armath, 2 Agnes, 3 Sampson, 4 Silly, 5 Brefar, 6 Rusco, 7 S. Helens, 8 Arthur, 9 S. Maurice, and 10 S. Maries: Of which the most famous in the accompt of former times, was that of Silly, as giving name unto the rest; but in the present estimate St. Maries is accompted the chief of all: 8 miles in compass, fruitful of all necessaries, and fortified with a very strong Castle built by Queen Elizabeth; well manned and Garrisoned, for defence of a large and goodly Harbour made amongst these Islands, capable of the greatest Navies.

These Islands first discovered by Himilco a Carthaginian, sent by that State to search into the West Coasts of Europe, became of great fame afterwards both in Greece, and Italy; by reason of the Mines of Tinne spoken of before. So beneficial to the Romans, that they used to send hither their condemned Prisoners to work in the Mines; as the best service to be done by their forfeited lives. And hither, amongst others, Justantius, a fierce Priscillianist, for his factious and seditious cariage, was sent by Maximus; ad Sillinam insulam ultra Britanniam deportatus, as Sulpitius hath it. After the Romans had forsaken their hold in Britain, they returned again into the power and possession of the Natives; from whom subdued, and added unto the English Crown by Athelstan the eighth King of England. Now ordered for Civil matters, as a part of Cornwall; for military, by their own Captain, subordinate to the Lord Lieutenant of that Countrey; and for the Tin-trade, by the Lord Warden and Court of Stanneries. An Officer and Court erected for the benefit and regulating of the Tinners of Cornwall, who by reason of their imployment in these Mines have many priviledges and exemptions more than other Subjects; but of late limited and restrained by Act of Parliament.

VIII. The Isle of WIGHT lieth over against Hampshire, from which it seemeth to have been divided; the passage betwixt it and Hurst-Castle on the opposite shore, being very narrow; and the name of it intimating some such division. For by the Britans it was antiently called Guith, which signifieth a breach or separation, from whence the English have their Wight; the turning of Gu. to W. being familiar with the Saxons, and all other Dutch people: and from the same root probably the Romans had the name of Vectis; Vecht, Wight, and Guith, being words of such neer resemblance, that we need not travel further for an Etymologie. The Island of an Oval form, 20 miles in length, and 12 miles broad about the midst; from thence growing narrower towards each end, to the East and West. Naturally fenced about on all sides, on the South especially, where it looks towards France, on which side inaccessible by reason of the steep and craggie Rocks, the whole length thereof; and not much less safe on the North-West, where the remainder of the Rocks, (which they call the Shingles, and the Needles) not worn away either at or since the first separation from the other shore, make the passage dangerous; except to single ships, and those not unacquainted with the course of the Channel. Towards the North-East more flat and level, and therefore fortified with the two Castles of the Cowes, and Sandham. There is also the Castle of Yarmouth in the West parts of the Island, and that of Garesbrook in the midst (but more towards the North): in which last there is said to be Armour for 5000 men; and in each Village (of which here are 33, besides many Market Towns) a peece of Ordnance. Yet doe not all these Arms and Castles adde so much to the strength of it, as the natural courage of the People; warlike and stout, and trained unto the postures of War from their very childhood.

The soil hereof abundantly answereth the pains of the Husbandman, so plentiful of Corn, and all the fruits of a good pasturage; that they have not only enough for themselves, but furnish the markets of Southampton and Portsmouth, (but the last especially) with the greatest part of the Wheat, Flesh, Cheese, and Butter, which is spent amongst them. Insomuch that the Souldiers of Portsmouth presuming on the strength of the Town, have been used to say, That if they had the Isle of WIGHT to their friend, and the Seas open, they cared not for all the World besides. Their Sheep here of so fine a fleece, that the Wool hereof hath the second place of esteem next to that of Lemster (in the County of Hereford), and precedency of that of Cotswald.

Their chief Towns, 1 Yarmouth, on the North-West of the Island, seated on a convenient Haven, which is said to have some resemblance to that of Rochel; and that Haven defended with a Castle. 2 Brading, another Market-town. 3 Newton, an antient Burrough, and priviledged with sending Burgesses to the English Parliament. 4 Garesbrook, a large Town, and neighboured with an antient Castle. 5 Newport, now the chief of all the Isle, called in the times past Medena, afterwards Novus Burgus de Medena, at last Newport; seated upon an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of lesser burden to the very key; and by that means populous, well traded, and inhabited by a civil and wealthy People.

The Island first subdued to the Romans by the valour of Vespasian, (afterwards Emperor of Rome) in the time of Claudius. Extorted from the Britans by Cerdick, King of the West-Saxons; and by him given to Stuffa and Whitgar, two of that Nation, who had almost rooted out the old Inhabitants. It was the last Countrey of the Saxons which received the Gospel, and then upon compulsion too; forced to it by the power as well as the perswasion of Cedwalla, the West-Saxon King. Took from the English in the time of the Norman Conqueror, by William Fitz-Osborn Earl of Hereford, who thereupon was made the first Lord thereof. From whose Family, by the gift of Henry the second, it passed to that of Redvars, or Rivers, (de Riparius) then Earls of Devonshire: and on the failing of that House returned to the Crown in the Reign of Edward the first. Never so much ennobled as by Henry the sixth, who bearing a great affection to Henry Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, in the 23 of his reign crowned him King of Wight, An. 1445. Which title ended with his life about two years after.

IX. THANET, is a little Island in the North-East of Kent, not far from Sandwich, environed on three parts with the Sea; into which it shooteth with a large Promontory called the North-Fore-land; the Cantium of the antient Writers: and towards the West, severed from the main land of Kent by the River Stoure, which is here called Tenlade, but severed so, that by the benefit of a Causey and passage to the waters in convenient places, it is united to the Continent or main Land of Kent. The quality, site, and figure of it, take in these old Rhythmes (for I dare hardly call them Verses) extant not long since in a window of the chief Church there, viz. Sunderland & Holyland

Insula rotunda Thanatos quam circuit unda,
Nobilis & munda, nulli est in orbe secunda.

That is to say,

Thanet is round with cirling waters bound,
A neat and noble ground, none like it to be found.

Called by Solinus, Athanatos, in some Copies Thanatos, from whence the Saxons had their Thanet. Famous, as in other things, so in these particulars, that it was the place which the Saxons landed at, when they first came into Britain; the first Liverie and Seisin, which they had of the whole Kingdom, conferred upon them by the improvident bounty of Vortiger, to whose aid called in; and the landing place of Augustine the Monk, when he brought the Gospel to the Saxons. The whole about two miles in length, and four in breadth, was reckoned to contain in those times, 600 Families; now very populous for the bigness, and plentiful of all commodities necessary, but of corn especially. The people generally are a kind of Amphibii, able to get their livings both by Sea and Land; well skilled, as well in steering of a ship at Sea, as in holding the Plough upon Land; and in both industrious. Of most note in it, 1 Stonar, a Port-town, the usual landing place of the Saxons; more memorable for the Sepulchre of Vortimer, King of the Britans; who having vanquished the Saxons in many battels, and finally driven them out of the Island, desired to be here interred; on a conceit, that his dead corps would fright them from landing any more upon these Coasts. And this perhaps he did in imitation of Scipio African, who having had a fortunate hand against those of Carthage, gave order to have his Tomb placed towards Africk, to fright the Carthaginians from the Coasts of Italy.

X. SUNDERLAND is an Island only at an high-water, when environed on all sides with the Sea; at other times joyned unto the Land, or of an easie passage from the one to the other: pulled by some tempest, or by the working of the Sea from the rest of the Land; whence the name of Sunderland. Situate in the North-East part of the Bishoprick of Durham, over against the influx of the River Were. Rich in its inexhaustible mines of Coal, and for that cause seldom without the company of forein Merchants: yet not to have been here remembred, but that it hath been thought worthy by our Soveraign Lord King Charles, the second Monarch of Great Britain, to confer the title of Earl to the two Noble Families of the Scropes and Spencers; the first in the third year of his reign, An. 1627. the second in the 18th, An. 1642.

XI. THE HOLY ISLAND lieth upon the Coast of Northumberland, not far from Barwick; stretched out in length from East to West, with a narrow point unto the Land, from thence growing broader like a wedge: fortified with a strong Castle, and of great saiety, but more famous for what it hath been, than for what it is. In the dawning of Christianity amongst the Northumbers, made a Bishops See, by S. Aidanus, one of the first Apostles of that potent Nation. Selected for this dignity by that godly man, for the solitude and privacy of it; which made it thought more fit and proper for Devotion. The name then Lindisfarn; but the Religious lives of so many pious Bishops, Monks, and others of the Clergy as did there inhabit, gained it the name of Holy Island. The See continued there 353 years, that is to say, from the year 637, to 990, under 22 Bishops, hence called Bishops of Lindisfarn; then removed to Durham: the insolencies of the Danes, (who then raged terribly on those coasts) compelling them to abandon that religious solitude.

Thus have we taken a survey of the British Islands, and shewn by what means Ireland and all the lesser Islands became united either to the Crowns of England or Scotland; and those two Kingdoms to each other: joyned in the person of the same King, and the participation of his favours, though different still in Laws, and some forms of Government; as most of the Estates of Spain, at the present time. United also in one name, the different Appellations of England and Scotland being swallowed up, or incorporated rather in that of GREAT BRITAIN, which it pleased King James to own for his Stile Imperial. And for a memory thereof, to cause a peece of Gold to be coyned of 20 s. (since raised to 22 s.) which he called the Unity; stamped on the one side with his picture, and this Inscription, JACOBUS D. GR. MAGNÆ BRITANNIÆ, FR. ET HIBERNIÆ REX, and on the other side with his Arms, crowned with this Motto, FACIAM EOS IN GENTEM UNAM. All we have now to doe, is to lay down the names of those puissant Princes, whom God hath raised to be

The Monarchs of Britain.

1602 1 James, the sixth of that name, King of the Scots, Son of Mary Queen of Scots, Daughter of James the fifth, the Son of James the fourth, and of the Lady Margaret, eldest Daughter of Henry the seventh of England: which Margaret being after maried to Archembald Douglass Earl of Angus, had a Daughter named Margaret also (the only child of her Parents) maried to Matthew Stewart Earl of Lennox; by whom she was made the mother of Henry Lord Darnley, the Father of King James the sixth, by the said Mary Queen of Scots. So that King

King James deſcending from the eldeſt Daughter of Henry the 7th, both by Father and Mother, on the expiring of the Line of Henry the 8th, in the perſon of Queen Elizabeth of famous memory; was the next heir to the Crown of England, and was accordingly with all joyful acclamations proclaimed and acknowledged King in the City of London, March 24. Anno 1602. (according to the accompt of the Church of England) A learned and Religious Prince, a true Defender of the Faith, a Nurſing Father of the Church, and a lover of learning. He dyed at Theobalds, March 27. 1625. having reigned 23 years, and four days over.

1625 2 Charles, ſecond Son of King James, and of Anne of Denmark, (his elder Brother Henry dying long before) the 63d King in deſcent from Cerdick King of the Weſt-Sexons; the 45th King of England, in deſcent from Egbert; the 24th from the Norman Conqueror; the 64th Monarch of the Engliſh, and the ſecond Monarch of Britain. In the beginning of his reign he maried the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, Daughter to Henry the 4th, and Siſter to Lewis the 13th, French Kings; by whom bleſt with a Royal Iſſue of Sons and Daughters.

As for the Forces and Revenues of theſe Britiſh Monarchs we cannot put the eſtimate of them in a better way, than by laying together that which hath been delivered of each ſeveral part; out of which Items the ſumma totalis of the whole both in power and treaſure, will be eaſily gathered. For though theſe Monarchs never had any occaſion, to muſter and unite the Forces of their ſeveral Kingdoms upon any one Action: yet by conſidering what they have been able to doe divided; we may conclude of what they may doe, if need be, being now united. And ſo we are to doe in marſhalling the Arms of the Britiſh Monarchy, which are 1 Quarterly France and England, 2ly Scotland, 3ly Ireland; the fourth as the firſt. I ſhut up this diſcourſe of the Britiſh Empire, with thoſe words of Scripture (the Motto of another of King James his Coins) QUÆ DEUS CONJUNXIT NEMO SEPARET.

OF BELGIUM.

HAving purſued the fortunes of the Roman Empire through the 4 Weſtern Dioceſes or Diviſions of it, wholly ſubdued to the command of that conquering State: let us next look on thoſe Countries which lay further North, and either never felt the force of the Roman Armies, or were but conquered in part; or els were reckoned as the members of ſome greater Province. Of this laſt ſort was all that tract which is now called Belgium, or the Netherlands, bounded on the East with Weſtphalen, Gulick, Cleve, and the land of Triers, Provinces of of the Higher Germanie; on the Weſt, with the main Ocean, which divides it from Britain; on the North, with the River Ems, which parts it from East-Friezeland; on the South, with Picaride and Champagne, two French Provinces; upon the South-eaſt, with the Dukedom of Lorrain.

By the Latines (especially of these last times) it is called Belgium, from the Belgæ, the most potent people of all these parts; and sometimes also Germania Inferior, or the Lower Germanie, (in the same sense as by the English it is called the Low Countries and the Netherlands) from their low situation; and the conformity which they have with the other Germans in Laws, Language, Customes and Manners. By some it hath been called by the aggregate name of the seventeen Provinces, from the like number of severall and distinct Estates united under the command of the King of Spain. The more peculiar name is Flanders, which though but one of the 17 Provinces, hath yet given denomination to all the Netherlands; the people of which were once generally called by the name of Flemmings; and that either for the power of that Province, in regard of the others; or by reason of the great trade and traffick formerly driven at the Fairs or Marts of Bruges (a Town thereof) by the Merchants of all parts of Europe; or in respect that lying nearer then the rest to France, Spain, Italy, and England, that name was better known and took notice of. But this was when the whole Countrey was under the command of many Princes, of which the Earls of Flanders were esteemed most potent. And though this name continued also after the incorporating of most of these Provinces in the house of Burgundie, at which time they were called the Estates of Flanders: yet since the falling off of Holland, and the rest of the United Provinces from the Kings of Spain, it hath lost this honor; the name of Flanders being now restrained within narrower bounds.

But for the name of Belgium, though I find that name most currant amongst the Latines of this age, yet I see little reason for it. For first, old Belgium contained in it many fair and large Estates, which are not now within the compasse of these Belgick Provinces; that is to say, the Dukedomes of Lorreine, Berg, Juliers, and great part of Cleve; the Bishopricks of Triers, Mentz, and Colen; and so much of the Kingdome of France, as takes up all Picardie, with parts of Champagne, and of France specially so called. Secondly, Gallia Belgica extended somewhat further yet, comprehending a great part of the Lower Palatinate, all Elsass, the whole County of Burgundie, and so much of Switzerland, as lieth on the French side of the Rhene. And thirdly, the whole Provinces of West-Friseland, Groyning, Over-ysel, Zutphen, together with all North-Holland, and so much of Guelderland, and Utrecht, as lieth on the further side of the middle Channel of the Rhene, were never accounted of either as parts of Belgium, or of Gallia Belgica, (though now within the compasse of the Belgick Provinces) but as parts of Germanie; clearly without the limits of the antient Gaul, of which body Belgium was a limb or member in the Roman estimate.

As for the Belgæ, from whence we have the names of Belgium, and Gallia Belgica, they were originally Germans, who driving out the Gauls, planted themselves within the Rhene: esteemed by Cæsar to be the valianteſt of the Gallick nations for these three reasons; First, they were the fartheſt from Provence, where the Roman civilities, and more affable course of life was embraced. Secondly, they dwelt on a Sea not then frequented by Merchants; and so wanted those allurements to effeminacie, which are in Countries of traffique. And thirdly, they bordered on the Germans, a warlike nation; with whom they were continually in armes. This people seeing the prosperous successe of Cæsars victories in Gaul, joyned together in a League, and mustered an Army of 269000 fighting men against him. But seeing they could not draw him out of his Fortresses, they retired again, and that in such disorder, that three Legions, (for no more was Cæsars Army) put them to an infinite slaughter. After this Cæsar fighting against them severally, overcame them all; and made their Countrey, and the Countrey of the Bordering Germans, whom he also vanquished, subject unto the Roman Empire. By Constantine the Great made part of the Dioceſe of Gaul, and by him cast into four Provinces, that is to say, 1 Belgica Prima, containing the Dukedom of Lorraine, and the land of Triers, the Metropolis whereof was Triers; 2 Belgica Secunda, comprehending Artois, Picardie, and the Countrey of Chambray, with parts of Campagne and France Speciall, of which the Metropolis was Rhemes; 3 Germania Prima, comprehending Alsatia, part of the Palatinate, and the Bishoprick of Mentz the Metropolitan City of that Province; and 4 Germania Secunda, containing Cleveland, Brabant, Guelderland, Utrecht, Holland, Zeland, Flanders, Hainalt, Namur, Luxembourgh, Limbourgh, and the land of Colen; which last was honoured with the title of Metropolitan. 5 Maxima Sequanorum, so called of the Sequani, the old Inhabitants thereof, containing the whole County of Burgundie, and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene, of which Besancon was the mother City. But at this time none of the Provinces above specified are comprehended under the accompt and name of Belgium, but such as were possessed in these later ages, by the house of Burgundie; some petie Signeuries and Estates, which properly do belong to Germanie, being added to it; that is to say, the Lordship of West-Friseland given to the Earls of Holland by Charles the Bald, the Earldom of Zutphen, united unto that of Guelders by Earl Otho of Nossaw; and finally the Estate of of Groyning, Over-ysell, and some part of Utrecht, by Charles the fifth. Under which name and notion, we do now consider it.

And taking it according to this name and notion, it is in compasse 1000 Italian, or 250 German miles: and is situated in the northern Temperate Zone, under the 7, 8, & 9. Climates: the longest day in the midst of the 7 Climate where it doth begin, being 16 hours; in the beginning of the 9 Climate increased to 16 houres three quarters, or neer 17 hours. The Aire in these later days grown more wholesome then formerly; partly by the wonderfull increase of the Inhabitants, and partly by the incredible industry of the people: who by draining the Marishes, and converting the standing waters into running streams, have purged the aire of many grosse and unhealthy Vapours; which did thence usually arise in times foregoing.

The

The Countrey is very populous, containing welnigh three millions of ſouls, the men being for the moſt part well proportioned, great lovers of our Engliſh Beer, unmindfull both of good turns and injuries: of good wit for inventing, and of a moſt indefatigable induſtry for perfecting the rareſt Manufactures. For unto them we are indebted for the making of Cloth, which we learnt of the Flemmings; as alſo for Arras hangings, Dornix, Clocks, Watches, and the perfection of the Mariners Compaſſe. They reſtored Muſick, and found out divers Muſicall Inſtruments, being naturally good Muſicians; and generally ſo given unto it, and ſo perfect in it, that heretofore (till the Art of Muſick grew more common) there were not many great mens houſes, which had them not to teach their Children. To them belongeth alſo the invention of Chariots, the laying on of colours with oil, the working of Pictures in glaſſe, and the making of Worſteds, Saies, and Tapeſtries: the making of which and other Stuffes, being driven out of their Countrey by the Duke of Alva, they firſt taught the Engliſh. The women generally are of a good complexion, well proportioned, eſpecially in the leg and foot; honourers of vertue, active, and familiar. Both within doors and without, they govern all; which conſidering the naturall deſire of women to bear rule, maketh them too imperious and burdenſome.

They uſe for the moſt part the Germane and Dutch Language, with a little difference in the Dialect. But in the Provinces adjoyning to France, that is to ſay, Luxembourg, Mamurce, Artois, Hainalt, and ſome parts of Flanders, and Brabant, they uſe the French; but ſpeak the ſame very corruptly and imperfectly by reaſon of that mixture which it hath of the Dutch or German; yet ſo, that one may eaſily diſcern thoſe people to be French originally; or ſome remainder of the old Gauls, maſtered by the French, but not rooted out: from their language or firſt originall called to this day by the name of Wallons; the Germans uſually changing G into W. as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and in the like caſe Wales for Galles I know there is another Etymologie of the name of Wallons, ſome making them to be of the Burgundian race; who at their firſt paſſing over the Rhene enquired their way of the Countrey people in theſe word, Ou allons, i. e. Whither go we? which being oft repeated by them, occaſioned them to be called Wallons: A trim invention doubtleſſe, but of no ſolidity; nor to be further honoured with a confutation.

The Countrey in thoſe parts which lie towards Germanie, eſpecially on the South-eaſt bordering upon Cleveland and Lorrain, is ſomewhat ſwelled with hils, and overſhaded with woods; the reliques of the great Forreſt of Ardenne, which once took up a great part thereof. But towards the Weſt and North, where it joyns to the Sea, it is plain and levell, full of flats and mariſhes, affording very little corne, but abounding in paſturage, which yeeld a great increaſe of Butter and Cheeſe, good ſtore of beeves, and horſes of more then ordinary bigneſſe. By reaſon of which low and levell ſituation, and the ill neighbourhood of a troubleſome and unruly ſea, it hath been formerly much ſubject to inundations; inſomuch as in the time of King Henry the 2d, Flanders was ſo overflown, that many thouſands of people, whoſe dwellings the Sea had devoured, came into England to beg new ſeats; and were by that King firſt placed in Yorkeſhire, and then removed to Pembrookeſhire. Since that, it hath in Zeland ſwallowed eight of the Iſlands, and in them 300 Towns and Villages: many of whoſe Churches and ſtrong buildings, are at a dead low water, to be ſeen. And as once Ovid ſaid of Helice, and Buris, Cities of Achaia, ſo may we of theſe,

Invenies ſub aquis, & adhuc oſtendere nautæ
Inclinata ſolent cum mœnibus oppida verſis.

That is to ſay,

The waters hide them, and the Saylers ſhow
The ruin'd wals and ſteeples as they row.

The chief Commodities which they vent into other Countries, are Linnen, Scarlets, Worſted, Saies, Silks, Velvets, and the like rich Stuffes; together with great quantities of Armour, Ropes, Cables, Butter, Cheeſe, &c. Of which, excepting Cheeſe and Butter, there is nothing of the naturall growth of the Countrey: the reſt being Manufactures, which they make out of ſuch materials, as they fetch out of forein Regions. But the Commodity which yeeldeth them moſt benefit is that of Fiſh, not caught upon their own coaſt neither, but either in the Northern ſeas, or the coaſt of England: the very Herrings which they catch on the ſhores of England (to the no ſmall diſhonour of the Engliſh nation) bringing them a revenue (beſides what is purſed up by the Adventurers) of 440000 pounds per annum; and that of Codfiſh which they catch on the coaſts of Friſeland, amounting to 150000 l. ſterling yearly.

Captains of note and eminence it hath bred but few, the people living till of late in perpetuall peace. The chief of thoſe whoſe names have been tranſmitted to us, 1 Civilis, a Prince of the Batavians, for ſubtilty of wit compared to Hannibal and Sertorius; of which in the long war againſt the Romans, in the time of Veſpaſian, he gave very good proof. In the middle times, 2 William Earl of Holland, elected Emperour of Germanie; 3 Baldwin Earl of Flanders, Emperour of Conſtantinople; 4 Philip the good, and 5 Charles the Warlike, Dukes of Burgundie; 6 Charles the the fifth, Emperour and King of Spain:

Spain: and of late times the Princes of the house of Nassaw and Orange, transplanted hither in the Regency of Maximilian, out of higher Germany. And to say truth, their Genius doth not lie so much, for land-service as it doth for the seas; in which they have been very famous, and not lesse fortunate. For of this nation was Oliver de Noort, the fourth that compassed the world; Jacob le Maire, the first discoverer of the Straight, or Fretum, which now beareth his name; besides divers others. And generally the people are so expert in Navigation, (especially those bordering on or neer the coasts) that they seem born for and to the Seas: many of which being born on shipboard and bred up at sea, know no other Countrey; and brook the Land as ill, as a fish doth the dry ground. Which naturall inclination to it, and the necessity they have of employing themselves that way, (the Countrey not being otherwise able to provide sustenance for those multitudes of men, which it doth abound with) hath so exceedingly increased their shipping; that it is thought that they are masters of more vessels of all sorts, taking one with another, then almost all the rest of Europe.

Scholars of note it hath bred many. 1 Erasmus, the great Restorer of learning in these parts of the World. 2 Justus Lipsius, as eminent a reviver of the Latine Elegancies. 4 Joseph Scaliger, the son of Julius, ὁ πᾶν πεπαιδευμένος, a man not to be followed in all parts of learning; but of equall arrogance. 4 Rodolphus Agricola. 5 Levinus Lemnius. 6, 7 Janus Douza, the Father and the Son. 8 Abraham Ortelius, and 9 Gerard Mercator, the Geographers. 11 Geo. Cassander, 11 Dr. James Harmin, 12 Gerard Vossius, eminent Divines, and 13 Hugo Gretius, of as great parts, (but seasoned with more modesty and moderation) as the famous Scaliger. 14 Jansenius, and 15 Pamelius two right learned men, but of the Pontifician party.

The Christian Religion was planted in severall Provinces, by severall men: in Holland, Zealand, and Friezeland, by Willibrode an Englishman, the first Bishop of Utrecht; whence by degrees it gained on the rest of the Countrey: these being the first people of the Frankes, or Germans, converted totally to the Gospel. In tract of time it fell from the primitive purity, participating of the Errours and Corruptions of the Church of Rome; from which when they desired to reclaim themselves, they were therein opposed by the King of Spain and his Ministers. Hence the beginning of the troubles; enlarged afterwards on pretence of civill rights, invaded and infringed by the Spaniards; affecting a more absolute Dominion over them, then their Laws admitted. At this time, as the Countrey doth stand divided betwixt the States and the Spaniards; so stands it with Religion also: the Spaniard permitting only the Religion of the Church of Rome, within the Provinces and Estates under his command; and the States General indulging the free use of all Religions (even the very Jews) but countenancing only that of the Reformed Churches, according to the Platform laid down by Calvin.

Chief Forests of this Countrey are, 1 that of Ardenne, which in the time of Cæsar, extended from the banks of Rhene, as far as Tourney one way, and Champagne another way; and was in compasse 500 miles, in the least accompt. In which circuit there were comprehended the Southern parts of Brabant, and Flanders, all Limbourg, Luxembourg, Luychland, Namur, and Hainault; together with the land of Guliek in the higher Germanie, as some Writers say. At this time, though the greatest of all Gaul Belgick, it reacheth but from Leige to Theonville, 30 leagues in length; and yet not all that Woodlands neither, though within the Vierge of the Forest: there being much tillage and many Villages in that tract of ground; the principal of which is the Town of S. Hubert, situate almost in the midst of it. 2 Niepe, and 3 Numen, in the Earldom of Flanders; the first extending to the banks of the River Lis, the other coming up close to Ypris. 4 Pendsberg in the Confines of Hainalt and Flanders, near unto Mount Gerrard: all of them parts of this great Forest of Ardenne, which once overshadowed all this Countrey. 5 Normault in Hainalt, in which is much Char-coal made; supposed for that reason to be a part of that Forest, which the old French called La Charboniere. 6 Echterwald in Guelderland, near Arnhem, &c.

The chief Rivers are, 1 Rhene, which ariseth out of two springs in the Lepontian Alpes, amongst the Grisons; united into one stream near Chur: thence passing by the Cities of Constance, Basil, Spire, Wormes, Mentz, and Colen, is again divided about the confines of Guelderland, into four branches or channels. Of which the first is called the Wael, which running through Guelderland by Nimmegen, and Bomel, loseth it self in the Maes: the second, which keeps the name of the Rhene, passeth by Arnhem, from thence in a contracted channell to Utrecht, and so through Holland unto Leiden: the third called the Lecle, taketh his course through the Provinces of Utrecht, and Holland; and so into the sea betwixt Dort, and Roterdam; and the fourth called the Ysel which passing by the towns of Zutphen and Deventer, betwixt Guelderland, and Over-ysel, emptieth it self into the Ocean, near Amsterdam. And of these branches I have given the exact reckoning, partly because the course of that famous River is otherwise not easie to be observed; and partly because the knowledge of a great part of these Provinces, dependeth on the knowledge of the course of this River: it being the middle branch of the Rhene (that which goeth by Leiden) which antiently divided Germanie from Gallia Belgica. A River of such reputation in the ancient times, that into it the old Belgæ used to cast the children which they suspected to be Illegitimate: for were they born of lawfull bed, they floated on the waters, if of an unlawfull, they sank immediately. Whereunto Claudian alluding saith, nascentes explorat gurgite Rhenus. But the great searcher of Antiquities, Verstegan, is of opinion, that thereby they only inured their children to hardnesse, and made tryall of their strength; adultery being rarely found among them, and so these kindes of experiments needlesse. 2 Mosa, the Maes, as the Dutch, or the Meuse as the Frenchmen call it, which springing from the mountaines of Vauge, in the confines of Lorraine, and not far from the fountaines of the Seine, and Marne, runneth through Lorraine, Luxemburg, Luychland, and Namur; from thence by Ruremond, and Venlo, two known Towns of Guelderland, where turning towards the West, it taketh in a part of the Rhene, and from thence passing by Maestreicht, divides Brabant from Holland; watering the Town of Grone in the one, and of Dort, in the other; and falleth into the sea not far from Bril, with so great a violence, that the waters of it for a long space do continue fresh. 3 Ems, in Latine called Amisus, dividing the two Frislands; of which more in Germanie. 4 Scaldis, which arising in Picardie, and running through Artois, and between Hainalt and Brabant, meeteth with the sea a little above Antwerp. And 5 Lis or Ley, which runneth quite through Flanders. Besides which Rivers, and others of inferiour note (which we shall meet withall in their proper places) here are great store of lakes, pools, and marishes; which do both fortifie the Countrey, and provide it of fish: besides many navigable channels, made by the hand of man, from one River to another, for the convenience of passage, and the more easie transport of their commodities.

The shore of this Countrey hath been much worn out by the Sea, especially that of the Islands of Zeland, and such as lye scattered about Holland; where they are defended with banks and ramparts, painfully made, and chargeably maintained. These banks are about ten ells in height, and twenty five in breadth at the bottom. They are made of the hardest clay that may be gotten; in the inside stuffed with wood and stone, on the outside covered with mats strong and thick made.

The former inhabitants were divers, and were as differently disposed of in their severall Countries; that is to say, the Attrebates in the greatest part of Artois, the Morini in the rest of Artois, and those parts of Flanders, which make up the Imperial and Dutch Flanders; the Nervii in Hainalt, Namur, and Flanders Gallicant; the Batavi in South-Holland, and so much of Guelderland, and Utrecht, as lies on the South side of the Rhene, with the Menapii, intermixt in the Dukedom of Guelders, the Mattiaci in the Isles of Zeland, the Aduatici, and part of the Tongri in the Dukedom of Brabant, with parts of the Treveri in Luxembourg, and of the Eburones in Luich land, and the Dukedom of Limburg: all which were Belgick Nations, and therefore antiently accompted or as parts of Gallia. Then on the Northern side of the middle channell of the Rhene, there dwelt the Frisii Minores in North-Holland, and so much of the District of Utrecht, as lies on the further side of that channell; the Frisii Majores in West-Friseland, and the State of Groyning; some parts of the Sicambri in the Earldom of Zutphen, and the rest of Guelderland, with part of the Bructeri in Over-yssel: all German Nations, and properly not within the reckoning of Gallia Belgica. Those which passed under the accompt and name of Belgæ, being subdued, together with other Tribes of that numerous Nation, by the valour and good fortune of Julius Cæsar; continued subject to the Romans, without any notable disturbance unto their affaires, but the Rebellion raised against them by Civilis Prince of the Batavians, in the time of Vespasian. In the declining of the Empire, they were possessed by the French, under whom they made a part of the Kingdom of Metz, or Ostenreich; united by Childerick the third, to the rest of France, and made a member of that Kingdom: as they continued till the time of Lewis the Godly, son of Charles the Great, in the division of whose Empire amongst his Children, the Countries of Flanders and Artois being laid to France, the residue of these Countries on this side of the Rhene, made up a speciall part of the Kingdom of Lorrein. Those on the further side of the middle channell of that River, being German Nations, gained to the vast Empire of the French by Charles the Great, in the division of the spoil spoken of before, fell to the share of Lewis surnamed the Antient, the first King of Germanie, and after his decease to his Successors in that Estate, whether Kings or Emperours. And so we have the whole divided betwixt the three great Kings of France, Lorrein, and Germany; by which means subdivided into lesser parcels, (no fewer then nineteen in all) we shall see anon.

In the mean time we are to know, that in the beginning of the French conquests in the rest of Gallia, there started up in Belgica two great Estates, founded by Auberon, Regnault, and Ranchaire, Sons of Clodion, the second King of the French: who being disherited of their Fathers Kingdom by Merove Master of his horse, to whose tuition and guardianship they had been committed, betook themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardenne, and the Countries on the banks of the River Mosselle; where they founded the two great Earldoms from thence denominated. That of Ardenne (for of the Earldom of Mosselle we shall speak elsewhere) contained part of the modern Flanders, and some part of Brabant, together with all Hainalt, Namur, Lemburg, Luxemtourg, and the Dukedom of Bovillon. Grown to this greatnesse by the withdrawing of the French forces into richer conquests, and the dismembring of that Empire into many Kingdoms, and trusting too much to that greatnesse, they drew upon themselves the jealousie of those mightier Princes: occasioning Clotaire the second, to give their Countrey unto Dagobert his eldest Son, then King of Metz, whom he furnished with convenient Forces for the conquest of it: Brunulph the then Prince hereof, being by him discomfited, and slain in Battel. By Sigebert, who succeeded his Father Dagobert in the Kingdom of Metz, the Earldom of Hainalt is taken out of it, and given to Albert one of the youngest Sons of Brunulph. By Dagobert himself succeeding in the Realme of France, (and whilest he lived sole King of the French) the parts of Flanders and Brabant, formerly belonging to these Princes, were dismembred from it, and laid unto two new Estates of his own erecting. And probable it is, that either to weaken this great house, or to complie with the ill customes of those times, the Earldom of Namur might be taken out of it at the same time also, for the portion of some other of the younger

Brethren. The reſt of the Eſtate, with the title of Earl of Ardenne, remained unto the eldeſt Son: whoſe poſterity, notwithſtanding this great diminution, grew to ſuch eſteem, that Judith the Widow of Bovis and ſiſter of Boſon Earls of Ardenne, was thought a fit wife for Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperour: by whom (the more to honour his family) the ſaid Boſon was created King of Arles and Burgundie. During the Empire of Otho the firſt, the Earldom of Luxembourg was divided from it, and given to Sigefride one of the younger Sons of Ricuine the preceding Prince; and ſo perhaps was Limbourg alſo for another of them. The reſt remained to Godfrey the eldeſt ſon, who by Matilda a daughter to Otho the ſecond, was Father of another Godfrey, who ſucceeded after Charles and Otho, the third Duke of Lorrein: that Dukedom ever ſince enjoyed by the houſe of Ardenne, and there we ſhall hear further of it. This ſaid, and ſo much of the ſtory opened as concerns the generall, we will proceed to a particular Survey of the modern Belgium; divided at the preſent into ſeventeen Provinces; beſides the two great Biſhopricks of Leige, and Cambray; which being always under the protection of the Belgick Princes, partakers of their fortunes either good or ill, and lying intermixt among their eſtates; ſhall have their turn in the deſcription of theſe Countries, divided generally

- 2 Biſhopricks
  - 1 Leige or Luick.
  - 2 Cambray.
- 4 Dukedoms
  - 1 Limbourg. 2 Luxembourg.
  - 3 Guelderland. 4 Brabant.
- 1 Marquiſate; viz. of the holy Empire.
- 7 Earldoms
  - 1 Flanders. 2 Artois.
  - 3 Hainalt. 4 Namur.
  - 5 Zutphen. 6 Holland. 7 Zeland.
- 5 Baronies
  - 1 Weſt-Friſeland.
  - 2 Utrecht. 3 Over-yſel.
  - 4 Machlin. 5 Groyning.

Of theſe nineteen, two only did acknowledge the Soveraignty of the Kings of France, viz. Flanders, and Artois: the Earls whereof were Homagers unto that Crown; but ſeldome did deſcend ſo low as to do their Homage; quitted at laſt to Philip the ſecond, King of Spain, and his Succeſſours, by King Henry the ſecond of France, in the treaty at Cambray, Anno 1558. The reſt were held originally of the German Empire, and by Maximilian Emperour of Germanie, and Regent of thoſe Countries for his ſon Philip, (who had a purpoſe to ſubject them to the Empire again) were made the tenth Circle of the Empire, called the Circle of Burgundie. But neither ſince, nor before that time, would the Princes of the houſe of Burgundie acknowledge any ſuch ſubjection; but governed theſe Eſtates as abſolute Princes, without relation to the Empire, or ſubordination to the Emperor, or Imperiall Officers: never appearing at the Diets, nor contributing to any Taxes there impoſed, nor holding themſelves bound by any Conſtitutions, which were made therein. So that theſe ſeverall Relations being out of uſe, we muſt behold it at this time as it ſtands divided betwixt the Spaniards and the States: beginning firſt with thoſe Provinces which belong to the Spaniard, the true Proprietary of the whole; and therein firſt with Flanders, as of moſt eſteem.

1. FLANDERS and 2. ARTOIS.

THese two I have thought fit to joyn together, becauſe at firſt but one Eſtate; and though divided for a time, yet after five or ſix deſcents were again united, and have ſo continued ever ſince.

1. FLANDERS is bound on the Eaſt, with Hainalt and Brabant; on the Weſt, with the Engliſh or German Ocean; on the North, with the Seas of Zealand, and a branch of the Scheld; and on the South, with part of Picardy in France, interpoſing betwixt Calice and Graveling. So called, as ſome ſay, à Flando, becauſe it lieth open to the winds; as others ſay, from Flandbert the Son of Bleſinda Daughter of Clodion, the ſecond King of the French: Some fetch it from a Town of this name, ſituate in that part of the Country where now Ardenbourg ſtands; ſo long ſince ruined, that very few except themſelves could ever hear of it; and others (which I think moſt probable) from Flandrina the Wife of Lideric the ſecond, the firſt who governed in theſe parts by the name of Foreſter.

The Soyl indifferently fruitfull in Corn and Paſtures; the air healthfull, temperate and pleaſant. The whole Country not in length above 90 miles, and in breadth but 60, and yet containing in that compaſſe above thirty Cities (for they reckon all Cities which be walled) 1154 Villages, which ſtand ſo thick (as needs they muſt in ſo narrow a compaſſe) that the Spaniards at their firſt comming in with King Philip the ſecond, took the whole Province for one Town. Divided commonly into Imperialem, 2. Gallicam, and 3. Teutonicam: or Flanders Imperial, 2. Flanders Gallicant, and 3. Flanders Flammengant.

1. FLANDERS FLAMMENGANT, which is the greateſt of the three, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Imperial Flanders, and the River Scheld; on the Weſt, with the Engliſh Ocean; on the North, with the Seas of Zealand; and on the South, with Artois and Flanders Gallicant: The chief Towns of it, 1. Gaunt, in Latine called Gandavum, ſeven miles in compaſſe; but taking in the Suburbs which are great and large, the whole circuit is ten miles at leaſt. One of the greateſt Cities of Europe for extent of ground; but not ſo populous as many of a leſſe capacity; there being made waſte ground even within the walls. Commodiouſly ſeated on the banks of the Scheld, and the Ley, both which run thorow it, and make in it 26 Iſlands, joyned together with 98 Bridges: and had not her many ſeditions ruinated her beauties, ſhe might have been the Queen of Europe. In this Town were born John Duke of Lancaſter, commonly called John of Gaunt; and Charles the fifth Emperour, and King of Spain: which laſt, to reſtrain the people from their old ſeditions, which had been very troubleſome to his predeceſſors (the Gauntois taking on them many times to rule and over-rule their Princes) built a ſtrong Citadell in the place where ſtood the Abby of S. Bavons. For Churches, Monaſteries, and other places of devotion, there were numbred in it 55; all of them anſwerable to the grandeur and renown of the City; the private buildings being alſo very ſtately, if not majeſticall. But now it is much fallen from its former glories, the often ſeditions of this people drawing upon themſelves the vengeance of their angred Prince; and their wealth much empaired by the long wars, and the diverſion of their trading by the Hollanders, who command the ſeas. 2. Bruges, or Brug, more within the land. A Town that hath neither Port, nor River; yet formerly of ſuch wealth, and the people in thoſe times ſo willing to ſhew it; that Queen Joan the wife of Philip the fair, having been there and marked the pomp of the women, complained, that She was not Queen alone. The Town of four miles circuit within the walls, wonderfully well peopled; the buildings fair and ſumptuous, (amongſt which 60 Churches and Religious houſes) the ſtreets large and ſtreight, and a ſpacious Market-place; from which the ſix principal ſtreets of the City do paſſe directly on to as many Gates, which is very pleaſant to behold. And though the Town hath neither Port, nor River, as before was ſaid, yet was it antiently of ſo great trading, that it was accounted one of the four Mart-towns of Chriſtendom; flouriſhing chiefly by the benefit of the Engliſh Cloth, and ſenſibly decaying when the Engliſh traffick was removed hence to Antwerp. It was walled by Earl Baldwin, An. 890. is diſtant three leagues from the ſea, and ſeated on a fair and deep chanel made by Art, and filled with the waters of all the adjoyning Fountains and Rivulets; which artificial chanels are in theſe Countries very frequent, to the great enriching of the whole State. 3. Ypres, a Town ſeated very ſtrongly, and almoſt impregnable, on a ſmall river ſo named; a reaſonable rich Town, and well built, though moſt of the houſes be of timber: very well ſerved with water, conveyed into every houſe almoſt in leaden pipes; of which there is ſo great a number, that the foundations of it ſeem to be laid in lead. 4. Bourbourg, a fine ſtrong town, but little; pertaining to the French King, in the rights of the Houſe of Burbon. 5. Comines, on the River Lis or Ley, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and an excellent Library; but more in being the birth-place of Philip de Comines, that notable States-man and Hiſtorian. 6. Courtray, on the ſame River of Ley, one of the antienteſt towns in Flanders, yet ſtill continueth well built, and of very great ſtrength both by art and nature famous for a great overthrow given the French, Anno 1301. for which the Town was called of long time, the Sepulchre of the Frenchmen. 7. Ardembourg, (called in times paſt Rodemburgh) a pretty Town, inriched every year with a great Horſ-fair every June, and beautified with one of the goodlieſt Churches in all this Province: the principal Town of that part hereof, which properly is called Flanders; that name firſt given to the parts hereunto adjoyning, as ſome conceive, and after by degrees communicated to the reſt of the Country. 8. Bierulies, both a Town and Iſland, and furniſhed with a good and commodious Haven; yet not to be mentioned in this place, but that the ſalting of Herrings was here firſt invented, by one William Beukeleme, who died Anno. 1397. 9. Winocksberg, ſo called of a goodly Abby built upon an Hill, in the honour of St. Winock an Engliſh man of an holy life: ſacked by the French, An. 1538. but ſince re-edified, and made more beautiful than it was before. 10. Graveling, Flanders. on the Sea ſide, which ſince the taking of Calice by the French, hath been made the ſtrongeſt Town in the Low Countries. 11. Oudenard, ſeated on the Scheld, a fair ſtrong town, and of very great traffique, eſpecially for Tapeſtry, and the fineſt Linnens; which are herein made: The birth-place of Margaret, Dutcheſſe of Parma, and Mother to Alexander Prince of Parma, that renowned Souldier.

The Principal Ports of Flanders being four in number, are all of them ſeated in this part, viz. 1. Dunkerke, a ſmall but ſafe Port, belonging to the French King (as doth Graveling alſo) in the right of the houſe of Vendoſme; both taken lately by the French, and ſo returned ex poſt-liminio, to the proper owner. Moſt memorable in theſe days, in that the people of it, in the times of war, ſo infeſted the ſeas. 2. Scluſe, ſeated at the mouth of the Chanel of Bruges; beautified with a very fair Haven, able to contain 500 good Ships, and is now Subject to the States, with whoſe ſafety it could not well ſtand to let the Spaniards enjoy any ſafe and large habours ſo near unto them. Over againſt it lyeth the Iſle of Caſſandt (famous for the birth of George Caſſander, a moderate and learned Papiſt) Formerly as big again as it is at the preſent, having then a fair town in it, and many rich villages; of which there is but one remaining (of the ſame name with the Iland) the reſt all ſwallowed by the Sea. 3. Newport, a pretty Town, with a very ſtrong Caſtle, built on a well-frequented Haven, but not very ſafe, and therefore not much uſed by the men of war, nor made rich by Piracies, as Dunkerke. Near to this town, An. 1603. was fought the field-battell betwixt the Arch-duke Albert, and the States; the victory next under God, being gotten for the States by the valour of the Engliſh, and the excellent conduct of the Veres. 4. Oſtend, not walled till the Low-countrey wars, and then but with a mud-wall only, and that not finiſhed till the Arch-duke ſate down before it; Inſomuch as the Arch-dutcheſſe Iſabell is ſaid to have ſworn, that ſhe would not ſhift her ſmock till the Town were taken: who, had ſhe kept that raſh oath, had been very lowſie; the Town (then garriſoned with Engliſh) holding out againſt the ſaid Arch-duke, a a ſiege of three years, and as many moneths.

2. IMPERIALL FLANDERS, ſo called, becauſe it was long under the obedience of Emperors, is ſevered from Brabant by the River Dender, and from the Gallick Flanders, by the River Scheld, about Oudenard. It was ſometimes called Bracant of a Caſtle of that name, deſtroyed by Baldwin le Debonaire Earl of Flanders: and is now called the County of Aloſt, from the chief Town thereof ſo named; the juriſdiction whereof containing 170 Villages, extendeth as far as to the walls of Gaunt, and the Gates of Oudenard. The town ſtrong, and indifferently fair, ſituate on the River Dender, moſt famous in theſe times for a Fair of Hops, which is kept there yearly. 2. Hulſt, a walled Town, and the chief of the four towns in the County of Waes; the other three being 3. Axele, 4. Mouchant, 5. Aſſeneds, of which little memorable; but that they were all taken from the Empire, by the ſaid Baldwin le Debonaire in the time of the Emperour Henry the 4th. 6. Dendremond, ſituate at the mouth of the Dender where it entreth into the Scheld; a ſtrong town both by Art and Nature, and much enriched by making Fuſtians, and a weekly Market of Flax. A diſtinct Signeury of it ſelf, with many rich villages belonging to it; incorporated into the Earldom of Flanders by the Mariage of Earl Lewis de Malaine with the Lady Margaret of Brabant, to which houſe it formerly appertained. 7. Rupelmond, on the mouth of the River Rupel where it falleth into the Scheld: famous in former times for an antient Caſtle in which were kept the Minuments and Records of the Earls of Flanders; more in late times, for being the birth-place of Mercator, that renowned Coſmographer. 8. Mont-Gerhard, called by the French, Grandmont, a fine and pleaſant town ſeated on the Dender. Which three laſt Towns, together with Bornhen, a fair large village having ſome juriſdiction on the parts adjoyning, made up that eſtate, which was called the Propro, or Domaine of Flanders; becauſe not holden of the Empire, or the Kings of France, but in the ſoveraignty alone of the Earls hereof.

3. FLANDERS GALLICANT, ſo called from the French language there ſpoken, lyeth on the South of Flanders Flammengant; having Hainault on the Eaſt, Artois on the Weſt, and the Country of Cambray on the South. The chief towns of it, are 1. Liſle, in Latine, Inſula, ſo called from its Iland-like ſituation, amongſt ponds, pools, mariſhes; dryed up, and made firm land by Earl Baldwin de Barbu, who built the town Anno 1007. which afterwards was walled by Baldwin de Liſle, his ſon, (born in this town, and hence ſo named) Anno 1066. The town made rich by manufactures, and reſort of Merchants; accompted the beſt town of traffick next Amſterdam and Antwerp, in all the Netherlands. Not far from which are to be ſeen the ruines of an antient Caſtle called Brug, the Seat or Mannor houſe of the ancient Forreſters, who had the government of this Country for the Kings of France. 2. Doway (Duacum in Latine) a fair and ſtrong town ſeated on the Scharpe, having many fountains, good bulldings, and a great number of Churches; made an Univerſity by King Philip the ſecond of Spain, who built therein a Seminary or College for Engliſh Fugitives. 3. Orchies, a pleaſant town, and well traded for the making of Serges; which, with the other two, make up the three Eſtates of this part of Flanders. 4. Armentiers, an unwalled town, but of very great trading; here being yearly 25000 pieces of Cloth ſent hence to Italie, and thence to Conſtantinople. 5. Tournay, (or Dornick, as the Dutch call it) a great, rich, mighty, and ſtrong town, ſeated on the Scheld: well built, and full of ſtately and magnificent Churches, and religious Houſes; and antiently honoured with a See Epiſcopal. A town of great importance, and much contended for betwixt the Flemmings and the French; but finally fell unto the French, as the more puiſſant Prince; taken from them by Henry the eighth of England, Anno 1513. to whom the Citizens paid 100000 Duckets for their preſent ranſome; reſtored by him unto the French, Anno 1518. for the ſum of 600000 Crowns: and finally from them recovered by Charles the fifth, who reſtored it to the body of Flanders, from which it had been long diſmembred; but ſo that it is governed as a State apart, and is called the Signeury of Tourneſis, having a goodly juriſdiction over the Country round about it. 6. S. Amand, in the Country of Tourneſis, pleaſantly ſeated on the Scharp; in which is one of the richeſt Abbies in all Flanders; the Abbat thereof having the temporal and ſpiritual juriſdiction over it, and the parts about it. And ſo much for the Choregraphie of the Earldom of Flanders; inhabited by the Nervii and Morini, in the time of Cæſar. Artois.

11. ARTOIS, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Flanders Gallicant, and the Countrey of Cambray; on the South, and Weſt, with Picardie; on the North, with Flanders Flammegant, and the River Lis. The name derived from the Attrebates, the old Inhabitants hereof: the air exceeding temperate, and the ſoyl ſo fruitfull, that it ſerveth as a Granary to a great part both of Flanders and Brabant.

On the Weſt part hereof towards France, lyeth the Earldom of S. Paul, ſo called from the chief town thereof; a goodly Signeurie, and of great juriſdiction and revenue: containing beſides many Villages, the good town of Pern, a walled town, and of great importance. The Earls hereof were lineally derived from Walthſilan, brother of Henry the 7th. Emperor of Germany, and Earl of Luxembourg; the laſt of which was Lewis of Luxembourg, made Conſtable of France, by K. Lewis the 11th. With whom, as alſo with Edward the 4th of England, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, he plaid ſo many croſs tricks, that having long deluded them all, and kept them in a continual jealouſie of one another, he was at laſt by Duke Charls taken and beheaded. After whoſe death, this goodly Signeurie fell to the houſe of Vendoſme in France, by the marriage of Francis Earl of Vendoſme, with Mary the daughter of this Lewis: to whom it was adjudged by the power and favour of the French Kings; the Heirs Males being made uncapable of ſucceſſion in it, by the Attaindure and Confiſcation of the ſaid laſt Earl. By means whereof the houſe of Vendoſme were entituled to many fair Eſtates in Artois and Flanders, and much good lands in France which they were poſſeſſed of: Francis the 2d. ſon of that Francis, and Francis the only ſon of this, being entituled whilſt they lived, Earls of S. Paul, and Dukes of Toutevilla.

The Armes of theſe Earls were Argent, a Lion Gules armed and Crowned Or, his tail forked of the ſecond.

As for the reſidue of Artois, the towns of moſt importance in it, are 1. Arras, in Latine Attrebatum Civitas, the chief City of the Attrebates, the old inhabitans hereof in the time of Cæſar, and ſtill the chief City of this Province; a large, populous, and well-fortified City, antiently honoured with a See Epiſcopal, and ſtocked with an induſtrious people; the firſt makers of the Cloth of Arras, which took name from hence. Divided into two diſtinct towns, both of them walled, and called by two ſeveral names: the leſſer called La Cite, ſubject to the Biſhop, beautified with a fair and ſtately Cathedral Church, and a Library containing many excellent Manuſcripts; the leſſer called La Ville, ſubject to the Prince, having large ſtreets, and a rich Monaſtery of the yearly revenue of 20000 crowns. By Ptolemy it is called Regiacum, ſeated within a bow-ſhoot of the River Scharp; and heretofore the Metropolitan town of Flanders, til Artois was diſmembred from it: ſince which time the chief City of this Province, as before is ſaid. 2. S. Omer, a fair town, and well peopled, ſeated upon the River Aa, ſome 8 Dutch miles from the Ocean; ſo called from S. Omer, or Audomarus, Biſhop of the Morini, who built a Monaſtery in this place, from which grew the town; the ſecond of eſteem and rank in all the countrey. Near to it is a goodly lake of freſh water, in which are many little Ilands affording good paſturage for cattel: of which Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, that by faſtning a cord unto the buſhes which grow in them, a man may draw them which way he will; and that under them there are found great numbers of fiſhes, who bed themſelves there for ſhelter againſt the Weather. 3. Betune, a ſtrong town, and ſeated amongſt excellent paſtures, of which the people make great plenty of the beſt cheeſe: which, with the territory hereof, fell to Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, in right of Mand his wife, daughter and heir of Daniel the Lord of this town: honoured in that regard with the birth of their eldeſt ſon, who from this place had the name of Robert de Betune. 4. Aire, on the Lys, a ſtrong town, with a Caſtle of great antiquity. 5. Bapaulme, a little, but well-fortifyed town; and yet more ſtrong, becauſe it cannot be beſieged for want of freſh water, which is not to be had within three leagues of it. 6. Renty, an unwalled town, but fenced with a very ſtrong Caſtle, beſieged by the French, Anno 1554. but being overcome in a ſet-field by Charls the fift, they were fain to raiſe the ſiege and go home again. 7. Hedinfert, on the confluence of two little Riverets, Blangis and Canche; a frontier town on the edge of France, one of the ſtrongeſt and moſt defenſible places of all the Netherlands; built by Charles the 5. out of the ruines of old Heſdin, which having taken from the French, he commanded it to be razed as no longer ſerviceable; and raiſed this town inſtead thereof, ſomewhat nearer France. 8. Terwin; or Theroven, the Tervanna of Ptolemy, and Civitas Morinum of Antoninus, a frontire town, held for a long time by the French, by whom thought impregnable, til taken by King Henry the 8. Anno 1513. they changed their opinion. A ſiege not only memorable for the iſſue of it, but for two other matters of great moment: The one, that the Emp. Maximilian came and ſerved in perſon under the colours of S. George, with the Engliſh croſſe upon his breaſt; The other, that the French intending to victual the town, had ſo great an overthrow, that had the Engliſh followed their fortune, they had opened a fair way to have made themſelves maſters of all France; the French King being ſo aſtoniſhed on the news hereof, that he prepared to flie into Britain. But the Engliſh more minded the ſpoyls and riches of Terwin, than the ſequel of an abſolute victory; Et frui maluerunt victoria, quam uti, as the Hiſtorian ſaid of Hannibal. It is now after many changes of fortunes in the hands of the French; and by ſome reckoned and accounted of as a part of Picardie. There are beſides theſe, four walled towns more, that is to ſay, Lilliers, Pern, Lens, and La Baſſei, of which little memorable; and to the number of 854 Villages.

Theſe Countries of Flanders, and Artois, were antiently, if not a part (as the parts hereof about Tournay moſt undoubtedly were) yet much of the ſame nature with the great Forreſt of Ardenne, nothing but a continual waſt of Woods and Deſerts, till the Conqueſt of it by the French: the Sea-coaſts being then unpeopled for fear of the Danes, who by their frequent Piracies did much vex those shores; and the inland countries meanly planted, for want of corn and other necessaries, for the life of man. Subject in part to the great Princes of Ardenne, till the discomfiture of Earl Brunulph by Dagobert sole King of the French. By whom about the year 621. this wild country extending then as far as the River Some, and comprehending besides Artois and Flanders, a good part of Picardie, was given unto one Lideric le Bucq; with the title of Forrester, to be holden under the Soveraignty of that Crown. In whose posterity it continued with the title of Forresters, till the time of Baldwin the first, the son of Odoacer, the seventh of the Forresters, whose names occurre upon record; there being a long intermission of their names and memories, during the ravagements and depredations of the Danes and Normans. This Baldwin having first ravished, and afterwards married Judith, sister to Charls the Bald, King of France and Emperour, was by him created Earl of Flanders, the Soveraignty thereof reserved as before it was: in whose issue it remained intire, till Philip the first Earl of that name, gave unto Philip Augustus K. of France, the country of Artois, with the Earldom or country of Veromandois, parts of Picardie, in marriage with Isabel his Niece, daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainalt. By Lewis the 8th son and successor of Philip Augustus, Artois was given in portion to his youngest son Robert, made the first Earl of Artois by K. Lewis the 9. An. 1234. And by the marriage of Lewis the first of Flanders, with Margaret the heir of Artois, and of the Earldom of Burgundie, both these Estates were added unto this of Flanders, now made far mightier than before. And yet before this great accession of estate, it was accounted the prime Earldom, as Millain was the prime Dukedom of Europe: these Earls being privileged to write themselves Dei gratia, all others Dei clementia only; and Flanders being now grown abroad to so great esteem, that it was generally used for all the Netherlands. Finally, by the marriage of Margaret daughter of Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders, to Philip the Hardie Duke of Burgundie, this great estate became united to that house: and afterwards was conveyed unto that of Austria, as shall be shewn hereafter, in due time and place. In the mean season let us take a brief survey of

The Earls of FLANDERS and ARTOIS.

Of which Philip and his Successors in these Estates, we shall hereafter speak in a place more proper.

The Arms of Flanders were Or, a Lion sable, langued and armed Gules. Those of Artois being Seme of Flower de Lyces Or, in a field Azure, a file of three Labels Gules, charged with as many Castles of the first.

HAINALT.

HAINALT is bounded on the East, with Namur; on the West, with Flanders; on the North, with Brabant; on the South, with Picardy and Champagne in France. It was antiently called Saltus Carbonatius; by some writers of the middle times, the lower Picardy; by the Latin writers of these times called Hannonia; It seemeth to have taken this new name from the River Haine, or Hania, which passeth through it; and the word Holt signifying a wood, as being over-spread in a manner with the Forrests of Normault, S. Amand, De Faigna, and that of Poodsberg. And then Hainault will be quasi Haine-holt, i. e. a Country of Woods and Forrests on the River Haine. Thus called originally by the French (as the word importeth) but by the Dutch best known by the name of Hennegouw, i. e. the County bordering on the Haine, as the name signifieth in that language.

The length thereof is 60 miles, 48 the breadth; comprehending in that compasse 950 villages, and 24 towns; in and amongst which there is reckoned one Principate, 10 Earldoms, 12 Peerdoms, or Pairries, 22 Baronies, 26 Abbeys, one Lord Marshal, (besides other Officers of the Prince) descending by inheritance to the Lords of this Province.

The air hereof is very good, and the soil fruitfull; by reason the Country is watered with so many Rivers, as the Scheld, the Sambre, the Dender, and several lesser streams, besides divers lakes, marishes, ponds, and pools, which do much inrich it; the country abounding in most places with fresh Meddows and sweet Pastures, good fruits, and profitable trees, but especially with great plenty of corn. Here are also in some parts of it, notable Mines of iron and lead; and excellent quarries of the best stone, fit for all kind of buildings.

The principal of the towns are 1. Monts, situate at the confluence of the Haine, and a little River called Trulle, which gives a good natural strength unto it; fortified besides with a very strong wall, three large deep ditches, and an antient Castle. The Town great, beautifull, and rich, adorned with sumptuous buildings both private and publick, and replenished with wealthy Merchants, and men of trade: the principal of all the Province, erected into an Earldom by Charls the Great, and sometimes used for the stile of the Earls of Hainalt. In this town is the noble Nunnery of St. Valdrude, once a a Dutchesse of Lorr in, the Nuns whereof are to be Ladies and Gentlewomen of noble families; in the morning apparelled in white, like Nuns; in the afternoons according to their birth and qualities; who when they please may leave the Cloister, and be married. The Abbesse hath both jurisdictions, in the town and country about it; and antiently did put the Earls of Hainault into possession of the state. Another Nunnery like this (but not of such large Revenues) there is at 2 Maubuige on the Sambree, a good town of Merchandise. 3. Valenciennes seated on the Scheld, and a little River called Rouelle; which make not only in it many pleasant Isles, but passe almost under every mans house, to the great benefit and delight of the place and people. The site hereof so strong by nature, (besides the fortifications of Art) that on the one side it may be easily made unapprochable by water; and on the other sides so defended by hils, that it can hardly be besieged, but by three Armies at once. A goodly, large, and beautifull town, especially for publick buildings, the chief whereof are the Church of our Lady, Hainalt built after the antient manner of Architecture, with sumptuous arches, and goodly Pillars of Marble and Porphyrie; the Earls Palace and the Town-hal, buildings of great magnificence and excellent workmanship: the birth-place of Henry the 7. Emperour of Germany; of Mary daughter of Charls the Warlike; and of Froissart the great French Historian. Finally a town, which for the eminence thereof, is governed as a State apart by it self, having under the jurisdiction of it 3 towns, and 132 villages; which on occasion of appeal resort not to the Provincial Councel at Montz, but the great Councel at Machlyn. 4. Chimay upon the River Blanche, near a pleasant Forrest, which gives the title of a Prince to the eldest son of the Duke of Arschot, one of the principal Lords of Brabant, who have here a very goodly Pallace. 5. Halle, seated on the Seine, which runs through it, a place of great credit amongst the Papists, by reason of an Image of the blessed Virgin, famed for many miracles. Of which, see Lipsius on that Subject. 6. Beauvais, an old town, at a pillar whereof begin all the ways leading into France, made of paved stones by Brunehault the wife of Siggebert King of Mets and Austrasia, who with Fridegonde the wife of Chilperick, and Katherine Medices the wife of Henry the 2. are said to be the three Furies of France. 7. Landrecie on the River Sambre, famous for the notable resistance which it made to Charles the 5. 1543. 8. Mariemburg, built by Mary Queen of Hungarie, Governesse here for the said Charles, Anno 1524. to serve as a Bulwark against France, on which it frontireth. 9. Phillippe Ville, built and well fortified for the same reason by King Philip the 2. 10. Bouchant upon the Scheld, in the County of Ostrivand, which County is the title of the first son of Hainalt: and by that name William the eldest son of Albert Earl of Hainalt and Holland was admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2. 11, Conde a good little town seated on the Scheld, the moitie whereof belonged heretofore to the house of Montpensier in France; as 12 Anghien a town of great trade for tapestrie, to the house of Vendosme: from whence the Princes of Conde, and Dukes of Enghien do derive their titles. 13. Beaumont upon the knap of a goodly hill, whence it hath the name; belonging at the present to the Dukes of Arschot; but antiently the partage of the second son of the Earls of Hainalt. 14. Bins or Binche, on a branch of the River Hain, one of the jointure-towns of the Countesses of Hainalt; much beautified and made a place of pleasures by Mary Queen of Hungarie, to who it was given by Charles the 5, (commonly called the Queens Paradise) but burnt and utterly destroyed by the French, Anno 1554. 15. Ath, seated on both sides of the Dender, a little, but a pleasant and wealthy town; ; here being held the staple of Linnen for all this country, and the cloth here sold amounting to 200000. crowns per annum.

As for the Hiflory of Hainalt, the antient Inhabitants thereof were the Nervii, the most valiant and most potent people of all the Galls, possessed not only of this Province, but of the whole Earldom of Namur, and some part of Flanders, able to bring, and de facto did bring into the field, when the Belgæ mustered up their united forces against Julius Cæsar, no fewer then 50000 fighting men; won from the Romans by the French, they became a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, continuing so till the death of Brunulph, discomfited and slain in battel by Dagobert sole King of the French, whom his Father in his life time had made Duke of Ardenne, and designed unto the conquest of it, but the fury of the war being over, the parts of Flanders and Brabant which belonged unto it, estated upon other houses, and the rest allotted out amongst his children: Alberic, surnamed the Orphelin, one of his younger sons was by Sigebert King of Mets or Austrasia, enfeoffed of this country, by the name and title of Earl of Hainalt. Twice this estate was added or united to that of Flanders. 1. In the person of Baldwin the 5th. Earl of Flanders, succeeding hereunto in right of Richild his wife, daughter of Regnier the 3d. And 2ly. by the marriage of Baldwin the 6. of Hainalt, with Margaret Countesse of Flanders, sister and heir of Philip of Elsas, Earl of Flanders. But being divided the first time by the usurpation of Flanders, wrested from Arnulph the 3d. by his Uncle Robert; and the second time by the intrusion of John de Avesnes, natural son of Margaret the second daughter of the Emperour Baldwin, into the Estate and Earldom of Hainalt; it was finally annexed to Holland by the marriage of John de Avesnes to Adelize or Aleide, daughter, (and at the last) heir of Florence the 4th. Earl of Holland, Zeland, &c. from which it never was divided, till they were both incorporated into that of Burgundie.

The EARLES of Hainalt.

1 Alberic, one of the younger sons of Brunulph, Earl of Ardenne.
2 Waultier, son of Alberic.
3 Waultier II. son of Waultier the first.
4 Waultier III. son of Waultier second.
5 Albon in right of his wife, eldest daughter of Waultier the third.
6 Albon II. son of the said Albon by that wife.
7 Manassier son of Albon the second.
8 Regnier son of Manassier.
9 Regnier II. son of Regnier the first.
10 Regnier III. son of Regnier the second.
11 Baldwin V. of Flanders, and the first of that name in Hainalt. succeeded in right of Richild his wife, the sole daughter to Regnier the third.
1070 12 Arnulph, son of Baldwin and Richild, despoiled of his estate and life by his Uncle Robert, who seised on the Earldom of Flanders.
1071 13 Baldwin II. brother of Arnulph, succeeded in Hainalt.

14 Bald-

14 Baldwin III. ſon of Baldwin the ſecond.
15 Baldwin IV. ſon of Baldwin the third.
16 Baldwin V. ſon of Baldwin the fourth.
17 Baldwin VI. of Hainalt, ſon of Baldwin the fift, and the 8th of that name in Flanders, into which alſo he ſucceeded, in right of Margaret his wife, ſiſter and heir of Philip of Elſas Earl of Flanders.
1199 18 Baldwin VIII. of Hainalt, and IX of Flanders, Emperour of Conſtantinople.
1295 19 Joan Counteſſe of Hainalt and Flanders, firſt married to Ferdinand of Portugal, and then to Thomas Earl of Savoy.
1244 20 Margaret the younger ſiſter of Joan, married to William of Bourbon Lord of Dampierre, by whom ſhe had William and Guy, both Earls of Flanders.
21 John de Aveſnes, baſe ſon of Margaret, begot before her marriage by Buſchart her Guardian, the Prior of S. Peters in L'Iſle, by force and fraud extorted Hainalt from his Brethren born in lawful wedlock; and married Aleide daughter and heir of Florence the 4. Earl of Holland: whoſe ſucceſſors in both Eſtates we ſhall meet with there, and amongſt them, with William the 2d. father of Queen Philippa, wife of Edward the 3. one of the moſt conſiderable of all the number.

The Arms hereof are quarterly Flanders and Holland.

The Biſhoprick of CAMBRAY.

SOuthward from Hainalt lieth the Biſhoprick of CAMBRAY, containing a goodly town and territory, reckoned of antiently as a part of Hainalt, now a ſtate diſtinct; rather confederate with the Princes of the Netherlands, then ſubject to them.

The Principal City hereof is Cambray (called in Latin, Cameracum) ſeated on both ſides of the River Scheld; a fair, goodly and mighty City, full of people, many of which are rich Merchants, but all of them induſtrious; eſpecially in making that fine linnen Cloth, from hence called Camerac, or Cambrick. The private buildings very fair, but the publick much fairer, eſpecially the Monaſteries and other Churches of which the moſt remarkable is that of our Ladie, an ancient and ſumptuous fabrick, and the See Epiſcopal. From hence the countrey and territory hereunto adjoyning is called Cambreſis, in which are divers Villages and places of importance. The chief of which are 1. Chaſtean Cambreſis, ſix leagues from the City, remarkable for the treaty held there, betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559. in which a peace was happily ſetled amongſt all the chief Princes of Chriſtendom, after a long & tedious war between thoſe Kings, and the Confederats of each; and before that, for the Confederacy there made by the ſaid Kings of France and Spain, the Emperour, the Pope, and many of the Princes of Italy, againſt the Signeurie of Venice, Anno 1508. called the League of Cambray. 2. Aveſnes le ſec (ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Aveſnes in Hainalt) near which are digged excellent white ſtones for building, little inferiour unto Marble.

This Biſhoprick was founded in the perſon of S. Diogenes, a Grecian born, An. 390. or thereabouts. Whoſe Succeſſors in tract of time became ſo potent, that at the laſt the Biſhop hereof became both the Lord ſpiritual and temporal of the town and territory; honoured with the title of a Duke, and Prince of the Empire; and in the end made an Arch-biſhop by Pope Paul the 4th. Anno 1562. And as for the City of Cambray, it was made Imperial by the German Emperors, afterwards by Henry the fift given in protection to Robert of Hieruſalem, Earl of Flanders; and finally ſetled and confirmed on all his Succeſſors, by the Emperour Frederick, An. 1164. Which notwithſtanding, the French finding it convenient for them, divers times poſſeſſed it: but governing with too great inſolence, they were driven out by the people, in the time of Lewis the 11th. and the town yielded voluntarily unto Maximilian, governor of theſe countries for his ſon Philip. Charls the 5th. in the year 1743. built a ſtrong citadel in it, pretending that he did it for defence of the town againſt the French; but indeed to keep it for himſelf. After this it was taken by the Duke of Alenſon, (brother of Henry the 3d. of France) then Governour of the Netherlands, Anno 1582. but regained not long after by the Spaniards, the Inhabitants giving up the town for want of victuals. Since that continually poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, by whom ſtrongly garriſoned; but ſo, that the people ſtill enjoy their ancient priviledges, and are governed by their own Laws, and Biſhops, as in former times.

5. NAMVR.

THe Earldom of NAMVR hath on the Eaſt, Hainalt; on the Weſt, the Biſhoprick of Leige; on the North, Brabant; and on the South, Luxenbourg. So called from Namur the chief town of it; Namurcum, and Namurcenis comitatus in our Latin Writers. The countrey very ſmall, containing only 182. Villages, and four walled Towns; but plentiful of all commodities, and repleniſhed with a loyal and induſtrious people. Particularly the air hereof is very wholeſom; the countrey watered with many rivers and pleaſant brooks, (amongſt which the Sambre, and the Maes) which beſides the benefit of portage, yeeld great plenty of fiſh. The hils, whereof it hath not many, cloathed with woods, abounding with all kind of fowl and veniſon; the vallies eminently fruitful of all ſorts of grain, rich mines of Lead, quarries of Marble of all colours, as alſo of Porphyrie or Jaſper, and great plenty of Coal. In mines of Iron ſo abounding, and that continually hammered by a painful people, that Vulcans Forge may ſeem to be reſtored to the world again, and ſeated here; which as it makes the people wealthy,

ſo

Namur. so it keeps them from idleneſſe. And as for the Nobility, they are generally valiant, given to all military exerciſes fit for their degrees, and very affectionate to their Princes, the greateſt virtue of a ſubject.

Walled Towns it hath but four, as before was ſaid, that is to ſay, 1. Namur, the chief of all the Province, where reſideth the Council for the country, from which lyeth no appeal but to Machlyn only. Seated between two hils on both ſides of the Sambre, which doth there fall into the Meuſe. The City rich, inhabited for the moſt part by the Nobility, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle, and beautified with a fair Cathedral, founded here in the Church of S. Albin, Anno 1559. Not far off in the Villages of Ardenne and Monſtier, are two Nunneries of Ladies: like thoſe of Montz and Maubuige ſpoken of in Hainalt. 2. Bovines upon the Meuſe, ſacked by the French, Anno 1554. ſince repaired and fortified. 3. Charlemont, a ſmall Town, but of moſt exact Fortifications, built by Charls the 5th. An. 1555. to oppoſe the French; who had then poſſeſſed themſelves of Martemburg, a Town of Hainalt. 4. Valencourt, a little Town, but ſtanding in a goodly and fruitful countrey. Of the Villages the chief is Done, ſeated on the Meuſe or Maes, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and honoured with the title of a Viſcomtie; 2. Floren, 3. Vaſcie, and 4. Sauſin, of much beauty and greatneſs.

The antient Inhabitants of this countrey were a part of the Nervii; firſt made an Earldom by ſome of the deſcendents of the ſons of Clodion, the ſecond King of the French: who being diſpoſſeſſed of their Fathers kingdom by Meroveus, the Maſter of his horſe (to whom he had committed the guardianſhip or tuition of them) were forced to betake themſelves to the moſt defenſible places of the great Forreſt of Ardenne, and the parts adjoyning, where they founded the great Earldoms of Ardenne and Moſelle, as before is ſaid. Divided in ſucceeding times into many parcels, of which this is one. By what and how many Earls poſſeſſed, I am yet to learn; the Eſtate being ſmall, and conſequently the Princes of it not much conſiderable. Allied to the Royal houſe of France by the marriage of Albert Earl hereof, with Irmingrade daughter of Charls of France, the firſt Duke of Lorreun: and after unto the houſe of Flanders, by the marriage of N. the daughter and heir of Peter the laſt Earl of that Race, to Henry ſecond, ſon of Baldwin the 8th of Flanders, and brother of Baldwin Earl of Flanders, and the firſt Emperour of the Latines in Conſtantinople, whom he ſucceeded in that Empire. After whoſe death, it came by Yoland his daughter to Peter Earl of Auxerre, who ſucceeded alſo in the Empire, and after his deceaſe to Philip his younger ſon. But he deceaſing without iſſue, and Robert his elder brother reigning in Conſtantinople, it was ſeized on by Philip the brother of Henry, who to aſſure himſelf thereof took to wife Mary daughter of Philip Auguſtus King of France. By a Neece or Couſin of this Philip, conveyed in marriage to Henry Earl of Luxembourg, (the Father by a former wife of Henry the 7th, Emperour and Earl of Luxembourg) and finally brought back again to the houſe of Flanders by the marriage of Guy of Dampierre Earl of Flanders, with Iſabel daughter of that Henry by the heir of Namur. And in his iſſue it continued (for ought I can find) til it was ſwallowed up, with the reſt of the Belgick Provinces by the houſe of Burgundy: So that the higheſt we can goe in ſearch of the Earls of Namur, is to the time of Hugh Capet and Charls of Lorrein; which was 540 years after the coming in of the ſons of Clodion. From which time downwards the ſucceſſion is confuſed and broken; and towards the later end diſcontinued for 140 years. Such as are left upon Record, I have drawn together (not without much trouble) in as good Order as I could; and here preſent them in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Earls of Namur.

1 Albert, the Co-temporary of Hugh Capet, ſpoken of before.

2 Godfrey, the ſon of Albert, and Father of Alice wife of Baldwin the 5th of Hainalt, and mother of Baldwin the 6th of Hainalt, and the 8th of Flanders.

3 Peter, the ſon or brother of Godfrey.

4 Henry the ſecond ſon of Balwin the 8th of Flanders, in right of N. his wife, the heir of Peter Emp. of Conſtantinople alſo on the death of Baldwin the 9th, his elder Brother.

1216 5 Peter II. ſon-in-Law of Henry Emp. of Conſtantinople, and Earl of Namur.

6, 7. Philip the younger ſon of Peter, and John the elder brother of Henry, both taking to themſelves the Title of Earl of Namur, the one at Conſtantinople, the other in the Netherlands, and both deceaſing without iſſue.

8 Philip II. brother of John and Henry, without iſſue alſo.

9 John II. ſurnam'd of Dampierre, the 3d. ſon of William of Dampierre, by Margaret Counteſſe of Flanders, daughter and heir of the Emperour Baldwin, ſucceeded by the gift of his Mother, chaleng-ing the diſpoſing of it, as next heir of Philip the 2. or in the right Paramont of the Earldom of Flanders, enjoyed upon a better title by

10 Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, and elder brother of John the 2d. in right of Iſabel his wife, daughter of Henry Earl of Luxembourg by the heir of Namur; but I neither find her name nor Parents

11 John III. ſon of Guy and Iſabel.

12 John IV. ſon of Guy by a former wife: the Brothers of John the 3d. by the whole bloud being abſent or unfriended, and ſo put beſide.

13 Guy II. the Brother of John the 4th. by the ſame Venter.

14 John V. ſon of Guy the 2d. who in the year 1307. married a Neece of Lewis the 9th. of France, by Robert Earl of Clermont a younger Son.

15 John VI. who in the year 1429 ſold this this estate to Duke Philip the Good, to be enjoyed by him on the death of Theodorus the next heir hereof, infirm, and (as it seems) without hope of Children. Luxenbourg.

16 Theodore or Theodorick, the last Earl of Namur, after whose death Duke Philip entred on this Earldom by the former contract, and as the next heir of the house of Flanders, continued ever since unto his Posterity.

The Armes hereof are, Or, a Lion sable, debruised with a Bend Gules.

6. LVXENBOVRG.

LUXENBOURG is bounded on the East, with the Mosette, and the land of Treves; on the West, with the Meuse or Maes, and a branch of the Forrest of Ardenne; on the North, with Luyckland, Namur, and a part of Hainalt; and on the South, with the Dutchie of Lorrein; So called from the Castle, near the Town of Luxembourg, selected by Sigifride the first Earl hereof for his seat and residence.

The whole divided into two parts; the Eastern part being called Fanenne, fruitfull of corn, and yeelding withall some wines, some mines, and many excellent quarries of goodly stone; the Western called the Ardenne, a remainder of that spacious Forrest, which sometimes overshadowed all this Country; barren of corn, but very plentifull of Venison, and of Fowl good store.

The people of this Country are not all of one language, those nearer Germany, as in Luxenbourg, Arlune, Rodemark, Theonville, and the rest on that side, speaking the Dutch; as those of Ivois, Mommedi, Morvill, and Damvilliers, with the rest bordering on France, do a corrupt or broken French. In which regard the pleadings held before the Council residing in Luxenbourg, are made in both languages; that so they may be understood by all that have businesse there. But the Nobility and Gentry (of which there is more in this Province than in any other of the seventeen) speak both Tongues perfectly. A breed of men full of virtue, curtesie and hospitality towards one another; and of great truth and faith to their Prince: but reckoned for the worst Landlords in all these countries; governing their Subjects and Tenants like the Pesants of France, contrary to the use and liberties of the rest of the Netherlands. Both sorts, as well the Nobility as the Commons, hate both Law and Lawyers; and for the most part end their controversies amongst themselves, without any processe.

The whole country containeth in compasse about 70 leagues, or 200 Italian miles; in which are comprehended 23 walled Towns, and 1168 Burroughs and Villages. The Principal of which are 1. Lucembourg, built in the place where antiently stood the Augusta Veromanduorum of Ptolomy; and took this new name quasi Lucis burgum, from the image of the Sun there worshiped; seated on the Alsinutius or Alze, which runneth through it; large, and of a strong situation, but not very well built, nor yet recovered of the spoils, which the long wars betwixt the French and the Spaniard brought upon it, before the treaty of Cambray. However it is the chief Town of the Province, hononred with the residence of the Councill hereof, and the Sepulchre of John K. of Bohemia, slain in the battel of Crecie against the English, Anno 1348. 2. Arlune, on the top of an high hill, so called quasi Ara lunæ, from an Altar consecrated to the Moon in the times of Paganism. 3. Theonville, on the Moselle, over which it hath a goodly bridge; a frontier Town near Metz, and the border of Lorrein; and for that cause made marvellous strong, but taken by the French, Anno 1558, and restored the next year by the peace of Cambray. 4. Bostonack, a fair Town, and very well traded, commonly called the Paris of Ardenne, in which part it standeth. 5. Mommedi, on an high hill, at the foot of which runneth the River Chiers. 6. Danvilliers, once a very strong place also; both taken and ransacked by the French, Anno 1552. 7. Morville upon the Chiers, the one half whereof belongeth to the Duke of Lorrein, the other to the King of Spain, as Duke of Luxenbourg, for which cause called La ville commune. 8. Rock di March, fortified with a strong Castle. 9. Ivoys, a place once of great importance, sacked by the French, Anno 1552. and restored by the treaty of Cambray, on condition it should never more be walled. 10. La Ferte on the Chiers, a Town of the same condition.

In the skirts of this Country towards France standeth the principality of Sedan, extended all along the banks the river Maes, from the borders of Lorrein on the South, to the great Forrest of Ardenne, and the Dukedom of Bovillon on the North. A small but very fair estate of fruitfull soil, and beautified with many rich Villages, and some towns of note, the principal whereof, 1. Jamais, upon the borders of Lorrein, by the Duke whereof it was taken, after a long season, from the Lady Charlotte, the last heir general of the house of Mark, Anno 1585, and laid unto that Dukedome as a part thereof. A place of great importance, and therefore much contended for by each Pretender. 2. Donchiery, a strong town of war, bordering on Torasobe in Picardy, to which by some it is ascribed. 3. Sedan, in Latin called Sedunum ad Mosam, because situate on the banks of the Maes or Mosa, the usual residence of the Prince; a fine neat Town, well fortified, and planted with 80 brasse peeces of Ordnance; honoured also with a seat of learning, which being of a middle nature betwixt a Grammar School, and an University; is in the Criticism of these times called a Schola illustris, to which men may send their children to learn good letters, though they can take in them no Degrees, that being a privilege reserved only to the Universities. So that these Schools may be somewhat like our Collegiate Churches of Westminster, Wincheſter, and Eaton; but that the younger Students in these last named, are more restrained to Rhetorick and Grammar, than in the other; though these more liberally indowed for the incouragement and reward of learning, than all the Scholæ illustres of either Germany. 4. Mouson, A Town of great strength and consequence on the River Maes; upon some jealousies of State, garrisoned by the French, as also is Sedan it self, and most of the other good Towns belonging unto his Principality;

Bouillon cipality; but so that the revenues of it, execution of Justice, and all other rights of Soveraignty are still enjoyed, as formerly, by the Lords thereof.

This Estate antiently was a part of the Dukedome of Bouillon; from which dismembred for the portion of some younger Prince, at such time as Godfrey Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon succeeded in the Dukedome of Lorrein, after Charles and Otho the first Dukes; or else excepted and reserved by Godfrey (surnamed) of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrein, and King of Hierusalem, when he sold the Dukedom of Bouillon to the Bishop of Liege. By many mean conveyances and alterations of the Owners, it came at last to the house of Arimberg, a familie of great wealth and power in Westphalen (a Province of Germany not far off) by the heir generall of which house it was brought in marriage to Engelbert Earl of Mark, about the year 1330. from whom descended Robert Earl of Mark, and Soveraign of Sedan, with the Towns annexed, who succeeding his Mother in the estates of Sanct and Florenge, Feifs holden of the Dukedome of Bouillon, and eagerly affecting to unite the estates together (as they had been antiently) purchased the Town and Title of Duke of Bouillon, of Eberhard Earl of Mark, his Brother, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege, and consequently Duke of Bouillon also. Proud of his honour, and being somewhat too stiff in maintaining the rights of his new Dukedom, against a sentence passed in the Imperial Chamber, in a sute there depending betwixt two of his Vassals, he took up arms against the Empire, with far more courage than discretion. For being in the course of that war worsted by Charles the fifth (for whom he was too weak an enemy) the Town of Bouillon being taken by the conquering Emperour, was afterwards restored to the Bishops; and nothing but the Title of Dukes of Bouillon left to the Princes of Sedan. And that he might be able to hold Sedan, this Robert was fain to return again to the protection of the French (as his Ancestors, from the time of Charles the 8th. had done before) and died Anno 1535. leaving his titles and estate unto Robert his son, one of the Marshals of France; whose grandson, called also Robert, being a dear friend and companion of Henry of Bourbon K. of Navarre, and afterwards of France also, dying without issue at Geneva, Anno 1588, committed to him the disposal of his estates, and of the Lady Charlotte his only Sister. And he so well discharged his trust, that (having setled his own affairs) he gave the Lady in marriage to Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turene in France (one who had done him very good service in the course of his long war against the Leaguers) and with her the possession of Sedan, and title of Bouillon; whose posterity do still enjoy it. The whole succession of these Princes we shall find in Bouillon, of which more anon.

But to return again to the Dutchie of Luxembourg, it was at first a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, dismembred from it in the time of the Emperour Otho the first, by Sigifride the son of Ricuinus Prince thereof; who in the division of that estate amongst his Brethren, had this for his portion, with the title of Earl. Of his Successors there is little to be found upon good record, in a constant Order of Succession, until the time of Henry the 1. father of Henry the 7th. Emperour of Germany, and of a Royal Progeny of Kings and Princes; two of the which are most considerable, though all of them of eminent quality in their several times, viz. 1. Henry elected and crowned Emperour, by the name of Henry the 7th. said to be poisoned by a Frier in the Holy Chalice, to prevent some designs he had against the Pope, in asserting the Imperial power in Italie. 2. John the son of this Henry chosen King of Bohemia, in regard of his marriage with Elizabeth the daughter of Wenceslaus, King thereof; the possession of which Realm he left unto his posterity, advanced unto a Dukedom by Charles the 4th. the eldest son of this John, in the person of Wenceslaus his younger brother. What else concerns it, we shall find in this following Catalogue of

1 Sigifride, the sone of Ricuine, Prince of Ardenne; the first Earl of Luxembourg.

2 Gilbert, the Father of Ogine wife of Baldwin the 4th. of Flanders; but whose son I find not.

3 Godfrey, Earl of Namur, was also Earl of Luxembourg by the right of marriage. Father of Agnes, the wife of Simon 2d. Duke of Lorrein.

4 Conrade, perhaps the Son of Godfrey by the daughter of Luxembourg, Father of Catherine, wife of Matthew the 2d. Duke of Lorrein.

5 Henry Earl of Luxembourg, slain in the quarrel of Rainold Earl of Gueldres, contending with John Duke of Brabant for the Dutchie of Limbourg.

6 Henry II. son of Henry the 1st. by means of his brother Baldwin Elector of Triers, was chosen Emperour of the Germans, the 7th. of that name, Anno 1308. first crowned at Aken, and afterwards at Rome; one of the last Emperours that medled in the affairs of Italy.

1313 7 John, son of Henry II. Earl of Luxembourg, married Elizabeth daughter of Wenceslaus the elder, King of Bohemia; of which he was upon that marriage elected and crowned King, An. 1311. in the life of his father; slain by the English in the battel of Crecie, Anno. 1346.

1346 8 Wenceslaus, the younger son of John, created Duke of Luxembourg by his elder brother Charles the 4th. Emperour, and King of Bohemia.

1383 9 Wenceslaus II. eldest son of the said Charles the 4th. Emperour, and King of Bohemia also, succeeded his Uncle in the Dukedom.

1419 10 Sigismund, brother of Wenceslaus, succeeded Wenceslaus in all his estates; to which he added the Crown of Hungary, by the marriage of Mary daughter of King Lewis the first.

11 Elizabeth, daughter of John Duke of Garlitz, (a Town of Lusatia) the brother of Sigismund, by the gift of Sigismund her Uncle, being then alive; the better to fit her for the bed of

An

Anthony of Bourgogn Duke of Brabant; after whose decease she married John the 3d. Earl of Hainalt, Holland, &c. But having no issue by either of them, she sold her interest in this Dukedom to Duke Philip the Good. Limbourg

12 Philip the Good, succeeded on the sale aforesaid, made by the said Elizabeth, in pursuance of the contract and agreement made at her first martiage, for setling this estate in the house of Burgundy. Of whom, and his Successors in these Belgick Provinces, we shall speak hereafter.

The Arms are B. fix Barrulets A, supporting a Lion G, crowned and armed Or.

7 LIMBOVRG.

THe greatest of the Estates of Belgium, for extent of territory, at the time of their incorporating in the house of Burgundie, was that of Brabant; comprehending 5 of the 19 Provinces, that is to say, the Dukedom of Limbourg, and Brabant, the Marquisate of the holy Empire, and the Seigneury of Machlyn, with the Soveraignty of Leige or Luick-land.

7. LIMBOURG, hath on the East, the Dukedom of Gulick in High Germany; on the West, the Bishoprick of Leige; on the North, Brabant; and on the South, the Dukedom of Luxembourg. The Soil fruitfull of all necessary commodities, excepting wines, the want whereof is recompensed with most excellent wheat, great store of fewell, and plenty of the best Iron mines in all these countries: all which commodities it hath of so great excellency in their several kinds, that it is said of them proverbially, that their Bread is better than bread, their Fire hotter than fire, & their Iron harder than iron. It is also well stored with medicinable simples, and enriched with a mine of Copperas, (by Plinie called Lapis ærosus lib. 34. c. 10.) which being incorporated with brasse makes Latin, and increaseth the brasse by one third part. Lapis ærosus multum æris habet, & ex eo fuso fit æs, as that Author hath it.

It is one of the least of the Belgick Provinces, containing in it but 125 Villages, and no more than five walled Towns or Cities, viz. 1. Limbourg, which gives name to the whole estate, pleasantly seated on a hill amongst shady woods, under which runneth the river VVesdo; which having watred the whole Country emptieth it self into the Maes; well built, and fortified with a very strong Castle, mounted upon a steep Precipice, of no easie accesse. 2. Walkenbourg, called by the French Fauquemont, a reasonable fair Town, with a large territory, two Dutch miles from Maestricht; conquered from Reynold Lord hereof by John the 3d. Duke of Brabant. 3. Dalem, a little Town with a Castle, the territory thereof extending beyond the Maes; conquered by Henry Duke of Brabant, of that name the second. 4. Rhode le Duck, a little old Town, with as old a Castle, half a league from VValkenbourg. 5. Carpen, situate between Gulick and Colen, beautified with a Collegiate Church, and a strong Castle, in which there is a Governour with a good Garrison for defence of the place. Each of these Towns hath jurisdiction on the parts adjoyning; but with appeal unto the Chancery at Brabant.

The antient Inhabitants of this tract, and the Bishoprick of Leige adjoyning, were the Eburones. When it was first made an Earldom, I am yet to seek. Most probable it is, that lying within the Verge of the great Forrest of Ardenne, it was at first a member of that Earldom also; dismembred from it for the portion of some younger Son, as Luxembourg and Namur were, or seized on by some strange Pretender (as Gulick was) when Godfrey and Baldwin Dukes of Lorrein, and the direct heirs of the house of Ardenne, were absent in the wars of the Holy Land. But whensoever, and by whomsoever it was made an Earldom, certain it is, that of an Earldom it was made a Dukedom by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1172. Henry one of the Dukes hereof, married his daughter Margaret to Godfrey the 3d. Duke of Brabant, which gave that house some colour to pretend unto it: backed with a better title on the death of another Henry, the last Duke of Limbourg, whose next heir Adolph, sold it to John Duke of Brabant, pretending to it in the right of the former marriage, Anno 1293. But Reynold Earl of Gueldres, thinking himself to have a better title than Adolph, in right of Ermingrade his wife, the daughter of Herman a late Duke hereof; put in his plea, and challenged it by force of Arms: but being vanquished and taken prisoner by the said Duke John, in the battel of VVorancan, was fain for his release, to release all his claim and title to the Dukedom of Limbourg; after that quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Brabant, till they fell both together to the house of Burgundie.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Lion Barrie of ten pieces, Or, and Gules.

8. LVICK-LAND.
OR
The Bishoprick of LEIGE.

VVEstward of Limbourg, but a far mightier estate than it, lieth LUICK-LAND, as the Dutch, or the Bishoprick of LEIGE, (Leodiensis) as the Latin and French writers call it: antiently under the protection of the Dukes of Brabant, and afterwards of the Princes of the house of Burgundie, as Lords of that country. By some accompted of, and described as a part of Germany; but for the reasons before mentioned I shall place it here: environed on all sides with the Belgick Provinces, that is to say, with the Dukedome of Limbourg, and the Earldome of Namur on the East; with Brabant on the North and West; on the South, with Luxembourg.

The Air hereof is very wholsome, and the Earth as fruitfull, abounding with all kind of grain and fruits, some store of Wine; and as for flesh, fish, fowl, and venison, it hath very great plenty, and that Leige. that too of an excellnt taſt: leſſe fertile in ſuch parts hereof as lye towards Luxembourg, in which it is more ſwelled with Hills, and over-ſpread with ſhady Woods, remainders of the great Foreſt of Ardenne, within which it ſtood. But the chief riches of this Countrey is under ground, conſiſting in mines of Lead, and Iron, and ſome few of Gold; quarries of Alabaſter, mingled with all ſorts of Marble; rich veins of Brimſtone, and unexhauſtible pits of Coal; which laſt it hath in ſuch abundance, that there is digged within the compaſſe of one league of the City of Leige, not only ſufficient for that great City; but ſo much overplus as being ſold at mean prices about the countrey, amounts unto 100000 ducats of yearly value. The Coal much ſweeter than elſewhere, and of a nature contrary to all other Coal, in that it is kindled with water, and quenched with oyl; and the ſtrong fervour of it taken off, by caſting ſalt on it.

The whole Countrey containeth 24 walled Towns, and 1800. Villages, the principal of which are 1 Leige or Luick, (in Latine Leodium) ſituate in a pleaſant valley environed with hils, the Meuſe entring it in two branches, accompanied with four leſſer Riverets, which make in it many delightfull Ilands. The compaſſe of it about four miles, the ordinary buildings very fair, all built of ſtone; the Biſhops Palace a magnificent and ſumptuous piece: the Churches in number forty, of which eight are Collegiate, 32 Parochiall; all of them for their riches and beauty excelling all in any City of France or Germanie. Beſides theſe, there are ſo many Convents, Monaſteries, and religious houſes about the Town, that taking all together they amount to an hundred: all of them of ſuch fair revenues, ſo well endowed, and the Religious perſons there of ſo great authority, that it is called the Paradiſe of Prieſts, and that deſervedly. It is alſo an Univerſity of good antiquity, wherein were Students at one time, 9. Kings Sons, 24. Dukes Sons, 29. Earls Sons, beſides Barons and Gentlemen; the greateſt part of which were Canons of the Church of S. Lambert, which is the Cathedrall of the City. Yet notwithſtanding it hath taſted of the malice of fortune, as well as others, being firſt deſtroyed by the Danes, then by the Normans, twice taken, and once deſtroyed by Charles of Burgundie, Anno 1468. Subject it is unto the Biſhop as Lord temporall of it; from whom (being long ſince made an Imperiall City) there lieth an Appeal to the Chamber of Spires. 2. Dinand upon the Meuſe, near Namur, of very great traffick till deſtroyed by Charles of Burgundie, in the ſame year with Leige: hardly recovered of which wounds, it was again ſacked by K. Henry the ſecond of France, Anno 1854. 3. Muſeck, upon the Meuſe or Maes alſo, a league from whence is the fair Nunnery of Thuren, of the ſame nature with that of Mentz, and others ſpoken of before: the like to which there is near 4. Bilſen, another Town of this Biſhoprick; the Abbeſſes of each having the privilege of coyning both gold and ſilver. 5. Lootz, by the Dutch called Borelom, in the County of Dioſtein; made a County in the time of Charles the Great, the title and poſſeſſion of Ogier the Dane, ſo famous in the Hiſtory of Gallen of France, and others of the old Romances. 6. Franchimont, which gives the title of a Marqueſſe to the Biſhop of Leige. 7. Centron or S. Truden, a fair Town, ſo called of the Abbie dedicated to that Saint. 8. Huy or Hoey, ſo called of a violent River, which there runs into the Meuſe. 9. Tungres, the chief City of the Tongri, which together with the Eburones were) once the Inhabitants of this tract; in which are ſtill the ruines of a Temple conſecrated to Hercules. Antiently an Epiſcopall See, tranſlated hence to Maeſtricht, and at laſt to Leige: and in thoſe times ſo great, and of ſuch renown, that Attila the Hun deſtroyed it in 100 Churches; now but a very ſmall Town, and not worth the mentioning but for theſe antiquities. Eight leagues from hence, amongſt the ſhady thickets of the Foreſt of Ardenne, is that ſo celebrated 10 Village, and thoſe famous hot Baths, frequented from all the places of Europe, called the Spa: not ſo pleaſant, as wholſome; not ſo wholſome, as famous. Yet are they good for ſundry diſeaſes, as the Tertian Ague, and Dropſie, the Stone, the exulceration of the Lungs, the Sciatique, &c. They are of moſt virtue in July, becauſe they are then hotteſt; and to ſuch as taſt them, they reliſh much of Iron, from ſome Iron mines, it ſeemeth, through which the waters run, which feed them. Theſe Baths of great fame in the time of Plinie, who doth thus deſcribe them. Tungri Civitas fontem habet inſignem, plurimis bullis ſtillantem, ferruginei ſaporis, quod ipſum non niſi in fine potus intelligitur. Purgat hic corpora, febres tertianas diſcutit, calculorumq; vitia. So he, lib. 31. cap. 2. agreeably to the nature of them at this preſent time.

This Country (not taking the Dukedom of Bouillon, though now reckoned as a part thereof, into this accompt) followed the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Belgica, till the conqueſt of it by the French, by whom it was made a part of the Kingdom of Lorrein; in the diviſion of which Kingdom between the Kings of France and Germany, it fell unto the ſhare of the Kings of France, as lying almoſt wholly on the Weſt or French ſide of the River Maes, which parted their poſſeſſions in that broken Kingdome. VVon from Lotharius the French K. (the laſt but one of the Caroline Race) by Otho the 2d, it was by him made part of the Dukedome of Lorrein then by him erected, and continued as a part thereof, till ſold by Godfrie of Bouillon Duke of Lorrein to the Biſhops of Leige, (of which more anon) ſince which time it hath been the Patrimony of thoſe wealthy Prelates. As for the Biſhoprick of Leige, it was founded at Tungres, as before was ſaid; after the ſackage of which City by Attila, removed Anno 498. by S. Servatius unto Maeſtricht. But the people of Maeſtricht having Martyred S. Lambert, their Biſhop, Anno 710. by Hubert his deſigned Succeſſor, with the leave of Pope Conſtantine, it was tranſlated to this place, and a Cathedrall Church here founded by the name of S. Lambert. His Succeſſors did ſo well husband their advantages, that they did not only buy the Dukedome of Bouillon, but the City and territory of Leige, ſold unto Speutus and Obertus ſucceſſively Biſhops of it, by Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrein, at his departure hence to the Holy-land: not much increaſed ſince that in lands, though he be in titles, the Biſhop being ſtiled a Prince of the Empire, Duke of Bouillon, Marqueſſe of Franchimont, Earl of Lootz and Hasbain. Yet are not his ordinary revenues above 30000 ducats yearly, his subjects living very well under him, at easie rents, and growing for the most part unto good estates: An argument whereof may be, that when the Leigeois had rebelled against Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundie, (under whose Clientele they were, as Duke of Brabant) they bought their peace of him at the price of 600000 Florens of the Rhene, to be paid in six years. After which again rebelling against Charles the warlike, (as they have been observed to be the most rebellious City in Europe, excepting Gaunt, they were able to wage 30000 men, but not being able to withstand the forces of their Lord Protector, they fell into that miserable destruction spoken of before. Since that time they have lived with more moderation under the protection of the Princes of the house of Austria: but counted neutral in the quarrels betwixt the King of Spain, and the States confederate, as formerly between the Spaniard, and the French; though many times they suffer in the contestations. Bouillon.

Southward hereof, betwixt it and Luxembourg, lieth the Dukedom of Bouillon, subject unto the Bishops of Leige; but a State distinct, and holden by a different title. It taketh up a great part of that Country, which more particularly and specially is called the Forrest of Ardenne, with the woods whereof in many places overshadowed; but not unfurnished of fair Towns, and wealthy Villages. The principal of which 1. Loni, and 2. Muson Court, destroyed by Charles the fifth in his war against Robert Earl of Mark, and Duke of Bouillon; but on the peace ensuing repaired again. 3. Sanst, and 4. Floringe, Feifs, as before is said, of the Dukedom of Bouillon, but possessed by the Soveraigns of Sedan, since the time that Robert Earl of Mark, and Soveraign of Sedan, had them in marriage with Joan his wife, the right heir thereof, from whom came Robert Earl of Mark, the first Duke of Bouillon of that family. The last a pretty town till destroyed by the French, in the wars betwixt Henry and Philip the seconds, Kings of France and Spain, since passing in accompt as a principal Village. 5. Hierk, in the Forrest of Ardenne, the cause of the great war betwixt Charls the fifth, and Robert Duke of Bouillon, spoken of before; the Emperour having passed sentence in behalf of the Embries, who laid claim unto it, and Robert favouring the pretensions of the house of Chinay. 6. Bouillon, built on the side of a Hill near the River Senoy, a fair large Citie, and beautified with a goodly Castle on the top of the said Hill, and commanding over a large and goodly Territory, so strong, as well by Art as Nature, that, before the use of great Ordnance, it was held impregnable. Much spoiled in the war betwixt Charls the fifth, and Robert of Mark, and tossed from on Master to another in a little time: For being taken from Earl Robert by the power of Charles, it was from him gotten by the French, Anno 1552. and finally restored to the Bishop of Leige by the treaty of Cambray, Anno 1559. but without prejudice to the claim and title of the Prince of Sedan: So that there are no fewer than three distinct families, which at this time enjoy the title of Dukes of Bouillon, that is to say, the Bishops of Leige, who hath precedency of title, and the possession of the City; the house of de la Tour, who hold Floringe, Sanst, and some other peeces; and the heirs males of the Collateral line of the house of Mark, who hold Lumainge, Rochfort, and some other places; but of lesse importance.

This Dukedom once a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, in the division of that estate betwixt the Children of Ricuini, Prince or Earl thereof, fell to the share of Godfrey his eldest Son, (Sedant, with its appurtenances then belonging to it) with the title of Earl of Ardenne, and Bouillon. By Godfrey his son, united to the Dukedom of Lorein, succeeding into that estate after Charles and Otho; and by another Godfrey the first Duke of Lorrein dismembred from it, and given in Dower with his Sister Ida, at her marriage with Eustace Earl of Boulogne in Picardy. Of these was born the famous Godfrey, commonly called Godfrey of Bouillon, either because he was here educated, or in regard he was Duke hereof, before he did attain to the Dukedome of Lorrein; who to provide himself of necessaries for the wars of the Holy-land (so fortunately conveyed and conducted by him) sold first this Dukedome unto Obert, as afterwards the whole County of Luick-land to Speutus Bishops of Leige successively, and their successors for ever; which though accounted by most writers for a part of Luick-land, or of the Bishoprick of Leige, call it which you will, was notwithstanding held by those great Prelates as a State distinct, and governed under them by the Estates of the Country, from whose sentence there lay no Appeal: The maintenance of which Privileges, on an Appeal made by the Embries unto Charles the fift, cost Robert Earl of Mark so dear, who had not long before purchased this Estate of his Brother Eberhard, Bishop and Cardinal of Leige, as was said before. The rest of the story we have had already in our description of Sedan; we will now look upon the Princes which have born these titles.

The Dukes of Bouillon of the house of Ardenne.

1 Godfrey, the eldest son of Ricuine, Prince or Earl of Ardenne, the first Earl of Bouillon, and Husband of Matilda, a daughter of the Emperor Otho the 2d.

2 Godfrey, II. son of Godfrey the first, who in the year 1004. by adoption of Duke Otho his Cousin, and the power of Henry the 2d. Emperour, succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorrein.

1019 3 Gozelo, brother of Godfrey the 2d. Duke of Lorrein and Bouillon.

1044 4 Godfrey III. son of Gozelo.

5 Eustace, Earl of Boullogne, and Ida his wife, daughter of Godfrey the 3d. by whom endowed at her marriage with the Dukedom of Bouillon.

6 Godfrey IV. surnamed of Bouillon, son of Eustace & Ida, on the death of his Uncle Godfrey, succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorrein, An. 1078. and died King of Hierusalem. Going unto the wars of the Holy Land, he sold this Dukedom to Obert, Bishop of Leige, and his Successors, Anno 1509. who did accordingly enjoy it till the year 1096. or thereabouts; when sold by Eberhard of Mark to his brother Robert of whose descent & Successors, you may take

The Soveraigns of Sedan and Dukes of Bouillon of the House of Mark.

1 Engelbert the 9th Earl of Mark in Germany by marrying with the daughter and heir of Aremberg, added Sedan, Jamais, &c. to the house of Mark.
2 Everhard, second Son of Engelbert by the Heir of Aremberg, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
3 John, Son of Everhard, Earl of Mark, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
4 Everhard II. Brother of John, Earl of Mark, &c.
5 John II. Earl of Mark, Son of Everhard the 2d.
6 Robert of Mark, the second Son of John the 2d. Lord of Sedan, his elder Brother Everhard succeeding in the estates of Aremberg, he added Florenge and Sanfi, Towns of the Dukedome of Bouillon to his other pieces.
7 Robert II. Son of Robert the first, Soveraign of Sedan, and Duke of Bouillon, which Dukedome he purchased of Everhard his Brother, Bishop and Cardinall of Leige.
1535 8 Robert III. Son of Robert the second, one of the Marshals of France, Soveraign of Sedan and Tuslarie Duke of Bouillon.
1556 10 Henry-Robert, Son of Robert the 3d.
11 Robert-William Son of Henry-Robert, zealous in the reformed Religion, and a great follower of Henry of Vendosm, K. of Navarre, to whom dying at Geneva, Anno 1588. he bequeathed the care of his estates.
12 Charlotte the Sister of Robert-William, married by Henry of Navarre (then King of the French) to Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turenne.
13 Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turenne in France, descended from the Heirs Generall of Eustace Earl of Boulogne and Duke of Bouillon, by marriage of the Lady Charlotte, and the gift of Henry the fourth of France, succeeded in the Soveraignty of Sedan and title of Bouillon; A Protestant and the founder of the Schola Illustris in Sedan.

De la Tour Son of Henry by one of the Daughters of William, Prince of Orange, succeeded his Father, in his Estates, but not in his Religion also, which to ingratiate himself with the French King he exchanged for Papistrie, made thereupon one of the Marshalls of France, and now living, Anno 1648.

9. BRABANT. 10. The MARQUISATE, And 11. MACHLYN.

These I have joined together, though distinct Estates, because they have a long time followed the same fortune, and that the two last do no otherwise differ from the first, then the parts from the whole: the Marquisate, and Machlyn, being now reckoned as parts of Brabant, and included in it.

9. BRABANT is bounded on the East, with Luickland, or the Bishoprick of Leige; on the West, with the River Scheld, and a part of Flanders; on the North, with the Maes, which severeth it from Holland, and Guelderland; and on the South, with Hainalt, Namur, and a part of Luickland. So called quasi Beuckland, that is to say, a barren Land, as at first it was; or from the old Bratispantium, which Cæsar placeth in this tract, but from whether of the two is not yet determined.

The Air hereof is generally very wholsome, and good, and the Soil naturally fruitfull, excepting Kempenland, (being the parts thereof lying towards the North) which being barren of it self, is made indifferently fertile by keeping Cattell, Soiling the ground, and other arts of good Husbandry. The people live in most freedome, and are the best privileged of any in Belgium. A thing for which they are more beholding to the Princes goodnesse, than their own great wits; being noted to be none of the wisest, especially as they grow in age, when most men learn wisdome. Brabanti quo magis senescunt, eo magis stulteseunt, as Erasmus telleth us.

The length hereof, from S. Gertrudenberg to Genblaurs, North and South, is 22 Dutch or German miles; from Helmont to Berghen ap Some, East and West, 20 of the same miles; the whole compasse 80. Within which circuit are contained 26 walled Towns; and Villages with Parish Churches 718. of which the odde 18 called Franks, or Market-towns, enjoy the privileges of walled Towns, or Cities, though unwalled themselves.

Places of most importance in it, are 1. Shertogen Bosch, or the Bosch, as the Dutch; Bois le Duc, or Boldue, as the French; and Silva Ducis, or Boscum Ducis, as the Latines call it: each name derived according to their severall Languages, from a pleasant wood belonging to the Dukes of Brabant, where the Town now stands, situate on a little River called Deese, some two leagues from the Maes, neer the borders of Guelderland: a large and well built Town, very strongly fortified, and of great trade for Clothing, here being made yearly, in the time of Lewis Guicciardine, 20000 Clothes, worth 200000 Crowns to the Clothier or Draper; Made an Episcopall See Anno 1559. the Cathedrall, which is fixed in the Church of Saint John, being fair and large; and beautified with one of the goodliest Dials in the Christian world. This is the principall Town of Brabant (properly and distinctly so called) comprehending under it the four Countries of Kempenland, Maesland, Peeland, and Osterwick; and was taken by the Confederate Estates from the King of Spain, after a long and chargeable siege, Anno 1628. 2.

Tilmton,

Tilmont, on the little River Geet, once chief of Brabant, but long ſince decayed. 3. Aſchot on the little River Dennere, which gives the title of Duke to them of the Noble houſe of Croy, and deſcended from the Kings of Hungary, (of which we ſpake before at large when we were in Picardy) the Dukes hereof (advanced unto that honour by Charles the fift) being men of greateſt Religion and Authority of any in Belgium. 4. Bergen ap Zome, ſo called from the River Zome, upon which it is ſituate, about half a league from the influx of it into the Scheld, and not far from the Sea, which gives it a reaſonable good Haven. A Town of great ſtrength by nature, but more ſtrongly fortified: Famous for being made a Marquiſate by Charles the Fift, Anno 1553. more for the notable reſiſtance which it made to the Marquis Spinola, Anno 1622. 5. Breda, upon the River Merck; a Town pleaſantly ſeated, well fortified, and of great Revenue; having under it the Town and Territory of Steenberg, the Franchiſe of Roſindale, and the Seigneury of Oſterhout, the reſidence, Barony, and chief Town of the Princes of Orange, from whom being taken by the Spaniard in the beginning of thoſe wars, it was again recovered by ſome venturous Gentlemen, who hiding themſelves in a Boat covered over with Turf, were conveyed into the Caſtle, which they eaſily maſtered, and made the Prince Lord of it again. After re-taken by the Spaniard, Anno 1625. but now in the poſſeſſion of its naturall owners: to whom it came by the right of the houſe of Naſſaw, by the marriage of Engelbert the 7th Earl of that houſe, with Mary, Daughter and Heir of Philip the laſt Lord hereof, about the year 1400. 6. Dieſt on the River Dennere, a good Town, and inveſted with a goodly Territory, belonging to the Prince of Orrange, whoſe anceſtors of the Houſe of Naſſaw had it in a exchange for ſome other Lands of the Duke of Cleve; and in right hereof is Burgrave of the City of Antwerp. 7. Grinbergen, an antient Barony, with a large juriſdiction, deſcendible on the youngeſt ſon only, after the manner of Burg Engliſh, as our Lawyers call it. 8. Gertrudenburg, ſtanding on the Douge, not far from the influx of it into the Maes, the furtheſt Town in the North of Brabant, where it joyns to Holland: which makes it a matter of diſpute betwixt thoſe Provinces, to which of them it doth belong. A Town of great trade for fiſhing, plenty of Salmons, & Sturgeon being taken here; but of Shads eſpecially; whereof 18000 are ſometimes caught in a day, ſalted, and ſent abroad into forreign parts: It acknowledgeth the Prince of Orange for the Lord thereof, as doth alſo 9. Grave, a good Town upon the Maes, bought by theſe Princes of the King of Spain, with conſent of the States; without whoſe approbation, no part of the Domain is to be diſmembred. 10. Maeſtreicht (in Latine Trajectum ad Moſam) ſo called of a ferry over the Maes in former times; ſupplied now with a goodly Stone bridge in the place therof. A fair and goodly town, beautified with two Collegiate Churches, in one of which the Dukes of Brabant were alwaies Canons, ſubject in part to the Biſhop of Leige, and partly to the Duke of Brabant: the Children are ſubject to that Prince to whom the Mother was ſubject at the time of the Birth, without relation to the Father; according to that Maxim of the Civill Law, Partus ſequitur ventrem: And if a Stranger come to live there, he muſt declare to which of the two he will be ſubject, yet is the Duke of Brabant the chief Soveraign of it, he only having the power of Coynage, and of granting pardon to Offenders: and as a Town of this Dukedom, beſieged and taken by the confederate States, Anno, 1632.

Here is alſo within the limits of this Dukedome, the town and Signeurie of Raveſtein, ſituate on the banks of the Maes, held by the Dukes of Cleve, of the Duke of Brabant; but no otherwiſe ſubject: and on the ſame River, the Town and Country of Horn, a Fief Imperiall, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a goodly Territory; in which is Wiert, the reſidence of the Earls Horn deſcended of the antient houſe of Montmorency in France.

The Marquiſate.

2. THE MARQUISATE OF THE EMPIRE, ſo called, becauſe the fartheſt bounds and Marches of the German Empire, frontiering on Flanders, which apperrained unto the Soveraignty of the Crown of France; comprehendeth four of the beſt Towns in Brabant, with very large and ſpacious Territories adjoining to them, viz. 1. Lovain, on the River Dyle, about four Engliſh miles in compaſs; but in that compaſs much of the ground is taken up with Vineyards, Gardens, Meadows, and pleaſant Fields; which make the ſituation far more delightfull, than if all built, and peopled. It was the Mother Town of Brabant, and ſometimes gave the Title of an Earl to the Dukes hereof: afterwards made an Univerſity by Duke John the 4th. Anno 1426, wherin are contained about 20 Colleges, ſuch as they be; much privileged, and inriched with penſions for publick Readers, by King Philip the 2d. 2. Bruſſells, (Bruxella) the ſeat of the antient Dukes of Brabant, and of the Dukes of Burgundie alſo, after they came to be Lords of thoſe Countries; ſeated upon the Sinne, and other ſweet Springs and Riverets, which make it one of the ſweeteſt ſituations in all Europe: having withall, a goodly chanell made by Art from Bruſſells, to the River Dele, and from thence to the Scheld: the charge whereof amounted unto 500000 Crowns. It is of the ſame compaſſe with Lovain, the buildings ſumptuous, and the Town very rich: not only in regard that it is the ordinary ſeat of the Prince, or his Regent, and of the Chancery for all Brabant, and the Dutchy of Limbourg; but in regard of the rich Manufactures of Armour and Cloath of Arras, of Silk, Gold and Silver, which are there induſtriouſly purſued. 3. Nivello, on the borders of Hainalt, in a very rich and fruitfull ſoil, remarkable for the abundance of fine Linnen, which is therein made; but moſt of all for a very rich Nunnery (or rather a Nurſery) of Noble Ladies; of the ſame nature with thoſe of Mentz, and others before deſcribed. 4. Antwerp, ſituate on a goodly plain on the River Scheld, above 17 leagues from the Sea, but furniſhed with eight Chanels cut out of the River for the tranſport of Commodities; one of the which is capable of 100 great Ships. The private buildings very handſome, but the publick ſumptuous; the chief wherof were reckoned the Church of Noſtre Dame, the Bourſe, the Town-houſe, and the houſe of the Eaſterlings, or Eaſtern Merchants; well peopled, and of ſo great Trade in former times, that it was held to be the richeſt Empory of the Chriſtian world; the Commodities here bought and ſold,

Machlyn amounting to more in one moneth, than that of Venice in two years. The causes of which sudden growth, and increase of Trading, are said to be these, 1. The two Maris holden here every year, either of them during six weeks, in which time no mans person could be arrested, or his goods distrained. 2. The King of Portugal having in the year 1503. diverted the course of Merchandise from Alexandria and Venice, to the City of Lisbon; kept here his Factories, and sent hither his Spices, and other Indian commodities: for which cause the Merchants, in the year 1516. forsook Bruges in Flanders, and setled here. And 3. many of the Nobility and Gentry, during the long and bloody wars betwixt France and Spain, forsook their Country houses, and repaired hither; by means whereof Antwerp, in a very little time, grew bigger by 3000 houses than it had been formerly. But as the growth hereof was sudden, so the fall sensible; occasioned through the yoking of it with a Citadel by the D. of Alva, which made Merchants afraid to resort any longer thither, as a place of little freedom, & less security; but chiefly by blocking up the Haven, and intercepting the trade at Sea, by the more powerfull Hollanders, which hath removed this great traffick to Amstedam, and other towns of their Country. So that now the chief support of it is the reputation which it hath of being an Imperial City, the place of receipt for the Kings Revenues, and a Bishops See founded here in the year 1559, which draweth hither some resort of Lawyers and Church-men.

3. The Signeurie of MACHLYN, consisteth only of that City, and a small Territorie of 9 Villages adjoyning to it. The City seated on both sides of the River Dele, which ebbeth and floweth to the Town, and a league above it: and running through the very midst, maketh in it a number of small Islands, to the great ornament and commoditie of it. A goodly Town, containing seven Parish Churches, besides the Cathedral, being the See of an Archbishop, founded here in the year 1559. strong, in regard it may be easily drowned on all sides; and of great wealth by reason of the many manufactures of linnen, great Artillery of Brasse and Iron, Bels, painted works, and others of like use and ornament. And being situate in a manner in the Center of Brabant, distant 4 Leagues from Antwerp, Lovain, and Bruxels, was made by Charles the Warlike (who loved the place) the ordinary seat of the great Council of State, to which appeals are made from the other Provinces. But yet more beautifull in former times than it is at the present; the City being much defaced by firing 200 barrels of powder, Anno 1546. and by the sackage of the Spaniard, by whom it was taken by force, Anno 1572. Most memorable at this time for a famous Nunnerie, like to that of Nivelle, wherein are sometimes 1600 Nuns; who when they please may leave their Cloister, and be married. A Town though in Brabant, yet not of it, but a State distinct: for which cause many women at the time of their child-birth, use to lay down their bellies in some Village of Brabant, that their children may be capable of the priviledges and immunities of that Country. The principal of the Villages is named Leest, or Heyst, pleasantly seated on an Hill, the residue of the Burroughs lying at the foot thereof. Both Town and Villages the Patrimony heretofore of the noble family of the Bertholds: which failing in the person of Gualter, slain in the battel of Worançan, by John, Duke of Brabant, it fell the one half to the Bishop of Leige, who sold his moiety to John the second Duke of Brabant; the other, to the Earl of Gueldres, who in the year 1333. sold his part unto Lewis of Malain, E. of Flanders. But he sold nothing but the title, John the third Duke of Brabant having seized upon it, and added it to his estate: the occasion of some quarrel between those Princes, composed by the marriage of that Lewis, with the heir of Brabant.

But to return again unto Brabant it self, the antient Inhabitants hereof were the Advatici, and some part of the Tungri; accompted by the Romans a part of the Province of Germania secunda; and by the French, a Province of the Kingdom of East-France, or Austrasia; the Southern parts thereof towards Hainault, under the governance and command of the Earls of Ardenne; the Northern parts, lying towards the Sea, and terribly infested with the depredations of the Danes and Normans, committed to the care of some principal Officers, whom they called Lord Wardens of the Marches. Theodebert Sonne of Theodorick the first King of Austrasia, accompanied with Utilo a Boiarian Prince, having repulsed these common Robbers, obtained for Utilo, of his Father, the command of those Countries, and possession of a great part of them also, by the title of Lord Marquesse of Antwerp: the fourth from whom called Arnulph, was the first Mayor of the Palace (of this house) to the Kings of France, made as it were hereditary unto his Successors. By Dagobert the first, sole King of the French, that part of this Country, which was under the Earls of Ardenne being taken from them; the whole estate was conferred on Ansegisus, the son of Arnulph, with the title of Duke of Brabant. The actions and atchievements of so many of them as were Mayors of the Palace, we have already seen when we were in France. The whole succession follows here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Marquesses of ANTWERP, and Dukes of BRABANT of the German or Boiarian Race.

1 Utilo, son of Theodore, the first Duke, and Nephew of Aldiagerius, the last King of the Boiarians.

2 Hugopert, son of Utilo.

563 3 Asopert, the son of Hugopert, and Husband of Plythilda, daughter of Clotaire the first of France.

579 4 Arnoldus, the son of Asopert.

601 5 Arnulph, son of Arnoldus, the first Mayor of the Palace, of this family.

641 6 Ansegisus, son of Arnulph, Marquesse of Antwerp, and Mayor of the Palace, by Dagobert the first, made Duke of Brabant.

679 7 Pepin, surnamed the Fat, son of Ansegisus, succeeded to his Father in his honours, offices, and estates, and was herein succeeded by

714 8 Charles, the Base son of Pepin, for his valiant acts surnamed Martel, there being being no lawfull iſſue of his Father living. 741 9 Pepin II. ſurnamed the Short, ſon of Charles Martel, having managed the affairs of France, from the death of his Father, for the ſpace of ten years, uſurped the Kingdom, and was ſolemnly crowned King at Soiſſons by Boniface Archbiſhop of Mentz, on May day, Anno 751. The Dukedome of Brabant returning by this means to the Crown of France, continued a Province of that Kingdom, till the diviſion of the French Empire among the ſons and nephews of Lewis the Godly; when made a Member of the Kingdom of Lorrein; Not long before the fatal period of that Kingdom, having been many years before divided by the River Meuſe, betwixt the Emperours of Germany, and the Kings of France, (each taking to themſelves the Title of Kings of Lorrein) it was by Lotharius the 3d. of France, in whoſe ſhare it lay, conferred on Charles his younger Brother, together with the title of Duke of Brabant. But indeed this donation proved of little worth, the greateſt part hereof, together with the reſt of that part of the Kingdom of Lorrein, which of right belonged unto the French, being conquered by the Emperour Otho the 2d. and by him added to the Empire: And yet this alſo fell out in fine to the profit of Charles, who being Cozen German to this Otho the 2d. by the Lady Gerburg (ſiſter of Otho the firſt, and wife of Lewis, ſurnamed Tranſmarine, King of France, the Father of Charles,) was by him inveſted into the great Dukedom of Lorrein, that Dukedom in the full latitude and extent thereof containing the modern Dukedoms of Lorrein, Gulick, and Brabant, with the Lands of Luick, with parts of the lands of Triers and Colen. Brabant at that time had the name of Baſſe (or Low) Lorrein, and as a memory thereof, there is a Court for criminal and civil cauſes held at Genappe (one of the Franks or Market Towns of Brabant) called, La Court de Lorrein, to this day. An Eſtate firſt erected, as before is ſaid, by the Emperour Otho the 2d. who giving it to the ſaid Charles of France, reſerved out of it, as a Dower for his ſaid Aunt Gerburg, the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Bruxels, Nivelle, and Antwerp, lying on the Marches of his Dominions, towards France; which (with reference perhaps to the old Marquiſate of Antwerp) he honoured with the title of Marquiſate of the holy Empire, Anno 981. Gerburg the ſiſter, and after the death of her Brother Otho, the heir of Charls, diſſeiſed of Lorrein, and the right of that fair inheritance, by the Emperour Henry the ſecond (who gave it to Geofrey of Ardenne) ſucceeded her Grandmother, the firſt Gerburg, in the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Nivelle, and Bruxels, which ſhe conveyed in marriage to Lambert, one of the ſons of Reyner in Hainalt, with the title of Earl of Lovain. Henry his ſon having made himſelf Maſter of Antwerp alſo, was by that means poſſeſſed of the whole Marquiſate, but ſtill retained the title of Earl of Lovain. Godfrey the 6 Earl having inlarged the bounds of his Dominions, by the conqueſt of the reſt of this Country, Godfrey and Baldwin Dukes of Lorrein, being then abſent in the wars of the Holy Land, was by the Emperour Henry the fift (whoſe ſiſter he had maried) created the firſt Duke of Brabant. John, the firſt Duke of that name, added hereunto the Dutchie of Limbourg; and John the third, the Signeurie of Malines or Machlyn. How it became united to the houſe of Burgundy, is to be ſeen in the enſuing Catalogue of Machlyn.

The EARLES of LOVAIN, and DUKES of BRABANT of the Race of CHARLEMAGNE.

104 1 Lambert, one of the ſons of Regnier Earl of Hainalt, made the firſt Earl of Lovain, in right of Gerburg his wife.

1015 2 Henry, the ſon of Lambert, who took Antwerp, making it the head City of the Marquiſate of the holy Empire.

1046 3 Lambert II. ſon of Henry

1054 4 Henry II. ſon of Lambert the ſecond.

1068 5 Henry III. ſon of Henry the ſecond.

6 Henry IV. ſon of Henry the third.

1096 7 Godfrey, ſurnamed Barbatus, brother of Henry the fourth, created the firſt Duke of Brabant, in right of his deſcent from Charles Duke of Lorrein, challenged the Country, and recovered it from the houſe of Ardenne: and finally by the Emperor Henry the fifth, Anno 1108. father of Adelize, the ſecond wife of our Henry the firſt, and of Joſceline de Lovain, the Progenitor of the (now) Earl of Northumberland, 1140 8 Godfrey or Geofrey II. ſon of Godfrey.

1143 9 Godfrey or Geofrey III. ſon of Godfrey the ſecond.

1183 10 Henry V. ſon of Godfrey the third.

1230 11 Henry VI. ſurnamed the Good, ſon of Henry the fifth.

1247 12 Henry VII. ſurnamed the Magnanimous, by whoſe marriage with Sophia Daughter of Lewis the ſixth, Lantgrave of Turingia, the Lantgravedome of Haſſia came into this houſe; inveſted on it in the perſon of Henry his ſon, by the ſaid Sophia.

1260 13 John, ſon of Henry the ſeventh, took in the Dukedom of Limbourg, and deſtroyed the potent family of the Bertholds: his younger brother Henry, by another venter, ſucceeding in Haſſia.

14 John II. ſon of John the firſt, bought of the Biſhop of Leige, the moyety, or one half of Machlyn.

1312 15 John III. ſon of John the ſecond, added the whole eſtate of Machlyn to the Dukedom of Brabant

1355 16 Joan, the eldeſt daughter of John the third, married to Wenceſlaus the firſt Duke of Luxembourg, but died without iſſue.

Holland. 1406 17 Anthony of Burgogne, ſon of Philip the Hardie, and the Lady Margaret his wife, daughter of Lewis de Malain Earl of Flanders, and of Margaret the ſiſter and heir of Joane; after the death of the ſaid Wenceſlaus and Joane his wife, ſucceeded in the Dukedome of Brabant; his elder brother John, giving way unto it, at the requeſt of their great Aunt Joane, the proprietary of it.

1426 19 Philip, the ſecond ſon of Anthony, and brother of John the 4th.

1430 20 Philip II. called the Good, Duke of Burgundie, ſon and heir of John Duke of Burgundie, elder brother of Anthony; on the death of his two Couſin Germans John and Philip, ſucceeded in the Dukedome of Brabant, as the direct heir of the Lady Margaret, wife of Lewis de Malain, and daughter of John the third; the laſt Duke of Brabant of the houſe of Lovain. Of whoſe ſucceſſors more in another place.

The Arms here of are Sable, a Lion Or.

12. HOLLAND, 13. ZE LAND, 14. WEST-FRISELAND

Having thus ſpoken of thoſe Provinces which ſtil continue in ſubjection to the King of Spain (except ſome few towns in Flanders, and Brabant, before mentioned;) let us next look on thoſe which have withdrawn their obedience from him; beginning firſt with Holland, and its Appendixes; as of more power and conſideration than all the reſt. Which though diſtinct Provinces, and acting in their ſeveral capacities at the preſent time: yet having been always under the command of the ſame Princes, they muſt be joyned together in the ſtory of them: but ſhall be ſeverally handled as to the Chorography.

HOLLAND hath on the Eaſt, the Zuider See, Utrecht, and ſome part of Guelderland; on the Weſt and North, the German Ocean; on the South, the Iſlands of Zeland, and ſome part of Brabant. So called, as ſome think, quaſi Holt-land, that is to ſay a woody Country; as others, quaſi Hollow-land, from the Bogs and Mariſhes and unſound footing on the ſame; and ſome will have it called ſo, quaſi Hoy-land, from the great quantity of Hay. But the learned Junius not reliſhing any of the three, conceives, that both this Country, and the Iſles of Zeland, being planted by ſome Colonies of Danes, and Normans, (at the time of the irruption of thoſe Northern Nations,) were called thus with reference to Seland and Oeland two Iſlands of the Baltick Sea out of which they came. The Reader hath good choice, and may pleaſe himſelf.

The Country for the moſt part lyeth very low, in ſo much that they are fain to fence it with Banks and Ramparts to keep out the Sea, and to reſtrain the Rivers within their bounds; ſo that in many places one may ſee the Sea far above the Land, and yet repulſed with thoſe Banks: and is withall ſo fenny and full of mariſhes, that they are forced to trench it with innumerable dikes and chanells, to make it firm land, and fit for dwelling; yet not ſo firm to bear either trees or much grain. But ſuch is the Induſtry of the People and the trade they drive, that having little or no corn of their own growth, they do provide themſelves elſewhere; not only ſufficient for their own ſpending, but wherewith to ſupply their neighbours: having no timber of their own, they ſpend more timber in building ſhips, and fencing their water-courſes, than any Country in the World; having no wine, they drink more than the people of the Country, where it groweth naturally; and finally, having neither Flax nor Wool, they make more Cloth of both ſorts, than all the Countries in the world, except France and England.

The preſent Inhabitants are generally given to Sea-faring lives, ſo that it is thought that in Holland, Zeland, and Weſt-Friſeland, there are 2500 ſhips of war and burden. The women for the moſt part laborious in making ſtuffs. Nay you will hardly ſee a Child of four years of age, that is not kept to work, and made to earn its own living; to the great commendation of their government. The greateſt of their naturall Commodities is Butter and Cheeſe; of which, beſides that infinite plenty which they ſpend in their own Houſes, and amongſt their Garriſons; they ſell as much unto other Countries, as comes to 100000 Crowns per annum. By which means, and by the greatneſſe of their fiſh-trade ſpoken of before, they are grown ſo wealthy on the Land, and ſo powerfull at Sea, that as Flanders heretofore was taken for all the Netherlands; ſo now Holland is taken generally for all the Provinces confederated in a league againſt the Spaniard.

The whole compaſſe of it is no more than 180 miles, no part thereof being diſtant from the Sea, above three hours journey: and yet within that narrow Circuit, there are contained no fewer than 23 walled Towns, and 400 Villages; ſome ſituate in the North, and others in South-Holland, as it ſtands divided. In South-Holland (being that part hereof that lyeth next to Zeland and the middle chanell of the Rhene paſſing from Utrecht unto Leiden) the principall Towns are, 1. Dort, (in Latine Dordrectum) formerly the Staple for Rheniſh wines, a large, rich, and well-peopled Town: antiently joined to the firm Land, but in the year 1421. rent from it by the violence of the Sea, and made an Iland; of great command upon the traffique of the Maes, and the Wael, upon whoſe confluence it ſtands; but of moſt note in theſe later times, for an Aſſembly of Divines out of divers Countries following Calvins Doctrine, for condemnation of the Lutheran or Arminian Tenets, concerning Univerſall Grace and Predeſtination, Anno 1618. 2. Gorichem, ſituate on the Wael, where it meeteth with the Linge: a Town of great trade and riches, by reaſon of a daily Market of Cheeſe and Butter, brought hi-hither in very great quantiy. Beautified antiently with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a fair Church, from the Steeple wher eof one may behold 22 walled Towns, beſides an infinite number of Villages. The Country is round about it, called by that people Van Arckel, or the land of Hercules, from an opinion that Hercules the German did there appoint his Camp; or rather from ſome Temple dedicated to him; in the place whereof the Lords of this tract, who from hence took the name of Arckel, (Arcuſei they are called in our Latine writers) founded a Church unto the honor of the Virgin Mary, in the time Thierrie the 2d Earl of Holland, by whom firſt ſetled in this country. And here they flouriſhed as Lords of Gorichem, Lerdum, and the parts of adjoining, til the year 1416. when falling to John L. of Egmond, by Mary his wife, daughter of John of Arckellandt, the laſt Lord hereof, and Mother of Arnold of Egmond D. of Gueldres, It was by him ſold to William the ſixt, Earl of Holland, and ſo again united unto that Eſtate. 3. Rotterdam, ſeated on a dike or channel called the Rotter, not far from which, at a place named Rempen, the Leck, one of three main branches of the Rhene, falleth into the Maes: a ſtrong, fair, and well-traded Port; the birth-place of the learned Eraſmus. 4 Schoon-hoven, ſituate on the Leck, a fair Town, having a commodious haven. 5. Goude, one of the ſix principal Towns of Holland, rich, and well fortified; ſeated on the River called Yſſel, which riſing about Yſſel-ſtein ſpoken of anon, falleth into the Leck at a place called Iſſelmond, and therefore different from the branch of the Rhene, ſo called, which giveth name to Overyſſel. On the ſame River alſo ſtand, 6. Oudwater, and 7. Yſſel-ſtein, this laſt belonging properly to the Prince of Orange; the firſt of great trade for making Cables and Cords for ſhipping. 8. Leiden, or Lugdunum Batavorum, an Univerſity, founded Anno 1564. The Town conſiſteth of 41 Iſlands, to which they paſſe partly by boats, partly by bridges, whereof there are 144. and of them 104 builded with ſtone. Here is in this Town a Caſtle, ſaid to have been built by Hengiſt the Saxon, at his return out of England. And not far off ſtood the famous Nunnerie of Rainsburg, of the ſame nature with thoſe of Mentz and Nivelle, before deſcribed; ſo liberally indowed, that 2000 perſons did there dayly receive relief. 9. Vianen on the Leck, a Seigneury diſtinct from Holland, pertaining antiently to the Lords of Brederode: And ſo was alſo, 10. Heuſden, a good old Town, once beautified with a fa ir Caſtle, and a goodly Territory, but belonging to the Earls of Cleve, of which houſe it had Lords of its own, as knowledging no ſubjection to the Earls of Holland, from the year 850. or thereabouts, to the year 1290. at which time Theodoric the 9th. of Cleve, at a merry meeting transferred the Soveraignty thereof to Florence Earl of Holland, of that name the fifth. Finally, having continued in the poſſeſſion of 20 Lords of that familie, on the expiration of that line, in the perſon of John the 9th. dying without iſſue, Anno 1334. it was made a member of this Earldom (after ſome ſharp diſputes with the Dukes of Brabant, claiming it by a reſignation of the laſt Lord John) by William of Buvurin, Earl of Holland and Hainalt, Anno 1361. or thereabouts. 11. Lerdum, upon the River Linge, which together with Yſſel-ſtein before mentioned, fell unto Philip Prince of Orange, in right of his deſcent from the Earls of Buren. 12. Delfe, a Town of great trade for cloathing, large, and well-built, beautified with ſpacious ſtreets, and goodly Churches; the birth-place of that monſtrous Heretick David George, who called himſelf King, and Chriſt Immortal. He fled with his wife and Children, Anno 1544. to Baſil, where he ſet up this Doctrine: the points whereof were, 1. That the Law and the Goſpel were unprofitable for the attaining of Heaven; but his Doctrine able to ſave ſuch as receive it. 2. That he was the true Chriſt and Meſſias. 3. That he had been till that preſent, kept in a place unknown to all the Saints: and 4. that he was not to reſtore the houſe of Iſrael by death or tribulation, but by love and grace of the Spirit. He died in the year 1556. and three days after, his Doctrine was by them of Baſil condemned, his goods confiſcate, and his bones taken up and burned. He bound his Diſciples to three things, 1. To conceal his name; 2. Not to reveal of what condition he had been; and 3. Not to diſcover the Articles of his Doctrine to any man in Baſil.

In that part thereof which is called North-Holland, lying betwixt the middle chanel of the Rhene, and the Zuider-See, the Towns or Cities of moſt importance are, 1. Alkmar, encompaſſed with deep fens and mariſhes; a rich Town, in regard of the great plenty of Butter and cheeſe, which is made about it, more than in any place of Holland; and famous for the defeat which the D. of Alva received before it. For he in the beginning of the Low-Country troubles, having with the loſſe of 20000 of his own men, forced Harlem, laid his ſiege round about this Town. Had he left any way for the Souldiers to have fled thence, the Town had been abandoned: but having invironed them round, he put them to ſuch a reſolution, or deſperation (chooſe you whether) that manfully they reſiſted three of his aſſaults; and in the end made him depart with great loſſe, as well of his Souldiers, as his reputation. 2. Amſterdam, a very fair Haven Town, where divers times at one tide, 1000 ſhips of all ſorts have been ſeen to go out and in: So truly ſaid a modern Poet,

Quod Tagus, atq; Hermus vehit, & Pactolus, in unum
Vere hunc congeſtum dixeris eſſe locum.

What Tagus, Hermus, and Pactolus bear,
One would conjecture to be heap'd up here.

The people thereby made ſo rich, that if a Fleet of 300 ſail ſhould come into the Port, fraught with all kind of commodities, in five or ſix days they would be ready to buy all the lading. Situate it is on the Gulph called the Tie, and the dike or chanel called Amſtel, whence it hath the name of Amſteldam, in Latine Amſtelodunum; built upon piles like Venice, and reſembling it in ſo many poins, that it

Holland. it may justly be called the Northern Venice. First fortified with Towers and ramparts by Giselbert of Amstel, about 300 years agone. But being burnt through the envy of its neighbours, it began to be walled, Anno 1482. Grown to this wealth since the diverting of the trade from Antwerp hither, and for that cause inhabited by men of all Nations, and of all Religions; and those not only tollerated, and connived at in private, but openly and freely exercised without any dislike. A greater confusion (in my mind) than that of Babel; this being of Religions, that of Languages only. 3. Harlem, on the Lake called Harlem-meer, the greatest Town of all Holland, and the second for dignity: well built, and very pleasantly situated amongst many goodly meadows, near a delightfull forest, and round about environed with wealthy Villages: famous for the invention of printing, invented here; but perfected at Mentz in higher Germany; the first book which was ever printed being Tullies Offices. 4. Naerden on the Zuider See, fortified with a strong Castle, held of the Earls of Holland by the Dukes of Brunswick, to whom it antiently belonged. 5. Enchuisen, on the very point of the Gulph of Zuider-See, opposite to Friseland, from which not distant above two leagues. A town of great consequence to the Prince of Orange, in the first revolting of these Countries from the King of Spain. For siding with him in that war, and standing conveniently to obstruct the passages by Sea, unto Amsterdam, it compelled that City, in short time, by stopping all supply of victuals and other necessaries, to yeeld it self unto the Prince. 6. Hoorn, on the same Gulf also, a rich Town with a very good Haven; and of so great strength by reason of the Multitude of Dikes and Chanells which are round about it, that it seems impregnable. 7. Edam, upon the same Gulf (of Zuider-See) remarkable for the great number of ships which are built yearly in it: and an incredible number of the best Holland Cheeses made in the Country round about it. 8. Medemblick, on the Ocean, seated in the best Country of Holland for the feeding of Cattell: unwalled, but enjoying all the privileges which a walled town hath, and fortified with a right strong Castle.

The chief of the Holland Villages is the Hague or Graven Hague, in Latine Haga Comitis, because formerly the Court and residence of the Earls of Holland, who had here a very large and beautifull Palace, founded by Earl William King of the Romans, and therein a chief and excellent Library gathered together by John Harie a Canon Regular of this place, and by him given to Charles the fift. In former time the residence of the Councill for the Province of Holland; as it is now of the Commissioners or Delegates of the confederate Provinces, called by the name of the States-Generall. Now much increased in buildings, of what it was, and yet so great in the time of Lewis Guicciardine, that it then contained 2000 housholds. The Inhabitants will not wall it, as desiring to have it rather accounted the chief Village in Europe, than the second City. The other Villages of note, 2. Egmond, 3. Brederode, 4. Wassenar, which antiently gave names to three Noble families; of which none so illustrious and renowned as that of Egmond, descended lineally from Radbold, son of Adgillis the K. of Frizons, the first Lord of Egmond, who died, Anno 791. Advanced by marriages to the Dukedome of Guelderland, the Signeuries of Yssel-stein and Buren, and finally made Earls of Egmond, by Maximilian the Emperor, Anno 1592. But both this house and that of Wassenar being now extinct, there is none left but that of Brederode, for ought I can learn. Neer to the last stood the famous Fortresse called Arx Britannica, built by Caligula in memory of his great Battel upon this Shore. For making shew of a voyage into Britain, to subdue that Island, he borded his Galley, embattelled his souldiers, caused his Trumpets to sound, give them the Signall; and then commanded them to gather Cockles. Which Tower or Fortresse was at the fall of the Roman Empire, overwhelmed by the Sea; the ruins whereof at a dead low water are still to be seen.

Besides these places on the firm Land or Continent, there are some Islands, which pertain to the State of Holland, called by the generall name of Voorn, because situate directly against Holland; Voorn signifying as much as before, or in old English Bevorne: but known by their distinct and more proper names of Somersdike, 2. Gaurede, 3. Purschille, so called of their principall Towns: and 4. Voorn, specially so named, the chief of them all, being of a fat and fruitfull soyl, and plentifull of most sorts of grain. The principall Towns whereof are 1. Briel (which we call the Brill) a strong Town, and the first that revolted against the Spaniard, Anno 1572. Cautionarie to the English with the Town of Flushing; chosen by them in regard of the great command it hath upon the passage to Gertrudenburg and the rest of Brabant; as also to Delfe, Dort, and Roterdam, the greatest Towns of trade in the South of Holland. 2. Gerulit, a small Town, but having a jurisdiction over many Villages. There are also on the North side of Holland the Isles Wyerengeh, and Texel; of which little memorable, but that the last is furnished with a safe and capacious Bay for receipt of shipping.

One speciall accident concerning Holland, I cannot over-passe in silence, namely, how Margaret Countesse of Hennenberg, an Sister to William King of the Romans, being of the age of 42 years, was delivered at one birth of 365 children, the one half males, the other females, the odde one an hermaphrodite; all christened at the Church of Lasdune, not far from the Hague, by the names of John and Elizabeth, in two Basins, still to be seen in the said Church, by Guido the Suffragan of Utrecht; all which immediately after died, and with them the Mother.

The Arms of Holland of it self, as a State distinct, are Or, a Lion Gules.

ZELAND consisteth of seven Islands, the remainder of 18 which the Sea hath swallowed; and in them 300 inhabited Towns. Severed from Flanders with the left branch or arm of the Scheld, which they called Honte; and on the East, from Brabant, with the right branch of the said River, which still keeps his name; on the North, from Holland, with the Gulph called the Flack; and on the West, with the main Ocean, from the Kingdome England. So called, as some say, quasi Sea and Land; but as Junius rather thinks, from Seland, an Iland of Denmark, as before was noted.

The

The Country generally more fruitfull than the neighbouring Brabant, producing great quantity of excellent corn, plenty of Coriander and abundance of Mader, used in dying; the soil also very rich in pasture, but low and marishy, which makes the air to be very unhealthy; and the whole destitute both of fresh water, and wood, the want of which last is supplied with coal out of England, and Scotland, or by Turf digged amongst themselves, but very sparingly for fear of weakning the Sea-banks.

The whole containeth 8 Towns and 100 Villages. The Islands which remain, are commonly divided into the Western, and the Eastern, according as they lie with reference to the River Scheld. The Western Islands, four in number, that is to say, 1. Walcheren, (Valachria in Latine) lying to the South-west of Sluys in Flanders, the richest and most populous of all this Province, in compasse 10 Dutch, or 40 Italian miles. The principal Towns of which are 1. Middleburg, seated on a Creek of the Sea, well walled and fortified, the streets spacious, the houses and Churches well built: inhabited by wealthy Merchants, and illustrious tradesmen; and of late times (since the removing of the English trade from Antwerp) a most flourishing Emporie. So called because built in the midst of the Island; or because built (as saith Ortelius) by Prince Zelandus, of whom this Province was thus named in honour of his Grandfather Metellus, and by him called Metelli Burgum. 2. Flushing, of great note for its good Port, and invincible strength. One of the first Towns which the Low-Countrymen took from the Spaniards, by the diligence of Voorst a Seaman, and Monsieur de Berland, then the Bayliff thereof, and not long after put into the hands of the English, as a Town of Caution: the first Governour of it being the renowned Philip Sidney. A poor Town then it was, God wot, now the Key of the Netherlands, without whose license no ship can passe either to or from the City of Antwerp, insomuch that if the Duke of Alva in the beginning of his government had bestowed that pains in fortifying this and others of the Maritime Towns, as he did in the strengthning Antwerp, and some mid-land Cities; he had in all probability, hindred the remediless revolt of these flourishing Countries. Not far off standeth the Fort called the Rammekins, once cautionary to the English also, together with the Brill, the chief Town in the Isle of Voorn, (an Isle of Holland) all three being taken from the Spaniard, An. 1572. made Cautionary to Queen Elizabeth, An. 1585. and finally surrendred by King James to the States united, An. 1615. Robert Lord Liste (afterwards created Earl of Leicester) the brother of Sir Philip Sidney, then Governour of Flushing. 3. Ramne, or Armynygden. an unwalled Town, but beautified with one of the goodliest and most frequented Havens in all the World: out of which one may sometimes see 500 sail of ships of great burden, set forwards on their voyages to several parts. 4. Vere, or Camfere, seated in the North part of the Island; which once gave title to a Marquesse, and from the which the noble Families of the Veres (now, and of long time, Earls of Oxford) took denomination. So as it is no marvel that so many of that Family have ventured their estates and lives, in the wars of this Countrey, being their Grandmother in a manner, or their Primitive Parent, from whence transplanted into England.

2. SOUTH-BEVERLAND, situate betwixt Walcheren and Brabant, the greatest of the Isles of Zeland; heretofore 20 Dutch miles in compasse, but now much diminished by the rage and fury of the Sea; by which the Town and Signeury of Borsule, with all the Countries round about it, was swallowed up, An. 1532. That which remains hath in it many goodly Woods, and pleasant Thickets, full of Fowl and wild Beasts for hawking and hunting. Chief Towns here are, 1. Romerswal, seated on the East, towards Bergen ap Some, severed at the same time from the rest of the Island, and made an Island of it self; defended with continual charge from following the sad fate of the Town of Borsule. 2. Goes, or Tergoes, on the Northern Coast, a strong Town, well-privileged, and the only walled Town in all the Island.

3. NORTH-BEVERLAND, lying betwixt South-Beverland and the Isle of Schowen, in former times esteemed the Paradise of Zeland, and having in it a proper Town called Chort-Cheen; but so destroyed by the Sea-breach spoken of before, that there is nothing now remainining but a few poor Villages.

4. WOLFERSDIKE, lying betweeu the two Beverlands, the smallest of the Western Islands, as having in it no more than two Villages, but replenished with good store of Pasture.

And these are all which fall in the division of the Western Islands, so called because they lye Westward of the River Scheld; as those which they call the Eastern Islands, on the East thereof. Of which last there are three in number.

1. SCHOWEN, lying on the Northwest of Holland, so near unto North-Beverland in former times, that the Inhabitants could talk together from one shore to the other: but now the Sea hath set them at a greater distance. It containeth in compasse six Dutch miles. Chief Towns wherein are 1. Strickzed, the antientest Town of all Zeland, once beautified with a fair and commodious Haven, now choaked up with beach; yet still reputed for the second Town of all the Province: the whole trade thereof consisting in Salt and Mader, of which it yeelds good plenty. Most famous for the birth of Levinus Lemnius that renowned Philosopher, and Physician. 2. Brewers-Haven, inhabited only by Fishermen, not else remarkable.

2. DUVELAND, so named from the multitude of Doves or Pigeons, situate between Schowen and Tolen, in compasse about 4 Dutch miles; hath no good Town in it, but only Country Villages, and Gentlemens Farms. Surrounded by the Sea, An. 1530. but by the industry and diligence of Adolph of Burgundy, and Lord of Boforeres in Flanders, recovered again; and at the excessive charge of the people hitherto preser ed.

3. TOLEN, so called from the chief Town of the Island, where the Earls toll was wont to be paid, whence it had the name; is situate over against the North-west of Brabant, from which disjoined by a narrow Creek or Arm of the Sea: the ſecond Town of note being called S. Martins D.ke, walled, but not otherwiſe conſiderable.

Agreeable to the quality of this Country of Zeland, are the Arms thereof; being Or, a Lion Gules, riſing out of a Sea, wavie, Argent & Azure.

WEST-FRISELAND hath on the Eaſt, Groyning-Land, and a part of Weſtphalen in High Germany; on the South, Over-yſſell, and the Znider-See; on the North and Weſt, the main Ocean. The Country generally mooriſh and full of Fens, unapt for Corn, but yeelding great ſtore of Paſturage: which mooriſhneſs of the ground makes the air very foggy and unhealthy; nor have they any fewell wherewith to rectifie it (except in that part of it which they call Seven-Wolden) but Turf and Cow-dung, which addes but little to the ſweetneſſe of an unſound air. Nor are they better ſtored with Rivers, here being none proper to this Country, but that of Leuwars; the want of which is ſupplyed by great chanels in moſt places, which do not only drain the Mariſhes, but ſupply them with water. Which notwithſtanding, their Paſtures do afford them a good breed of horſes fit for ſervice; plenty of Beeves both great and ſweet, the beſt in Europe next theſe of England: and thoſe in ſuch a large increaſe, that their Kine commonly bring two Calves, and their Ewes three lambs at a time.

The Country divided into three parts. In the firſt part called WESTERGOE, lying towards Holland, the principal Towns are 1. Harlingen, an Haven town upon the Ocean, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle. 2. Hindeloppen on the ſame Coaſt alſo. 3. Staveren an Hanſe Town, oppoſite to Enchuiſen in Holland; the Town decayed, but fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle which ſecures the Haven. 4. Franeker, a new Univerſity, or a Schola Illuſtris, as they call it. 5. Sneck, in a low and inconvenient ſituation; but both for largeneſſe and beauty the beſt in this part of the Province, and the ſecond in eſteem of all the Country. In OSTERGO, or the Eaſt parts lying towards Groyningland, the Towns of moſt note are 6. Leuwarden, ſituate on the hinder Leuwars, the prime Town of West-friſeland, and honored with the ſupreme Court and Chancery hereof, from which there lyeth no appeal: a rich town, well built, and ſtrongly fortified. 7. Doccum, bordering upon Groyning, the birth-place of Gemma Friſius. In SEVEN-WOLDEN, or the Country of ſeven Foreſts, ſo called from ſo many ſmall Foreſts joining neer together, is no Town of note, being long time a Woodland Country, and not well inhabited till of late. The number of the Walled Towns are 11 in all; of the Villages or Burroughs 345.

To this Province belongeth the Iſle of Schelink, the ſhores whereof are plentifully ſtored with Dog-fiſh, took by the Inhabitants in this manner. The men of the Iland attire themſelves with beaſts skins, and then fall to dancing; with which ſport the Fiſh being much delighted, make out of the waters towards them; nets being pitched preſently betwixt them and the water. Which done, the men put off their diguiſes, and the frighted Fiſh haſtning towards the ſea, are caught in the toyls.

Touching the Friſons, heretofore poſſeſſed of this Country, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to East-Friſeland, poſſeſſed alſo by them, and ſtill continuing in the quality of a free Eſtate, governed by its own Laws and Princes: here only taking notice that the Arms of this Friſeland are Azure, ſemy of Billets Argent, two Lions Or.

The antient Inhabitants of theſe three Provinces, were the Batavi, and Caninefates, inhabiting the Iſland of the Rhene ſituate betwixt the middle branch thereof and the Wael, which now containeth South-Holland, Utrecht, and ſome part of Gueldres; the Friſii dwelling in West-Friſeland and the North of Holland; and the Mattiaci, inhabiting in the Iſles of Zeland. By Charles the Bald, theſe Countries being almoſt unpeopled by the Norman Piracies, were given to Thierrie, ſon of Sigebert a Prince of Aquitain, with the title of Earl: his Succeſſors acknowledging the Soveraignty of the Crown of France, till the time of Arnulph the 4th Earl, who atturned Homager to the Empire. In John the 2d. they became united to the Houſe of Hainalt; and in William the 3d. to that of Bavaria; added to the Eſtates of the Dukes of Burgundie in the perſon of the Duke Philip the Good, as appeareth by this ſucceſſion of 1417 25 Jaqueline, only daughter of Earl William the ſixth, firſt married to John the 4th. Duke of Brabant, the ſon of Anthony of Burgogne; from whom divorced under colour of Conſanguinity, ſhe was married after to Humfrey Duke of Glouceſter, and then to Frank of Borſelles, a private Gentleman; being unworthily handled by Duke John of Burgundie, ſurrendred her eſtates to Duke Philip the Good.

26 Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundie, ſon of John Duke of Burgundy, and of the Lady Margaret ſiſter of Earl William the ſixth, and daughter of Albert, Earls of Hainalt, Holland, &c. ſucceeded on the reſignation of the Lady Jaqueline, his Couzin Germain, tranſporting theſe Eſtates to the houſe of Burgundy; his Succeſſors we ſhall meet with ſhortly in another place.

15. VTRECHT. 16. OVER-YSSELL.

THe Biſhoprick of VTRECHT, I mean the temporal juriſdiction and eſtate thereof, contained once all that tract of ground which now makes up the Provinces of Utrecht, Over-Yſſel, & Groining. But Groining was long ſince diſmembred. Utrecht and Over-Yſſel remaining parts thereof till the year 1528. when added to the reſt of the Belgick Provinces, by Charles the fifth.

UTRECHT hath on the Eaſt, Guelderland; on the Weſt, North, and South environed with Holland. The Country very fruitfull, much dryer than Holland, and ſo fitter for all ſorts of grain. It containeth 70 Villages, and 5 walled Towns; that is to ſay, 1. Wick at Duerſteed, ſituate on the middle Chanel of the Rhene, where it diverteth into the Leck; well built, and fortified anciently with a good Caſtle; ſuppoſed to be the Batavoducum ſpoken of by Tacitus, the manſion at that time of the ſecond Legion. 2. Rhenen, upon the ſame branch or Chanel, whence it hath the name: about which is digged abundance of turf for fewel. 3. Amesfort on the River Ems, (called in Latine Amiſus) a fair Town, and well peopled. 4. Montfort, upon the Yſſel, pleaſantly ſeated, and of great ſtrength, as being anciently a frontier Town againſt the Hollanders. 5. Utrecht, ſituate on the middle Chanel of the Rhene, firſt called Antonina, from one of the Antonines of Rome; but Dagobert King of France gave it the name of Trajectum (or Ultrajectum, we now call it Utrecht) becauſe there was at that time the common Ferry over the River. The Town large, beautifull, and very ſumptuouſly built, having in it many goodly Churches, of which 5 were anciently Collegiate; beſides two famous Monaſteries of noble women, ſuch as thoſe ſpoken of elſewhere: the private houſes well contrived, moſt of them having goodly Cellars, vaulted with wonderfull art and skill, to which the people may reſort in all times of danger. Sometimes the Seat-Royal of Radbold, King of the Friſons, then of the Biſhops; honoured of old with a Juridical reſort for the parts adjoyning, and now the principal of this Province. A City, ſo miraculouſly ſeated amongſt walled Towns, that a man may goe from hence in one day, to any one of 50 walled Towns or Cities, thence equally diſtant; or to any one of 26 Towns to Dinner, and come home to bed.

Over-Yssell, and Guelderland.

OVER-YSSEL, in Latin, Transisulana, so named from its situation beyond the Yssell, is bounded on the East, with Westphalen; on the West, with Zuider-See; on the North, with West-Friseland; on the South, with Guelderland. The Country very plain, and without Hils, but wet, and moorish, affording excellent good Pastorage, and not defective in Corn. Divided into three parts, that is to say, Tuent, confining upon Westphalen; Ysselland on the River Yssell, and Drent beyond the River Vecht; in all which are contained 11 Towns and 100 Villages. The principall of which are, 1. Deventer, on the River Yssell, strong and well fortified, and withall beautifull and well peopled; an Hanse town, and the chief of all this Province: first taken for the States by the Earl of Leicester, then Governour of those countries for Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1586. treacherously re-yeelded to the Spaniard by Sir William Stanley; but in the year 1590 again recovered by the States. 2. Swoll, standing on a little River which runs into the Vidre, anciently fortified with a double ditch and very strong ramparts: an Hanse town, as is also 3. Campen, situate on the left shore and fall of the Yssell into the Zuider-See; a fair and large Town, and of very great strength by reason of those in accessible marishes amongst which it is situate. These three are in that part hereof which is called Ysselland, and by some Saland, by whom (erroneously) supposed to be the Country of the antient Salii. In that part hereof which is called Tuent, we have the Towns of 4. Oldensel, 5. Ensehede, 6. Delden, 7. Almeloo; of which little memorable. And in that of Drent, the Town and Castle of Vallenhoven, standing upon the Zuider-See, well served with all sorts of victuals: for which cause made the ordinary residence of the Governour and supream Councell for the whole Province.

The antient Inhabitants of these two Provinces, were some parts of the Batavi and Frisii minores, for that of Utrecht; the Bructeri, and (as some say) the Salii, in Over-Yssell. Both Provinces belonging antiently to the Episcopall See of Utrecht, founded by Dagobert King of France, who endowed it with great Lands and Territories; the first Bishop being Willibald an Englishman, who converted these parts to Christianity. His Successors grew to so great power, that they were able to bring 40000 men into the Field, and with great courage did maintain their Estate and Patrimony, against the incroaching Earls of Holland. But at the last, having continued for the space of 900 years, Henry of Bavaria Bishop hereof, being extreemly distressed with war by the Duke of Gueldres and driven out of the City of Utrecht by his own subjects (perhaps upon some humour of Reformation) alienated all the temporalities of his Bishoprick to Charles the fift, Anno 1527. And the next year, the Imperialists by one of the factions were let into Utrecht; at what time both the Estates of the Country, and Pope Clement the 7th. confirmed the Alienation made by the Bishop. After which solemn acts of theirs, the Emperour caused himself to be invested in this Estate by the States of the Empire, (for Utrecht was of old an Imperiall Fief,) and for the better government and administration of it, divided it into two Provinces, as it still continueth. But what this Bishop lost in power, his successours not long after gained in title: the Bishop of Utrecht being made an Arch-bishop or Metropolitane, Anno 1561. but by reason of the change of Religion which was then working, and the falling off of these Countries, which soon after followed; he had but little joy in his new preferment.

17. GVELDERLAND. 18. ZVTPHEN, and 19. GROINING.

THe Dukedom of Guelderland, at such time as it was first taken in by Charls the fift, contained under it, the Dutchy of Guelders properly and specially so called, the Earldom of Zutphen, and the Town and Signeurie of Groining: held by distinct titles, and governed, ever since their union with the Belgick Provinces, as distinct estates.

GUELDERLAND is bounded on the East, with Cleveland, and the Earldom of Zutphen; on the West, with Holland and Utrecht; on the North, with Over-Yssell, and the Zuider-See; and on the South with Brabant, and the land of Gulick. The Country flat, having few hills in it, but many pleasant and Commodious woods, especially that called Echterwalt; of corn and cattell very fruitfull.

The whole Country is generally divided into two parts. 1. The Veluwe, contained within the Zuider-See, the middle chanell of the Rhene, and the Yssell; the barrener of the two, and the worse inhabited, the people hereof preferring health before wealth as in other places, but affording a more pure air and a pleasanter dwelling than the other, the woods and forrests well repleniished with most kinds of game. 2. The Betuwe (so called of the Batavi who possessed these parts) intercepted betwixt the said middle chanel of the Rhene and the Wael, exceedingly fruitfull in corn; and of so excellent a pasturage for the feeding of Cattel, that in the year 1570. there was a Guelderland Bull sold in Antwerp, which weighed 3200 pounds.

In both divisions (not reckoning in the County of Zutphen) are contained 300 Villages, and 16 walled towns, besides some fortified of late since the wars began. The chief whereof are 1. Nimmegent (in Latine Noviomagus) an Imperiall City, ordained by Charls the great to be one of the three Seiges of the Empire for these outer parts; the other two being Theonville in Luxemburg, & Aix or Aken in the land of Gulick. And as a Town Imperiall it had antiently the privilege of coyning money: for which and other free doms or immunities indulged unto it, the people did no other service to the Emperours, then once a year to send a man to Aix or Aquisgrane, with a Glove full of Pepper. But the Town being sold to the Gueldrois by William Earl of Holland and King of the Romans, for 21000 marks of Silver, Anno 1248. the power of coynage fell to those Princes; and yet the town was brought to do better ſervice, than formerly it had done at Aken. The Town high mounted on the top of an hill, the Wael, which is there large and deep, running at the foot of it; rich, great, and populous, having beſides the modern fortifications an antient Caſtle, with ſo goodly a proſpect, that from thence one may behold the beſt part of the countrey; built, as ſome ſay, by Julius Cæſar, to command thoſe parts. Under the juriſdiction of it, are 2. Tiel, and 3. Bomel, two walled Towns, both ſituated on the Wael, both ſtrong, and having many rich villages under their command; and 4. Gheut, on the Wael alſo, an unwalled Town, but having all the privileges which the walled Towns have. Not far off, at the firſt meeting of the Wael and the Maes, ſtands the ſtrong Fort of St. Andrews, raiſed by the Arch-duke Albert to command the paſſage of thoſe Rivers; but in the year 1600. taken in by Maurice Count of Naſſaw (after Prince of Orange) and ever ſince garriſoned by the States to ſecure that paſſage. 5. Ruermond, ſeated on the mouth of the Ruer, where it falleth into the Maes; a beautifull and well-peopled City, ſtrong by Art and Nature, and ſeated in a fruitful countrey: heretofore of the Dioceſe of Leige (as Nimmegen antiently of Colen) but made a See Epiſcopal by King Philip the 2d, An. 1559. This is the ſecond Capital City of Guelderland, and hath under the juriſdiction of it, 6. Venlo, a ſtrong Town on the Maes, in which the Duke of Cleve yeelded himſelf to Charls the fift, An. 1543. 7 Gueldres, heretofore of ſuch reputation that it gave name to all the countrey, and well it doth deſerve to do ſo ſtill; being the only Town in all this Dukedom, which neither firſt nor laſt hath been won by the Hollanders, but ſtill preſerved themſelves in their obedience to their natural Princes. 8. Strael, or Straelen, a well-fortified piece; but which, according to the chances of War, hath oft chang'd its maſters. 9. Arnhem, the Arenacum of Tacitus, and in thoſe times the manſion of the 10th Legion, ſituate on the Rhene, not above a mile from the great Chanel, which Druſus to keep his ſouldiers from idleneſſe cauſed them to dig, to let the waters of the Rhene into thoſe of the Yſſell; called therefore by the Antients Foſſa Druſiana, by the Moderns Yſſell-Dort. The Town large and well-built; the ordinary reſidence heretofore of the Dukes of Guelderland, who had here their Chancery, and other ſupreme Courts of Juſtice. This is the third Capital City of Gueldres (antiently of the Dioceſe of Utrecht) and hath under the juriſdiction of it, beſides divers Villages, 10. Wagheninghen on the Rhene, the ſame which Tacitus calls Vada. 11. Harderwick, on the Zuider-See, burnt to the ground, Anno 1503. but ſince re-edified, and now more ſtrong and beautiful than ever formerly. 12. Huttem upon the Yſſell, a good town of war, but not elſe obſervable.

Within the limits of this Dukedom ſtands the Town and County of Culembergh, erected into a County by King Philip the 2d. by reaſon of the fair territory which belonged unto it: formerly held in Fee of the Dukes of Guelderland, but otherwiſe not reckoned as a Member of it. 2. The Town and Earldom of Buren, ſituate on the River Linghe, having a ſtrong Caſtle antiently, and a goodly territory, holden immediatly of the Empire, as a Fief Imperial. Firſt made an Earldom in the perſon of Frederick Lord of Egmond, brothers ſon to Arnold of Egmond, the ſixt Duke of Gueldres, created Earl of Buren by Maximilian the firſt, Anno 1492. which Frederick was grandfather of the valiant Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Buren, who died Anno 1549. after whoſe death it fell at laſt to Philip of Naſſaw, eldeſt ſon of William Prince of Orange, and of Anne the daughter and heir of the ſaid Maximilian, upon the death of the ſaid Anne, Anno 1551.

ZUTPHEN, accompted formerly for the 4th Capital City of Guelderland, now a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Weſtphalen; on the Weſt, with that part of Guelderland which is called the Velluwe; on the North, with Over-yſſell; on the South, with Cleveland. It containeth 8. walled Towns, beſides many Villages; that is to ſay, 1. Doetecum, ſtanding on the old Yſſell, riſing out of Weſtphalen. 2. Doesburg, where the old Yſſell falleth into the new Yſſell, or the trench called Foſſa Druſiana, communicating thereunto its name. 3. Brookhurſt, a County of it ſelf, which antiently had its particular Governour. 4. Lochen upon the River Berkell. 5. Tſheerenbergue, a Town and County. 6. Groll, taken by the Prince of Orange for the States Confederate, Anno 1627. 7. Brederverd, a town of war, and ſubject to the change of Maſters, as ſuch places are. 8. Zutphen, or Zuidfen, ſo called of the Southern ſituation of it amongſt the Fennes, on the right ſhore of the Yſſell, where it receiveth in it the River Berkel, which runs thorow the Town. A Town indifferently well built, as well for private as publick edifices; a diſtinct State in Civil matters, but in Spiritual ſubject (in former times) to the Biſhop of Munſter: a thing obſervable, and not to be paralleld elſewhere, that the four chief Towns and quarters of one Province only, ſhould appertain (as here in Guelderland) to four ſeveral Dioceſes. Of which there may ſome reaſon be aſſigned for Zutphen, in regard it is a State more antient than that of Guelderland it ſelf, and not depending antiently on the fortunes of it: united to it by the marriage of Otho of Naſſaw, the firſt Earl of Guelderland, with Sophia daughter and heir of Wickman, the laſt Earl of Zutphen. So as this Earldom ended when that firſt began. After this it continued ſubject to the Earls and Dukes of Gueldres, til the revolt of Holland, and the other Provinces, from the King of Spain; at what time it was beſieged for the States by the Earl of Leiceſter: at the ſiege whereof fell that gallant Gentleman Sir Philip Sidney, of whom our Britiſh Epigrammatiſt thus verſifieth.

Zutphen.

Digna legi ſcribis, facis & digniſſima ſcribi;
Scripta probant doctum te tua, facta probum.

Thou writ'ſt things worthy reading, and didſt doe
Things worthy writing too;
Thy Acts thy valour ſhow,
And by thy works we do thy learning know.

Groining-land.

And though upon the losse of that gallant man (nephew and heir unto that Earl) the siege was raised at the present; yet was it re-inforced again, Anno 1590. and the Town then taken: continuing ever since in the confederacy of the States united.

GROINING-LAND, hath on the East, East-Friseland; on the West, West-Friseland; on the North, the main Ocean; on the South, Over-Yssel; so wedged in as it were betwixt both Frieselands, that some hold it to be but a part of the West. It conraineth under it the Country called the Ommelands, (corruptly for the Emmelands, as I conjecture, because lying along the River Ems) and therein 145 Burroughs and Villages. The chief whereof are 1. Dam, near the Ems, bordering on East-Friseland. 2. Keykirk. 3. Old-Haven, standing on the Sea. 4. As for the Town of Groning it self, it is rich, great, and very well built, situate amongst divers small streams which run thorow it; and having also divers Chanels for conveyance of waters, which adds much to the safety and strength thereof. A Town of great jurisdiction, both within and without, judging absolutely without appeals, in causes both Civil, and Criminal; in Spirituals subject heretofore to the Bishop of Munster, till made one of the new Bishopricks, by King Philip the second, Anno 1559. And though the Prince in Civil causes had his Officer or Lieutenant there; yet in Criminal the Town was Soveraign, and granted pardons as Soveraign of the whole estate, paying to the Prince for all duties yearly, but 6000 Crowns. Both Town and Country antiently belonged to the Bishops of Utrecht, by whose negligence in defending them, they submitted their estate to the Dukes of Guelderland. But the Dukes of Saxonie laying some claim to it, disturbed this agreement for a time; during which Ezardus the Earl of East-Friseland possessed himself of it; but not able to make good his unjust possession, sold his estate therein to the Duke of Gueldres, Anno 1514. to whom of right it did belong. Afterwards in the year 1536. they put themselves under the command of Charles the fifth, but with the reservation of all their Privileges, and antient Liberties; for preservation of the which, in danger to be over-born by the power of the Spaniard, they confederated with the rest of the united States, Anno, 1594. and so still continue.

The antient Inhabitants of these Countries were the Menapii, and Sicambri, very valiant people possessing Guelderland; and the Majores Frisii, which were planted in Groyning, and the rest of Friseland. Of these the Sicambri were accompted the most valiant people, uniting with other Nations in the name of French, and by that name, possessing with the rest of those Nations, the mighty Empire of the West. In the division whereof, by the posterity of Charles the Great, these Countries were first part of the Kingdom of Austrasia, or East-France, afterwards of the German Empire: governed at the first by Guardians, or Protectors, created by the people in the reign of Charls the Bald; the two first being Wickard, and Lupold, (or Leopold) two Brethren; who fixing their chief Seat in the Castle of Gueldres, occasioned the whole Country to be called Guelderland. But they, and their Successors, by what name or title soever called, were in effect but Provincial Officers, accomptable to the Emperours for their administration; the first free Prince hereof being Otho of Nassaw, who having to his first wife the Lady Aleide, daughter of Wickard, the last Guardian; was by the Emperour Henry the third made first Earl of Guelderland; adding thereto the State of Zutphen, by a second marriage, as is said before. In Rainold the ninth Earl it was made a Dukedom, by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1339. sold by Duke Arnold (justly incensed at his ungracious son Adolph) to Charles Duke of Burgundie, for 92000 Florens of ready money, and an Annual pension, An. 1472. But notwithstanding this Agreement, Adolph (upon the death of Charls) possessed himself of it, and left it unto Charles his son; who finally surrendred it unto Charls the fift, Anno 1547.

1079 1 Otho of Nassaw, the first Earl.
2 Gerard, the son of Otho by his first wife Aleide.
1131 3 Henry, the son of Gerard.
1162 4 Gerard II. son of Henry.
1180 5 Otho II. brother of Gerard.
1202 6 Gerard III. son of Otho the second.
1229 7 Otho III. son of Gerard, who walled the Towns of Ruermond, Arnhem, Bomel, Goch, Wageningen, and Harderwick.
1271 8 Rainold, son of Otho the third, taken and imprisoned till his death, by
1343 10 Rainold III. son of Raynold the 2d. molested with continual wars with his brother Edward, by whom taken, and imprisoned till his dying day.
1371 11 Edward, the son of Rainold the 2d. by Eleanor the daughter of Edw. the third of England, his 2d. wife, dyed the same year with his brother; the last of the male issue of Otho of Nassaw.
1371 12 Mary, (by some called Joan) Sister of Edw. by the same venter, and wife of Wil. E. of Gulick.
13 William, son of William Duke of Gulick, and Mary of Gueldres, admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the second.
14 Rainold IV. the brother of William.
15 Arnold of Egmond, son of John Lord of Egmond, and Mary his wife, daughter of Joan, the sister of Rainold, and William, the two last Dukes, succeeded in the estate of Gueldres; the

the Dukedom of Gulick being ſeized on by Adolph, ſon of William the firſt Duke of Berg, as the next heir male to the two laſt Dukes. Being afterwards taken, impriſoned, and moſt babarouſly handled by his own ſon Adolph, and delivered by Charles the Warlike, Duke of Burgundie, he ſold to him his eſtates of Gueldres, and Zutphen, to be injoyed by him after his deceaſe, Anno 1472.

1473 16 Adolph, the wicked ſon of Arnold, diſpoſſeſſed of his eſtate by the ſaid agreement which Duke Charls enjoyed for his life; after the death of the ſaid Charls, was reſtored to liberty by the Gauntois, Anno 1467. and made the General of their forces againſt Lewis the eleventh.

1477 17 Charles, ſon of Arnold, after long wars with the Princes of the houſes of Burgundie, and Auſtria, pretending the ſale and legacy of Duke Arnold, to Charles the Warlike, ſurrendred his eſtates unto Charles the fifth, to be enjoyed by him after his deceaſe, if he left no iſſue. According to which contract the Emperour Charles ſucceeded him in Gueldres and Zutphen, An. 1538, being the year of his deceaſe; after that time accompted in the number of the Belgick Provinces.

The Arms hereof were Quarterly, 1. Azure, a Lion Or, crowned Gules, for the Dukedom of Guelderland; 2. Azure, a Lion Gules, for the Earldom of Zutphen.

Thus have we ſeen a Country, which at the firſt erecting of theſe Eſtates, was nothing in a manner but bogs and mariſhes; and at the beſt but a continual wilderneſſe of woods and forreſts; by the great providence of the Princes, and extreme induſtry of the people, made the moſt populous, beſt-planted, and the wealthieſt Eſtate (for the bigneſſe of it) in the whole habitable world. And we have ſeen thoſe ſeveral Eſtates and Principalities, by Marriages, and other Contracts, reduced into the hands of the houſe of Burgundy: under the Princes of which great and illuſtrious Family, inferiour to no Kings of Chriſtendome for Power and Riches (eſpecially under Duke Philip the Good) the ſubjects hereof did ſo abound in wealth and plenty, that Philip de Commes, who then lived, affirmeth, that this Country ſeemed like the land of Promiſe. Some thought there was a purpoſe in this Duke Philip, of erecting theſe States into a Kingdom. Diverted from it by the difference and variety of Lawes and Privileges which thoſe people ſeverally lived under: not to be brought without great difficulty and diſtaſt, to one form of Government; yet might have done it if he would, as himſelf openly affirmed to the Embaſſadours of King Lewis the 11th. But Charles his ſon being more bent on the deſign, negotiated to that end with the Emperour Frederick, whom he met at Triers, Anno 1473. and doubtleſſe had obtained his purpoſe, upon the marriage of his daughter with Maximilian, Fredericks ſon (which was then propounded) had not his raſh engagement againſt the Swiſſers, and his untimely death therein, broke the courſe of theſe projects; which projects had they took effect, as in all probability they had but for that engagement, he had extended his Dominions all along the Rhene, and on both ſides of it, from the Alpes unto the German Ocean, and been the moſt conſiderable Prince at that time in Chriſtendome: all Elſats in high Germanie, being ſold, or mortgaged to him by the Duke of Auſtria, the Dukedom of Lorrein at his mercy; beſides, the hopes he had of the Earldom of Provence, intended to him by King Reny, which would have opened him a way to the Mediterranean. He being dead, the Government continued as before it was; each Province having its diſtinct Laws, and living according to their ancient Privileges; till the attempt of Philip the ſecond, King of Spain, moſt reſolutely (but unfortunately) bent to bring them under the command of that Crown, to cancell all their privileges, and new mould the Eſtate, according to his own will and pleaſure: occaſioning thereby the Revolt of a great part of the Country; and the ſetting up of a new Eſtate, oppoſite unto him, and deſtructive of his intereſſe in it. But before we come unto this change, we will firſt look upon the Princes, Power, Revenue, and other things conſiderable touching this Eſtate, whilſt it ſtood entire, under the Princes of the houſe of Burgundy, and

LORDS of BELGIUM.

1369 1. Philip the Hardie, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Earl of Flanders and Artois, the firſt great raiſer of this Houſe.

1404 2 John the Proud, Duke of Burgundie, &c.

1419 3 Philip the Good, added to his eſtates the Dukedoms of Brabant and Limbourg, the Marquiſat, and Machlyn, by the death of his Couzin Philip; the Earldoms of Hainalt, Holland, Zeland, and the Lordſhip of Weſt-Friſeland, by the reſignation and death of the Counteſs Jaqueline, whoſe next heir he was; the Dukedom of Luxemburg, and the Earldom of Namur, which he bought for money.

1467 4 Charles the Warlike, who bought the Eſtates of Gueldres and Zutphen; and held them peaceably all his life.

1476 5 Mary, the daughter and heir of Charles, married to Maximilian, ſon of the Emperour Frederick, from whom King Lewis the eleventh of France took the Dukedom of Burgundie, and the greateſt parts of the Counties of Burgundy, and Artois; unfortunately killed with a fall from her horſe, and an unſeaſonable modeſty in not ſuffering the Chirurgions to dreſſe her wound; the hurt which ſhe had taken being on her thigh.

1482 6 Philip III. ſon of Mary and Maximilian, to whom Charls the 8 of France reſtored all the places in Artois, and the County of Burgundy taken by his Father; married Joan daughter of Ferdinand and Isabel Kings of Spain.

1505 7 Charles II. Archduke of Austria, King of Spain, and Emperor of that name the fift: added to his Estate in these Countries, the Dukedom of Guelderland, the Earldom of Zutphen, the Lordships of Utrecht, Over-Yssell, and Groning.

1558 8 Philip IV. of Belgium, and the II. of Spain, invading these Countries against their privileges, was by a great part of them rejected from being their Prince, Anno 1581. which made him after a long and a bloody war, to surrender all his interests in them to 1599 9 Isabella Clara Eugenia his daughter, and Albert Archduke of Austria, whom he married to her: during whose Government, a truce for 12 years was made, and in the preface to that Truce, the Confederate Estates declared to be treated with as a Free Estate, to whom the Kings of Spain could pretend no title.

16 10 Philip V. of Belgium, and the IV. of Spaine, on the decease of the Arch-Dutchesse Isabella his Aunt, succeeded in the possession of some, and the title unto all the Belgick Provinces.

The ordinary Revenue of these Countries to the Dukes of Burgundie, and after to the Kings of Spain, before the breach, were estimated at three millions of Crowns yearly; which was more than any King in Christendom at those times received, the French only excepted: the very measuring of corn in the City of Antwerp, being farmed yearly for 100000 Crowns in ready mony; But the extraordinary was far greater: the Estates of these Countries in the year 1550 granting to Charles the fift an Aide, which they call the Noventale, amounting to 150000 crowns a moneth; and yet the Provinces of Luxembourg, Limbourg, Gueldres, and Groyning, were not rated to it; And it is said, that Philip the second at his first coming to the Estate, was presented with a grant of 40 millions of Florens, to be paid in few years. So that these Countries were the true Correlative of both his Indies: the loss of which, before the making of the truce, Anno 1609. cost him above 100 millions of Crowns, and the loss of 400000 men.

The Forces of these Princes by Land, may best be seen in the expedition of Charls (then Earl of Charolois) against Lewis the eleventh, whom Duke Philip the Good his Father furnished to that enterprise with 9000 Archers, and 1400 men of Arms, every one of which had five or six great horses attending on him: and at his setting forward, was told by his Father, (never accompted for a Braggart) that if he fell into any danger, he should not be abandoned for the want of 100000 fighting men. The said Duke having thus sent away his son, and being provoked by the indignities of those of Leige and Dinand, who revolted from him, suddenly raised an Army of 28000 horse, and a proportionable number of foot, for the chastisement of that proud and rebellious people. And Charls himself, succeeding on the death of his Father, in his unprosperous attempt upon the Switzers, had no less than 80000 men at the siege of Morat. As for their power at Sea, I find not that they kept any standing Navy, nor needed they so to do, as the case stood with them; considering that when they had occasion of any such service, they used to take up all the Ships which they found in their harbours (of which there never wanted good store) employing as many as they pleased, and dismissing the rest.

The principal order of Knighthood ordained by these Princes, was that of the Golden Fleece, first instituted by Duke Philip the Good (in imitation of the Order of S. George in England) Anno 1430. The name and fancy borrowed, as some conceive from Gedeons Fleece, from Jasons Fleece, as others think; but more probably from the Golden Fleeces of England, which brought him in so much gold and treasure in the way of custom. Their Habit is a Collar of Gold interlaced with irons, seeming to strike fire out of a Flint, (ex ferro flammam being the word:) at the end whereof hung the Toison d'Or, or Fleece of Gold. Their number at the first was but 25. (which is the number of Knights of the English Garter) increased afterwards by the same Duke Philip unto thirty one. Charls the first raised them to fifty one: And now the King of Spain hath assumed a liberty of making as many as he pleaseth: this being the only Military, or Civil Order of which those Kings have the bestowing; the orders of Alcantara, Calatrava, and the rest of Spanish institution, being rather Religious and Monastical, at the best but mixt. St. Andrews day, the day of the Installation.

In this great Pomp and Glory did these Princes live, as long as they continued in good terms with the subject Provinces; being masters of more goodly Jewels, magnificent furniture for their houses, and costly movables than any three of the greatest Princes in all Europe. And on the other side, the subjects whilst they lived in duty under so great Princes, attained unto the height of all worldly happiness: in their Apparell excessively gorgeous, in their Feasts and Banquets over-sumptuous, in their Manners dissolute; vices which usually accompany that kind of felicity. An happinesse too great to continue long. By the ambition and violence of Charls the Warlike, they were first plunged into a war against Lewis the eleventh; of which they did not only feel the present miseries, but lost all the Towns and Holds which they had in Picardy, with the whole Dutchy of Burgundy. And by a like, but better grounded Ambition of Charles the fift, they were exercised in continual wars against the French, who miserably harrowed and ransacked the Countries of Luxemburgh, Hainalt and Artois, bordering next unto them. Charles at his death commended them to the especial care of Philip his son, advising him to use them kindly, as those that were the chief supporters of his State and Glory: adding, that if he should deal otherwise with them, it would prove the ruine of his Fortunes. And on the other side, the People, to obtain his favour, presented him at his first entrance on the Government vernment, with a grant of 40 millions of Florens, as before was ſaid. But he, tranſported with ambition, and a Catholick zeal, not only forgot their love, but his Fathers counſell; and had no ſooner concluded a Peace with France, effected by the treaty of Cambray, Anno 1559. but preſently he caſt his thoughts on the ſubjection of this People to his will and pleaſure. For they were ſo fortified with privileges, which their former Princes had granted, and the latter had been ſworn to obſerve; that he wanted much of that abſolute and uncontrollable command, which he ſtrongly aimed at. Some of which privileges were, that the Prince could place no ſtranger, amongſt them, with juriſdiction over their Eſtates and perſons, in Offices of war or juſtice. 2. The Prince could give nothing to the Clergy; nor 3. leavy any ſubſidies, without the States of the Country. 4. But the main Prerogative was, that if the Prince by violence or wrong, did infringe any of the ſaid Charters and Franchiſes; the people after declaration thereof made, might go to election of a new Prince. This not a little grieved the Spaniards, that ſuch baſe and unworthy people (for ſo they eſteemed them) ſhould in ſuch liberty poſſeſſe ſo brave and rich a Country; their King bearing no title of Majeſty, or abſolute command over them. Beſides, the Reformation of Religion, which then began to grow to ſome ſtrength, moved the King to reduce them back to the Church of Rome, by the power and terrour of the Inquiſition; and by the erecting of ſome new Epiſcopall Sees amongſt them (for before there were but three in all) to ſettle ſome more conſtant courſe of Eccleſiaſticall Diſcipline. Againſt both which, when the people violently oppoſed, he then reſolved of bringing them by Spaniſh Rhetorick (that is, by the Sword and the Canon) to their old obedience. To theſe ends he ſends the Duke of Alva, an old and expert Captain (as having 60 years been a Souldier) with a puiſſant Army, to be his Vice-roy among them. He alſo gave him a Commiſſion of that large extent, that he might place and diſplace whom he would, and execute all ſuch as he could find oppoſite to his deſigns. At that time the two chief men among them were the Prince of Orange, and Count Egmont: the firſt more potent with the People; the latter, with the Souldiers. Had theſe two joyned together, they might eaſily have prevented D. Alva's entrance; but Egmont was ſo ſoothed up with Letters from Spain, that he believed not the intelligence which the Prince had, concerning the Dukes Commiſſion. The Earl exhorted the Prince to ſubmit himſelf to the pleaſure of the King, and ſo to prevent the ruine of his Houſe. The Prince deſired the Earl to maintain the Liberty of the Country; as for himſelf, He had rather be a Prince without a Houſe, than a Count without an Head. Being thus reſolved, the Prince retires to his friends at Naſſaw, in high Germany; the Earl ſtayeth to congratulate the entrance of the new Governour: who had no ſooner ſetled himſelf, but he intrapped the Counts of Horn and Egmond, and beheaded them, Anno 1567. Being thus rid of theſe two, with divers others of good quality, who living would have much hindred his proceedings; he quartered his Spaniards in the Towns and Provinces; ſpoiled the people, not of their Privileges only, but their Liberty. Amongſt the reformed he brought in the bloudy Inquiſition, and indeed ſo tyrannically did he behave himſelf, that the people were forced to a defenſive war, as well for their lives, as ſubſtance. This was a war of State not Religion; the moſt part of the Hollanders being Papiſts, at the time of their taking arms, During theſe troubles, the Prince of Orange was not idle, but he in one place, and Count Lodewick his brother, in another, kept Duke Alva imployed; though divers times not with ſuch fortunate ſucceſſe as they did expect. In the year 1572. Fluſhing was ſuppriſed by Voorſt, and Berland, as we have before ſaid. So alſo was the Brill in Voorne, an Iſland of Holland, by the Count de la March; and not long after, all Holland, except Amſterdam, followed the fortune and ſide of the Prince; together with all the towns of Zeland, Midleburg excepted, Anno 1573. Duke Alva being recalled, Don Lewis de Requiſens was appointed governor, during whoſe rule many of the Belgians abondoned their Country; ſome flying into Germany, others into France, moſt into England. After his death, and before the arrivall of Don John; the Prince and his party recovered ſtrength and courage again; till the comming of the Prince of Parma, who brought them into worſe caſe than ever. Yet Anno 1581. they declare by their writings directed to all people, that Philip of Spain was fallen from the Government: and take a new oath of the People, which bound them never to return to the Spaniſh obedience. This done, they elect Francis Duke of Anjou, heir apparent to the French King, and then in no ſmall hopes of marrying Queen Elizabeth of England, to be their Lord. But he intending rather to ſettle a Tyranny in himſelf, than to drive it from the Spaniard, attempted Antwerp, put his men into the town; but was by the valour of the Burgers ſhamefully repulſt, Shame of this ignoble enterpriſe, eſpecially grief for its ill ſucceſſe, took him out of the world. About which time, the eſtates of theſe Countries was thus by this Hieroglyphick expreſſed. A Cow repreſented the body of Belgium: there ſtood the King of Spain ſpurring her, the Queen of England feeding her, the Prince of Orange milking her, and Duke Francis plucking her back by the tail, but ſhe foul'd his fingers. During his unfortunate Government, Parma prevailed in all places, eſpecially after the death of William Prince of Orange, treacherouſly ſlain with a Piſtoll, Anno 1584. Now were the poor Hollanders truly miſerable; deſperate of pardon from their Prince, and having none to lead them, none to protect them, but ſuch as were likely to regard their own profit more than theirs. England was the only ſanctuary they had now left; to which they ſue, offering the Queen thereof the ſoveraignty of their Provinces; who had, if not a true, yet a plauſible title to them; As being generally deſcended from Edward he third, and Philip his wife, who was Siſter, and (as ſome ſay) Heir to William Earl of Hainalt, Holland, &c. If Margaret, from whom the right of Spain is derived, were daughter to Earl William, then was our Queen to ſucceed after Philip; who was rejected: if that Margaret were (as many write) his younger ſiſter, then was our Queen the undoubted Heir; her Predeceſſor Philippa being Earl Williams eldeſt ſiſter. But that

He-

Heroick Queen not disputing the right of the title, nor intending to herself any thing, save the honour of relieving her distressed neighbours, and providing for her own estate, by this diversion; took them into her protection. Under which the Belgian affairs succeeded so prosperously (I will not now stand upon the particulars) that before they would hearken to any treaty of peace, they forced the King of Spain to this conclusion, that he treated with them as with a Free Estate, abstracted from all right and title, which he might pretend unto the places which they were possessed of. This peace was concluded Anno 1609. since which time, they have kept Garrisons well disciplined, and as well paid: so that these Countries have in these late dayes been the Campus Martius, or School of defence for all Christendom, to which the youth of all Nations repair to see the manner of Fortifications, and learn the art of war. Thus did they for 40 years hold the staff against a most puissant Monarch, and in the end capitulated with great advantage; that it is observed, that whereas all other Nations grow poor by war, these only grow rich. Whereupon it is remarkable to consider into what follies and extremities Princes run, by using their people to the war. The Kings of France place most of their hopes in their Cavalrie, because in policy they would not that the Vulgar should be exercised in arms. Lycurgus gave a Law to the Lacedemonians, that they should never fight often with one enemie: the breaking whereof, made the Thebans, a small Common-wealth, to be their equals in power; Whereupon it was tartly said by Antalcidas to Agesilaus King of Sparta, that by his frequent warring on them, and fighting with them, he had made the Thebans good Souldiers against their wills. The Turks won the vast Empire they now possess, by making many and speedy wars. But now that policy being worn out of fashion, we see that (to omit Persia) the little and distracted Kingdom of Hungarie, hath for 200 years resisted their Forces. So was it between the Dukes of Austria, and the Switzers; and so it is betwixt the Spaniard, and Low-country men; who formerly being accounted a dull and heavy people, altogether unfit for the wars; by their continual combating with the Spaniard, are become ingenious, full of action, and great managers of causes appertaining to fights, either by Sea or Land. We may hereby also perceive, what advantage a small State gaineth by fortifying places and passages: there being nothing which sooner breaketh a great Army, and undoeth a great Prince, than to beleagner a well fortified town: for that herein he consumeth his time, and commonly loseth his men, credit, and money; as the Romans, before Numantia; the great Turk, in Malta; and Charls of Burgundie, before Nancie; For where war is drawn out of the field unto the wals, the Mattock and Spade being more necessary than the Sword and Spear; there the valour of the assailant is little available, because it wanteth its proper object.

Thus as before we brought these several Estates and Provinces into one hand; so now we have broke them into two; the one part continuing in obedience to the Crown of Spain, the other governing themselves as a State apart. Under the King remain the Dukedoms of Luxembourg, Limbourg, and Brabant, (some few towns excepted) the Marquisate of the Empire, the Earldoms of Hainalt, Namur, Artois and Flanders (except only St. Sluys) and the Lordship or Signeurie of Machlyn; with many places of importance in the Dutchie of Gueldres, to countervail the towns with-held from them in Flanders and Brabant. This is by far the greater part of the Country, and more fruitfull in regard of the Commodities there naturally growing; but as much inferiour to the other in power, and riches, by reason of their strength in Shipping, by which they have the command at Sea; and thereby draw the whole trade of Christendom, driven before at Antwerp, to Amsterdam, and other towns of their confederacy.

For the government of these Provinces, there is a Regent sent from the Court of Spain, whose authoritie is generally as great as that of the Kings; save that all matters of moment pass under the Kings name, and that all Officers of any great trust and concernment are appointed by him: and that all laws, decrees, sentences and negotiations are dispatched in his name. For the assistance of the Regent there is a Privie Councel, a Councel of State, and a Councel of Finances, by whom all things are ordered which concern the publick, the Regents authority co-operating and concurring with them: without which, though they may consult, they can execute nothing. And for the governance and well ordering of the several Provinces, there is in every one of them a Lieutenant, or Provincial Governor; subordinate to the Regent, and accomptable to him: and in each Province a particular Councel held in the Kings name, consisting of more or less Counsellors, (as the bigness of the Province is) for the most part Doctors or Licentiates of the Civill-Laws, with a President as the head thereof; which in some places they call the Parliament, after the manner of the French, and in some the Chancery. To these Courts all the Subjects do resort for justice, in causes both Criminal and Civil: to these are brought appeals from inferiour Judicatures, such as the Courts of great Towns, and particular Franchises: and from these lieth an appeal to the great Councel at Machlyn, supreme and superintendent unto all the rest.

When any thing is to be done which concerns the profit of the Prince, or otherwise is of publick moment, the Regent sendeth out letters in the Kings name to command the Estates, that is to say, the Clergy, the Nobility, and the principal Towns of every Province (except those of Luxembourg, Guelders, West-Friseland and Over-Yssell, who by special privilege cannot be called out of their own countries) to come before him. The place of their Assembly is for the most part at Bruxels, the Court and residence of the Regent; because the Brabanters are also privileged not to be summoned out of the Precincts of their own Province. Where being come, the States assemble not all together; but those of one Province at a time, so one after another: to whom the President or some one of the Councell of State proposeth in the Princes name, that which he demandeth: To which if any town oppose, then all which the rest have done is of no effect; nothing being granted by the Deputies, or States, of any Province; but with this condition, that all the reſt of the Eſtates do agree unto it. Without this punctual conſent of all parties intereſſed, the Prince can impoſe nothing, by their Laws, upon the Subject, nor alter any thing at all in the publick government.

And as the people are thus privileged in regard of the Prince, ſo are the Princes and Prelates privileged in regard of the Pope: it being agreed upon between them,

1. That the Prince is to give Clergie Beneſices, and the Pope to confirm them.
2. That neither Prelate nor Lay-perſon may be cited to Rome, but the Pope to ſend his Delegates or Commiſſioners into the Country.
3. The Pope not to give a Beneſice, nor grant a Pardon, nor ſend a Bull into the Country, without the leave of the Prince.
4. That no Clergy man can buy lands or other immoveables, without the Princes conſent. And
5. That the Prince hath power to viſit the Clergie, to ſee if they be well governed or not; and if they be not, to reform the abuſes.

Great privileges, if conſidered rightly; greater than which few Proteſtant Princes do pretend to in their own Dominions.

As for the Revenue raiſed by the Spaniard out of his part of this Eſtate, it is not eaſie to be gueſſed at; and of that which is, there comes but little to his Coffers. The expences of his Court there, is as great as ever, under any of the former Regents; and his charge of entertaining Souldiers for his Towns and Garriſons, greater than before. Nor doth it now ſtand with reaſon of State to lay any arbitrary taxes upon the people, leſt he exaſperate them to a ſecond Rebellion, or ſtartle them to ſome new Confederacies againſt his quiet.

Under the government of the Confederate Eſtates, are the Dukedom of Guelderland, excepting ſome few Towns in the hands of the Spaniard, the entire Earldoms of Holland, Zeland, and Zutphen, the Signeuries of Weſt-Friſeland, Utrecht, Over-Yſſel, Groining, the Town of Sluyes, with the Iſle of Caſſandt in Flanders, and many pieces of importance in the Dutchie of Brabant. This is the leſſer part by far, and far inferiour to the other in regard of the ſoil, but the more populous of the two, and by the induſtry and great trading of the people, the more rich and powerfull. Govern'd after their own old Laws, by the particular Eſtates of every Province, not yet united into one entire body of a Commonwealth; ſaving that for the better preſervation of their confederacie, the Commiſſioners of the ſeveral Provinces doe conſult together, whom they have honoured with the name of the States General.

The Eſtates of the particular Provinces, elected out of the principal Towns and places of moſt importance, do order the affairs thereof according to their antient privileges, rights, and cuſtoms, as well by themſelves as by their Colleagues and Officers whem they do appoint: and that as well for matters of State, as in point of Juſtice. For adminiſtration of the which, the Governour, Preſident and Counſellors of the Provincial Courts, have the cognizance of all caſes both civil and criminal; and in all cauſes of appeal from inferiour Courts, in each of which they do proceed without appeal, making their Acts and Commiſſions in the name of the ſaid Governours, Preſident, and Councel; but pronouncing ſentence and executing judgment, in right of the Soveraignty of the ſaid Province. And theſe Provincial States are choſen generally out of the Plebeians, or common people, and the Burgers (at the beſt) of the greater Townſhips: the Nobility and Gentry being ſo worn out, that in all Holland and Zeland there are not left above 3 families of Gentlemen; and thoſe compelled to live after the Plebeian faſhion for fear of envy, and to avoid the inſolency of the ſaucie Clowns; who out of rudeneſſe and the deſire of equality, hate nothing more among them than the name of a Gentleman.

Out of theſe Provincial States, which hold not for any certain and determinate time, but only during the pleaſure of the communtie for which they ſerve, are choſen one or more for each ſeveral Province, according to the condition and capacity of thoſe which are choſen to reſide at the Hague, there to conſult of the affairs which concern the publick: but ſo, that be they more or leſſe out of every Province, they make amongſt them but one ſuffrage, when any thing is to be put unto the Vote. And theſe they call the States General, firſt, becauſe a collected body out of all the Provinces; & ſecondly, becauſe they are not properly to deal in any matters of particular concernment, which are determinable abſolutely by the States Provincial, but only in ſuch things as concern the general good of the whole Eſtate, as treating with Ambaſſadours, making war and peace, &c. For their aſſiſtance in the which, there is a Councel of State made up of the Governours and ſome eminent men of every Province (in which the Ambaſſadour of England, as long as we held Fluſhing, and the other Cautionary Towns, had his voice or ſuffrage) by whoſe advice they diſpoſe of all things which concern the publike. But ſo, that if any difficulty do appear in the buſineſſe, they conclude nothing, till they have the approbation and conſent of the particular Cities, and Provinces for which they are choſen; to whom they are accomptable for their adminiſtration, and by whom revocable whenſoever they pleaſe.

The Revenue of this Eſtate doubtleſſe is exceeding great, the Army which they keep in continual entertainment, conſiſting of no leſſe than 30000 men; which they can draw into the field, leaving the Forts and Towns very well provided: yet ſo well paid, that we never read of any mutiny amongſt them for want thereof. The whole charge, with the entertainment of Captains and ſuperiour Officers, is ſaid to amount to 500000 l. per annum, raiſed on the people by Exciſe laid upon all commodities, and many taxes of like nature, ſo inſupportable in themſelves, and amongſt men, which would be thought to live in a free State; that ſhould the Spaniard or any Prince in Chriſtendom lay but half ſo much upon their Subjects, it would occaſion a Revolt. So that whereas one of the firſt cauſes of their falling off from the King of Spain, was to free themſelves from taxes and impoſitions, illegally (as they ſaid) ſaid) inforced upon them; they have drawn upon themſelves more arbitrary and illegal payments, than any Nation in the World. So little have they got by the change of government. Touching their power at Sea, we have ſpoke already. All I ſhall now adde to it, is by way of inſtance, which is, that in the year 1587. the King of Denmark on pretence of ſome diſpleaſure, arreſted 608. ſhips of theirs, of all ſorts at one time, in the Sound; and that the next year after they ſet out upon very ſhort warning, an hundred good men of war to joyn with England, againſt the invincible Armada, which then threatned both. To conclude, there is nothing wanting to theſe Countries, wherewith the God of all bleſſings doth enrich a Nation, but a gracious Prince, unitie of Religion, and a quiet Government: which if it pleaſed the Almighty to confer upon them, they would ſurpaſs all neighbouring States in treaſure, potency, content, and all worldly happineſs.

OF GERMANIE.

GERMANIE is bounded on the Eaſt, with Pruſſia, Poland, and Hungarie; on the Weſt, with France, Switzerland, and Belgium; on the North, with the Baltick Seas, and ſome part of Denmark; on the South, with the Alps, which part it from Italy. By which accompt the modern Germany much differeth from that deſcribed by Tacitus, and others of the Roman writers: that comprehending the three Kingdoms of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, with ſo much of the Kingdom of Poland as lieth on this ſide of the River Viſtula; but bounded on the Eaſt, with the Rhene, and on the South with the Danow: the modern Germanie containing on the further banks of thoſe Rivers, five whole Roman Provinces, that is to ſay, Noricum Ripenſe, and Mediterraneum, Rhœtia ſecunda, Belgica, and Germania prima, with ſome parts of Rhœtia prima, and Germania ſecunda; but terminated with the Danes and the Baltick Sea.

It was firſt called thus by the Romans (as ſome conceive) who ſeeing the people both in cuſtoms, ſpeech, and courſe of life, ſo like thoſe of Gallia, called them the Germans to the Gauls: the word Germanus in the Latine, ſignifying a brother of the whole bloud, (as our Lawyers phraſe it) that is to ſay, a brother both by father and mother; thoſe which have the ſame mother, but divers fathers, being called Fratres uterini. And of this mind is Strabo, who ſpeaking of the great reſemblance which was betwixt theſe Nations, in manners, ſpeech, cuſtoms, and way of life; concludes it thus, that the Romans did with very good reaſon call them Germans, cum fratres eos Gallorum hoc nomine vellent oſtendere; intending to ſignifie by that name, that they were the brethren of the Gauls. But this is to be underſtood of thoſe people only, which dwelt next to Gaul, and not of all the Nations which inhabited in this vaſt Continent, according to the ancient extent thereof, it being very well obſerved by Tacitus, that Germany was at firſt Nationis non Gentis nomen, the name of ſome of the Nations only, not of all the Country; the name in proceſs of time ſpreading over all that large tract of ground, and thoſe ſcattered Nations which were either conquered by them, or incorporate with them. Others will have the name to be meerly Dutch, deriving it from Ger, which ſignifieth all, and the word man, ſignifying in that language as in ours; whence alſo they derive the name of Almans, by which they would imply that the Almans or Germans are a very warlike Nation, a people that have in them, nihil niſi virile, nothing not worthy of a man. Bocartus ſomewhat near to this, telling us that Ger in the antient Gallick, did ſignifie as much as Guerre in the modern French; would have them at their firſt coming over the Rhene to be called Germans, by the Gauls, that is to ſay, men of war, (or Gens d'Armes in the preſent French) by reaſon of the great and many victories obtained by them.

The like diverſity I find for the name of Almans; For though ſome gave them the name of Almans from the ſame original, from whence they fetch the name of Germans, as was ſaid before: yet others as probably conjecture, that they had that name becauſe they conſiſted of ſo many ſeveral Nations, coming coming out of the North and North-east hither; that they seemed to be a Hotch-poth of all sorts of men, kneaded into one name and Nation, which is the conceit of Asinius Quadratus. But for my part I do conceive (supposing the name of Almans to be Dutch originally) that the whole Country was not called Almain, till such time as the Princes of the Dukedom of Almain (since called Suevia, or Schwaben) did possesse the Empire: which continuing in that potent familie near 100 years, might very well occasion them to be called the Emperours of Almain, or the Almain race; and so impart that name to the Empire also. And for the Almains naturally and properly so called, (of whom we shall speak more when we come to Suevia) I see no Etymology more agreeable to true Antiquity, than to derive the name from Mannus, the son of Tuisco, one of their Gods, and a principal Founder of this Nation, (Tuisconem Deum, & filium Mannum, originem gentes conditoresq;,) as is said by Tacitus: the people being called Alemanni (with a double n) in all antient writers, as men that did derive themselves from this Mannus, the son of Tuisco. In like sort, as I think, the Marco-manni inhabiting the Countries of Moravia, were so called, as the Manni of the Marches, or out-borders of Germanie; and not the Markmans, as if they were men of mark, the only men of fame and honour of all those Nations, which might as well be prefixed from the Dutch original, as that of All-man, in the meaning by them pretended. And unto this opinion I am swayed the rather, because I find the Dutch Nation generally so much inclined, to derive their original from Tuisco, (from whom the Teutones inhabiting about Brandenbourg, may well fetch their Pedegree;) the name of Dutch-land, or Dutch-men, coming near in sound to Tuisc-land, and Tuisc-men: In which I shall subscribe to Verstegans opinion, though for the most part I look upon him, but as the second part of Goropius Becanus.

But being the Etymologies of the names of most ancient Nations, are very uncertain, and for the most part founded on conjectures only; let us leave the name a while and survey the Country; the length whereof (according to the truest and exactest measurement) from East to West, that is to say, from the Vistula, or Wixell, to the Rhene, is estimated at 840 Italian miles; the breadth from North to South, that is to say, from the Ocean to the Town of Brixen in Tyrol, 740 of the same miles. So that the figure of it being near a square, it may take up 3160 miles in compasse, or thereabouts. Situate in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and tenth Climates, the longest day in the most Southern parts, being 15 hours and an half; and in the most Northern, 17 hours and a quarter.

In this compasse and extent of ground are supposed to live 10 millions of people. The men of the poorer sort laborious, painfull, and of a sincere and honest carriage; the Nobles for the most part either Scholars or Souldiers, and true lovers of honour; though Tacitus hath otherwise resolved it, affirming that the Gaules fight for liberty, the Belgians for honour, and the Germans for gain. Which yet is true enough of the common Souldiers, who if they fail of pay, fail in courage presently. Of both sorts they are generally tall and big, of great bones, much flesh, and large sinews; but commonly of such a phlegmatick constitution, that they have not spirit enough to manage such a masse of flesh as they bear about them. Which want of natural heat to concoct that humour, makes them for the most part to be men of a bright, or light-brown hair, and fair complexions. They are little addicted to Venus, and very much to Bacchus; whence the Proverb, Vivere Germanorum est bibere; and the old Verses,

Germani possunt cunctos tolerare labores,
O utinam possent tam bene ferre sitim.

The Dutch themselves to labour well inure;
O would they thirst could half so well indure.

This love unto their liquor, together with their natural temper, maketh them fat and corpulent. Whereupon Pope Julio the second, stiling the Spaniards birds of the air, because of their ambition; the Venetians and Genoeses, fishes of the sea, because so much accustomed to Navigation: called the Germans, by the name of the Beasts of the field. And when Augustus was resolved to take unto himself the Supream government of Rome, he was advised by Agrippa to choose a guard of Germans to attend upon him. The reason was (as Dion giveth it) because in those great bodies there was little malice hidden, and lesse subtilety; and that they were a people that took more pleasure to be commanded than to command. In matters of war this people have been formerly in a measure famous; yet not so much by the valour or conduct of their Captains (for they have had but few such) as by their own hardinesse. They withstood the Romans 210 years, afflicting and troubling them more in that space, than either the Carthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, or Parthians; and even at the last (saith Tacitus) Triumphati magis sum quam victi. In our times the Rutters and Lansknights of Germany (for so they call their horse and foot) have been much imployed: but more by reason of their numbers, easily raised out of so large a Country, than any opinion of their valour; being slow of motion, dull of apprehension, fearfull of putting any thing to the chance of war. By reason of which fearfullnesse as they are very cruell upon all advantages, not sparing either age or sex when they get the victory: so are they apt to run upon any Alarm; not to be rallied, if once routed, upon any perswasions. Insomuch as Charles Count of Mansfield, General of an Army of 50000 fighting men, but most of this Nation, was forced to suffer a small Army of 10000 Turks to passe by his trenches, being then strongly encamped before Strigonium, (now Gran) a Town of Hungarie, and to victual the Town before his face: not daring to set upon them or disturb their purpose, for fear lest being lustily charged, his Germans would give back and indanger all. And yet beſides theſe weakneſſes they have ſome great faults. One of which is a cuſtome, if their wages be not duly paid, (though it be in the very midſt of a battell) to cry Guelt, Guelt, throw down their weapons, and ſuffer themſelves to be cut in pieces by the Enemy. And ſo they ſerved Frederick the Electour Palatine at the battell of Prague. The other is an extreme humour of ſpoil and plunder: on which they are ſo bent whereſoever they come, that ſuch as entertain them have juſt cauſe to ſay, that they receive more damage by them than they do by their enemies. Two undeceiveable notes of mercenarie valour.

The women are of a good complexion, but by reaſon of their intemperance in eating and drinking, much given to corpulency: women of a good carriage (as the ſaying is) good Bearers, and as fruitfull breeders. Severely obſequious to their Husbands, whom many of good rank ſerve at the table with Trenchers and other neceſſaries, and take away when he hath done; eating the reſidue apart with and amongſt their Maids: ſcarce ſitting down with him once a week, and then too at the lower end, or at ſome ſuch diſtance. And though the women by their Laws, have a property in the goods which they bring with them at their marriage, or are given them after, (ſo as the Husband hath but the uſe of them only;) and may diſpoſe of them by their laſt Will, at the time of their death; yet is their condition thereby little better; the Husband being no leſſe churliſh and imperious than he would be otherwiſe. Which made Caracalla to ſay often, that only that Nation knew how to rule their Wives, which added the Feminine Article to the Sun, and the Maſculine to the Moon, as the Germans do. Moſt of them, as well Wives as Virgins, (except perſons of honour) uſe to go bare footed within doors, and ſeldome put on ſhoes or ſtockings, but when they are to go abroad on their occaſions. A thing that ſeems the more ſtrange in regard of the extreme coldneſs of the Country, which is ſo fierce, that generally they lodge within two Feather beds both in ſummer and winter: and in moſt houſes have their ſtoves, of which the doors and windows are kept very cloſe, as well to retain the heat, as to keep out the cold. Which though they may be uſefull and inoffenſive in Gentlemens Houſes; yet in the common Innes where all ſorts of people are neceſſitated to throng together, the il ſmels, never purged by admitting any freſh air, are ready to ſtifle and choak up the ſpirits of raw Travellers, not accuſtomed to them.

The diet of Germany, France, and Italy, is by a Traveller thus cenſured: the Germans have much meat, but ſluttiſhly dreſt; the French little, but neatly cooked; the Italians neither the one nor the other. And to ſay truth, the Germans have meat enough: the people being generally of good ſtomachs, and either by nature or ill cuſtome, exceſſive both in eating or drinking; ſeldom riſing from the table till they have conſumed all which was ſet before them. Inſomuch as in ſome places it is provided by Law, that in their feaſts they ſhall not ſit above five hours at the Table. During which time, if by intemperance either in eating or drinking, a man diſgorge his foul ſtomach in his fellows lap, or piſſe under the Table, it is no diſgrace to him; nor at any time taken notice of to his reproach. Which humour of gormandizing and exceſſive drinking, is not only cheriſhed among the Vulgar, but even among their greateſt Princes: who beſide what they do in this kind themſelves, have their drinking champions, as well to anſwer all challenges, as to challenge all comers, contending with each other, as a point of State, whoſe Cellar ſhall afford the greateſt and moſt capable Veſſels.

The title of the Father deſcends to all the Children; every ſon of a Duke being a Duke; and every Daughter a Dutcheſs; a thing which the Italians hold ſo ridiculous, that they put it in the forefront of this facetious Satyre. The Dukes and Earls of Germany, the Dons of Spain, the Meunſieurs of France, the Biſhops of Italy, the Nobility of Hungary, the Lairds of Scotland, the Knights of Naples, and the younger brethren of England, make a poor company. For by this common aſſuming of the Fathers honour, and parting his Lands among all the brethren, the Nobility is beyond reaſon multiplyed, and no leſs impoveriſhed: there being not long ſince, 17 Princes of Anhalt, and 27 Counts of Mansfield; to moſt of which, their Arms have been the beſt part of their riches; & nihil niſi arma & manus, & in his omnia; as Tacitus once ſaid of the antient Britains. And yet there is not one of this poor Nobility that will vouchſafe to marry with the daughter of the wealthieſt Merchant; or ſuffer any of their ſiſters to be married to any under the degree of a Nobleman: nor any juſter cauſe of a diſheriting their children, then ignoble marriages; never permitting the iſſue of ſuch a Bed to ſucceed in any of their Fees, Eſtates, or titles, by means whereof though they debar themſelves of ſuch acceſſions of wealth, as matches of that kind might bring them: yet, to the great honour of their generoſity in this particular, they preſerve the pure ſtream of their bloud from running into muddy chanels; and keep the ſpirits of brave men, though they want the fortunes.

The Languages here ſpoken are the French in Lorrein, and ſome Towns of the Biſhop of Triers; the Italian in the higheſt parts of Turol, which lye next to the Common-wealth of Venice; the Scalvonian ſpoken in Bohemia, Moravia, and ſome part of Luſatia: and the high Dutch, the general Language of the Country. A language very antient doubtleſs (though I am not ſo much a Goropian as to think it ſpoke in Paradiſe, or before the Flood,) and ſuch as by reaſon of the little or no impreſſion which the Roman armies made upon this country, hath leſs Commixture with the Latine, than any which is uſed in theſe Weſtern parts, (the Welch excepted) and is very harſh by reaſon of its many Conſonants.

This Country was eſteemed by Tacitus to be rude and barren, containing nothing but unpeopled Foreſts, unprofitable Heaths, and unhealthfull Pools. Germaniam informem terris, aſperam cœlo, triſtem cultu aſpectuque, as he further addeth. And ſuch no doubt it was in thoſe times wherein Tacitus lived: the people not being civilized, nor the Country cultivated, nor any means found out to rectifie the ſharpneſs of that Nothern air. But he who doth obſerve it now, cannot but confeſs that there is no Country in the World either better planted, or repleniſhed with more goodly and Gallant Cities:

being alſo in moſt parts both pleaſant, healthy and profitable, abounding with mines of ſilver, and inferior metals, plentifull in corn and wines, with which they ſupply the defect of other Nations; as alſo with Fleſh, Fiſh, Linnen, Quickſilver, Allom, Saffron, Armour, and other Iron-works. The Arable lands ſo ſpacious in the Eaſtern parts, that the Husbandman going forward with his Plough in the morning, turned not back again till noon; ſo making but two furrows for his whole dayes work. For this Verſtegan is my Author, and if it be not credible, let him bear the blame.

Souldiers of moſt eminency in the elder times, were 1. Arminius, the Prince of the Cheruſci, who overthrew Quintilius Varus, and the Roman Legions, 2. Witikind, the laſt King of the Saxons: for the middle ages, 3. Otho the firſt, 4. Frederick Barbaroſſa, 5. Rodulph of Habsburg, Emperours and Kings of Germany, 6. Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony. 5. And in the laſt Century of years, 6. Frederick the ſecond Electour Palatine, who made good Vienna againſt the Turks; 7. Albert of Brandenburg, of whom more hereafter; 8 Erneſt Earl of Mansfield, 9. John George of Jagerndorf, 10. Albert Wallenſtein Duke of Frideland, and divers other of late days.

Scholars of note the elder times afforded none, nor the middle many; learning being here ſo rare in the middle of the eighth Century, that Vigilius Biſhop of Salizburg was condemned of hereſie for holding that there were ſome Antipodes. In the next age there flouriſhed Rhabanus Maurus, Haimo of Halberſtade, Walufriaus Strabus, men learned for the times they lived in. And in the following times, Ockam, a ſtout defender of the rights of the Empire, againſt the Encroachmenss of the Pope; Otho Friſingenſis the Hiſtorian, Albertus Magnus the Philoſopher; of which laſt it is ſaid, that he made the Statua of a man, which with the help of artificial Engines could ſpeak articulately; and was the work of 50 years. Then in the days of our Grandfathers, we have, 1. Martin Luther, that great inſtrument of the reformation. 2. Philip Melanchthon his Coadjutor in that work, but of more excellent parts, and far better temper; thence called the Phœnix of that Age. 3. Joachim Camerarius, a great friend of Philip. 4. Martin Chemnitius, a ſolid and laborious writer. 5. Flacius Illyricus, the chief Author of the Magdeburgian Centuries, and Father of the Rigid Lutherans. 6. Sebaſtian Munſter, an induſtrious Coſmographer, and a learned Linguiſt. 7. Silburgius, and 8. Buxdorfius, as great Linguiſts as he: not to deſcend to further inſtances in thoſe, who have ſo filled the Marts of Francfort in theſe later times.

But the greateſt excellency of this people lieth in the Mechanical part of learning, as being eminent for many Mathematical experiments, ſtrange water-works, Medicinal extractions, Chymiſtry, the Art of Printing, and inventions of like noble nature, to the no leſſe benefit than admiration of the World. Amongſt which I cannot chuſe but inſtance in that work of Regiomontanus, an excellent Mathematician, and a cunning Artizan, ſpoken of by Keckerman; who at the coming of the Emp. Maximilian to the City of Nuremberg, made a wooden Eagle, which flew a quarter of a mile out of the Town to meet him; and being come to the place where he was, returned back of its own accord, and ſo accompanied him to his lodging. A thing if true (as the Relator was a man of too much gravity to abuſe the world with an untruth) exceedingly beyond that miracle of a flying Dove, for which Archytas is ſo famed amongſt the Antients. Exceeded only by himſelf in a like invention, which was that of an Iron Fly, (the greater Miracle of Art, becauſe leſſe in quantity) which at a Feaſt, to which he had invited ſome of his eſpecial friends, flew from his hand about the room, and returned again, as is affirmed by Peter Ramus. Expreſſed thus by Divine Du Bartas.

Once as this Artiſt, more with mirth than meat,
Feaſted ſome friends, whom he eſteemed great;
From his learn'd hand an Iron Flie flew out,
And having flown a perfect Round, about,
With wearied wings return'd unto her Maſter,
And as judicious on his arm he plac'd her.
O divine wit, that in the narrow Womb
Of a ſmall Flie could find ſufficient room
For all thoſe Springs, Wheeles, Counterpoiſe, and chains,
Which ſtood inſtead of life, and ſpur, and reigns.

And amongſt theſe I reckon Bertholdus Swart, a Franciſcan Fryer, the inventer (though by accident) of the fatal inſtrument, the Gun, Studious in Chymiſtry, he mingled dryed earth, ſulphur, and ſome other ingredients, which he had put into a Mortar, covered with a ſtone; and ſtriking fire to light a Candle, as the night came on, a ſpark by chance fell into the Mortar, and catching hold of the Sulphur and other minerals, with great violence blew up the ſtone wherewith it was covered. Amazed at which, he made trial ſeverally of theſe ingredients, to find out which of them it was which produced that effect, which having diſcovered, he cauſed an iron pipe to be made, crammed it with Sulphur, Saltpetre and ſtones; and putting fire to it, ſaw with what violent noiſe and fury it diſcharged it ſelf. This invention he is ſaid to have firſt communicated to the Venetians, Anno 1330. or thereabouts, who having been often vanquiſhed by the Genoys, and driven almoſt to a neceſſity of yeelding to them, by the help of their Guns, (Bombards they were then called) gave unto their enemies a notable diſcomfiture. And this was the firſt battel that ever thoſe warlike pieces had a part in; which, not long after, put to ſilence all the engines and devices wherewith the antients were wont to make their batteries. The next that made uſe of this inſtrument were the Inhabitants of the Baltick Sea; and not long after them, the Engliſh, at the ſiege of Calice, Anno 1347. about which time, they began alſo to be uſed in Spain. The French, it ſeemeth, learned the uſe of them from the Engliſh:

and the first benefit received by them, was the death of that famous Leader, Thomas Montacute Earl of Salisbury, who at the siege of Orleance was slain with a great shot, Anno 1425. Twenty years after this, An. 1445. they were first used in Spain, at the siege of Septenil, a Town of the Kingdom of Granada, by the Castilians, and after by degrees made common to the rest of that Continent. And being grown common in this Continent, as well unto the Jewes and Moors as unto the Christians, it was not long before they taught it to the Turkes. For the Jews being forced to abandon Spain, Anno 1492. betook themselves to Greece, and other parts of the Turks Dominions, to whom they shewed the Art of making Ordnance, Gunpowder, Herquebuzes, sufficiently since used to the hurt of Christendom. But somewhat before this the Turks had been in part beholding for them, to the wars they had with the Venetians; beholding I say, for notwithstanding the harm received by them at first, yet afterwards growing expert in managing of them, they gave unto Ussan Cassanes, and Hysmael, two of the most mighty Emperours of Persia, two memorable overthrows, by the help of their great Ordnance only. The Portugals were in this Art the Tutors to the Persians: for as Solyman the Turkish Emperour objected against them, they not only aided Tamas the Sophi with certain Herquebuciers, but also sent him workmen to shew him the use and making of Artillery. These great pieces at the first invention were rude, unwieldy, and charged with stone bullets only: but by degrees they came to that perfection, both for the wall, and the hand, which they now have. Whether now Archery or Gunning be to be preferred, I stand not here to determine; only this I am sure of, that victories have been of late purchased with lesse expence of blood and life, than ever formerly. But of this Theam more perhaps hereafter, when we shall come to take the Parthian Archery into consideration.

The Religion of this Country it is not easie to name, considering so many are here allowed; Jewes being intermixt with Christians, and these divided into Papists and Protestants; the latter also divided into Lutherans, Calvinists, &c. The Christian faith first planted here, if Dorotheus Bishop of Tyre be of any credit, by S. Tho. surnamed Didymus one of the Twelve. But being there is little trust unto his Relations, the best were to say with the Magdeburgians and the Martyrologies, that the Germans had not all the same Apostle: That the Gospel was first preached amongst the Rhœtians and Vindelici by S. Lucius of Cyrene; amongst those of Noricum, by S. Mark; by S. Crescens at Mentz, S. Clemens at Mets in Lorrein; all of them Apostolical men, and of the number of the 70. after that by S. Maternus at Colen, and by S. Eucherius at Triers. That the faith was planted very early in these Countries, Irenæus the renowned Bishop of Lyons, Anno 170. is sufficient evidence; who takes notice of it: and that it prospered very well, and took very good root, appeareth by the Bishop of Ments, Triers, Wormes, Spires, Basil, and Strasbourg, subscribing to the Council of Colen in the reign of Constantius the son of Constantine the Great, Anno 347. But the light hereof being extinguished for a time, by those barbarous Nations, who fell upon these out-parts of the Roman Empire, began to shine again, on the conversion of the French, in all parts of this Country: the Conquests and example of this puissant Nation, giving great incouragement thereunto. In which, as those of other Countries doe not want their honour, so the greatest part thereof belongs to the English Saxons: Willibrod the first Bishop of Utrecht, Willibald of Aichstat, Swibert of Virden, Willibald of Breme, and specially Boniface the Archbishop of Mentz, being most gloriously fortunate in that sacred service. The Moravians, Bohemians, and others farther off, came not in till afterwards. Not fully converted to the faith, they began to suck in the corruptions of the Church of Rome; discerned and opposed by John Husse, and Hierom of Prague, Bohemian Divines: who by reason of the marriage of King Richard the second of England with the daughter of Wenceslaus Emperour and King of Bohemia, had opportunity to be acquainted with the preachings of Wiclef; the points of whose Doctrine they approved and propagated. But these two being burnt at Constance, by the decree of that Council, their followers in Bohemia would not so give over; but after many sufferings and much bloodshed, obtained at last a toleration of the Emperour Sigismund their King: more able to make good his word in his own Dominions, than he had been to save the two Martyrs from the fire at Constance; to whom he had granted his safe conduct, for their coming and going. In this condition they remained, under the name of those of the Sub utraque, or Calistini, because of their administring the Sacraments in both kinds, till the rising of Luther: who justly offended at the impious and unwarrantable assertions of Frier Tekel, and others of the Popes Pardon-mungers; first opposed their doings, and after questioned that authority by which they acted: falling from one point to another, till he had shaken the foundations of the Roman Fabrick. Of the successe of his undertaking we shall speak but little, as in a thing well known to all men of knowledge. Suffice it in this place to say, that his Doctrine was not only received in Germany, but generally imbraced in the great Kingdomes of Denmark & Swethland, with the Provinces and Islands appertaining to them, in great part of Poland, Hungary, and Transylvania, as far almost as to the banks of the Euxine Sea; but for the progresse of it here, (which we are more especially at this time to inquire into) it was so well approved of, that the Dukes of Saxony, Brunswick, Lunenbourg, Wirtenberg, Mecklenberg, and Pomerania; the Marquesse of Brandenbourg, the Lantgraves of Hassia, and most of the Free and Imperial Cities did adhere unto it, who from their Protestation made at Spires (the Imperial Chamber) to that effect, Anno 1529. had the name of Protestants. The next year following they delivered in the Confession of their faith at Ausburg, a City of Suevia, thence called Confessio Augustana; authorized, or tolerated at least, after a long war, with variable successe on both sides, by the Emperour Charles the fifth, at the Pacification made at Passaw, Anno 1552. and afterwards more fully at Ausbourg. (where their Confession had first been tendred) Anno 1555.

But not to pass over this great matter in these Generals only, we may know once for all, that in the year 1530. the Protestant Princes having tendred their Confession at Ausburg (as before is said) and find-finding it not ſo well received as they did expect, entred into a Confederation at the Town of Smallard (belonging to the Duke of Saxonie) for defence thereof, and for the defence of one another in purſuance of it. Into this confederacy firſt entred John-Frederick the Duke of Saxonie, and his ſon; Erneſt, and Francis, Dukes of Lunebourg; Philip the Lantgrave of Haſſia, George Marqueſs of Brandenbourg, the Cities of Strasbourg, Nurenberg, Heilbrune, Ruteling, Ulmes, Lindaw, Conſtance, Mening, and Campedune. Afterwards, Anno 1535. there entred into it Barnimus, and Philip, Princes of Pomeren; Ulrick Duke of Wertenberg, Robert Duke of Zweibracken, (or Biponts, as ſome writers call him) William Earl of Naſſaw, George, and Joachim, Earls of Anhalt, the Cities of Franckford, Hamborough, Auſpurg, Hannolder; and not long after the Palſgrave, and King of Denmark. But this confederacy was like to have daſhed the buſineſs. For Charles the Fift looking upon it as a matter of dangerous conſequence to the power and ſafety of the Empire, and withall inſtigated thereunto by the Popes of Rome, whoſe intereſs was no leſſe concerned in it; conſidering that he could not otherwiſe untie this Gordian knot, reſolved to cut it with the ſword. At firſt the war ſucceeded luckily with the Proteſtant Princes, who armed themſelves upon the noiſe of his preparations: But there being an equality of Command between the Duke John-Frederick and Philip the Lantgrave, the one ſometimes not approving, otherwhiles thwarting the others Projects, the end proved not anſwerable. Beſides, the politick Emperour knowing full well that the forces of confederate States are oftner broken by delayes than Battel, avoided all occaſions of fighting, and thereby wearied out this great Army, which without performing any notable exploit disbanded it ſelf, every man haſting home to defend his own. But none had more reaſon ſo to doe, than the Duke Elector. For in his abſence, his couſin Maurice forgetting the education he had under him, and how formerly the Duke had conquered for him, and eſtated him in thoſe parts of Miſnia (maugre all oppoſition of the Popiſh party) which formerly had belonged to Duke George his Uncle; combined himſelf with the Emperor, and invaded the Electors Country: who notwithſtanding recovered not only all his own, but a great part alſo of thoſe lands and territories in which he had before Eſtated his ungratefull Kinſman. But while he was in this career, the Emperor ſuddenly fals upon him not far from Mulberg, (where the Duke was then hearing a Sermon) and by the ſuddenneſs of his coming routeth his timorous unprovided Army; the Duke himſelf with ſome few reſolute Gentlemen making head againſt him, till the moſt of them were ſlain, and the Duke taken Priſoner. The next morning he was condemned to loſe his head, but pardoned at the laſt upon ſome conditions: amongſt which it was none of the leaſt, that he ſhould ſurrender his Eſtates, and reſign the Electoral dignity to be diſpoſed of by the Victor. As alſo that he ſhould without ranſome releaſe Marqueſſe Albert of Brandenbourg, (a buſie and unquiet man) who was then his Priſoner. This done, the Emperour fraudulently intrappeth the Lantgrave, as we ſhall ſhew more at large hereafter in another place; and carrying on the war from one Free City to another, compelled them to receive the Maſs, and to ſubmit to ſuch compoſition as he pleaſed to grant them; inſomuch as it was thought that the Emperour gained in this journey a Million and 600000 Crowns, and 500 pieces of great Ordnance. But theſe ſucceſſes were too great, and too unjuſtly grounded to continue long. For Maurice the new Duke Elector, who had married the Lantgraves daughter, and engaged himſelf unto his Children both by word and Bond (and that too at the Emperours inſtance) for his ſafe returning, conceived himſelf unworthily dealt with ſo to be made the inſtrument of his Fathers thraldom; and therefore that he was obliged both in love and honour to leave no way untried, which might gain his libertie. And withall, finding cauſe to fear, that the courſe of the Emperours great ſucceſſes might end at laſt in the ſubverſion of the Common liberty, he ſecretly by an under-hand practice, called in the French; and raiſing forces under colour of the Emperours ſervice, gained Marqueſs Albert before-mentioned (who had then a running Army in the field) to aſſociate with him, and fell ſo ſuddenly on the Emperour lying then at Inſpruch, that he compelled him to run away in poſt-haſte by torch-light, and the Prelates to break off the Council of Trent, where at that time they were aſſembled. Upon which turning of the ballance a Peace ſoon enſued, which brought forth the Edicts of Paſſaw, and Ausbourg, ſpoken off before, the beſt and ſureſt Pledges of the Peace of Germanie.

In the mean time, while the Lutherans thus played their game, there ſtarted up another party, began at firſt by Zuinglius amongſt the Switzers, of whoſe both Doctrine and ſucceſſe we have ſpoken there. Theſe not communicating Councels went two ſeveral wayes, eſpecially in the points of Conſubſtantiation and the Real preſence; not reconciled in their times, nor like to be agreed upon amongſt their followers. For Calvin, riſing into the eſteem and place of Zuinglius, added ſome Tenets of his own to the former doctrines, touching Predeſtination, Free-will, Univerſal Grace, Final perſeverance (points fitter for the Schools than a popular Auditory;) by which the differences were widened, and the breach made irreparable: the cauſe being followed on both ſides with great impatience, as if they did not ſtrive ſo much for truth, as victory. And of the two, thoſe of the Lutheran party ſeemed more violent (though the other was altogether as irreconcilable) who could not chuſe but ſtomach it, to ſee themſelves undermined and blown up by a new form of doctrine, not tolerated in the Empire, but under colour of conformity to the Confeſſion of Ausbourg. For Zuinglianiſm being entertained amongſt the French, a buſy and active people, ſpread it ſelf further in few years than it was propagated by the Switzers (men of the ſame temper with the Dutch) in all times before. Inſomuch as it did not only prevail in France; but by the reputation of Calvin, and the diligence of his followers, was wholly entertained in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Netherlands, in many parts of the Kingdom of Poland, and even in Germanie it ſelf: in which it got footing in all the territories of the Counts Palatines of the Rhene, in ſome of the Lantgraves of Haſſia, in the Imperial City of Strasbourg, many of the Hanſe- towns, and amongst other Princes and Free Cities of inferiour note. The rest of Germanie, containing the Patrimonial Estates of the house of Austria, the Dukedoms of Bavaria and Lorrein, the territories of the three Spiritual Electors, and of all the other Bishopricks in the hands of the Clergie, some of the Marquesses of Baden, part of the subjects of Cleve, and but three of the Imperial Cities (and those small ones too) that is to say, Gmund, Uberlinque, and Dinkell-Spuell (unlesse some more be added by the late great successes of the house of Austria) remain in their obedience to the See of Rome: all which together, will hardly make up one fift part of this spacious Country, the other four being in the power and possession of the Protestant party; yet so, that there be many Protestants in Bohemia, Austria, and in other the Estates of the Popish Princes; as there be Papists in the Free Cities of Frankford, Nurenberg, Ulm, Aken, and some other places, besides the late increase of them in both the Palatinates. Of such a speedy growth was the Reformation, that within the space of 40. years it was not only received in all those Countries which do now profess it; but had once also got some footing both in Spain and Italy.

And here perhaps it will not be improper to look upon the means which were chiefly used for the Promoting of this work, by which it came to spread so far in so little time; and next upon the stops and hindrances which were given unto it, by which it was restrained from spreading further. 1. For the means used in the advancement of this work (next under the Almighty power of the most wise God) they were these especially. 1. The translating of the Scripture into Vulgar Languages, which easily discovered the Corruptions of the Church of Rome, both in Doctrinals and Forms of Worship. 2. The diligent Preaching of their Ministery, both in Towns and Villages, for the Expounding of the Scriptures, and fitting them to the capacities of the meanest Auditors, which gained exceedingly, both on the judgement and affections of the Common People, the course of Preaching having been formerly neglected by the Parish Curate, and turned off wholly in a manner to the begging Friars. 3. The publishing of Books of Practical Piety and Devotions, which mightily inflamed the hearts of all sorts of men; accustomed before to no other duties, then to tell over their Credoes, and Pater-nosters, and to keep a just account of their Ave Maries, and that most commonly in a tongue which they understood not. 4. The education of youth, especially in Catechismes, containing the whole body of Christian Religion, which once well planted in their minds, could not so easily be pulled up or removed thence by any contrary perswasions. 5. Their continual offers of disputation with the adverse party, in a publique audience; which being denied (as generally at the first it was) gave great assurance of the truth and soundnesse of the one side, as of the falshood, and weaknesse of the other. 6. Their compiling of Martyrologies, and Histories of the Church, which could not but produce an admirable Zeal and Constancy, both in the Readers and the Hearers, animated thereunto by those brave examples which therein were presented to them. One point of prudence hath been wanting, which is the calling of a General Council of all the Protestant and Reformed Churches, for the composing of the differences which have grown between them: and this I look on as the first, and greatest stop to the Reformation from proceeding farther, many men (not improbably) thinking that there must be some want of truth in the foundation of that building, which had such wide and open breaches in the Superstructures. The Tyranny and terrour of the Inquisition, by which it is kept out of Spain, and kept down in Italie and all other parts of the Popes obedience; together with those other policies both to discountenance and suppress it (which we have spoken of in our description of the Papacy) may come next to this. Then adde to these the care and diligence of the Jesuites, and Seminary Preists, in applying themselves to all their means which they found so effectual on the other side, thereby not only countermining their indeavours, but fighting them upon even ground with the self-same weapons: And last of all, the plots and practices of the Papal Ministers, in working on the humors of the opposite parties, thereby enraging them not only into tongue-combats, and velitations of the Pen, but even to try it out by blows in an open war once I am sure, that by this means they have not only stopped the Progress of the Reformation, but would faign give themselves some hopes to destroy it utterly, and thereby to restore the Pope to that power and splendor which formerly he had attained unto in these parts of Europe. But of these and such self-Flatteries, I shall say with Seneca, or rather in his words applyed to my own Intention,

—— Hæ manus Trojam erigent?
Parvas habet spes Troja, si tales habet.
That is to say,
Shall these small jarres restore the ruin'd Pope?
Small hopes he hath, if this be all his hope.

As for the Government of their Churches, those that continue in obedience of the See of Rome, are under the old form of Archbishops and Bishops; co-æval in all Germanie (as in most places else) with the faith it self. The Calvinists (by which name the Zuinglianist now also passeth, if not eaten out) submit themselves for doctrine, discipline, and forms of worship, to Calvins Model; whereof we have spoke more at large when we were in Geneva. And for the Lutherans, they have divided the Episcopal function from the Revenues: giving those last to some of their younger Princes, with the title of Administrators of such a Bishoprick; the function or jurisdiction to some of the more eminent Clergy, with the title of a Superintendent, assigning to them a priority both of place and power before other Ministers; which they enjoy for term of life, together with some liberal maintenance in proportion to it. In other things, as order, habit, and title of dignity, they differ not at all from the other Ministers:

And

And over them in the place of Archbishops, they have their general Superintendents; all of them of each sort accomptable to the supreme Ecclesiastical Consistory (as formerly to the Provincial or National Synod) made up of Counsellors of State, and the heads of the Clergy: So that the form seems to be much the same as in elder times, but is indeed more different than it seems to be, a great part of the Alteration being in the names; and that no other in a manner, than by changing the old Greek word Episcopus, into the new Latine word Superintendens: both signifying an Overseer, though in different languages. And so ex Græcis bonis, Latinas fecere non bonas; in the Poets words: which brings into my minde the story of a people of Africk, who having received much hurt by Tigers, made a Decree that no man from thenceforth should call them Tigers, but give them a more harmless, or less hated name, and then all was well. And as they do conform thus far to the elder times in form of government: so do they also come up to them in their forms of worship; retaining still a setled and prescribed Liturgie for all their Churches, most of the holy dayes observed in the former ages, the Cross in Baptism, kneeling at the Communion, and many other innocent and significant Ceremonies, commended to the Church by most pure Antiquity. In point of maintenance as defective as the Calvinists are; few of their Ministers having Tithes, most of them pensions or stipends, and those small ones also; seldom exceeding two or 300 Guldens, besides wood for fewel, corn, and some other necessaries.

Now because mention hath been made of the Hanse-towns and Imperial Cities, we are to understand that the Cities of this Countrey are of three sorts 1. Such as are holden in possession by some of the Princes in way of inheritance, part of their patrimony and estates, as Heidelberg, Vienna, Munchen, Wittenberg, &c. 2. Such as are held originally of the Empire it self, which are called Free Cities, for their great Prerogatives of coyning money, and governing themselves by their local Ordinances; Imperial in regard they know no Lord or protector but the Emperour only, to whom they pay two third parts of such contributions, as are assessed in the Assemblies or general Diets, and 1500 Florens yearly for themselves and their territories. They are in number about 60. many of which are of a fair and large estate, such as are Nurenberg, Ausburg, Ingolstade, Spires, Wormes, &c. Of which thus Guicciardine. Those (saith he) are called Free Cities, which acknowledging by a certain determinate tribute the authority of the Empire, do notwithstanding in all other things govern themselves after their own laws, not seeking to amplifie their territories, but defend their Liberties. 3. The third sort is of those which are called Hanse-towns, or Hansteden, that is (say some) An zee steden, Towns upon the Sea; such as those were who first entred into this confederacy; but at this time the name extends to many in-land Cities, and of no great trading; joyned with them in a league for their common defence and preservation. A league made first against the Danes, and the Earls of Holst, by some of the Maritime Towns bordering next unto them; that is to say, Lubeck, Hambourg, Rostock, Wismar, Stralesund, and Luneburg: but afterwards many other of the Imperial Cities and Towns of trade, associated with them in an offensive and defensive league against all enemies whatsoever. In number about 72. those of Livonia and Prussia being taken into the reckoning: many of which are able to put to sea 150 good sail of ships; such as lie more within the land, contributing in money or otherwise to the common charge. First hanselled by Waldomar the 3d. of Denmark, whom they vanquished in a Naval battel. After that growing into credit, and driving a great trade in most parts of Christendom, they enjoyed many large and ample privileges, wheresoever they came: called amongst us sometimes by the name of Easterlings, from their Easterly dwellings; & Merchants of the Steel-yard, from the place where they stowed their commodities; and Guilda Teutonicorum in regard of their nation, for the most part Dutch. But the English learning so much wit at the last, as to make use of their own shipping, they began here by little and little to decay; and are now almost worn out of memory with us, though still of good esteem and credit in other Countries.

The principal Rivers hereof, are 1. Danubius, or the Danow, which rising out of Nigra Sylva, or Schwartzen Wald, as the Germans call it, at a little Village of Schwaben called Don Eschingen, about two Dutch miles from the shores of the Rhene; passeth through Schwaben, Bavaria, Austria, &c. by the Cities of Ulm, Regensberg, Passaw, Vienna, Rab, Buda and Belgrade. Beyond which it beginneth to be called Ister, by which name most generally known amongst the Grecians: and receiving into its chanel, from the long tracts of the Alps, the Sarmatian and Carpathian mountains, about 60 navigable Rivers, besides lesser Brooks, disgorgeth his full stomach by several mouths (the names whereof we shall find in Dacia) into the lap of the Euxine sea; the whole length of his course 1500 miles. Insomuch as we may say with a modern Poet, Cedere Danubius se tibi Nile negat.

O seven-mouth'd Nile, I plainly see,
Danow will scarce give way to thee.

2 Rhene, (of whose original and course we have spoke more fully when we were in Belgium) which running from Switzerland through Germany and Belgium, after a course of 800 miles, emptieth it self into the German Ocean. All which shall here be added, is, that it gives the title of the Rhine-Grave to some Princes, of as good bloud as the best in Germany, whose possessions and Estates bordered near unto it, and from thence so called; but of late times decayed (almost to nothing) in their Estates, and living for the most part on the enterainment of other Princes, whom they serve in their wars; the Palsgraves of the Rhene, and two at the least of the three Bishops Electors, raising themselves upon the ruine of this House. 3. Elb, (Albis) which springing out of the mountain of Riseuberg in the skirts of

Bohemia runneth a course of 400 miles, and passeth by the Cities of Dresden, Misen, Torgan, Wittenberg, Magdeburg, and Lauenbourg, Cities of the Electoral and Antient Saxony, and so betwixt the Dukedom of Holstein (now part of Denmark) and the rest of Germany. 4. Odera, which hath its fountain in the hithermost parts of Moravia; and after it hath run its course through Brandenburg, and Pomerania, of some 300 miles in length, falleth at last into the Baltick sea. 5. Visurgis or the Weser, which issuing out of the hils of Turingia, runneth through Hassia and Westphalen, to the City of Breme; not far from which it falls into the German Ocean. 6. Vistula, or the Wixel, which rising out of the Carpathian mountains, betwixt Poland and Hungary, first passeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Pole; then betwixt Pomeren and Prussia, and so into the Baltick sea, the antient boundary of this Country, dividing it from Sarmatia Europæa, and the Europæa Moselle, which rising out of the mountain Vauge, in the confines of Lorrein, and the County of Burgundy, passeth directly thorow Lorrein, and the District of Triers, by the Cities of Toule, Metz, and Triers it self, beyond which last it falleth into the Rhene at the Town called Confluentz. 8. Sala, or Salta, which rising in the mountains of Fitchelberg, in the borders of the upper Palatinate, and passing by the skirts of Misnia and Saxonie, specially so called, falleth into the Elb beyond Wittenberg, having first watered the Cities of Naumberg, Mersbourg and Jene, very observable for being the most Eastern bounds of the Saxon Conquests, by this River parted from the Sclaves. 8. Manus, or the Maine, which had its spring in the mountains of Bohemia, and passing by the Cities of Bambergh, and Weirtzberg, is received into the Rhene beneath Francford. 9. Amisus, or the Ems, which hath its fountain near Paderborn in Westphalia; and passing between the two Frislands, falleth into the German Ocean, not far from Emden.

Chief mountains of this mighty Country, besides the Alps spoken of before, which run in a long tract betwixt it and Italy, are 1. Abnoba, now called Schwartze wald, (the present name both of this Mountain and the Forrest of Martiana, which doth overshadow it) out of which rise the Springs of Danow, and the Neccar, two principal Rivers of this Country. 2. the Sudeta, incircling Bohemia, covered with the woods called antiently Gabreta and Luna, now called the Wolds of Passaw and Behaimer from the places adjoyning. 3. Cetius in Austria, now called Culemberg, the antient bounds betwixt Pannonia and Noricum, two Roman Provinces. 4. Vogesus, commonly called Vauge; and by some French writers Le Mont de Faucities, which encircling Lorrein, divideth it on the East and South from Elsats, and the County of Burgundie. As for the Forrests of this Country, besides those spoken of already, that of most note was the Forrest of Hercinia (of which all the rest were but limbs or branches. The beginning whereof was about the borders of Switzerland and Alsatia, from thence running Eastward along the course of the Danow unto Transilvania, and thence declining on the left hand through the vast Countries of the Lituanians, Moscovites and Russes, in which last there are still many vast deserts of it; the greatest part thereof in Germanie being long since consumed; in place whereof are many goodly Corn-fields, and well-built Cities. A wood so formidable to the Romans that they durst never venture to search the end of it; the length thereof after the end of 60 days journey being undiscoverable, and the further search into it quite laid aside.

These Boundaries and Landmarks being thus described, we shall the better follow the Chorography of this great continent, according to the several Principalities and Estates therein: having first taken a survey of the antient condition of it, with so much of the story as concerns the whole, before it came to be divided into so many hands. The Country first planted by the posterity of Gomer, who descending from the Mountains of Albania, their first seat, in memory thereof first called Gomerini, after Cimmerini, by which name known to Pliny, Ptolomy, and others of the antient writers: removed into the more fruitfull plains of Phrygia, and there built the City Cimmeris which Pliny speaks of. But that small Province proving of too narrow a compasse to contain his Off-spring, and the adjoyning Countries being taken up in the former Plantations; they removed unto the Northwest of the Euxine sea; where we find a City of their building called Cimmerium, mentioned both by Pliny and Strabo; and the adjoyning streight or Fretum, called by the name of Bosphorus Cimmerius, by the Greeks and Latines. Driven from these dwellings by the more powerfull Scythians, they spread themselves into the West, where they began to be called Cimbri, and by that name, and under those of the Ambrones, and Teutones, several branches of them, intended an invasion and conquest both of Gaul and Italy: wherein they had prevailed in all probability, nisi isti seculo Marius contigisset, had not Marius happed to have lived in that Age; by whom discomfited and destroyed. That these Gomerians or Cimbri were the first Inhabitants of Gaul, Germany, and all the Nations of the North and West of Europe, is generally agreed upon by all the learned; divided into several nations, and those also subdivided into lesser tribes, and more obscure families: amongst which those of Teutones, or Tuiscones, from which the Dutch doe so affect to derive themselves; might be some of the principal. There setled, and not pleased with that desert dwelling, such of them as dwelt nearest to the Rhene passed over that River; and beating the Gauls further up into the Country, possessed themselves of their dwellings: enjoying them (till conquered by Julius Cæsar) without any Rivall. But Cæsar, moved with the complaints of the Gauls, and the insolencies of Ariovistus a King of the Germans (for by that name for the Reasons aforesaid, the Romans called them) marched into their Quarters: the Roman Legionaries being so afraid of this dreadfull Enemy, ut testamenta passim in principiis scriberentur, (saith the Historian) that many of them made their testaments at the Gates of their Camp, before they fell upon the Enemy. Vanquished by Cæsar, and Ariovistus being fled over the Rhene, the Romans by command of their General, made a bridge over the River, and rather terrified than conquered the neighbouring Germans: more fully brought into subjection by Drusus, the adopted son of Augustus Cæsar, from thence called Germanicus; by whom not only the Rhæti and Norici then lying out of the bounds of Germany (now included in it) were ſubdued in fine, and brought into the form of Roman Provinces, but the whole Country, in a manner to the very Ocean, was forced to yeeld obedience to the Roman Empire. But this was for ſo ſhort a time, that it was both won and loſt during the reign and government of Auguſtus Cæſar. So that the whole eſtabliſhed Conqueſts of the Romans upon this Country, as it is now bounded, contained no more than the Provinces of Germania, and Belgica prima, with part of Germania ſecunda, belonging unto the Dioceſe of Gaul; the greateſt part of the two Rhætia's being under the Dioceſſe of Italy; Noricum Mediterraneum, and Ripenſe, with ſome parts of Pannonia, parts of the Dioceſe of Illyricum. But none of theſe (as lying on the Weſt ſide of the Rhene, and the South of the Danow) did ever paſſe in the accompt of the antient Germanie, the Germans not enduring the yoke ſo long, as to be brought within the number of the Roman Provinces. Provoked with the luſt and inſolencies of Quintilius Varus, who ſucceeded Druſus in that charge, they ſet upon him under the conduct of Arminius, a chief Prince amongſt them, kill him, and utterly cut off three Legions. After which defeat Auguſtus laid aſide the affairs of Germany, confining his Empire within the Rhene, which Druſus had extended to the banks of the Ocean. Hac clade factum, ut imperium quod in littore Oceani non ſteterat in Ripa Rheni fluminis ſtaret, ſaith the Hiſtorian. Nor did the Romans only forbear to revenge this loſſe, by making a new war upon them; but ſeemed more carefull to defend themſelves againſt their invaſions, than to incurre the hazard of a new defeat: quartering eight Legions with their ſeveral wings and Aides, on the ſhores of the Rhene, and four upon the banks of the Danow, to keep theſe people from incroaching on the Romans Provinces. But the fatal period of that Empire drawing on apace, the French, Burgundians, Almans, and other Dutch Nations break through thoſe Guards, diſpoſſeſſe the Romans of all Gaul, Rhætia, and Noricum, which they ſhare amongſt them: till in the end, the French prevailing over the reſt, extend their Empire over all the modern Germany; chiefly performed by the valour of Charles the Great, created Emperour of the Weſt by the people of Rome, and crowned with the Imperial Crown by Pope Leo the 4th. on Chriſtmaſs-day, Anno 801. So that now the old Prophecie of the Druides, concerning the removing of the Empire into the Weſt, came to be accompliſhed; though Tacitus in his time accounted it for a vain and idle prediction. For when Civilis raiſed a Rebellion amongſt the Batavi (the Hollanders and parts adjoyning) againſt Veſpaſian then newly made Emperour: poſſeſſionem rerum humanarum, Tranſalpinis gentibus portendi, Druidæ canebant; the Druides prophecied of the tranſlation of the Empire to the Tranſalpine nations, Accompliſhed, as before is ſaid, in the perſon of Charles the Great, King of France and Germany. By whom divided, (for the better ordering or Governance of it) into Weſt-France, or Weſt-reicks, in the barbarous Latine of thoſe times called Weſtraſia; containing the modern France, and ſo much of the Netherlands as lyeth on the French ſide of the River Maes; and Oſten-rich (i. e. the Eaſtern Kingdom) in the Latine of thoſe times Auſtraſia, containing ſo much of the modern Germany and Pannonia, as was poſſeſſed by the French, with the reſt of the Netherlands. This afterwards ſubdivided into the Kingdoms of Lorrein and Germany; whereof the firſt contained all Germany within the Rhene, together with the Belgick Provinces before deſcribed, the Counties of Flanders and Artois excepted only; the Kingdom of Germany taking up the reſt. For in the time of Ludovicus Pius, the ſon of Charles, the great Empire of his Father was parcelled out into many members, as Italy, France, Burgundy, Lorrein and Germany; diſtributed amongſt his ſons and nephews, with the title of Kings: By means whereof the Kingdoms of Germany and Lorrein, united in the the perſon of Lewis the Antient, in little time were alien'd from the houſe of Charles, and left off to be French; poſſeſſed by the great Princes of Lorrein, Saxonie, Schwaben, and Bavaria; by whom diſmembred into many principalities and inferiour ſtates, all paſſing under the accompt and name of the Dutch or Germans. The Kings and Emperours of which here follow.

Ger-

801 1 Charles the Great Emperour, K. of France and Germanie.

815 2 Ludovicus Pius, King of France, Germany, and Emperour of the Romans.

841 3 Lewis, ſurnamed the Antient, ſecond ſon of Ludovicus Pius, King of Germany, to which, Anno 876. he united that of Lorrein alſo.

891 5 Arnulph, the natural ſon of Caroloman, the brother of Charls, King of Germany and Emp.

903 6 Lewis, or Ludovicus IV. (Lewis the brother of Charls and Caroloman being reckoned for one) King of Germany and Emperour, the lawfully begotten ſon of Arnulph.

913 7 Conrade, the ſon of Conrade, the brother of Lewis the 4th. the laſt Prince of the maſculine iſſue of Charles the Great. After whoſe death the Francones and Saxons, ſeeing Charles the Simple, King of France, overlaid by the Normans, or embroiled by the Princes of the houſe of Anjou, took that advantage to transferre the Empire to themſelves; and they made choice of Henry Duke of Saxony to be their Emperour. A worthy Prince, by whom ſome Nations of the Sclaves, the Hungarians, and part of Lorrein were ſubdued, or added to the Empire.

929 8 Henricus, ſurnamed Auceps, or the Fowler, Duke of Saxony, elected by the German Princes, but diſreigned by Conrade, as being eldeſt ſon of Otho Duke of Saxonie by Luitgardis, Daughter to the Emperour Arnulph, and conſequently a branch of the Caroline ſtock.

938 9 Otho, ſurnamed the Great, the ſon of Henry, Emperour, and King of Italy 36.

974 10 Otho II. ſon of Otho the 1. Duke of Saxony, and the laſt of that houſe which had the title of Emperour, and King of Italy. After whoſe death, all right of ſucceſſion being diſclaimed, the Emperours became Elective; but for the moſt part wholly ingroſſed or Monopolized (ſince the Failer of the houſe of Saxonie) by the Dukes of Franconia, Suevia, Bavaria, and Auſtria, notwithſtanding the liberty or freedom of Election pretended to by the Electors. The buſineſſe firſt projected in the Court of Rome, to make the Emperours leſſe powerfull, and diſtract the Germans, whom they feared, into ſides and factions: confirmed by a decree of Pope Gregory the fifth, being a Native of that Country.

984 11 Otho III. ſon of Otho the 2. Duke of Saxony, and the laſt of that houſe which had the title of Emperour, and King of Italy. After whoſe death, all right of ſucceſſion being diſclaimed, the Emperours became Elective; but for the moſt part wholly ingroſſed or Monopolized (ſince the Failer of the houſe of Saxonie) by the Dukes of Franconia, Suevia, Bavaria, and Auſtria, notwithſtanding the liberty or freedom of Election pretended to by the Electors. The buſineſſe firſt projected in the Court of Rome, to make the Emperours leſſe powerfull, and diſtract the Germans, whom they feared, into ſides and factions: confirmed by a decree of Pope Gregory the fifth, being a Native of that Country.

1002 12 Henry II. ſurnamed the Saint, Duke of Bavaria, the firſt Emperour elected according to the conſtitution of Gregory the fift, but ſo elected, that he challenged it in a manner by the right of blood, as being the grand-child of Henry ſurnamed Rixoſus (the firſt Duke of Bavaria, of the Saxon race) the ſecond ſon of Henry the firſt, and conſequently the next heir male of that houſe after Otho the 3d. compelling ſome of the Electors who oppoſed his title by the force of Arms to yeeld unto it: So that the firſt Emperour who came in by a clear election; but not without pretenſion of a title alſo, was 1025 13 Conrade II. Duke of Franconia, ſurnamed Salicus, Husband to Lui gardis one of the daughters of Otho the firſt, and conſquently not a ſtranger to the former Family.

1040 14 Henry III. ſurnamed Niger, the ſon of Conrade.

1056 15 Henry IV. ſon of Henry the third, in whoſe days the Popes began to uſurp authority over the Emperours: inſomuch as Leo the ninth having received the Popedom at the Emperours hands, repented himſelf of it, put off his Papall veſtments, went to Rome as a private perſon, and was there new choſen by the Clergie. This done by the perſwaſion of a Monk called Hildebrand, who being afterwards made Pope by the name of Gregory the 7th. excommunicated this Henry, the firſt Prince that was ever excommunicated by a Pope of Rome. From which time till the year 1254. there were continual wars and thunders betwixt them and the nine following Emperours; ſome of them being excommunicated, ſome forced to put their necks under the Feet of the Pope; others to quit the care of the Commonwealth, and betake themſelves unto the wars of the Holy-land, leaving the Pope to do what he liſt in Germany.

1106 16 Henry 5. ſon of Henry the 4th. armed by the Pope againſt his father; whom he had no ſooner ſucceeded in the Empire, but the Pope excommunicated him, for being too ſtiff in the buſineſſe of inveſtitures, and raiſed up the Saxons againſt him, by whom vanquiſhed, and otherwiſe afflicted by the Popes practiſes, he was forced to ſubmit unto his commands, and was the laſt Emperour of the houſe of Franconia.

1125 17 Lotharius, Duke of Bavaria, ſeiſed on the Empire without any election, reconciled unto the German Princes by the means of S. Bernard. He ſetled the affairs of Italy in two journies thither. 13.

1139 18 Conrade III. ſon of Frederick, the firſt hereditary Duke of Sueve, or Schwaben, and ſiſters ſon unto Henry the fifth, vanquiſhed Henry, ſurnamed the Proud, Duke of Saxonie and Bavaria; and going to the holy-wars with Lewis King of France, diſcomfited the Turks near the Banks of Meander. 15.

1153 16 Frederick, ſurnamed Barbaroſſa, Duke of Sueve, crowned at Rome by Adrian the 4th. and not long after excommunicated by Pope Alexander the 3d. to whom he was fain at laſt to ſubmit himſelf, the Pope inſolently treading on his neck. He went after to the Holy-Land (where he dyed) having diſcomfited the Turks in three great battels. 39.

1190 20 Henry VI. ſon of Frederick King of Sicil, in right of Conſtance his wife, crowned by Pope Celeſtine, who imployed him in the wars of the Holy-Land; in his journey towards which he died at Meſſina. 8.

1198 21 Philip, Duke of Sueve, brother of Henry the 6th. excommunicated by the Pope (who loved not this Family) by whoſe means Otho, the ſon of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxonie, was ſet up againſt him. The occaſion of great wars among the Germans, reconciled by marriage of Otho with a daughter of Philip. 9.

1207 22 Otho IV. ſon of Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxonie and Bavaria, crowned at Rome by Pope Innocent the 3d. by whom not long after excommunicated, for taking into his hands ſome Towns of Italy which belonged to the Empire: vanquiſhed in Brabant by the faction raiſed up againſt him, he relinquiſhed the Empire to his Competitor.

1212 23 Frederick II. King of Sicil and Naples, ſon of Henry the 6th. having ſetled Germanie, diſpoſed himſelf for the wars of the Holy-Land, where he recovered the poſſeſſion of the Realm of Jeruſalem; excommunicated by the Pope at his return into Italy; not long after poiſoned.

1250 24 Conrade IV. ſon of Frederick, the laſt Emperour of the houſe Schwaben. After whoſe death, the Empire being diſtracted by the Popes Practiſes into many factions, each faction choſe an Emperor or King of the Romans: ſo that at one time there were elected, Henry

Earl

Earl of Turingia, William Earl of Holland, Alfonſo King of Caſtile, the renowned author of the Alfonſive Tables, and 1254 25 Richard Earl of Cornwall, brother of Henry the 3d. of Englend, the beſt-monyed man of all his time, ſuppoſed therewith to buy the ſuffrages of the Archbiſhop of Colen, and Elector Palatine, by whom he was elected and crowned King of the Romans, An. 1254. and after he had dealt in the affairs of the Empire 6 years, he returned into England, where he died. After whoſe death, or an Inter-regnum of 12 years from his Exit rather, the Title was at laſt accepted by 1273 26 Rodolph Earl of Hapsburg, a petit Prince, (others of greater Eſtates and Fortunes not daring to take up the honour) the Raiſer of the preſent Auſtrian Family.

1292 27 Adolph Earl of Naſſaw, who ſerved in perſon under King Edward the firſt of England, againſt the French; for which diſrelliſhed by the Germans, he was encountred and ſlain near the City of Spires.

1308 29 Henry, Earl of Luxembourg, made a journey into Italy to recover the rights of the Empire, (where an Emperour had not been ſeen in 60 years) ſuppoſed to be poiſoned in the Chalice, by a Friar at Benevent, a town of the Popes. 6.

1314 30 Lewis, Duke of Bavaria, crowned at Aix in the wonted manner; oppoſed by Frederick Duke of Auſtria, choſe by another Faction, and crowned at Bonna, a town of the Archbiſhop of Coleno; but being defeated, Lewis remained ſole Emperour, excommunicated by Pope John 22. 33.

1346 31 Charls IV. ſon of John King of Bohemia, and grandſon of Henry the 7th, crowned with the iron Crown at Millain, 1354. the framer of the Golden Bull. 32.

1378 32 Wenceſlaus, King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxembourg, deformed and vicious; depoſed by the German Princes. 22.

1400 33 Rupertus, Elector Palatine, paſſed into Italie for the recovery of the Dukedom of Millain, ſold by Wenceſlaus; but was well beat by John Galeazzes, and ſo returned. 10.

1410 34 Jodocus Barbatus, Marqueſs of Moravia, uncle to Wenceſlaus.

1411 35 Sigiſmund, brother of Wenceſlaus, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, and Earl of Luxembourg, crowned at Rome on Whitſunday, 1432. travelled exceedingly for eſtabliſhing the peace of Chriſtendom, diſtracted at that time with three Popes at once; a great promoter of the Council of Conſtance.

1439 36 Albert II. Duke of Auſtria, ſon-in-law of Sigiſmund, whom he ſucceeded in all his eſtates and titles excepting Luxembourg, 1.

1440 37 Frederick III. Duke of Auſtria, the ſon of Erneſt of Auſtria, and next heir of Albert the 2d, procured the calling of the Council of Baſil for the peace of Chriſtendom; travelling for that cauſe to Rome, where declared Emperour, Anno 1442. 54.

1494 38 Maximilian, ſon of Frederick, Duke of Auſtria, who firſt united the Eſtates of Burgundy to the houſe of Auſtria. A Prince that undertook many great Actions, but went thorow with none. 25

1519 39 Charls V. King of Spain, ſon of Philip King of Spain, and Archduke of Auſtria, ſon of Maximilian by the Lady Mary of Burgundy. A puiſſant Prince, who had priſoners at the ſame time, the French King, and the Pope of Rome. He ruined the League made by the Proteſtants at Smalcade, took priſoners the Elector of Saxony, and the Lantgrave of Haſſia, drave the great Turk from Vienna, won the Kingdom of Tunis; and in the end reſigned all his Eſtates, and dyed in a Monaſtery. 39.

1558 40 Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria, the brother of Charls, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, elected King of the Romans by the procurement of Charls, Anno 1531. Upon whoſe reſignation he was choſen Emperour, Anno 1558. 7.

1565 41 Maximilian, the ſon of Ferdinand, elected King of the Romans in the life of his Father, Anno 1562. ſucceeding in the Empire after his deceaſe.

1577 42 Rodolphus, the eldeſt ſon of Maximilian, had great wars againſt the Turk, with whom in the year 1600 he concluded a peace; but being undermined by his brother Matthias, was forced to ſurrender to him the Kingdoms of Hungarie and Bohemia, and to content himſelf with Auſtria and the Empire only. Theſe eight laſt Emperours were all of the order of the Garter.

1612 43 Matthias brother of Rodolphus K. of Hungarie, Bohemia, and Archduke of Auſtria; in whoſe time were ſown the ſeeds of that terrible war, which had almoſt deſtroyed the Empire. Having no children of his own, he procured Ferdinand of Gratz, to be declared Succeſſor into his Eſtates. 36.

1637 45 Ferdinand III. ſon of Ferdinand the 2d. broke the great power of the Swedes, (called in for the ſupport of the German liberty, and againſt the violent reſolutions of his Father) at the battel of Norlingen; the 12th Emperour of the house of Hapsburg, and the 9th of the house of Austria without intermission. The cause of which is to be attributed to Charls the fift, who procured in his life time, that his brother might be chosen Rex Romanorum, as his successour in the Empire: A policy which hath been ever since continued by his successors; and the Germans are the more willing to hearken to it, because the Austrian Princes are not only Natives of this Countrey, but better able to back out the Empire in its compleat Majesty, than any of the rest of that Nation are.

And to say truth, it is but need that some great Prince or other be elected to it, who by the power and reputation of his own estate, may preserve the honour of the Empire: confined in a manner within Germany, and there so weakned by the alienating of whole Countries from it (some titulary acknowledgement excepted only;) that it is nothing in effect, but magni nominis umbra, the shadow of a mighty body, a meer empty title. For if we look upon the present state and condition of it, we shall find it otherwise too weak, to support the great and swelling title of the Roman Empire. For as for the Empire it self, it hath some Countries reputed as parts of it, which yet acknowledge no subjection; as Belgium, Switzerland, and Denmark: Some do acknowledge a kind of subjection, but the Princes of them come not to the Imperial Diets, as the Dukes of Savoy and Lorrein, and some of the Italian Potentates. Finally, some both confess the Emperour to be their Soveraign, and that they owe service to his Courts, which are the Princes and Cities of Germany only; but those so priviledged, so exempted from his commands, so absolute and incontrollable in their own estates, that they care little for his power, and not much (if any thing) for his person; of which we shall speak more hereafter, when we come unto the form of the publick Government. In the mean time, if we would know by what occasions the Empire became so infeebled; it may be said, that the reasons and occasions of it have been very many. As first, the weakness and improvidence of the Caroline race, dismembring from it many powerfull and wealthy Provinces; reserving only a bare Homage, and some slight acknowledgement. 2ly, The cunning of the Popes, who from the time of Henry the 4th, to Rodolph of Hapsburgh, had by their Excommunications and other practises, so exercised the Emperors with intestine troubles, that they forced them in a manner, to abandon Italy: insomuch that the said Rodolph, finding the inconvenience of it, sold most of his Estates there to the fairest Chapmen. 3ly, This done, and the Popes knowing well enough that they could not wax strong in Italy, if they did not weaken the Emperours estate in Germany, first wrested out of their hands the Investiture of the Bishops, Abbots, and other Ecclesiastical preferments: who being now made their own creatures, were so increased both in revenue and power by little and little, and fortified with so many immunities, that some of them grew in time to be Free Estates, all of them Princes of the Empire. 4ly, But fearing that this might not bring the Emperours low enough, they baited them with continual factions and perpetual broyls: which put them to a necessity of making what friends they could, though they paid very dearly for them; and taking up what moneys they could of the wealthier Cities, paying them in exemptions and Royal privileges, when they could not otherwise cancel or discharge the debt. 5ly, And unto this, the making the Empire Elective gave no little help, few of them looking on the Empire, but as Tenants for term of life; and therefore were more likely to discharge such debts by impairing the Publike Patrimony, which they had no hold in, than to diminish any thing of their own estates. 5ly, But being the title of Emperor was the greatest honor, which any of that Nation could be capable of, and such as by good husbandry might be made beneficial unto their posterity, (as we see what good uses have been made of it by the Austrian family, ever since the time of Rodolph of Habspurg:) who would not part with some of the Imperial rights, to advance his own house to an equal greatness? And herein many of the Emperours were exceeding faulty, who to get the Empire to themselves, or leave it after them unto their posterity, dismembred from the same many Towns and fair possessions, given by them to the Electors for their Votes and Suffrages. 7ly, A thing which the Electors understood sufficiently, and therefore were resolved to make the best of the market, knowing that the commodity could be bought of none but themselves: as in the Election of Wenceslaus son of Charles the 4th, of whom it was but ask and have, what they had a mind to. By means whereof the Princes grew in time so strong, that there were few of them who durst not undertake a war against their Emperours. And this appeareth by the story of Charls the fifth, who though the most puissant Emperour which had reigned in Germany since Charls the Great, yet found himself so over-matched by these ruffling Princes, that he was willing to resign the Empire to his brother Ferdinand.

But to proceed. By these and every of these means, the Body of the Empire came to be divided into many Estates, and those Estates to be made absolute and independent, as before is said. The principal whereof, which being described will make up the Chorographie of this great Continent, are those of 1. Cleveland, 2. the Estates of the three spiritual Electors, 3. the Palatinate of the Rhene, 4. Alsatia, 5. Lorrein, 6. Suevia or Schwaben, 7. Bavaria, 8. Austria, and its appendixes, 9. The confederation of Wederaw, 10. Franconia, 11. Wittenberg, and 12. Baden, 13. the Palatinate of Northgoia, or the Upper Palatinate, 14. Bohemia, and the incorporate Provinces, 15. Pomerania, 16. Mecklenberg, 17. the Marquisate of Brandenberg, 18. Saxonie and the Members of it, 19. the Dukedoms of Brunswick and Lunenburg, 20. the Lantgravedom of Hassia, 21. Westphalen, 22. Eastfriseland. Such lesser States as being absolute and free, are of lesser moment, shall be reduced (together with the Imperial Cities) to those several Provinces, in which they are included, or out of which they were taken. As for the Province of Holstein or Holsatia, though it be Imperial, in which respect by some accounted as a Province of Germany: yet being under the command of the King of Denmark, and by all Writers reckoned as a part of that Kingdom; I shall there speak of it. Some of these are thus censured by Aubanus a late late writer. They of Suevia, (saith he) are Whores; they of Franconia, Ravishers and Buggers; they of Bohemia, Heretiques; those of Bavaria, Thieves; they of Saxony, Drunkards; they of Friseland, and Westphalia, Swearers; and they of the Palatinate, Gluttons. But I hope more charitably of them all than so. I know there is another division of this Country, made by the Emperor Maximilian at the Diet of Colen, Anno 1522. who for the better raising both of men and money for all Publick services, caused it to be divided into the ten Circles of 1. Lower Saxony, 2. Upper Saxony, 3. Westphalia, 4. of the Rhene, 5. of the four Electors of that part, 6. Franconia, 7. Suevia, 8. Bavaria, 9. Austria, and 10. Burgundie. But that before proposed being the more particular, I shall follow that, according to the order before laid down: beginning first with those, which together with the Belgick Provinces and the Dukedom of Lorrein, contained antiently the Provinces of Belgica, and Germania prima, and some part of Germania secunda; and made up the Kingdom of Austrasia strictly and specially so called. Cleveland

CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, or the Estates of the Duke of Cleve, before dismembred and divided betwixt the Competitors for the Dukedom, on the death of the last Duke hereof, Anno 1609. conteined the Dukedoms of Cleve, Gulick, and Berg, and the Earldom of Mark or March, all lying in a ring together. And though these two last lye on the other side of the Rhene, and so not properly within the old precincts of the Kingdom of Lorrein, or any of the Roman Provinces before named: yet being they belonged all to the same Prince, not parted by the interposition of other Countries, they shall be handled here together as the same Estate.

1. The Dukedom of CLEVE, properly and distinctly so called, hath on the East, the Countries of Mark and Berg, with some part of Westphalen; on the West, Guelderland, and some part of Limbourg; on the North, the Earldom of Zutphen, and the land of Over-Yssell; and on the South, Gulick and the land of Colen. So called from Cleve the chief town of it.

The Countrey very fruitful both for Corn and pasturage, well stocked with cattel of all sorts, for necessary use and pleasure; good store of Fowl, both tame and wild: blessed also with an healthy air, and in a word, with all things needfull for the life of man; well watered with the Rhene, the Roer, the Dussell, the Ezfat, and the Nirst, common to this and the rest of the incorporate Provinces.

Places of most importance in it, are, 1. Cleve, (in Latine Clivia) so called, because built on the sides of three little hills (which the Latines call Clivi,) gently descending towards the Banks of the Rhene, which not far off divides it self into several chanels. An antient town, and of great note in former time, as appears by many old foundations, and other monuments of Antiquity, continually digged up in the fields adjoyning; but chiefly by an old fore-square Tower, built on the highest of the three hills, of great height and state; founded by Julius Cæsar as a bulwark against the Germans, inhabiting the further side of the River. For proof of which, besides the old tradition constantly maintained, there is an Inscription on the Gates of the Dukes Palace, neer adjoyning to it, which saith, Anno ab Urbe DCXCIIX. C. Julius Dictator, his partibus Jubactis, hanc Arcem fundavit, i.e. that in the year 698 from the building of Rome, Julius Cæsar the Dictator, having subdued those parts of the Countrey, caused this Tower to be built. 2. Santen, on the banks of the Rhene, a town of great antiquity, as the ruines of it doe declare; supposed by Pighius to be the Trajana Colonia, of the Antients. 3. Wesel, (in Latine Vesalia) a fair & rich town, seated on the confluence of the Rhene with the River of Lippe; which rising in Westphalia, doth here lose it self: of great note for a College of secular Canons, built here by Eberard the ninth Earl, Anno 840. or thereabouts; and an Hospital liberally endowed for old impotent persons, founded by Henry de Baers, the Dukes Chancellour. A town not subject to these Dukes, though within the Dukedom, being reckoned an Imperial City, and one of the Hanse-towns; now neither so Imperial nor so Free, as formerly: possessed first for the Spaniard with a Garrison of 3000 men, (at the beginning of the war of Cleve) by D. Lewis Velasco; and from them taken by the States of the United Provinces, Anno 1628. 4. Burich, on the French side of the Rhene, over against Wesel, amongst goodly corn-fields, and pleasant pastures. 5. Duisberg, or Tuitchberg, in Latine called Teuto-burgum, a town of the antient Germans, (as the name importeth) situate on the Rhene, betwixt the Angra and the Ruer, two noted Rivers. A town formerly of great trading, and notably well built: Imperial, and one of the Hanse, but ceased to be Imperial when sold by Rodolph of Habspurg to Theodorick the ninth of that name, Earl of Cleve; together with 6 Cravenburg, another town of this Dukedom, but of lesser note. 7 Emmerick on the Rhene, a well-frequented town, remarkable for a very fair School. 8 Rees, 9 Griet, and 10 Griethusen, all upon the Rhene. 11. Calcar, a town more within the land, but not far from the River; grown wealthy by the trade of clothing and the best beer or ale in all these parts, sold thence abundantly into the Countrey round about. Not far from whence, at a place called Auf de Baern, it is supposed that Cæsar Germanicus built his bridge over the Rhene, when he went from Vetera Castra against the Marsi, a Nation of Germany. 12 Gennep, upon the Niers or Nirst, not far from its influx into the Maes: which together with Duiffele and Riexwald were bought of Sigismund the Emperour by Adolph the first Duke of Cleve, for a great sum of money.

South of the land of Cleve, betwixt it and Colen, lyeth the County of MUERS, extended all along on the banks of the Rhene; a distinct State, the Earl of which is subject to no other Prince, but the Emperour only: so called from Muers, the chief town of it, situate on the French side of the Rhene, over against Duysburgh. Next towns to which are, 2. Orsey, 3. Augur; of which little memorable. A small territory, but in a very fruitfull soil. The neighbourhood whereof to the land of Colen (to which Gulick-land which it ſerveth as an Outwork upon that ſide) preſerving it in former times from the Dukes of Cleve; who otherwiſe, no doubt, either by Arms or marriage had been maſters of it; as they were of the adjoyning Provinces, on both ſides of the River.

2. GULICK-LAND, or the Dukedome of Gulick, hath on the Eaſt, the County of Muers, and the land of Colen; on the Weſt, Guelder Land and Limbourg; on the North, Cleve; and on the South, the reſt of the land of Colen. The Air and Soil much of the ſame nature as in Cleve; ſave that here is a greater plenty of Woad for dying, and a better breed of horſes than in the other. The Seat of the Menapii in the times of old.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1. Gulick, in Latine Juliacum, (whence the French call it Juliers) known by that name in the Itinerary of Antoninus, ſufficient proof for the Antiquity thereof; but not otherwiſe famous. Seated upon the River Roer; the chief ſeat heretofore of the Dukes of Gulick, before the uniting hereof with Cleve: and ſince the diſſolution of that Eſtate poſſeſſed ſometimes by the States of the United Provinces, and ſometimes by the Spaniards; called in by the Competitors to aſſert their Titles. 2. Dueren, on the ſame River, the Marcodurum of the old writers; and of late memorable for the long ſiege which it held againſt Charles the fifth, in his wars againſt William, Duke of Cleve and Gulick, for the Dukedom of Gueldres. 3. Munſter Eyphelt (in Latine, Monaſterium Eyphaliæ) ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from Munſter of Weſtphalen; pleaſantly ſeated in a valley begirt with Mountains, not far from the ſpring or fountain of the River Erfae. 4. Caſter, ſo called of a ſtately and magnificent Caſtle, built for defence of this part of the Country. 5. Berken, on the River Erp. 6. Meroden beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, which gives name to an honourable and antient family. 7. Euskerch. 8. Berklen, &c.

There is alſo within the limits of this Dukedom, the famous Town of Aix, as the French, or Aken, as the Germans call it: famous of old times for the hot Baths both within and without the Town; whence it had the name of Aix, or Aquen, (in Latine, Aquiſgranum) ſituate on the edge of Limbourg, in a fruitfull ſoil; but the buildings nothing anſwerable to the fame of the place. Inhabited for the moſt part by Smiths and Braſiers, who drive the greateſt trade herein; working continually on Iron and other metals, with which they are ſupplyed abundantly out of Leige, and Limbourg. The Town Imperial; but under the protection of the Dukes of Cleve: at the expiration of which family, under colour of ſome quarrels about Religion, it was ſeiſed on; and garriſoned by Marquis Spinola for the King of Spain. Of great fame formerly for the death and ſepulture of Charles the great, by whom made one of the three Seats of the Weſtern Empire, and deſigned by him to be the place in which the King of the Romans ſhould receive his Crown for the Kingdom of Germany, at the hands of the Archbiſhop of Colen. The Town ſuppoſed to be formerly the wintring Camp of the Romans, called in Tacitus Vetera, which was taken by Civilis, in the beginning of his rebellion againſt Veſpaſian; during which wars it is often mentioned by the writers of thoſe times. They were built and ſtrengthened by Auguſtus, the better to keep under the Germans; quippe illis hybernis obſideri premique Germanias Auguſtus crediderat; as Tacitus. At this day this Town and Triers are reputed famous for holy reliques: here being ſaid to be amongſt others the bearing cloth wherewith our Saviour was wrapt when he was in his ſwadling clouts; which the Emperour ſolemnly worſhipreth at his inauguration. Concerning the ambition which the Papiſts have to be thought poſſeſſors of theſe reliques, ſee I beſeech you how pittifully they have mangled the head of S. John Baptiſt. They of Amiens brag that they have his face, and ſo do they of S. John D' Angelie. The reſt of his head is at Malta, yet is the hinder part of his ſcull at Namur, and his brain at Novum Roſtovienſe. Another part of it is at Maurienne, another piece at Paris, his jaw at Weſel, his ear at S. Flowres, his fore-head and hair at S. Salvadores in Venice, another part of his head is at Noyon, and another at Luca; yet is his whole head intire and unmaimed in S. Sylveſters Church at Rome: and ſo no doubt is this bearing-cloth at more places than one.

But to return again to Gulick, It was once part of the poſſeſſions of the Dukes of Lorrein, whether layed to it at the firſt erection of that Dukedom, as ſome writers ſay, or added to it by the Princes of the houſe of Ardenne, when they ſucceeded in the ſame, I dare not poſſibly determine; although the lying of this Country within the antient Verge or perambulation of the great Forreſt of Ardenne, makes the laſt in my opinion not to be improbable: Firſt made an Earldom of it ſelf in the perſon of Euſtace, brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrein, who ſeiſed upon it as his part of the Eſtate on the death of Godfrey; his elder brother Baldwin being abſent in the Holy-Land. In the perſon of William the 4th. of that name, it was made a Marquiſate, advanced unto that honour by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1329. created not long after Duke of Gulick by Charles the 4th. Anno 1355. His eſtate much augmented about that time, or but ſhortly after, by his marriage with Mary, Siſter and heir of Rainold, and Edward Dukes of Gueldres, adding thereby that Dukedom unto this of Gulick. His two ſons William and Rainold, both Dukes ſucceſſively, dying without iſſue; the Eſtate fell to Adolphus, Duke of Berg, or Mont, as the next heir male, Anno 1425. and finally, together with that of Berg was added to the Dukedome of Cleve, by the marriage of Mary heir hereof, with John the 3d. Duke of Cleve, with which conjoyned till the expiration of that noble family; whereof more anon.

As for the Eſtates of Berg and March, they had one original, begun by two brothers, the ſons of Theodorick Lord of Teiſterbant, of the houſe of Cleve; out of which houſe as they diſcended, ſo into that they finally were again reſolved, as their firſt materials. Of theſe two brothers, Adolphus being the Elder, was by the Emperour Henry ſurnamed the Fowler, made Earl of Altena, Anno 930. or thereabouts abouts: and Eberard the younger, by the ſame Emperour made Earl of Berg. But Eberard, entering a Monaſtery of his own Foundation, left his Eſtate and Earldom of Berg to the Elder brother. United thus into one eſtate, they became again divided betwixt the ſons of Adolph, the 3d. of that name, and fourth Earl of Altena and Berg: Engelbert the younger ſon enjoying the eſtate of Berg, and Eberard the elder ſucceeding his father, in that of Altena. How they became united to the houſe of Cleve, we ſhall ſee hereafter; having firſt looked over the Corographie or Deſcription of them. Gulick and Berg.

3. The Dukedom of BERG, bounded on the Eaſt with Weſtphalen, and the Country of March; on the Weſt, with the Rhene, from Weſel up as high as Colen, by which parted from the Dukedom of Cleve; on the North, with the River Lippe, which ſeparates it from the reſt of Cleve; and on the South, with the Land of Colen. So called from the hilline ſſe of the Country, Berg in Dutch ſignifying an hill, (as Bourg doth a Town or Burrough) from whence the Earls and Dukes hereof are called Montenſes in Latine, and Les Contes, and Ducs de Mont in French. The Country for the moſt part, in the Vales eſpecially, yeelds a great ſtore of the beſt wheat, and conſequently of the pureſt bread; and in the hill Countries rich mines of Coal, wherewith they do ſupply their neighbours.

Chief places in it are, 1 Duſſeldorp, ſo called of the River Duſſel, upon which it is ſituate, the River not far off falling into the Rhene. 2. Adenbourg built by Eberhard, the firſt Earl of Berg, the ſeat of him and his Succeſſors, till removed to Duſſeldorp. 3. Keiſerſwerd, ſituate on the Rhene, belonging antiently to the Empire, but bought for a great ſum of mony of Charles the 4th. by John, Earl of Cleve. 4. Mulheim, on the Rhene alſo, juſt againſt Colen on the other ſide of the water; fortified in the year 1614. and made the Receptacle of the Proteſtants of that Biſhoprick, prohibited the free exerciſe of Religion in their own dwellings; but razed not long after by Marquis Spinola on complaint made by thoſe of Colen to the Emperour Matthias. 5. Stelt, or Steltium, on the Roer, amongſt the Coal-mines. 6. Angermond, on the mouth of the River Angra, as the name imports. 7. Eſſen, or Eſſendia, on the borders of the Countie of March, once an Imperial, but under the protection of the Earls of Berg. Of moſt note for a Monaſtery here built by Alfride the 4th. Biſhop of Hildeſheim, for 52 Nuns and 20 Canons, liberally endowed, and having great command on the Dorps adjoyning.

How Berg at firſt was made an Earldom, how joyned unto Altena, and disjoined again, hath been ſhewed before. No ſooner made a State diſtinct, but it was added to the patrimony of the Earls of Gulick, by the marriage of Earl William with the daughter and heir of Berg. Parted again betwixt William, and Adolphus, ſons of Gerrard the 2. Anno 1247. the firſt ſucceeding in the Earldom of Gulick, and the laſt in Berg. During this partage, made a Dukedom in the perſon of William the firſt of that name, by Wenceſlaus the Emperour, Anno 1389. whoſe ſon Adolphus, as next heir, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Gulick, Anno 1423. How both were added unto Cleve, hath been ſaid already.

Cleve and Mark

1434 12 Gerrard IV. of Berg, and V. of Gulick, ſon of William, and brother of Adolphus

1475 13 William V. of Berg, and VI. of Gulick, ſon of Gerrard.

1511 14 Mary, daughter and heir of William, Dutcheſſe of Gulick, and Berg, conveyed the whole eſtate in marriage to John the 3. Duke of Cleve, and Earl of March, continuing in that family till the expiration of it in the perſon of John William, the laſt Prince hereof, Anno 1610.

4. The Earldom of MARCH, or MARK, hath on the Eaſt, and North, Weſtphalia; on the Weſt, the Dukedom of Cleve; on the South, that of Berg, or Mont. So called as being ſeated in the Marches of Weſtphalen, out of which it was taken. The Countty for the moſt part like the reſt of Weſtphalen, more fit for paſturage than corn: woodie, and yeelding ſtore of pawnage to thoſe herds of Swine, with which it plentifully abounds.

Chief places in it are, 1. Werden upon the River Ruer, on the edge of Weſtphalia, the people whereof get great wealth by grazing of Cattle. 2. Soeſt (in Latine, Suſatum, for wealth and greatneſſe not inferiour to any in Weſtphalen, (except Munſter only) conſiſting of ten pariſhes, and lording it over many rich and pleaſant Villages. Antiently it belonged to the Biſhops of Colen; but in the year 1444. did voluntarily yeeld it ſelf to the Duke of Cleve, (being then Earl of March alſo) and by Duke John the 4th. couragiouſly defended againſt thoſe Prelates. 3. Arnsberg, a fine and pleaſant ſite, uſed for a retiring place by the Electours of Colen, unto whom it belongs. 4. Dortmond, (in Latine, Tremonia) a Countie antiently of it ſelf, and held immediatly of the Empire; poſſeſſed by the Trotmanni, a tribe of the Suevians, from whence firſt called Trotmania; and at laſt Tremonia. 5. Blancoſtein, built commodiouſly by Adolphus the fifth of that name, and firſt Earl of March; as was alſo 6. Ham, or Hammone. 7. Unna, of which nothing memorable. 8. Altena, the firſt title of the Earls of this houſe, before they aſſumed that of the Earls of March, aſſumed firſt by Adolphus the 4th, on the Conqueſt of ſome Lands in the Marches of Weſtphalen, continuing in that Family till united with Cleve.

As for the Earldom or Dukedom of CLEVE, out of which it was taken, & to which the reſt of thoſe eſtates did in time accrew; it was one of the moſt antient Eſtates or Principalities in theſe parts of the world; continuing in a direct line for the ſpace of 900 years: held by them of the Kings of France; and afterwards of the Kings of Lorrein, till the incorporating of that Kingdom with the German Empire. Begun firſt by Elias Grallius, companion to Charls Martel, in his wars againſt the Friſons, Saxons, and Bavarians; whoſe ſon Theodorick added hereto by marriage the Countie of Teiſterbant, containing the Towns and Signeuries of Altena, in Weſtphalen; as alſo of Bornel, Heuſden, Buren, Culemberg, in the Belgick Provinces. By Baldwin the ſixth Earl was added the territory of Twentzen (in Latine, Regio Tuentana) given him by Ludovicus Pius; by Theodorick the fifth, the Town and Signeurie of Duiſlack, ſetled upon him on his marriage with Matilda, the heir thereof: by Theodorick the 9th. the County of Hulkenrade, near Nuys, in the land of Colen; together with the Towns of Duysbourg, and Culembourg, bought of Rodolphus Habſpurgenſis: by John his ſon, the Town and territory of Keiſarſwerd, bought of Charles the 4th. By Adolph the 29th. Earl, the Earldom of March, formerly taken out of it, was again united: by Adolph his ſucceſſor, (made the firſt Duke hereof by the Emperour Sigiſmund, Anno 1417) the Lordſhips of Gennep, Duiffels, and Reixwald, bought of the ſaid Emperour; together with the County of Ravenſtein, the Towns of Leoburg, Limers and Hatteren, for the ranſom of William Duke of Berg, and other noble perſons taken priſoners by him, Anno 1397. By John the firſt Duke of that name, the Town and Territory of Soeſt; and finally by John the 3d. the Dukedomes of Berg and Gulick, as heir thereof by his mother Mary, ſole daughter and heir of William the fifth and ſixth, the laſt Duke thereof. To which great height this antient and noble family had not long attained, and thereby made themſelves and their ſons and daughters fit matches for the greateſt Princes: But it pleaſed God to bring it to its fatal end, and by that means to diſſipate this brave eſtate in the hands of ſtrangers; as ſhall be ſhewed in the concluſion of this Catalogue of

The EARLS and DUKES of CLEVE.

1309 27 Theodorick X. brother of Otho II.
1325 28 John, brother of Theodorick, and Canon of Colen; the last of the masculine issue of Elias Grallius.
29 Adolphus, the VII. of March, son of Adolph the 6. of March, and Mary of Cleve, first Archbishop of Colen, (as six of this house of March had been (almost) successively before him) succeeded on the death of his Uncle John, to the Earldom of Cleve; inaugurated thereunto by Charls the 4th.
1389 30 Adolph II. of Cleve, and VIII. of March, created the first Duke of Cleve by the Emperour Sigismund, at the Council of Constance, Anno 1417.
1443 31 John III. son of Adolph Duke of Cleve, Earl of March, and Lord of Ravenstein.
1481 32 John II. of the rank of Dukes, and the IV. of the Earls.
1521 33 John III. Duke of Cleve, and Earl of March, &c. by descent from his Father; and Duke of Gulick and Berg in right of his wife, daughter and heir of William the last Duke thereof.
1539 34 William, son of John the 3d. and Mary his wife, daughter and sole heir of William the last Duke of Gulick and Berg: father of the Lady Anne of Cleve, one of the wives of Henry the 8. of England. He contended very strongly against Charles the fift for the Dukedom of Gueldres; but being too weak for so great an Adversary, made his submission to him at Venlo, and so saved his estates.
1584 35 John William, son of the former William, during the life of Charls Frederick his elder brother, was Bishop of Munster; on whose death, Anno 1575. he resigned that dignity, and in the end succeeded his Father in his whole estates; which he managed with great piety and prudence til the year 1610. and then died issueless. The last of that antient and noble family of the Dukes of Cleve. After whose death, much quarrel and contention grew about the succession, betwixt the several competitors and pretenders to it: of which the principal were, 1. Leopold Archduke of Austria, pretending an investiture from the Emperour Rodolphus in the Dukedom of Juliers, to whom for want of heirs males, the estate was said to be escheated. 2. John George, Duke of Saxonie, descended from Sibyll, daughter of Duke John the third: at whose mariage with John Frederick the Elector of Saxonie, Anno 1535. it was said to have been solemnly agreed upon, that on the failing of the heirs males of Cleve, the issue of that mariage should succeed therein. 3. George William, Duke of Prussia, son of John Sigismund the Elector of Brandenbourg by the Lady Anne his wife, eldest daughter of Albert of Brandenbourg Duke of Prussia, and of Maria Eleonora, the eldest sister and next heir of the Duke deceased. 4. Wolfgangus Gulielmus, Palatine of Newburg, son of Magdalen, the younger sister of that Mary, who claimed the estate as nearest kinsman, one degree, to the said last Duke. And though the right seemed most apparently on the side of Brandenbourg; the Estate in tayl pretended by the Duke of Saxonie, being formerly cut off by Imperial authority; and that pretended to by the Duke of Newburg, not of force in Germany: yet being that Leopold was in Arms, and had already forced a possession of Juliers, and of most parts of that Countrey; the two Princes of Brandenbourg and Newburg soon agreed the controversie, and by the help of the Protestant Princes their Confederates, recovered the greatest part of it from the hands of Leopold. But the Palatine of Newburg not content with his partage, first maried with a daughter of the Duke of Bavaria, then reconciled himself to the Church of Rome; called in the Spanish Arms under the command of Marquess Spinola, to abet his quarrel:

EARLS of ALTENA and MARCH.

A. Ch.
834 1 Robert, son of Baldwin, to whom the Country of Teisterbant was given by Eberhard.
2 Theoderick, son of Robert, the first Lord of Altena.
3 Adolphus I. Earl of Altena.
4 Adolphus II. Earl of Altena and Berg.
5 Conrade, Earl of Altena and Berg.
4 Adolph III. Earl of Altena and Berg.
5 Eberhard, Earl of Altena; his younger brother Engelbert succeeding in Berg.
6 Frederick, Earl of Altena.
7 Adolphus IV. created the first Earl of March.
1249 7 Engelbert, Earl of March and Altena.
8 Adolphus V. son of Engelbert.
9 Engelbert II. from whom by a second wife the daughter and heir of Aremberg, descended that branch of the house of March, which till of late, were Soveraigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bouillon.
10 Adolph VI. husband of Mary (or Margaret) daughter and heir of Theodorick the 9th Earl of Cleve.

Colen. which made George William, ſon of the Elector of Brandenbourg, and the Lady Anne, to call in the forces of the States, under the command of Maurice Earl of Naſſaw, after Prince of Orange. The iſſue of which war was this, that Spinola poſſeſſed himſelf of Weſel, Aken, Mulheim, Duſſeldorp, and moſt other places of importance in Berg and Gulick; and the States got into their power the Towns of Gulick, with Rees and Emmerick in the Dukedom of Cleve; and almoſt the whole County of Mark. And though moſt parts of theſe Eſtates have been delivered ſince to the rightful Owners: yet other places of importance are detained from them. Which, notwithſtanding that they both pretend to keep them for the uſe of thoſe Princes, in whoſe cauſe they ſtood; yet when ſuch ſtrong parties keep the Stakes, it is moſt eaſie to determine who will win the game: Such alterations as have hapned in the chance of war, by the reciprocal winning and loſing of ſome Towns on both ſides, not much conducing to the benefit of the rightful Owners.

The Arms of theſe Princes were 1. Gules, over an Eſcocheon in Feſſe Argent, a Carbuncle peirced, Pomerted, and flowred Or, for the Dukedom of Cleve, 2ly. Or, a Lion Azure armed Gules, for the Dukedom of Gulick. The Armes of Berg and Mark I have no where found.

2. The Eſtates of the three ELECTOR-BISHOPS.

Adjoyning to the Eſtates of Cleve are thoſe of the Spiritual Electors of the Empire of Germany, Colen, Ments, and Triers; not ſo contiguous and conterminous as thoſe of Cleveland, and therefore to be laid out ſeverally by their metes and boundaries: And firſt for

1. COLEN-LAND, or the Eſtate of the Archbiſhop and Elector of Colen, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Dukedom of Berg, from which divided by the Rhene; on the Weſt, with Gulick; on the North, with Cleve it ſelf, and the County of Muers; and on the South, extending to the land of Triers. The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Ubii, in former times poſſeſſed of the Countreys of Berg and March; But being warred on by the Germans bordering next upon them, they were by the Clemency of Agrippa, then Lieutenant of Gaul, received into protection, and by him placed along the French ſide of the Rhene, as well for defence of the borders of the Roman Empire, as for their own ſecurity againſt that Enemy. Won from the Romans by the French in the reign and under the conduct of Childerick, Anno 412. or thereabouts; and from the French by the Emperor Otho the firſt, An. 949. By Otho the 2d, made a part of the Dukedom of Lorrein, or at the leaſt given by him unto Charles of France, the firſt Duke thereof, after his death, to weaken the great houſe of Ardenne deſigned by Otho ſon of Charles to that goodly Patrimony, it was ſeized on by Otho the 3d, and by him reſtored to the Empire. Since that time the City of Colen hath remained Imperial, and of late times incorporated amongſt the Hanſe-towns; but the territory near unto it, and a great part of Weſtphalen, ſubject immediately to the Biſhop. The Biſhops See firſt founded here by S. Maternus, one of the Diſciples of S. Peter, as hath been conſtantly affirmed by old tradition: but howſoever an Epiſcopal See without all queſtion, in the time of Conſtantine; Maternus, Biſhop hereof, ſubſcribing amongſt others to the Council of Arles, An. 326. And being Colen was in thoſe times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania ſecunda, the Biſhop had the power of a Metropolitan, according to the rule and obſervation ſo often mentioned. Afterwards when the Empire was made Elective, theſe Biſhops, with their brethren of Ments and Triers, were made three of the ſeven, which were to nominate and elect the ſucceeding Emperour: after which time it is no wonder that they grew both in power and Patrimony.

Places of moſt importance within this Electorate, are 1. Bonn, ſituate on the banks of the Rhene, in the moſt pleaſant and fruitfull place of all the Countrey; the ordinary reſidence of the Archbiſhop, whoſe houſe or Palace here, is ſaid to be one of the faireſt in all Germany. By Tacitus called Bonna, and ſometimes Caſtra Bonnenſia, the wintering Camp in his time, of the ſixt Legion. 2. Nuys, by the ſame writer called Noveſium, (Niveſia by Antoninus) ſeated on the Erp, not far from its fall into the Rhene; the break-neck of the glories of Charls Duke of Burgundy: who being reſolved to get this town into his hands, as a convenient paſs into Germany, lay ſo long before it, that he loſt the opportunity of joyning with King Edward the 4th of England, whom he had purpoſely invited to the war of France, and yet was fain to go without it. By means whereof he grew ſo low in reputation, that he was undermined by the French, defied by the Lorreiner, forſook by the Engliſh, baffled by the Switzers, and at laſt overthrown and ſlain by that beggerly nation. 3. Ernace, or Andermach, by Marcellinus called Amenacum; one of the ten Garriſons erected by the Romans on the banks of the Rhene, to ſecure their Provice from the Germans: the other nine being Confluentz, Bopport, Worms, Bing, Zabern, Altrip, Selts, Strasburg, and Waſſenberg. 4. Lintz, ſeated on the ſame River alſo. 5 Sontina, a town of good repute. 6. Zulp, now a village of no eſteem, but for the Antiquities of it, by Tacitus and Antoninus called Tolbiacum; moſt memorable for the great victory which Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French (upon a vow made in the heat of the fight to embrace the Goſpell) obtained againſt the whole power of the Almans, never preſuming after that to inva de his territories. 7. Rhineburg, commonly called Ferck, the moſt northern town of all the Biſhoprick, ſituate on the Rhene (as the name imports) there where the lands of this Biſhop, as alſo of the Dukes of Cleve, and the Earls of Muers, meet upon a point. A Town which for theſe 60 years hath been of little uſe or profit to the right owner, poſſeſſed ſometimes by the Spaniards, ſometimes by the confederate States; for each commodiouſly ſeated, as opening a paſſage up the River, and receiving great cuſtomes on all kind of Merchandiſe paſſing to and fro. But having finally been poſſeſſed by the Spaniard from the year 1606, till 1633. it was then regained for the States by Henry of Naſſaw, Prince of Orange, with the loſſe of no more than 60 men: there being found in the Town 30 Braſſe peeces of Ordnance, 70 barrels of powder, with victuals and ammunition of all sorts thereunto proportionable. 8. Colen, situate on the Rhene, first built by the Ubii before mentioned, and by them called Oppidum Ubiorum; afterwards in honour of Agrippina (daughter of Germanicus, and wife of Claudius) who was here born, made a Roman Colonie, and called Colonia Agrippina; and sometimes by way of eminency Colonia only; thence the name of Colen. A rich, large, populous, and magnificent City, containing about five miles in compasse; in which are numbred 19 Hospitals, 37 Monasteries of both Sexes, 30 Chapels of our Lady, 9 Parishes, and 10 Collegiat Churches, besides the Cathedral, being a Church of vast greatnesse, but of little beauty, and not yet finished: the Metropolitan whereof is Chancellour of Italy, the second of the three Electors; and writes himself Duke of Westphalen and Angrivaria. Nigh to this Town did Cæsar with incredible expedition make a bridge over the Rhene, which more terrified the barbarous enemy than the reports of his valour: so powerfull is laborious industry, that it overcommeth all disasters, and maketh the most unpassable waters yeeld to Heroick resolutions. Triers.

In this Town also is said to lie the bodies of the three wise men, which came from the East to worship our Saviour; vulgarly called the three Kings of Colen. The whole story is at large written in tables, which are fastned unto their Tombes. The pith whereof is this. The first of them called Melchior, an old man with a large beard, offered Gold as unto a King; The second called Gasper, a beardlesse young man, offered Frankincense, as unto God: The third called Balthasar, a Blackmoor with a spreading beard, offered Myrrhe as unto a Man ready for his Sepulchre. That they were of Arabia, the tale saith, is probable; first because they came from the East, and so is Arabia in respect of Hierusalem: And 2ly. because it is said in the 72 Psalm, The Kings of Arabia shall bring gifts. As for their bodies, they are there said to have been translated by Helena, the mother of Constantine unto Constantinople; from thence by Eustorsius, Bishop of Millain, removed unto Millain; and finally brought hither by Rainoldus Bishop hereof, Anno 1164. This is the substance of the History; which for my part I reckon amongst the Apocrypha, (except it be their comming from some part of Arabia) but have not leisure in this place to refell the Fable.

As for the temporal estate of the Bishops of Colen, it came unto them specially by the munificence of the Emperours of the house of Saxonie; the Dukedom of Engern, containing a good part of Westphalen, being acquired unto this See by Bruno, once Archbishop hereof, one of the younger sons of the Emperour Henry the first, surnamed the Fowler, with the consent of Otho the first, his elder brother. To which was added, not long after, the whole land of Colen (as we have formerly described it) by Otho the 2d. which being formerly a part of the Kingdom of Lorrein, was taken out of it, and setled on the Bishops hereof, at such time as the Dukedom of Lorrein was erected by him: Such peeces only as are found on the other side of the Rhene (neither great nor many) being added by the wit and industry of the following Bishops: Exceedingly increased both in power and patrimony by the addition of Leige to this Electorate: it being of late the constant custom of the Canons of Leige, to choose the Archbishop of Colen for their Prince and Pastor.

Next to the Bishoprick of Colen lieth the land of TRIERS, extended all along the course of the Mosselle, from the Dukedom of Lorrein on the South, beyond the influx of that River into the Rhene at the City of Confluentz, where it bordereth on the land of Colen: and being bounded on the East with Luxembourg; as on the West, with that part of Franconia which lieth below the confluence of the said two Rivers, and is now called Rhinegouw; more Southward on that side with the Country of Westreich, and the Dukedom of Zweibruck, parts of the Palatinate of the Rhene. The Country towards Lorrein, and Luxembourg, somewhat wild and barren; more fruitfull about Triers it self, and the bank of the Rhene; in all parts generally more pleasant than profitable, the greatest riches of it lying in woods and Mineralls. The Bishops See here first erected by Eucherius, a Disciple and follower of S. Peter. The reality whereof, not only testified by the Martyrologies, but by Methodius, a writer of approved credit; who adds Valerius and Maternus for his next successors; the line Episcopal continuing till the Council of Arles, Anno 326. Agritius Bishop of Triers subscribing to the Acts thereof. From this time forwards, and before, the Bishop had the reputation and authority of a Metropolitan, the City of Triers being antiently the Metropolis of Belgica prima, within which it stands. Increased exceedingly by being made one of the three Electors of the Spiritualty, though the last in order, and Chancellour to the Emperour for the Realm of France: the fortunes of which Realm it followed, till wrested from it, with the rest of the Kingdom of Lorrein, by the German Emperours.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Confluents, now Cobolentz, the Confluentes of Antoninus, so called because seated on the confluence or meeting of the Rhene and the Mosselle; the station antiently of the first Legion. A populous and well-built Town; and seated in a pleasant and fertill Country. 2. Embretstein, over against Cobolentz, on the other side of the Rhene, beautified with a strong Castle of the Bishops, mounted upon a lofty hill, which not only gives a gallant prospect to the eye, but commands both the Town and River. 3. Boppart, seated on the Rhene, and called so quasi Bonport, from the commodiousnesse of the Creek (upon which it standeth) for the use of shipping: one of the forts (as Confluents before mentioned was) erected by the Romans on the Rhene, for defence of Gaul against the Germans; occasioning in time both Towns. It was once miserably wasted by Richard Earl of Cornwal, and King of the Romans, because the Bishop of Triers agreed not unto his Election; but soon recovered of those hurts. The antient name hereof in the Itinerarie of Antoninus, is supposed to be Bodobrica: pawned to the Bishops of Triers by Henry the 7th. and not yet redeemed. 4. Sarbrucken, on the edge of Lorrein (by Antoninus called Pons Sarvix) seated on the River or Brook called Sar, (whence it had the name) at the fall thereof into the Mosselle: possessed at the present by a branch of the house of Nassaw (but Homagers of this Electour) entituled hence according to the Dutch fashion, Triers Counts of Naſſaw in Sarbruck. 5. Veldents, and 6. Belſtern on the Moſelle, of which nothing memorable. 7. Treves, or Triers, in Latine Treveris, the principal City of the Treveri, who poſſeſſed this tract; ſeated upon the Moſelle alſo, the Metropolis of the Province of Belgica Prima, and honoured with the reſidence of the Vicar or Lieutenant General, for the whole Dioceſe of Gaul; by conſequence the ſeat of a Metropolitan when it ſubmitted to the Goſpel. Of ſuch antiquity, that it is ſaid to have been founded 150 years before the City of Rome: of no great beauty of it ſelf, and as little trading; the River not being capable of ſhips of burden; and the air generally ſo cloudy and inclined to rain, that it is by ſome called merrily Cloaca Planetarum. It paſſed ſometimes among the number of Imperial Cities, but now acknowlegeth the Elector for the Lord thereof; by whom made an Univerſity, one of the antienteſt in all Germany, and of as much reſort for the ſtudy of good Arts and Sciences, as the beſt amongſt them. 8. Obert-Weſel, or Veſalia Superior, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Weſel in the Dukedom of Cleve, which is Veſalia inferior, or the Under-weſel: the furtheſt place of this Diſtrict, ſeated on the Rhene, not far from Baccharach, a Town of the Palatinate; of no great note, but that it is accompted for a Town Imperial.

This Countrey antiently was part of the great and famous Earldom of Moſelle, denominated from the River Moſelle, along the courſe whereof it was firſt erected. An Eſtate founded by the diſherited ſons of Clodion, ſecond King of the French, at the ſame time (and on the ſame occaſion alſo) in which the Earldom of Ardenne was erected by them; of which we have already ſpoken when we were in Belgium. This of the two the more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Metz, as lying nearer to the Court, and ſo more in ſight: the other being further off, in Countries far leſs cultivate, but more defenſible. This Earldom comprehending, beſides this of Triers, the Countries of Sweibrucken and Weſt-reich, and ſo much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the French ſide of the Rhene, occaſioned the Princes of it to be much looked after; and they maintained their port to the very laſt; inſomuch that Giſlebert or Gilbert Earl of Moſelle, in the time of the Emperour Henry the firſt, ſurnamed the Fowler, was thought by him a fit Husband for his daughter Gerberg; maried after his deceaſe to Lewis ſurnamed Tranſmarine King of France, and Gertrude, daughter of Theodorick, who came after Gilbert, maried to Henry ſurnamed Gozelo Duke of Saxonie and Bavaria, and by him made the mother of another Henry, Succeſſor unto Otho the 3d, in the Roman Empire. Impoveriſhed not a little both in power and patrimony by the erection of the Dukedom of Lorrein, there grew ſome feuds between thoſe houſes; occaſioning the death of Albert another of theſe Earls, ſlain (as is ſaid by Lazius) by Godfrey ſon to Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorrein: more probably by ſome other Prince of the houſe of Ardenne, it not being found in any other approved Author, that Godfrey of Bouillon was the Father of any Children. But this difference being reconciled by the mariage of Bertha daughter of Simon Earl hereof, with Thierry, the 9th Duke of Lorrein, and the familie of theſe Earls expiring in a ſhort time after; this part of the Eſtate was ſeized on by the Biſhops of Triers; that part of the Palatinate which lieth on the Gallick ſide of the Rhene, by the Biſhops of Mentz, Spires, Wormes, and the Princes Palatine; the reſt being taken in by the Dukes of Lorrein, who do ſtill enjoy it: the Emperours of thoſe times being either willing to it, or not able to help it.

3. The Biſhoprick of MENTZ, is not laid out by bounds and limits as the other; becauſe the Patrimony and eſtate thereof doth not lie together: diſperſed for the moſt part about Franconia, intermixed with the Lands and Towns of the Princes Palatine, the Biſhops of Wormes, Spires, and others. So that the temporal Eſtate of this Elector is every way inferior unto thoſe of Triers, and Colen; ſuperior unto both in place and dignity: he being the firſt in rank of the whole Electoral College, Chancellor for the Empire, and in all meetings ſitteth at the right hand of the Emperour. The Biſhops See firſt placed here, as ſome report, by S. Creſcens, one of the Diſciples of S. Paul, of whoſe being ſent by him into Gallia (for ſo the antient writers underſtand Galatia) the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 2 Tim. 4. Though others with more probability ſeat him at Vienna in Daulphine. But whether it were here or there, certain it is, that antiently this City was a See Epiſcopal; Martine the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. And if a Biſhop, certainly a Metropolitan Biſhop, this City being in thoſe times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Prima. But Chriſtianity being worn out of theſe parts of Germany, by the conqueſts of the French, Almans, and other Infidels, was again reſtored in this tract by Boniface, an Engliſhman, the firſt Archbiſhop of Mentz of this new plantation, (in and about the time of Pepin, ſurnamed the Groſſe, Maire of the Palace to the French Kings, and father of Martel) who for the Orthodoxie of his doctrine, and the number of Churches planted by him, hath been deſervedly honoured with the title of the Apoſtle of Germany.

Towns of moſt note belonging to the Biſhops hereof are, 1. Mentz it ſelf, the Moguntiacum of the Antients, ſo called from the River of Maine, formerly Mogus and Moganus in the Latine (now better known by the name of Mœnus) oppoſite to the fall whereof into the Rhene it was built of old; ſo having the command of both Rivers: for that cauſe made the ſeat of a Roman Officer, commonly called the Duke of Mentz, who had a charge of the Frontiers; and eſpecially of thoſe ten Garriſons planted on the banks of the Rhene, ſpoken of before. Stretched out in great length on the River ſide, but not of anſwerable breadth; well built, and populous towards the water, in other parts not ſo well inhabited. The publick buildings generally very large and beautifull, the houſes built according to the old Roman model; the moſt magnificent whereof is the Biſhops Palace, who is the immediate Lord both of the Town and Territory, extended on both ſides of the Rhene, fruitfull in all naturall commodities, and abounding with moſt excellent wines. Of good note alſo for an Univerſity here founded by Theodorick, one of the Electors: but eſpecially for the Art of Printing which was here invented, or perfected at the leaſt, and made fit for uſe. 2. Bing ſeated on the Rhene, another of the the Gariſon towns, erected by the Romans on the banks of that River. In a ſmall Iſland of which, not far from this town, is a Tower, or Caſtlelet, called the Mouſeturn, i.e. the tower of Mice: built by one Hatto (or Hanno) Archbiſhop of Mentz, An. 900. or thereabouts. Who in a year of great ſcarcity pretending to relieve the poor people oppreſſed with Famine, cauſed them to be gathered together into an old barn, where he burnt them all; ſaying, they were the Rats and Mice which devoured the Corn. After which barbarous act he was ſo perſecuted by thoſe Vermin, that to avoid them, he was fain to build a Palace in the midſt of the Rhene, whither the Rats and Mice followed him, and at laſt devoured him. 3. Lauſteine. 4. Hasford. 5. Oxenford. 6. Alderburg. 7. Middleburg. 8. Carloſtadt, the birth-place of Corolostadius, of great note in the time of Luther. 9. Biſchoffſtein. 10. Koningsberg (mons Regius in Latine) the birth-place of Johannes de Monte Regio, a famous Mathematician, as appeareth by this Comment upon Ptolemies Almageſt. Moſt of which Towns being in Frankenland, though of his Electorate, were not gained in groſſe by theſe Electors, as were the Land of Colen, and Diſtrict of Triers, but piece-meal in a manner, and by retrailer, party upon the failer of the houſe of Shwaben Dukes of Franconie alſo, partly by the munificence of the German Emperors, but ſpecially by making the beſt uſe of their Votes and Suffrage in the Change of Emperors, which they did not part withall for nothing: Such Towns hereof, as lie on the French ſide of the Rhene, gained by like means upon the expiration of the houſe of Moſelle.

Palatinate of Rhene.

3. The PALATINATE of the RHENE.

The PALATINATE of the RHENE is bounded upon the Eaſt, with the Dukedome of Wirtenberg, and ſome part of Franconie; with the reſidue thereof, and the River Main, upon the North, on the South, with Elſats, or Alſatia; and on the Weſt, with the Land of Triers: extended in length from Coub to Gemerſheime, north and ſouth, 72 miles; and in breadth from Sweibrucken to Landen, eaſt and weſt, 90 miles.

It it called alſo the Lower Palatinate, to difference it from the Palatinate of Bavaria, which is called the Upper: the Palatinate of the Rhene, becauſe lying on the banks of that famous River. The whole Country is ſaid to be the moſt pleaſant part of all Germany, ſtored with all ſorts of fruits and metalls, abounding with thoſe cool wines, which growing on the banks of the Rhene, have the name of Rheniſh, adorned with many goodly Towns, both for ſtrength, populouſneſſe, and beauty, and finally, watered with the famous River of the Rhene, and the Neccar.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Moſpach, a pretty neat town on the banks of the Neccar, and a Prefecture, not far from the borders of Wirtenberg; 2. Ladenberg, near the influx of the ſame River into the Rhene; the moiety whereof was bought by Rupertus, the Emperour and Palatine, of the Earls of Hoenloe, Anno 1371. the other moiety belonging to the Biſhop of Wormes. 3. Winheime, a ſmall town not far from Ladeberg, belonging once to the Arch-biſhop of Mentz; but on ſome controverſie ariſing about the title, adjudged unto the ſaid Rupertus, and his heirs for ever. 4. Scrieſſen, in the ſame tract, well ſeated, but not very large, ſold with the Caſtle of Stralnberg to the ſaid Rupertus, by Sifride (or Sigifride) of Stralnberg, the right heir hereof, Anno 1347. 5. Heidelberg, on the right ſhore of the Neccar (going down the water) compaſſed on three ſides with Mountains, and lying open only towards the Weſt, which makes the air hereof to be very unhealthy. The chief beauty of it lyeth in one long Street, extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt: on the South-eaſt ſide whereof is a fair and pleaſant Market-place; and not far off a very high mountain called Koningſtall (that is to ſay, the Kingly ſeat) upon the middle aſcent whereof is the Caſtle, where the Princes Electours uſe to keep their Courts; and on the very ſummit or top thereof, the ruines of an old Tower blown up with gun-powder. A town of no great bigneſſe, nor very populous, there being but one Church in it, which was uſed in the time of my Author for Prayer and Preaching: the reſt being either ruined, or imployed unto other uſes, if not repaired again ſince the Spaniards became maſters of it, for more frequent Maſſes. Howſoever, it hath the reputation of being the chief City of this Palatinate; not long ſince furniſhed with a great and gallant Library, which for choice and number of Books (eſpecially Manuſcripts) was thought not to be fellowed in all Europe, til matched, if not over-matched by the famous Bodleian Library of Oxford: moſt of them, to the great prejudice of the Proteſtant cauſe, being carried to Rome, and other places of that party, when the Town was taken by Spaniards, Anno 1620. Finally for the Town it ſelf, it was once part of the poſſeſſions of the Biſhop of Wormes; from whom it was taken by the Palatines; and it is now famous, for being the ſeat of the Palſgraves, the ſepulchre of Rodolphus Agricola, and for an Univerſity founded by the Emperour, and Palatine Rupertus, Anno 1346. 6. Baccharach, on the Banks of Rhene, ſo called, quaſi Bacchi ara, for the excellent wines. 7. Coub, on the other ſide of the water; near unto which is the old and fair Caſtle called Pfalts, from whence the name Pfalts-grave or Palſgrave, ſeemeth to ſome, to have been derived. 8. Openheim, a ſtrong Town, which together with Keiſars Lanterne and Ingelheim, were given to the Palatines by Wenceſlaus: and after ſetled on them, by Rupertus the Emperour and Palatine, for 100000 Florens, Anno 1402. 9. Cruintznacke, called anciently Straurones ſus. 10. Frankendale; lately a Monaſtery only, but being well peopled by ſuch of the Netherlands, which to avoid the fury of the Duke Alva, fled hither; is now a town of principall ſtrength. 11. Gemerſheim, and 12. Manheim, a well fortified Town, ſeated on the confluence of Rhene and Neccar.

On the Eaſtern part of the Country ſtandeth 13 Laden, ſituate on the little River Tuberus, the furtheſt bound of the Palatinate towards the North-eaſt, there adjoining to the reſt of Frankenland. And on the Weſt ſide the Towns of 14 Newſtat, 15 Keiſars Lautern, in Latine called Cæſarea Lutra, once a town Imperiall; from which, and from its ſituation on the River Luter, it received this name. 16 Sweibrucken, inveſted with a large and ample Territory round about, called the Country of Sweibrook; the patrimony and title of a younger Houſe of the Pfaltsgraves, whom the Latine writers call Principes Bipontani: the French, the Princes of Deuxponts. 17 Simmeren on the North-weſt point of it, where it meets with the Diſtrict of Triers; the title of another Branch of the Palatine Family, called the Dukes of Simmeren; ſituate in that part of the Country which is called Weſt-reich, of which Zweibrucken is alſo part. In all there are contained within the Palatinate 24 walled Towns, and 12 fair Palaces of the Prince: moſt of which they have added to their eſtate within little more than 400 years. Such excellent managers have they been of their own eſtates, ſo potent in ordering the affairs of the Empire both in war and peace, and ſo ingraffed themſelves into the moſt notable families of Germany, that I may well ſay with Irenicus, Non eſt alia Germaniæ familia, cui plus debeat nobilitas.

Within the limits of this Country, and intermingled with the Lands of the Princes Palatine; are the Biſhopricks of Spires and Worms; both antient, and of great Revenue, but feudatories for a great part of their eſtates, to theſe Electors. Of theſe, more towards the head of the Rhene, and on the Gallick ſide thereof, ſtands the City of Spires, by Ptolomy called Neomagus, from the newneſſe of the building when that name was given; by Antoninus, Civitas Nemetum, from the Nemetes, who poſſeſſed this tract; and ſometimes Spira, by which name it doth ſtill continue. A town Imperiall, and antiently a Biſhops See; Teſtis the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Councill of Colen, Anno 347. A neat Town, and very delectably ſeated. Of great reſort, by reaſon of the Imperiall Chamber, the ſoveraign Court of Judicature of all the Empire; capable of Appeals from the Tribunals of all the Princes, and free States thereof. A Court which firſt followed the Emperour in all his Removes (as antiently the Kings Bench in England) by Maximilian the Emperor firſt made Sedentary, and fixt at Franckfort; removed after to Wormes, and finally to this City by Charls the fift. Sufficiently famous in that the name of Proteſtants was here taken up, given to the Princes, & free Cities following the reformed Religion, upon their legal Proteſtation here exhibited. More down the water and on the ſame ſhore thereof, ſtands the City of Wormes, one of thoſe built upon the Rhene, for defence of Gaul againſt the Germans; by Ptolomy called Borbegomagus; by Antonine, Civitas Wormenſis, whence the modern name; but generally Civitas Vangionum, from the Vangiones, the old Inhabitants of thoſe parts, whoſe chief City it was. A Town Imperiall as the former, and a See Epiſcopal as that is, and as antient too; Victor the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Councill of Colen, before mentioned. A Town to be obſerved for the firſt appearance, which Luther made before Charls the fift, (the Imperial Chamber then being holden in this City:) who being diſſwaded from that journey by ſome of his Friends, returned this reſolute anſwer; That go he would, though there were as many Devils in the Town, as there were tiles on the Houſes. Chief towns belonging to theſe Biſhops, are 1. Vdenheim, a town belonging to the Biſhop of Spires, whoſe reſidence it ſometimes is: conveniently ſeated for the command of the Country, and therefore upon ſome deſign which was then in hand, fortified ſtrongly by the Biſhop. But this new Fortification being begun in a time of peace, gave great occaſion of diſtruct to the neighbouring Princes; who interpoſed with Frederick the fift, then Prince Elector, (of whom held in chief) to cauſe the Biſhop to deſiſt from the finiſhing of it. Which when he had refuſed to do, pleading a Placard from the Emperour Matthias, to compleat the work; the Prince Elector, with the reſt of the Confederates, beat it down by force: for this contempt, cited to Spires the Imperiall Chamber, in which it was alſo reſolved to proceed ſuddenly, and ſeverely to their condemnation. One of the chief motives which occaſioned that unfortunate Prince, to entertain the offer of the Crown of Bohemia; and conſequently a chief cauſe of the German warrs. In managing whereof this Town was thought ſo commodious, that Marquis Spinola cauſed the works to be raiſed again, made it the ſtrongeſt hold in all thoſe Countries, and cauſed it to be called by the name of Philipsberg. 3. Rotenberg, originally belonging to the Biſhops of Spires, but of late times poſſeſſed by the Princes Palatine. Others of leſſer note I forbear to mention.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country on the French ſide of the Rhene, were the Nemetes, and Vangiones ſpoken of before; on the other ſide, the Intuergi. That on the Weſt ſide of the River, firſt conquered by the Romans, and from them by the French; of whoſe Empire it remained a part, but ſo that it was ſubject more immediately to the Earls of Moſelle, firſt under the Soveraignty and vaſſallage of the Kings of Metz, and after of the Kings of Lorrein. In the dividing of which Kingdome between the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, it became ſubject to the Empire, but ſtil poſſeſſed by thoſe of Moſelle as it was before. Eſcheating to the Empire on the expiration of that Family, partly by force of arms, partly by paying down ready mony, and partly too by ſelling of their voices, as they ſaw occaſion, it was gained by the Electors Palatine: and ſo was alſo that part of it, which lies on the Dutch ſide of the Rhene, which being antiently and properly a part of the Frankenland, followed the fortunes of that Country, till the fall of the Houſe of Schwaben, and then divolved unto the Empire as the other did. By little and little got into the hands of the Princes Palatine, who being originally Officers of the Emperours Houſhold (ſuch as the Maires of the Palace to the French Kings at the firſt inſtitution) had firſt the honour of Counts Palatine beſtowed upon them; and afterwards the place of an Electour, in the choice of the Emperour. But where their eſtates then lay, where they fixed their dwelling, and what provinces or people they had ſubject to them, à nullo inveni ſcriptum, I could never find any good Record to build on, ſaith the learned Munſter: their habitation & poſſeſſion in & of theſe parts (acquired, for the moſt part by Arms and Mony) not being above 450 years ſtanding at the utmoſt. Likely it is, they had their reſidence, for the moſt part, in the Emperours Palace, living upon their rents, (as other great Officers of Court in theſe later times) the dignity and authority of ſo great a place seeming sufficient to content them: but called Count Palatines of the Rhene, because their Jurisdiction and Authority lay most especially in those parts of the Empire, which were towards that River. Afterwards on the marriage of Otho, the second of that name, Duke of Bavaria, with Gertrude, the Daughter of Henry the Elector Palatine, this office, with the Electorall dignity, fell into that House: possessed at that time of those parts of Francovia and the Earldom of Mosselle, which not long after on the dividing of that estate betwixt Rodolphus and Ludovicus, the sons of Ludovick the 2. Elector Palatine, and Duke of Bavaria, made up this Palatinate. A State which suddenly received a great augmentation, partly by the care and good husbandry of Rupertus, Emperour and Electour Palatine; partly by the weakness and ambition of Wenceslaus, Emperour and King of Bohemia; and partly by the valour of Frederick, the Prince Electour. Of these the first bought in the Towns of Winhein, Ladeberg, Scrienssen, and the Castle of Stralnberg, with their lands and territories. The second gave unto the Palatines, for their voices in his election, three strong Towns of the Empire, viz. Keisars Lanterne, Ingelheim, and Openheim: and the last took in Battell, Anno 1452. the Earl of Wirtenberg, the Marquesse of Baden, the Bishop of Spires, and the Arch-bishop of Mentz; and ransomed them on what condition he pleased. More particularly the Earl of Wirtenberg (for it was not yet erected into a Dukedom) payed for his ransome 100000 Florens. The Bishop of Mentz re deemed himself for 450000 Florens. The Bishop of Spires gave for his liberty, the Towns of Rottenberg and Wersaw: And the Marquesse of Baden yeelded up in lieu of his freedome, the Country of Spanheim, of which Cruitznack is a part; the Towns of Besiken, and Binheim; the right which he pretended to Eppingen, a town over against Gemersheim; and his royalties between this Gemersheim and Selts, a Town of Alsatia, in fishing and hunting. So having brought these Princes unto their estate; let us next take a view of those, who have successively enjoyed both the State and Title, as far as we can go by the light of Story. Palatinate of Rhene.

ELECTORS Palatine of the RHENE.

A. Ch.

1 Henry, Count of Palatine in the time of Otho the third, by whom ordained to be one of the six Electors.
2 Sigefride, the son of Adelheild, wife of this Henry the Elector, by a former husband.
3 Ezeline, and Conrade, sons of Sigefride.
4 Ludolphus, son to Ezeline.
5 Conrade, Elector Palatine in the time of Henry the fift.
6 Frederick, son to Frederick Duke of Schwaben, Nephew to the Emperour Conrade the third.
7 Henry II. surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxonie and Bavaria.
1295 8 Henry III son of Henry the Lion, and Husband of Clementia, daughter of Conrade Duke of Schwaben, and Elector Palatine.
9 Henry IV. son of Henry the third, in the life of the Father, the last Elector Palatine of the nomination and appointment of the Emperour, the dignity from hence forwards becomming hereditary.
10 Otho, Duke of Bavaria, of that name the second, Elector Palatine of the Rhene, in right of Gertrude his Wife, sister and next heir of Henry the fourth, whom he succeeded in the Electorall dignity, confirmed therein by the Emperour Frederick the second.
1269 11 Ludovicus, Elector Palatine, and Duke of Bavaria, the son of Otho.
1294 12 Rodolphus, the eldest son of Lewis or Ludovicus, succeeded his Father in the Palatinate and Electorall dignity; Northgoia, or the Palatinate of Bavaria, being added to his part, to make even the scale: his younger Brother Ludovicus succeeding in Bavaria.
1315 13 Adolphus, surnamed the Simple, resigned the Electoral dignity to his Brother Rodolphus, as the fitter man to undertake it.
1327 14 Rodolphus II. on the resignation of Adolphus.
1337 15 Rupertus, the Brother of Rodolphus the second, founder of the University of Heidelberg, Anno 1346.
1385 16 Rupertus II. son of Adolphus the Simple.
1398 17 Rupertus III. elected Emperour in the place of Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, Anno 1406, made Knight of the Garter by King Henry the fourth.
2410 18 Ludovicus II. surnamed Caecus, and Barbatus, the eldest son of Rupertus the Emperour, married Blanch, daughter to King Henry the fourth of England.
2439 19 Ludovicus III. son of Lewis the second.
1451 20 Frederick, brother of Ludovicus, during the minority of Philip his said Brothers son, succeeded in the Electorall dignity; and added much to that estate by his personall vertue.
1078 21 Philip, the Son of Lewis the third, pretended to the Dukedome of Bavaria in right of Margaret his wife; but, after a long and bloody war, forced to go without it.
1508 22 Ludovicus IV. son of Philip.
1544 23 Frederick II. brother of Lewis the fift, who first introduced the Reformed Religion into the the Palatinate.
1556 24 Otho-Henry, son of Rupertus, the brother of Frederick, and Lewis the last of the direct line and of this house of Bavaria.

Palatinate.

1559 25 Frederick III. Duke of Simmeren, descended from Stephen Palatine of Zweibruck or Bipont, younger son of the Emperour Rupert, succeeded on the decease of Otho-Henry without issue.

1576 26 Ludovicus V. son of Frederick the third, a munificent benefactor to the University of Heidelberg.

1583 27 Frederick IV. son of Lewis the fift, married Ludovica, or Loise, daughter of William, and sister of Maurice, Princes of Orange.

1610 28 Frederick V. son of Frederick the 4th, maried the Princesse Eliz. daughter of James, King of Great Britain. In danger of being proscribed for demolishing the works of Videnheim, he accepted the Crown of Bohemia. But worsted at the battel of Prague, and warred upon by the Bavarian and the Spaniard, he lost both that, and his own native estates and Dignities; of which deprived by Ferdinand the prevailing Emperour: the Lower Palatinate being assigned over to and conquered by the King of Spain, the Upper Palatinate, with the Electoral dignity, bestowed on the Duke of Bavaria. Restored to the possession of the most part of his Country, by the power of the Swedes, he died at Mentz. November 29. 1632. the whole Country falling again not long after under the power and government of the former Conquerours.

1631 29 Charles Ludowick, the heir both of his Fathers estates, and misfortunes too; not yet admitted to his honours (contrary to the fundamentall constitutions of the Empire, by which the sons of the Electors and other Princes are not involved in the guilt of their Fathers offences:) but in fair hopes to be restored thereto in part, by the Pacificationes made at Munster this present year, 1648. which I pray God to prosper for the peace of afflicted Christendome.

The Religion of this Country, and that of the Upper Palatinate which depends upon it, hath much varied since the first Reformation, established by Frederick the second, according to the form and doctrine of the Confession of Auspurg: the doctrine and discipline of Calvin being introduced by Frederick the third; the Lutherans forms restored again by Lewis, or Ludowick the first: after his death exchanged by Frederick the fourth for that of Calvin; as more conducing to the ends of some needy Statists; who could not otherwise raise their fortunes than by invading the Tithes and Glebe, and other poor remainders of the Churches Patrimony. Of which the Clergie being Universally deprived throughout this Country, and reduced to miserable short stipends, by the name of a Competency, became so contemptible, and neglected by all sorts of men, that at the last the Church of the Palatinate, was in the same condition with the Church of Israel, under the reign of Jeroboam, when Priests were made out of the meanest of the people. And for the Government of their Churches, though moulded to the Genevian plat form as near as it might be, yet were those Princes loath to leave too much power in the hands of the Elderships, and therefore did appoint some superiour Officers to have an eye on them, whom they called Inspectores & Præpositos, their power being much the same with that of the particular Superintendent amongst the Lutherans; and over them a standing Consistory consisting of three Ministers, and as many Counsellers of State, of the Princes nominating, who in his name were to take care of all things which concerned the Church. A temperament for which they were beholding to Erastus, a Doctor of Physick, in the University of Heidelberg; who made this Pill to purge Presbytery of some Popish humours, which secretly lay hid in the body of it: But this whole modell and Religion of the Country is much changed of late, and the Religion of the Church of Rome restored in most parts thereof, since the Conquest of them by the Spaniards, and Bavarians, which before we spake of.

But to return again to the Civil State, and the concernment of those Princes. The Palsgrave hath many prerogatives above the Electors of either sort. He taketh place of the Duke of Saxonie, and Marquesse of Brandenburg; because Henry the Palatine, was descended of Charls the great: for which cause he is also in the vacancy of the Empire. Governour of the Western parts of Germany. In which office he had power to alienate, or give offices, to take fealty and homage of the subjects; and which is most, to sit in the Imperial Courts, and give judgement of the Emperour himself. And look whatsoever shall in the vacancy of the Empire, be by the Palatines enacted, that the new Emperors are bound by oath to confirm, and ratifie.

The Revenues of these Princes were conceived to be about 100000 l. per annum; nor could they be supposed at lesse: the silver Mines about Amberg only in the Upper Palatinate, yeelding 60000 Crowns a year, and the passage of one Bridge over the Rhene about 20000 Crowns more, besides the demeasn Lands, and the Lands of the Church, incorporated (since the Reformation) into their Estate.

The Arms hereof are Diamond, a Lion Topace, Armed and Crowned Ruby.

4. ALSATIA.

ALSATIA or ELSATS, as the Dutch call it, is bounded on the East with the Rhene, which parteth it from the Marquisate of Baden, and some parts of Schwaben; on the West, with the Mountain Vauge, or Vogesus, which separateth it from Lorrein; on the North with the Palatinate; on the South, (where it groweth very narrow) with a point of Switzerland. A Countrey for the pleasantness and fertility of it, inferior to none in Germanie: called therefore Elsats, (as some think) quasi Edelsats, that that is to ſay, a noble Seat; derived more probably by others from the river Ill, the only River of note in all this tract; and called ſo, quaſi Ill-ſats, the ſeat or ſituation on the river Ill.

It is divided generally into the Lower and higher, to which the Country called Sungow may come in for a third. The LOWER ALSATIA is that which bordereth on the Palatinate, ſo called, becauſe further off from the Mountains, and down the water in reſpect of the courſe of the Rhene. A Country ſo aboundantly fruitfull in wine and corn, (with which it furniſheth ſome parts of Germany, and not a few of the neighbour Countries) that it is generally called Germaniæ nutrix, or the nurſe of Germanie; by Winphelegius, the Epitome or Abſtract of it. Chief Towns therein are, 1 Strasburg, ſo called from the multitude of Streets (the Dutch call them Strats) antiently Argentoratum, and then Argentina, from the Roman Exchequer, or Receipt, here kept in the time of their greatneſſe; or from ſome Mines of ſilver which were found about it. A ſtately, rich, and populous City, well ſtored with publick garners and cellars of wine, againſt times of dearth. Situate on the two Rivers Ill and Bruſch, where they both fall into the Rhene; by which, and by the helps of Art, very ſtrongly fortified: Deſigned from the firſt foundation for a Town of war; this being another of the Towns which the Romans built, to defend the Rhene againſt the Germans. Now an Imperial City, and a See Epiſcopal, the Biſhop whereof is Lord of the Lower Alſatia. The Church Cathedral, one of the faireſt in all Germany: much famed for a Clock of moſt admirable workmanſhip, and a Steeple of as curious a frame as that, mounted 574 foot in height, the higheſt of any in Chriſtendom; higher (if the meaſure of it be not miſtaken) by 40 foot than the Steeple of S. Pauls in London, before the firing of it. Of this thus ſaith the Poet in Adrianus,

Urbs præclara ſitu, ripis contermina Rheni,
Maxima cui celſæ metiuntur mœnia turris.

Strasburg on Rhenes inamell'd banks doth lie,
Whoſe Tower even bids defiance to the skie.

2 Zabern, or Elſatz Savern, the Tabernæ of Antonine and Marcellinus, another of the old Roman Garriſons; deſtroyed by the Almans, and repaired again by Julian the Apoſtata, then Emperour. Now the chief place of Reſidence for the Biſhops of Strasburg, and well frequented in regard of the Courts of Juſtice, kept by his Officers in this City, for the Lower Alſatia. 3. Altrip, ſo called from Alta ripa, from the high banks of the river, on which it is ſeated; another of the Towns or Forts, which the Romans like politick conquerors built on the Weſt ſide of the Rhene, to prohibit the incurſions of the barbarous Nations. And ſo was 4 Selts, ſeated on the Rhene betwixt Strasburg and Zabern; and 5 Weiſſenberg, more towards the Palatinate, now a town Imperial, but ſeated on the river Lutra, not far from its fall into the Rhene; encompaſſed with little hils and delightful groves, the River gently waſhing the walks thereof, and adding much to it both of ſtrength and beauty. 6 Hagenaw, between Selts and Strasburg, but not ſo near unto the Rhene as either of them: firſt walled by Frederick Barbaroſſa, Anno 1164. and ſince that time of great importance for command of the Countrey; but ſeated in a ſandy and unfruitful ſoil, frequented chiefly heretofore by the old Lantgraves of Elſats, for the commodities of hunting. More from the Rhene, 7 Stechfield, corruptly ſo called for Steffansfield, from the Monaſtery of S. Stephen there founded. 8 Haſle on the Bruſch, &c.

Places of moſt importance in the HIGHER ALSATIA, are 1. Rufach, on the river Ombach, belonging to the Biſhops of Strasburg, of old called Rubeacum, from the red colour of the earth, well built, invironed with a double Suburb. In antient times of great reſort by the Roman nobility, much taken with the fruitfulneſs and pleaſures of it: and well inhabited at this day, as is all the Country round about it, by reaſon of their vigorous proceedings againſt Theeves; from whence the Germans have a Proverb, that the old gallows at Ruffach is made of oak. 2 Enſheim, or Enſiſheim, on the river Ill, antiently the ſtation of the tenth Legion, and then called Aruncis; now of moſt note for the ſupreme Court of juſtice there held for Briſgow, Sungow, and this part of Alſatia, by the Archdukes of Auſtria, the chief Lords thereof. 3 Colmar, an Imperial City raiſed out of the ruines of old Argentaria, deſtroyed by Attila and the Huns: well built, and ſituate almoſt in the very Navel of Alſatia, not above an hours journy from the foot of the Mountains; but in a fruitfull and rich ſoyl both for corn and paſturage, the Countrey hereabouts being very well watred with the Louch, Duro, Fecht, and Ill. 4 Schleſtad, in the modern Latine, Seleſtadium, but by the antients called Elcebus, the ſtation at that time of the 19 Legion; afterwards of great fame for a Church here built by Hildegardis Dutcheſs of Schwaben, An. 1044. according to the pattern of the Temple of Hieruſalem; which in tract of time became the richeſt Monaſtery in all theſe parts. Situate in a very fertile and delightful ſoil, having the Rhene on the one ſide, and ſome ſpurs of the Mountain Vauge, ſhadowed with Groves of Cheſnuts upon the other: walled in the time of Frederick the 2d. about the year 1216. and on the Eaſt defended with impaſſible fens. 5 Gebwiler, and 6 Watweil, both ſeated near the aforeſaid Mountains, and both ſubject to the Abbat of Murbach. 7 Keiſersberg, 8 Turchein, two Imperial towns, but not otherwiſe memorable; as neither are many of the reſt, but for name and number: there being reckoned within this ſmall Province of Elſats, (not including Sungow) 46 Cities and Towns begirt with walls, beſides Caſtles, Forts and Villages, almoſt innumerable; and amongſt them more Free and Imperial Cities, than in any one Province of the Empire.

The Southern part of Elſats bordering on the Canton of Baſil, is commonly called by the name of SUNGOW, in Latine Sungovia, and Sungoia; but in former times the Dukedom of Pfirts, from Pfirt the Lorrein the chief Town of it, and the Dukes ſeat: the Country very plentifull in corn and wine (as the reſt of Elſats, affording good ſtore of each to the neighbouring Switzers. Chief Towns hereof, are 1 Mulhanſen on the River Ill, heretofore under the command of the Biſhops of Strasburg, as were alſo Keiſerſberg and Colmar: but being taken in by Rodulph of Habſpurgh, after his advancement to the Empire, it was made Imperial; and is now confederate with the Switzers. 2. Befort, remarkable for a Collegiate Church there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, in which lie buried 13 Earls, and as many Counteſſes. 3. Maſz-munſter, ſo called from a Monaſtery of Nuns there found by Maſo, a Prince of the old Almans. 4. Thann, a neat Town, beautified with the fair Caſtle of Engleberg, mounted upon the top of a lofty hill. 5. Morſ-munſter, ſo named of an ancient Monaſtery there founded by the Earls of Pfirt; moſt of them great builders of Religious houſes. 6. Altkirk, not far from the head of the River Ill. 7. Pfirt it ſelf, ſeated on the Ill, not far from Altkirk, in a Country heretofore over-grown with Woods and Forreſts, whence it had the name. Called by the French le Pais de Ferrette (corruptly for le Pais de Forreſt) by the Dutch moulded into Pfirt: by which name (of the Countie of Ferrette) it is called by Philip de Comines, and other French writers; and by that name pawned by Sigiſmund the Archduke, to Charls Duke of Burgundie, made by that means too near a neighbour to the Switzers, as it proved in fine.

Weſtward hereof, betwixt it and the County of Burgundie, lieth the Town and Earldom of MONTBELGARD, (Montis Belligardum in the Latine) united by the mariage of Henrica, daughter and heir of Henry the firſt Earl hereof, Anno 1396. to the houſe of Wirtenberg. Chief Towns whereof, are, 1. Clarewang. 2. Paſſewang, 3. Grans, all antiently beautified with Caſtles, and 4. Montbelgard, a Town of great ſtrength, proud of a Caſtle Royal on the top of a fair and lofty Mountain, whence it took that name; once the ſeat of its proper Earls, as after of the Princes of the houſe of Wirtenberg; but, now both Town and Caſtle in the power of the French, who after their good luck in the Dukedom of Lorrein, cauſed a good Garriſon of their own to be put into them, Anno 1633. under pretence of keeping them for the Children of a Brother of the Duke of Wirtenbergs, to whom the inheritance belonged.

The antient Inhabitants of this tract were the Tribochi, with parts of the Nemetes and Ranraci; firſt conquered by the Romans, then ſubdued by the Almains, after by the French, and by them made a part of the Kingdom of Lorrein: in the full of which Kingdom it was reckoned for a Province of the German Empire. Governed for the Emperours by Provincial Earls, in the Dutch language called Landgraves: at firſt officiarie only, and accomptable to the Emperours under whom they ſerved; in the end made hereditarie, and ſucceſſional unto their poſterities. The firſt hereditarie Landgrave ſaid to be Theodorick in the reign of Otho the third; after whoſe death the Empire being made elective, gave the Provincial Governours ſome opportunities to provide for themſelves. In his male-iſſue it continued till the reign of Frederick the 2d. who began his Empire Anno 1212. and dyed Anno 1250. during which interval this Eſtate was conveyed by daughters to Albert, the 2d. Earl of Habſpurg, Albert Earl of Hohenburg, and Lewis Earl of Ottingen. Rodolph of Habſpurg, ſon of this Albert, afterwards Emperour of the Germans, marying with Anne the daughter of the Earl of Hohenloe, became poſſeſſed alſo of his part of the Countrie: which added to his own, made up the whole Upper Elſats; continued ſince that time in poſſeſſion of the houſe of Auſtria, deſcended from him. The third part comprehending all the Lower Alſatia, was not long after ſold by the Earl of Ottingen, to the Biſhop of Strasburg; whoſe Succeſſors hold it to this day, aſſuming to themſelves the title of the Landgraves of Elſats. But as for Sungow, or the County of Pfirt, that belonged antiently to the Princes of the houſe of Schwaben: in the expiring of which potent and illuſtrious Familie, by the death of Conradine, the laſt Duke, Anno 1268. that great eſtate being ſcattered into many hands, it was made a diſtinct Earldom of it ſelf. And ſo it continued till the year 1324. when Ulrick the laſt Earl dying without iſſue male, left his eſtate betwixt two daughters: whereof the one named Anne, conveyed her part in mariage to Albert Duke of Auſtria, ſurnamed the Short, Grandchild of Rodolphus the Emperour before mentioned; the other named Urſula, ſold her moiety to the ſaid Albert, for 8000 Crowns. Since that it hath been always in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes of Auſtria (ſave only for the time in which it was pawned or mortgaged, together with Alſatia, to the Duke of Burgundie) governed in Civil matters and points of Judicature, by the Parliament, or Court of Enſheim in the Upper Elſats.

The Dukedome of LORREIN is bounded on the Eaſt with Elſats, and that part of the Lower Palatinate, which paſſeth by the name of Weſt-reich; on the Weſt, with the River Mueſe or Maes, with part of the Country of Barrois in France, (belonging to the Dukes hereof) and part of Champagne; on the North, with Luxembourg, and the Land of Triers; and on the South, with the County of Burgundy, from which, and from the Province of Elſats, parted by the Vogeſus or Vauge, wherewith incompaſſed on thoſe ſides. Aſſigned unto Lotharius, ſecond ſon of Lotharius the Emperor, (who was eldeſt Son of Lewis the Godly) with the ſtile of a Kingdome: from thence called Lot-reich by the Dutch, Lot-regne by the French; from which the modern name of Lorrein, and the Latine, Lotharingia, are to fetch their Pedegree.

The Country is in length about four daies journey, almoſt three in breadth: much over-grown with Forreſts, and ſwelled with Mountains, the ſpurs and branches of Vogeſus, and the once vaſt Wilderneſſe of Ardenne; yet ſo ſufficiently ſtored with all manner of neceſſaries, that it needeth no ſupply out of other places. Some lakes it hath, which yield great quantity of fiſh; one more eſpecially 14 miles in compaſs, the Fiſh whereof yields to the Dukes coffers 20000 l. yearly.

It

It affordeth alſo divers metals, as Silver, Copper, Tin, Iron, Lead, in ſome places Pearls: Calcidonians alſo of ſuch bigneſs, that whole drinking cups are made of them; and a matter, of which they make the pureſt glaſſes not to be paralleld in Europe. They have alſo a goodly breed of Horſes, equal to thoſe of Barbary, or the Courſer of Naples.

The people, by reaſon of their neighbourhood to, and commerce with France, ſtrive much to imitate the French in garb and faſhion; but one may eaſily ſee that it is not natural: and have much in them alſo of the Dutch humour of drinking; but far more moderately than the Dutch themſelves. Generally they are a politick and an hardy Nation; not otherwiſe able to have held their eſtate ſo long, againſt the French Kings, and the Princes of the houſe of Burgundy. They lived very happily in former times under their own Dukes, not being at all oppreſſed with taxes; which made them very affectionate towards the Prince, and uſeful unto one another. Their language for the moſt part French, as in Artois, Luxembourg, Triers, and other of the bordering Provinces, members of the French Monarchy in former times: not ſo refined and elegant, as is ſpoke in France; nor ſo corrupt and coarſe as that of Montbelgard, and the County of Burgundy.

I know that many, in reſpect of the French language ſpoken here among them, accompt this Country among the Provinces of France, and uſually deſcribe it ſo in their Charts and writings: but I have placed it with more reaſon (as I conceive) amongſt thoſe of Germany. Firſt, in regard that the Duke hereof is a Prince of the Empire: but ſpecially becauſe that in the diviſion of the Kingdom of Lorrein betwixt the Emperors of Germany and the Kings of France, whatſoever lay on the Eaſt ſide of the River Meuſe, (as this Dukedom of Lorrein for the moſt part doth) was reckoned in the ſhare or portion of the German Emperors.

The rivers of chief note, are 1. Marta, or the Meurte, which receiving into it many Rivers, and paſſing with a ſwift ſtream by the wals of Nancie, glides along fairly for a good ſpace within ſight of the Moſelle; into which at laſt it fals near Conde. 2 Moſa, the Meuſe or Maes, whoſe ſpring and courſe hath been already deſcribed in Belgium. 3 Moſelle, famous for the deſign which Lucius Verus, Governor for the Emperor Nero, had once upon it. For whereas it ariſeth in the mountain Vauge, not far from the head of the River Soaſne, and diſburtheneth it ſelf into the Rhene at Confluentz; he intended to have cut a deep chanel from the head of this unto the other, ſo to have made a paſſage from the Ocean to the Mediterranean: the Soaſne emptying it ſelf into the Rhoſne, a chief River of France; as the Moſelle doth into the Rhene. 4 Selle, which mingleth waters with the Moſelle not far from Mets. 5 Sora, 6 Martane, 7 Voloy, others of leſs note; all of them plentiful of Salmons, Perches, Tenches, and the beſt ſorts of fiſh: as in their Lakes great ſtore of Carps, ſome of them three foot long, and of excellent taſt.

Principal Cities in it, are 1 Mets; by Ptolomy called Divodurum; Metis, and Civitas Mediomatricum by Antoninus, the chief City of the Mediomatrices who poſſeſſed this tract. Seated in a pleaſant plain at the confluence of the Sore and Moſelle: the Royal Sea, in former times, of the French Kings of Auſtraſia, hence called Kings of Mets; long before that a Biſhops See, as it ſtill continueth. 2 Toul, the Tullum of Ptolemie, the Civitas Leucorum of Antoninus, ſo called from the Leuci, the Inhabitants of it, and the tract about it: pleaſantly ſeated on the Moſelle, and antiently honoured with a See Epiſcopal. 3 Verdun, an antient Epiſcopal See alſo, the Civitas Verodonenſium of Antoninus, ſeated on the Meuſe or Maes: the Town and Territory adjoyning in preceding times belonging to the Great Princes of the houſe of Ardenne, at and before the time that they attained the Dukedom of Lorrein; but whether they had it in right of their Patrimonial Eſtate, as lying in the North part of this Countrey towards Luxembourg it well might, or that it came to them in the right of mariage with ſome daughter of the houſe of Moſelle, or other heirs thereof, I have no where found. But howſoever it came to them, it gave unto this houſe the title of Earls of Verdun, uſed in their Stile, till ſwallowed with the reſt in that of Lorrein. The Biſhop whereof, as alſo thoſe of Mets and Toul (being the only ones of this Countrey of Lorrein) acknowledge the Archbiſhops of Triers for their Metropolitan. All of them in the number (heretofore) of Imperial Cities, poſſeſſed of large and goodly territories, and of great revenue: but taken by the French King Henry the 2d, Anno 1552. during the wars between Charls the fift and the Proteſtant Princes of Germany, under colour of aiding them againſt the Emperor. And though Charles tryed all wayes to recover them to the Empire again, and to that end maintained a long and deſperate ſiege againſt the City of Mets: yet was the Town ſo gallantly defended by the Duke of Guiſe, that he was fain to raiſe his ſiege, and go off with diſhonour. Since that, they have been alwayes under the ſubjection of France; a Parliament being erected at Mets for the eaſe of the people, as in other Provinces of that Kingdom.

Of ſuch Towns as immediately belonged to the Duke of Lorrein, the principal are Nancey: not great, but of a pleaſant and commodious ſite: well watered by the river Meurte or Marta; and fortified better than before, in the year 1587. on occaſion of a great Army of the Germans paſſing into France to aid the Proteſtants: moſt commonly the Dukes ſeat, and famous for the diſcomfiture which Charls Duke of Burgundy here ſuffered, with the loſs of his life. 2 S. Nicolas, a town ſo populous, well ſeated, and neatly built; that were it walled, it would hardly yield precedency unto Nancie it ſelf: ſo called from a Church here built to the honour of S. Nicholas, Biſhop of Myra in the leſſer Aſia, whoſe body they pretend to be buried here, or at leaſt ſome part or Relick of it to be here inſhrined, occaſioning a great reſort of Pilgrims and other People. 3 Pont a Mouſon, about 4. leagues from Nancie: So called from a bridge on the River Mouſon, upon which it ſtandeth; of eſpecial note for a ſmall Univerſity lately founded in it; and for giving the title of a Marqueſs to the eldeſt ſon of the Dukes of Lorrein, called commonly and contractedly Marqueſs du Pont, (Marchio Montiſſimo Pontis, by our Modern Lorrein Modern Latiniſts. 4. Vaucoleur, the birth-place of Joane the Virgin, to whole miracles and valour, the French attribute the delivery of their Country from the power of the Engliſh: but being at laſt taken priſoner, ſhe was by the Duke of Bedford, then Regent of France, condemned and burned for a Witch. Of which crime I for my part do conceive her free. Nor can I otherwiſe conceive of her and her brave exploits, than of a luſty laſſe of Lorrein, tutored and trained up by the practice of the Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Baſtard of Orleans; and ſo preſented to Charles the ſeventh, French King, as if ſent immediately from Heaven. A project carried on of purpoſe (as the moſt intelligent of the French writers ſay) pour fair revenir la courage aux Francois, to revive the drooping ſpirits of the beaten French, not to be raiſed again but by help of a miracle. Upon the ſight of her Statua on the bridge of Orleans, a friend of mine did adventure on a Copy of verſes in her commendation; too long to be inſerted here: but they ended thus.

She di'd a Virgin; 'Twas becauſe the earth
Bred not a man whoſe valour and whoſe birth
Might merit ſuch a bleſſing. But above
The Gods provided her an equal Love,
And gave her to Saint Denys. She with him Protects the Lillies, and their Diadem.
You then about whoſe Armies ſhe doth watch,
Give her the honour due unto her match.
And when in field your ſtandards you advance,
Cry loud, Saint Denys and Saint Joan for France.

Next theſe we have, 5. Vandemont, which gave the title of an Earl to a younger branch of the houſe of Ardenne, ſucceeding at the laſt in the Dukedom of Lorrein, in perſon of Duke Rhene 2d. and ſince a Title of the younger ſon of the Dukes hereof. 6. Neuaf-Chatteau, on the edge of the Country towards Barrois. 7. Amance, ſeven leagues on the South of Mets, ſometimes the Chancery of Lorrein. 8. Riche Court, near the Lake called Garde lake, out of which floweth a River which runs into the Meurte. 9. La Mothe, ſeated on a River which falls preſently into the Moſelle. 10. Churmes, ſeated on the Moſelle, the place of treaty between the Duke of Lorrein, and the Cardinal Richelieu; the reſult whereof was the ſurrender of the Town of Nancie, and by conſequence of all the Dukedom into the hands of the French, Septemb. 1633. 11. Stenay, in the extream North of all this Country, a well fortified Town, and of great conſequence and importance to the Dukes hereof; but whether properly belonging to the Dukedome of Lorrein, or wreſted from the Soveraignty of Sedan, upon which it bordereth (as Jamais near unto it was) I have no where found. Of leſſe note there are, 1 Saint Die, 2. Saint Hippolit, 3. Bouquenon, and 4. Saverden; the firſt Towns of this Dukedom taken by the Swedes, Anno 1633. in the war againſt Lorrein. 5. Saint Miel, 6. Oden Chaſteau, 7. Mirecour, all taken the ſame year by the French, in the proſecution of that war, before the treaty, at Churmes. 8. Romberville, 9. Eſpinul, 10. Gerbrevillier, &c.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Mediomatrices, and the Leuci ſpoken of before; together with the Vindonenſes, all of them conquered by the Romans: under whom this Country and the Diſtrict of Triers, made up the whole Province of Belgica Prima. From them being taken by the French, with the reſt of Gaul, it was made a Kingdom; the Provinces of Germania Prima & Secunda, (containing all the parts of Germany before deſcribed, and ſo much of the Netherlands, as lie on the Weſt ſide of the Rhene) being added to it: called firſt, from the Eaſtern ſituation, by the name of Ooſtenreic, or Auſtraſia; the portion of Theodorick, the fourth ſon of Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French; from the chief City of his Kingdom, called the King of Mets, whoſe ſucceſſors follow in this order.

The KINGS of AUSTRASIA, or METS.

514 1 Theodorick, the baſe ſon of Clovis the Great, vanquiſhed the Turingians, and extended his Kingdom as far as Haſſia and Turingia, as we call them now.

537 2 Theodebert, the ſon of Theodorick, repulſed the Danes infeſting the Coaſts of the Lower Germany; and added Provence, (taken from the Gothes of Italy) unto his Eſtates.

548 3 Theobaldus, the ſon of Theodebert, ſubdued the Almans, and added much of their Country to his own Dominions.

555 4 Clotaire, King of Soiſſons, the youngeſt ſon of Clovis the Great, ſucceeded Theobald in this Kingdom; as afterwards his brother Childebert in the Realm of France, Anno 560. uniting in his perſon the whole French Dominion.

565 5 Sigebert the ſon of Clotaire, vanquiſhed the Hunnes, then falling into his Eſtates: killed in his Tent by the practices of Fredegond, the wife of Chilperick King of France.

577 6 Childebert, the ſon of Sigebert, ſucceſſor to his Uncle Guntrum in the Realm of Orleans.

598 7 Theodebert the II. the ſon of Childebert, vanquiſhed and outed of his Kingdom by Clotaire the ſecond of France, from whoſe eldeſt ſon Sigebert, deſcended the illuſtrious family of the Earls of Habſpurg.

617 8 Clotaire II. King of France, on the death of Theodebert King of Auſtraſia, and his brother Theodorick, King of Orleans, the ſole King of the French.

9. Dagobert,

9 Dagobert, in the life of his Father King of Mets or Auſtraſia, whom he ſucceeded, at his death, in the Realm of France. Lorrein.

645 10 Sigebert II. the eldeſt ſon of Dagobert, made choice of this Kingdom, for his part of the whole French Empire; therein preferring it to Weſt-France, or France it ſelf, which he left to Clovis the 2d. his younger brother. He brought the Suevians to obedience, and ſubdued the Sclaves.

656 11 Childebert II. ſon of Grimoaldus, Mayre of the Palace to Sigebert, was by the power of his Father made King of Mets; Dagobert the ſon of Sigebert being ſhorn a Monk, and ſent into Scotland.

12 Clovis the 2d. King of the French, having vanquiſhed and beheaded Grimoald, diſpoſſeſſed Childebert of the Kingdom, which he took himſelf.

662 13 Childerick, the 2d. ſon of Covis, after the death of Clotaire his elder brother, ſucceeding in the Kingdome of France, united all the French Dominions into one Eſtate. In which condition it remained (but with ſome inlargement of the bounds) till the partition made by and amongſt the Children of Lewis the Godly; the name of Auſtraſia, or Eaſt-France, being extended by Charles the Great, over all Pannonia, and ſo much of Germanie as was under the command of the French. In which diviſion, Lewis the 2d. ſon, ſurnamed the Antient, being inveſted in the Kingdom of Germanie, or ſo much of Eaſt-France, or Auſtraſia, as lay on the Eaſt-ſide of the Rhene: Lotharius the eldeſt ſon had for his ſhare, the title of Emperour, and therewith Italy, Provence, Burgundie, and ſo much of Auſtraſia, or Eaſt-France, as lay on the French ſide of the River. Afterwards ſubdivided into three Eſtates; Italie, with the title of Roman Emperour, being given to Lewis the eldeſt ſon; to Charls the youngeſt, Provence, with the Kingdom of Burgundie; and to Lothaire the ſecond ſon, Auſtraſia on this ſide of the Rhene, from hence called Lot-reich, Lot-regne, and Lotharingia, as before was ſaid. But Lothaire dying without iſſue, the Kingdom of Lorrein, containing all the Netherlands, (except Flanders and Artois) and all the parts of Germany before deſcribed, became divided betwixt Charls the Bald, Emp. and K. of France, and Lewis ſurnamed the Antient, K. of Germany; the one calling himſelf K. of Lorrein on that ſide, the other K. of Lorrein on this ſide of the Maes, the river Maes or Muſa parting their poſſeſſions. But this Partition held not long amongſt their ſucceſſors; For Lewis and Caroloman Kings of France (the ſons of Ludovicus Balbus) reſigning their part hereof to Charls the Groſſe, Emp. of the Romans, and K. of Germany, the ſaid Charls, Arnulph, Lewis, and Conrade, ſucceſſively Emperors of the Romans, and Kings of Germany, (together with Zwentobald the Baſtard ſon of Arnulph interloping in the very middle of them) enjoyed it wholly to themſelves. And ſo did alſo Charls the Simple, King of France, on the death of Conrade, till forced thereto by Henry the firſt (who ſucceeded Conrade in the Empire and Kingdom of Germany) he gave way to the old partition ſpoken of before: the Germans after that encroaching more and more on that part hereof which of right belonged unto the French, till in the end (after much viciſſitude and interchangeableneſs of affairs) both Princes laid aſide the title of Kings, incorporating ſo much as they held hereof into the reſt of their Eſtates: Otho the third of Germany, and Lewis the fift of France, being the laſt that pleaſed themſelves with that broken title. In the mean time, this Countrey of Lorrein it ſelf, as it is now bounded, together with the Countrey of Luickland, a great part of Brabant, ſome parts of the Land of Triers, Colen, and as ſome ſay, the Country of Gulick alſo, (but in this of Gulick I demur, as before was ſaid) being taken out of it, were by Otho the ſecond made a Dukedom, Anno 981. and by him given with the title of Duke of Lorrein, to Charls of France, ſon of Gerberge his Aunt, by Lewis the 4th ſurnamed Tranſmarine, ſon of Charls the Simple. Charls thus advanced by his Couſin, and forgetting that he had been made Duke of Brabant not long before by Lothaire the French King, his brother; ſhewed himſelf ſo alienated from the French, and wedded to the Germans; that the French, after the death of his Nephew Lewis the fift (whoſe next Heir he was) rejected him, and accepted Hugh Capet for their King. Otho the ſon of this Charls, dying without iſſue, left his eſtate to Geofrey Earl of Ardenne, Bouillon, and Verdun, (his neat kinſman by the mothers ſide:) from whom the Dukes of Lorrein do derive themſelves. From Hermingrade one of the daughters of this Charls, maried to Albert (ſome call him Charls, and others Godfrey) Earl of Namur, by Alice their daughter, maried to Baldwin the 5. of Hainalt, deſcended Baldwin Earl of Flanders and Hainalt, the Father of the Lady Iſabel of Hainalt, wife of Philip the 2d. King of France; therby uniting the bloud of Pepin and Hugh Capet, to the great content of Lewis the 9th her Nephew: of whom it is ſaid, that being a man of a tender conſcience, he never joyed in the Crown of France, till it was proved that he was lineally deſcended by his Grandmother, from Charls of Lorrein, whom Hugh Capet had ſo unjuſtly diſpoſſeſſed. But to return again to the Dukes of Lorrein, I find not any great improvement made of the Eſtate by any of them, more than the acceſſion of the remaining Patrimony of the Earls of Ardenne, in the perſon of Godfrey, or Geofrey, the third Duke hereof: and the adding of the Dutchy of Barr, in France, by Rene Duke of Anjou, and titulary King of Naples; but on the contrary, a great weakning and diſtraction of it by the Dukes hereof: Luickland and the Dukedom of Bouillon being ſold unto the Biſhops of Leige, by Godfrey, ſurnamed of Bouillon, after King of Hieruſalem; Brabant torn from it by Geofrey Earl of Lovain in the time of Baldwin, brother of Godfrey; and Gulick-land, by Euſtace the brother of Baldwin; the Biſhops of Triers not being negligent all this while, of the opportunity. Beſides which, ſomewhat had been done by the Emperor Otho the 3d. to the diminution of this Eſtate, who ſeeing that Otho the ſecond Duke, ſon of Charles of France, intended to transfer this Dukedom to the houſe of Ardenne, diſmembred from it both the City of Colen, and and ſome other pieces on the Rhene. But here it is to be obſerved, that this great Eſtate was either taken out of ſuch part of the Kingdom of Lorrein which of right belonged unto the French, and had been

Lorrein. conquered by the ſword of Otho the 2d. or otherwiſe had been regained unto the Empire by his Father and Grandfather; and ſo might lawfully be diſpoſed of as to him ſeemed beſt: And 2ly. that it was not ſtrange, nor without good reaſon, that he ſhould beſtow it on a Prince of the houſe of France: For having no other ſon than Otho the ſecond (his next ſucceſſor in the Empire) nor any great hopes of Poſterity by him, who in fine died childleſſe; he might conſider Charles of France, ſon of the Lady Gerberge his fathers ſiſter, as moſt near in bloud, and conſequently as capable of his favours as any other whoſoever. Which ſaid, we have no more to do but to preſent the Reader with the Catalogue of

The DUKES of LORREIN.

A. Ch.
981	1 Charles of France, took priſoner by Hugh Capet, in which ſtate he died. He maried Bona, daughter of Ricuine, and Siſter of Godfrey the elder, Earls of Ardenne.
1001	2 Otho, ſon of Charls and Bona.
1004	3 Godfrey, Earl of Ardenne, Son of Godfrey the elder, and Couzin of Otho by his mother, confirmed herein by the power of the Emperour Henry the 2d.
1019	4 Gozelo of Bouillon, the brother of Godfrey.
1044	5 Godfrey, II. ſon of Gozelo.
1070	6 Godfrey III.
1078	7 Godfrey IV. of Bouillon, ſon of Euſtace Earl of Boulogne in Picardie, and of Ida his wife, the daughter of Godfrey the 2d. created King of Hieruſalem, Anno 1099.
1100	8 Baldwin, brother of Godfrey, Duke of Lorrein, and King of Hieruſalem.
1119	9 Thierrie, ſon of William the brother of Baldwin.
1128	10 Simon, ſon of Thierrie.
1141	11 Matthew, ſon of Simon.
1176	12 Simon II. ſon of Matthew.
1207	13 Frederick, brother of Simon.
1213	14 Theobald, ſon of Frederick.
1219	15 Matthew II. ſon of Theobald, no great friend of the Popes.
1259	16 Frederick II. ſon of Matthew.
1303	17 Theobald II. ſon of Frederick.
1311	18 Frederick III. ſon of Theobald.
1329	19 Rodolph, ſon of Frederick.
1346	20 John, ſon of Rodolph.
1382	21 Charls, ſon of John.
1430	22 Rene, Duke of Anjou, and King of Naples, &c. in right of Iſabel his wife, the daughter of Charls.
1452	23 John II. ſon of Rene and Iſabel, ſucceeded on the death of his mother.
1470	24 Nicolas, ſon of John.
1473	25 Rene II. ſon of Frederick Earl of Vandemont, and of Violant, or Yoland, daugh- of Iſabel and Rene the firſt; the Vanquiſher of Charls of Burgundie, at the battel of Nancy.
1508	26 Anthony, ſon of Rene the 2d.
1544	27 Francis, ſon of Anthony.
1545	28 Charles II. ſon of Francis.
	29 Henry, ſon of Charles, maried Katherine, ſiſter to Henry the 4th. of France.
1624	30 Francis, brother of Henry.
1630	31 Charles, Nephew to Francis, by his brother the Earl of Vandemont; and ſon-in-law to him by the mariage of his daughter and heir: ſucceeded by a mixt title of deſcent and mariage. Being reſolved to hold it in his own right, he put away his wife, the daughter of Francis; and took another to his bed, which he better fanſied: puniſhed not long after by the loſſe of his whole eſtate; for immediatly he ingaged himſelf in the wars of Germanie, in behalf of Ferdinand the ſecond: but being beaten by the Swedes at the battel of Pſaffenhofen, in the County of Hanaw, he loſt a great part of his Country to the Victors, who purſued him home. And on the other ſide, Lewis the 13th. of France, picking a quarrel with him for receiving the Monſieur his brother, and the mariage of the Monſieur with the Lady Margaret the Dukes ſiſter; deprived him of the Dutchy of Bar: and falling into Lorrein with a puiſſant Army, at ſuch time as the Swedes were there, compelled him to put into his hands the City of Nancy, and by conſequence all the reſt of his eſtates, Septemb. 1633. Since which time the Duke hath never been reſtored thereto, nor hath any thing left him in it for ought I can hear, but the Town of La Mothe (if that) togerther with a good cauſe, many hearts, and an invincible courage.

The Arms of Lorrein are Or, a Bend Gules, charged with 3 Larks Argent. But herein I find Bara an old Herald, to differ from Paradine the moſt exact Genealogiſt of the French Nation. For Bara chargeth the Bend, not with 3 Allovettes Larks, as Paradine doth, but with 3 Allerions: which are in Blazon, ſmall Birds, wanting beaks, feet and legs. Of this laſt opinion is the moſt worthy Antiquary Camden Clarenceux: who withall telleth us, that when Godfrey of Bulloigne was at the ſiege of Hieruſalem, ſhooting at S. Davids Tower there; he broached three feetleſſe birds, called Allerions, upon his arrow, and thereupon aſſumed this Arms.

The revennes of the Prince are 700000 Crowns; whereof 200000 ariſe from the cuſtoms of the ſalt made in his Country; and the other 500000, from his Coronet lands. He is an abſolute Prince, and giveth for his device, an armed hand comming as it were from Heaven, and graſping a naked ſword: to ſhew that he holdeth his eſtate by no other tenure, than God and his ſword; the only hope, at this time, of the preſent Duke. For though he be accompted a Prince of the Empire, and and his Dukedom reckoned for a part of the fifth Circle thereof, which is called the Circle of the Rhene; yet he neither comes unto the Diets, nor hath himself bound by any of the Orders and Decrees which are made therein, as doe the rest of the great Princes of Germanie; his neighbourhood to the French, formerly securing his estate against any force which the Empire durst bring against him, for those neglects. Suevia

SVEVIA or SCHWABEN

The Dukedom of SUEVIA or SCHWABEN, according to the antient limits and extent thereof, was bounded on the North, with Frankenland, and the Lower Palatinate; on the South, with the Switzerland, and the Alpes of Tirol; on the East, with the River Lech, parting it from Bavaria; and on the West, with the Rhene, dividing it from Sungow, and both Alsatia's. But now the Dukedom of Wirtenberg, the Marquisate of Baden, and other lesser estates being taken out of it, it is contracted and restrained within narrower bounds: having on the East, Bavaria; on the West, the Dukedom of Wirtenberg, and so much of the Rhene as serveth to divide it from Sungow, and the Upper Elsats; on the North, Francovia, or Frankenland; and on the South, a little of the Rhene, with some part of the Switzers.

The Country for the most part mountainous and hilly, overspread with some spurs of the Alpes, and the Woods of Nigra Sylva, or Swartzenwald: recompensed notwithstanding with great plenty of Springs and Rivers, (and amongst them the Neccar, and the renowned Danubius) which do issue from them; which makes the Vales hereof to be very fruitfull, sufficiently stored with all necessary provisions. Nor are the woods and mountains so unprofitable, but that besides the great plenty of fewel, and the pleasures of hunting, they do afford some Mines of iron, and other metals.

The people, in regard of their mountainous situation, more fierce and warlike than the rest of the Germans, and so accompted of by Plutarch in former times: industrious in several Trades and Manufactures, especially in the weaving of Linnen Cloath, which is made here in great abundance: and who by reason they have so much in them of the South, are supra modum in Venerem proni, as Aubanus tels me, at least more given to Venus than the other of the Germans are; the women also being said to be very forwards in this kind, as tractable and easie as the men could wish them.

The whole is generally divided into the Hegow, lying next to the lake of Constance; the Algow, extending to Bavaria; Brisgow, upon the West of the River Rhene; and North-Schwaben, on the northern side of Danubius. Principal Cities in the HEGOW, are 1. Lindaw, situate like an Iland in the Lake of Constance; encompassed almost with the waters thereof, but joyned to it with a Causey of 290 paces long: one of the Free, or Imperial Cities; made so for money, by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1166. 2. Buchorn, and 3. Uberlingen, on the same lake, both Imperial also. 4 Scaffhausen, seated on both sides of the Rhene, not far from the efflux thereof out of the lake Cell, (so called from a Town of that name belonging to the Archdukes of Austria, but antiently by the name of Lacus Venetus:) and near those dreadfull falls or Cataracts of that River, no lesse than 50 cubits downwards, with great noise and violence. For which cause all Vessels that go down the Rhene, are fain to unlade themselves, and by Carts to carry their goods to this Town; where they imbark them again. Which as it yeeldeth great benefit unto the Town by tols, and impots, so doth it always keep it stored with abundance of Barks and other Vessels; whence it hath the name of Scaff-haussen, that is to say, the house of Skiffes, or the Town of Ship-boats. The Town conveniently seated amongst rich pastures, and sweet groves on both sides of the River; not without some pleasant hills, and those well planted with vines, near adjoyning to it: Imperial once, but now a Canton of the Switzers, as hath there been shewn. 5. Arbon, upon the lake it self (the Arbor Felix of Strabo) belonging to the Bishop of Constance. 6. Merspurg, the ordinary seat and residence of the Bishop of Constance, Lord of the most part of this Tract, on the same lake also. 7. Constance it self, situate on both sides of the Rhene, where it issueth out of the lake, called from hence the Lake of Constance; but by the Dutch, Boden-zee, from the Castle of Bodmin; by Plinie and other Antients Lacus Acronius, and Brigantinus; made by the confluence of the Rhene, and some other Rivers falling out of Switzerland. The Town Imperial, an Episcopal See, and a flourishing Emporie. Famous for the Council here holden, Anno 1414. of great renown as well for the multitude and quality of the people which were there assembled, as for the importance of the matters which were therein handled: The people of most note there assembled, were Sigismund the Emperour, 4 Patriarchs, 29 Cardinals, 346 Archbishops and Bishops, 564 Abbats and Doctors, 10000 secular Princes and Noble men, 450 Common Harlots, 1600 Barbers, and 320 Minstrels and Jesters. The businesse there handled, was first the pacifying of a Schism in the Church, there being at that time 3 Popes (or rather Anti-Popes) viz. Gregory the 12th. resident at Rome, John the 23d. at Bononia, and Bennet the 13th. in Spain; all three deposed by the Council, and Martin the 5th. made sole Pope, by the unanimous consent of the Council; declaring both by matter of fact, and by a publike Constitution here made and ratified, that a Council is above the Pope. The other main businesse was the proceeding against John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, (spoken of before) both which, notwithstanding the Emperours safe conduct, were here condemned of Heresie, degraded, and burnt. Now the manner of degrading a Priest is this. (I hope to be excused for this digression.) The party to be degraded is attired in his Priestly Vestments; holding in the one hand a Chalice, full of wine and water, and in the other a guilt plate (or Paten, as they call it) with a Wafer. Then kneeling down, the Bishops Deputy first taking from him all those things, commands him to say no more Masses for the quick and dead. 2. Scraping his fingers ends with a piece of glasse, he commandeth him from that time forwards not to hal-hallow any thing: and 3. ſtripping him of his Prieſtly habit, he is clothed in a lay attire, and ſo delivered over to the Secular Magiſtrate. But to return again to the City of Conſtance, being proſcribed by Charles the fifth for refuſing the Interim, and not able to withſtand ſuch forces as were raiſed againſt them; they put themſelves under the Protection of Ferdinand, then King of the Romans, and brother of Charles. But herein they fell out of the Frying-pan into the fire, as the ſaying is: For Ferdinand being poſſeſſed of the Town, ſeiſed on the common Treaſury, and upon all Records and writings which belonged unto them; ſet out an Edict, that all the Miniſters, within eight days, ſhould depart the City, and that no Citizen from thenceforth ſhould wear any weapon. And ſo inſtead of a Protector, he became their Maſter.

Chief Cities in the part hereof lying towards Bavaria, which is called the ALGOW, are 1. Buchaw, on the lake called Feder-zee, a Town Imperial. 2. Ravenſpurg, a Free City, ſeated amongſt mountains, whereof one hangeth over it; the River Ach running by it in a bed ſo narrow, that not able to receive the waters which fall down from the hills, it much endamageth all the Country by frequent Landfloods. 3. Woongen (the Nemavia of Antoninus) Imperial alſo. 4. Kempten, the Campodunum of Strabo: and 5. Mimmegen, the Druſomagus of Ptolemy, both Imperial Cities; the laſt about 3 miles in circuit, populous, rich, and very well traded. 6. Pfullendorf. 7. Zenkirk. 8. Bibrach; all three Imperial; the laſt ſuppoſed to be the Bragodurum of the Antients. 9. Ausburg, on the River Lech, looking into Bavaria, firſt made a Roman Colony by Auguſtus Cæſar, and by him called Auguſta Vindelicorum. The principal City in thoſe times of the Vindelici, a potent people of this tract. A City of great wealth and ſtate, containing about 9 miles in circuit, and very ſtrongly fortified; by nature on the Eaſt and North, where the ground lies low, and under water; and on the Weſt and South by Art. The buildings for three parts of it, are of clay and timber; but on the Weſt part ſeated on an hill, built of Free-ſtone, ſix or ſeven ſtories high; in which are many fair houſes of the principal Citizens, and many ſtately Palaces, which belong to the Fuggars, a family of very great (almoſt Princely) Revenues; poſſeſſed of many goodly dwellings both in the City and the ſuburbs, and adjoyning territories. Who though they have of late obtained the honour of Barons, in regard of their wealth; ſtill keep themſelves (contrary to the cuſtom of Germanie, where traffick is counted a diſgrace to a Noblemen) to the trade of Merchandiſe. The publick Edifices of it very decent, eſpecially the Cathedral Church, a majeſtick building; the other Churches, ten in number, and the Religious houſes, correſpondent to it. Of old time Ceres was here worſhipped, from whence (or from the fruitfullneſſe of the ſoil) the City gives a ſheaf of corn for the Armes thereof: Since their converſion unto Chriſtianity made a Biſhops See. Deſtroyed by Attila and his Hunnes, it was after built more beautifully than it had been formerly; at laſt made Imperial, and the Miſtreſſe of as large a territory as moſt Cities of Germanie. Famous for the confeſſion of Faith, exhibited in this place to Charles the 5th. by the Proteſtant Princes, hence called Confeſſio Auguſtana, Anno 1530. 2. For the Interim, or mixt form of Doctrine, containing ſome points of Proteſtantiſm, but moſt of Popery; here tendred to both parties by the ſaid Emperour (but received by neither) to be ſubſcribed too, and obſerved, till the differences could be ſetled by a General Council; And 3. for the publick allowance here given by Decree of all the States of the Empire, to the Proteſtant party, to profeſſe openly their Religion without any impeachment, Anno 1555. a Limitation only laid on the Eccleſiaſticks, that if they changed their Religion, they ſhould loſe their preferments; which were to be beſtowed on others more addicted to the See of Rome.

In the third part hereof called BRISGOW, lying on the Eaſt of the River Rhene, and the Weſt of Wirtenberg, and on the South cloſed in with the Canton of Baſil; Places of moſt importance are, 1. Friburg, upon the Trieſſe, and other ſtreams deſcending from the mountains of Swartzen-wald, under which it lyeth: founded by Berchthold the third, Earl or Duke of Zeringen (the Caſtle of Zeringen founded by Berthold the firſt, ſon of Gebizo, the youngeſt ſon of Guntrum, the 2d. Earl of Habſpurg, once the chief ſeat of thoſe Princes, being then near adjoyning to it) in the reign of Henry the fifth Emperour, Anno 1112. or thereabouts. Famous in thoſe days for ſilver mines, now for an Univerſity here eſtabliſhed, Anno 1459. and being in preſent eſtimation the chief of the Country, of which more anon. 2. Offenbach, 3. Gengenbach, both upon the Kintrich, and both Towns Imperial: the firſt ſo named from Offa an Engliſh Saxon, the Apoſtle of theſe parts of Germanie. 4. Hochberg, which gives the title of a Marqueſſe to the Marqueſſes of Baden, who are Lords thereof. 5. Zel, once Imperial, but of late times belonging, as doth alſo 6. Badenwiller, to the Marqueſſe of Baden, this laſt accruing to them by the mariage of Rudolphus the ſixth of that name, Marqueſſe of Hochberg, with a ſiſter of John, Earl of Friburg, the then Eord thereof. 7. Waldſhut upon the Rhene, in a barren, cold, and mountainous Country, but well ſtored with woods. 8. Briſach, by Antonine called Mons Briſiacus, a garriſon in his time againſt the incroaching Almans; and ſituate at that time on the French ſide of the Rhene, the courſe of the River being ſince turned on the other ſide, where now it runneth. Built Caſtle-wiſe on the top of a round hill, in which there is alſo a ſtrong Tower or Fortreſſe, raiſed by Berchthold the third, for defence of the place; otherwiſe ſtrong enough by its own natural ſituation: and might be made impregnable, but for want of water, which is all drawn from one deep well in the heart of the Town, or brought with great charge and trouble from the Rhene, which runs underneath it. The Town fair, populous, and well built; once of moſt note in all the Country, from hence called Briſac-gow, or Briſe-gow; but after the building of Friburg by Berchthold the 4th. it grew by little and little to be leſſe frequented; the other being ſeated more conveniently for trade and buſineſſe. Here alſo not far off from the Caſtle of Zeringen, ſtood that of Kiburg, ſomewhat the antienter of the two; of ſuch authority and repute in thoſe elder times, that the Emperours do ſtill retain the title of Earls of Kiburg, in the Stile Imperial: deſcended on the houſe of Habſpurg by the mariage of Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Hartman the laſt Earl hereof, to Eberhard of Habſpurg, Couſin German to the Emperor Rodolph, on the expiring of which line, Anno 1356. it fell, together with many fair Eſtates among the Switzers, to Albert Duke of Auſtria, ſurnamed the Short. Suevia.

Finally, in the fourth and laſt part hereof called [NORTH-SCHWABEN, becauſe on the North ſide of the Danow, the places moſt obſervable are 1. Gmund, on the Rhems; 2. Dinkel-Spuel, on the Warnitz, two Imperial Towns: which with Vberlinque or Werlingen, (all three but mean in building, territory, or eſtimation) ſpoken of before; are the only three Imperial Ciries in all Germany, which totally adhered unto the Doctrines of the Church of Rome. 3. Boptingen, on the Egra, an Imperial City. 4. Norlingen, on the ſame River, but in a low and mooriſh ground, yet of great reſort, populous, and well traded. Moſt memorable for the great defeat here given the Swedes, by Ferdinand the third, now Emperor, at his firſt entrance on the Government: in which, Bannier, one of the principal commanders of that nation, was ſlain on the place; Guſtavus Horn, another of as great eminence, taken Priſoner, their whole forces routed; and thereupon ſo ſtrange an alteration of the affairs of Germany, which they had almoſt wholly conquered (though not for themſelves;) that the Palatinate, not long before reſtored to its proper owner, was again poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, Frankenland by the Imperialiſts, and the remainder of the Swedes forced to withdraw into their holds, on the Baltick ſeas, Anno 1637. 6. Rotweil, not far from the head of the Neccar, an Imperial City, and a Confederate of the Switzers. 7. Donawerdt, ſeated on the confluence of the Donaw and the Werdt, whence it had the name; moſt commonly called only Werdt, an Imperial Town: the habitation of John de Werdt, once a Brewer herein, but afterwards a chief Commander of the forces of the Duke of Bavaria, in the late German wars. 8. Villengen, on the Bregen, a ſmall River falling into the Danow; a Town belonging to the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria. Not far from which ſtands 9. Furſtenburg, an antient Caſtle, the Earls hereof are Princes of the Empire, and Lords of a great part of the Country; deſcended lineally from Eginon, or Eggon, the youngeſt ſon of the Lady Judith, ſiſter and heir of Berthold the fifth, the laſt Duke of Zeringen, and conſequently a branch of the illuſtrious houſe of Habſpurg: exceedingly increaſed both in power and patrimony, by the marriage of Frederick Earl hereof (in the time of Charls the fifth, under whom he ſerved in his wars againſt the Proteſtants) with Anne the daughter and heir of Chriſtopher the laſt Earl of Werdenberg, poſſeſſed of many fair eſtates amongſt the Zwitzers, and the adjoining parts of Schwaben. In a Village of this Earl called Don-Eſchingen is the head of Danubius. 10. Ulme, an Imperial City, ſituate on the meeting of the Blave, the Iler, and the Danow; the principal City of North-Schwaben: about ſix miles in compaſs, rich, populous, well fortified; and ſtored with an Armory, for Ordinance and all manner Ammunition, not inferior to any in Germany. The Town but new, taking its firſt riſe from a Monaſtery here founded by Charls the Great, which after grew to be a great City; and took the name of Ulme from the Elmes about it. At firſt it belonged unto the Monks; of whom having bought their freedome in the time of Frederick the third, it became Imperial. The Danow hereabouts begins to be navigable, having ſo violent a ſtream that the Boats which go down the water uſe to be ſold at the place where they land; it being both difficult and chargeable to bring them back again. Not far hence on the banks of the Danow lie the Suevian Alpes, and amongſt them, the old Caſtle of Hohenberg; the Lord whereof, on the ruine of the houſe of Schawben, became poſſeſſed of a great eſtate here, and in Upper Elſats; ſold afterwards to Rodolph of Habſpurg, the founder of the now Auſtrian Family.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Brixantes, Suanetes, Ruguſci, and Calucones, who, together with the Vindelici (of whom more hereafter) and other tribes of the Rhæti, (of whom ſomewhat hath been ſaid before in the Alpine Provinces) poſſeſſed themſelves of that Country which lyeth betwixt the River Inn, and the head of the Rhene, eaſt and weſt; Danubius, and the Alps of Italy, north and ſouth. Within which compaſs are the greateſt part of the Griſons; the Dukedomes Schwaben and Bavaria, on this ſide the Danow, and part of the County of Tirol; and not a few of the Cantons of Switzerland. Subdued by Druſus and Tiberius Nero, ſons-in law of Auguſtus, it was made a province of the Romans: divided into a Rhætia Prima, taking in all the Countries from the Rhene to the Leck, or Lycus; and Rhætia Secunda, lying betwixt the Leck and the River Inn, which by another name was called Vindelicia. By which accompt all Schwaben on the South ſide of the Danow, was part of the Province of Rhætia Prima, continuing ſo till vanquiſhed, and ſubdued by the Almans, in the time of Valentinian the third, Emperor of the Weſtern parts. As for the Almans who ſucceeded in poſſeſſion hereof, they were originally ſome tribes and families of the Suevi, the moſt warlike nation of the Germans, inhabiting upon the Banks of the River of Albis: who jealous of Cæſars great ſucceſſes, brought againſt him 430000 fighting men; of which 80000 were ſlain, and many drowned. They uſed to ſtay at home, and go to the war by turns: they which ſtaied at home, tilling the Land; to whom the reſt returning, brought the ſpoil of the Enemies. But after this blow, we hear little of them, till the time of Caracalla, the ſon of Severus; During whoſe reign, deſcending towards the banks of the Rhene and the Danow, and mingling with other nations as they paſſed along; they aſſumed firſt the name of Almans; either from that promiſcuous mixture of all ſorts of men; or (as I rather think) from Mannus the ſon of Tuiſco, one of the great and national Gods of the Germans. And though well beaten by him at their firſt comming down, near the River Mœnus; and afterwards more broken by Dioclesian, who ſlew at leaſt 60000 of them at one time, in Gaul; yet never left they to infeſt the Provinces of the Empire, which lay neareſt to them: till in the end, following the tract of the Hunns, who had gone before them, and beaten down many of the Forts and Garriſons which were in their way; they made themſelves Maſters of Rhætia Prima, Germania Prima, and part of Maxima Sequanorum, containing beſides the Countries ſpoken of before, Alſatia, and ſo much of the Lower Palatinate, Suevia. as lies on the French ſide of the Rhene. But quarrelling with the French their next neighbours (of whoſe growth and greatneſſe they began to be very ſenſible) they were firſt vanquiſhed by Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French, in that great and memorable fight at Zulph, near Colen: and afterwards made wholly ſubject to the Conqueror, by whom oppreſſed with an heavy and laſting ſervitude. About this ſame they returned again to their old name of Suevians; their eſtate being erected into a Dukedome, called many times the Dukedome of Almain: and when ſo called, divided into the Upper Almain, comprehending the Country of the Griſons, with ſome parts of Switzerland, and Tirol; and the Lower or the Proper Almain, which contained the reſt of the Eſtates of the antient Almans, called for the moſt part by the name of the Dukedome of Suevia or Schwaben, and finally tranſmitting that name to this Province only, the beſt part thereof. Theſe Dukes at firſt officiary only, removeable at the will of the Emperor, and accomptable to him: not ſeldome many at one time, eſpecially whileſt under the command of the French; ſome of them being Dukes of the Upper, and others of the Lower Almain. So that there is no great certainty of their ſucceſſion nor much care to be taken in ſearching after it; though otherwiſe men of great Authority and Command in their ſeverall times. The moſt remarkable amongſt them was Rudolph, Earl of Reinfelden, and Duke of Schwaben, (deſcended from the Earls of Habſpurg) in the reign of Henry the fourth; againſt whom he was choſen Emperour, by the practice and procurement of Pope Hildebrand: but overcome and wounded at the battel of Erſter, he died not long after of his wounds, with great repentance for rebelling againſt his Soveraign. After his death, ſome Provinces being diſmembred from it, and other leſſer eſtates firſt erected out of it: it was made Hereditary in the perſon of Frederick, Baron of Hohenſtauffen, ſurnamed the Antient, by the munificence and bounty of the ſaid Henry the fourth, whoſe daughter Agnes he had maried. His ſucceſſors follow in this order.

The DUKES of SWABEN.

1 Frederick the antient, the firſt Hereditary Duke of Schwaben.
2 Frederick with one eye, ſon of Frederick the Antient.
3 Frederick III. ſurnamed Barbaroſſa, ſon of Frederick with one eye, Duke of Schwaben, and Emperor; he ſucceeded the Emperor Henry the fift, in the Dukedome of Franconia; and left the ſame unto his ſucceſſors.
1190 4 Frederick IV. ſecond ſon of Barbaroſſa; his elder brother Henry ſucceeding in the Empire, by the name of Henry the ſixt.
5 Conrade, brother of Frederick the fourth.
6 Philip, brother of Conrade; after the death of Henry the 6th, elected Emperor.
1207 7 Frederick V. ſon of Henry the ſixt; elected Emperor by the name of Frederick the ſecond; King of Naples and Sicil alſo in the right of his mother.
1250 8 Conrade II. ſon of Frederick the fift, King of both Sicils, and Emperor of Germany, after the death of his Father; poiſoned, as was ſuppoſed, by his baſe brother Manfred, who ſucceeded in his Kingdome of Sicil.
1254 9 Conradine, the ſon of Conrade; purſuing his right unto the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicil, was overcome and taken priſoner by Charls of Anjou, ſucceſſor unto Manfrede in thoſe eſtates; and by his command beheaded at Naples, Anno 1268. After whoſe death (being the laſt of that powerfull and Imperial Family:) this vaſt eſtate was brought unto a ſecond diſmembring, and divided amongſt the Biſhops, Princes, and Free Cities hereof: of which laſt there are more within the old Precincts of this Dukedome, than in all Germany beſides. So that beholding it in the firſt and ſecond dilapidation, we find many goodly Patrimonies and fair Eſtates (beſides what belongeth to the Cities and Epiſcopal Sees) to have been raiſed out of the ruines of this great Dukedome: that is to ſay, the Dukedomes of Zeringen and Wirtenberg, with the Marquiſate of Baden, diſmembred from it, when conferred on Frederick of Hohenſtauffen; the Earldoms of Pfirt, Hohenberg, and Friburg, (beſides a great improvement of the Earldom of Habſpurg) advanced out of the ſecond ruine. How Pfirt and Hohenberg were united to the houſe of Auſtria, hath been ſhewn already; and what becomes of Wirtenberg and Baden, ſhall be ſhewn hereafter. Here it is only to be noted, that the Family of Zeringen poſſeſſed of almoſt all Briſgow, and great part of Switzerland, ow their Original to Berthold, the ſon of Gebizo, a younger ſon of Guntram the 2d. Earl of Habſpurgh. Which being extinguiſhed after a ſucceſſion of ſeven Princes only, in the perſon of Berthold the fifth (who died the ſame day in which the Emperor Rodolph of Habſpurg was born) Anno 1218. the rights hereof deſcended on the Earls of Friburg, the principal City of that Country. Cuno the firſt that bare the title of Earl of Friburg, being the eldeſt ſon of Judith, ſiſter and heir of Berthold, the laſt Duke of Zeringen. Eggon, the laſt Earl of which houſe, being overlaid by his undutifull and rebellious Subjects, ſold his eſtate therein, for 12000 Ducats to Albert and Leopold, Dukes of Auſtria, ſons of Albert the Short; whoſe ſucceſſors enjoy all Briſgow to this very day.

The Arms of Schwaben were Argent, 3 Leopards Sable, as is ſaid by Bara, But Paradine will have them to be three Leopards Sable, crowned Gules, in a Field Or.

BAVARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Auſtria; on the Weſt, with the river Leck, or Lycus, which which parts it from Schwaben; on the North, with Northgoia, or the Upper Palatinate; and on the South, with the Earldome of Tirol, and Carinthia. It containeth the whole Province of Rhætia Secunda, and so much of Noricum Mediterraneum, as now maketh up the Bishoprick of Saltsburg: and by a distinct name was called Vindelicia, as being the antient habitation of the Vindelici; so named from the two Rivers of Vindis and Lycus (now the Werd and the Leck) upon which they lived. According whereunto it is thus versified by a German Poet. Bavaria.

Respicit & late fluvios Vindimque, Lycumque,
Miscentes undas, & nomina Litoris; unde
Antiquam Gentem, populumque, Urbemque vocarunt
Vindelicam.——

In English thus:
Vindis and Lycus, floods of noted Fame,
He next beholds, mingling their streams and name;
To which the old Vindelici do own,
The name both of their Nation, and their Town.

Meaning by their Town, as I conceive, Augusta Vindelycorum, their Metropolis or Capital City. But after such time as the Boii or Boiarians had driven out the Romans, and got possession of this Country; the name of Vindelicia, and Rhætia secunda, grew into disuse: that of Boiaria succeeding in the place thereof, mollified or corrupted into Bavaria, the present name of the Country amongst the Latines; but by the Dutch called Bayeren, by the French Bavier.

The whole divided into three parts; the Higher, lying towards the Alpes of Tirol; the Lower, extending all along the banks of the Danow; and the District of Saltzburg, situate betwixt the Inn, and the Dukedome of Austria: all three much over-spread with woods and forests, remainders of the Hercinian forest described before. But more particularly the Higher lying towards the Alpes, is cold and barren, affording no wines, and but little corn: the Lower being more fruitfull, and better planted, for some parts (especially about Regensberg, and Landshut) inferior unto none in Germany, for the richness and pleasantnesse of the situation. Of the District of Saltzburg we shall speak by it self; because by some not reckoned as a part hereof. In all, great quantity of fewel for the fire, and of Timber for building; no less of Swine fatted in the woods, and sent away by numerous herds into other Countries.

The Christian Faith first preached here amongst the Boiarians, by Rupertus Bishop of Wormes; driven from his See by Childebert, King of the French, Anno 540. or thereabouts; and here made the first Bishop of Saltzburg: corrupted at this time with the Leaven of the Church of Rome, to which this Country (setting aside the Imperial Cities) is more intirely devoted, than any other in all Germany.

Principal Cities in the Higher, are 1. Munchen, (in atine Monachium) the Dukes seat; seated on the Iser, or Isarus, in a very sweet and delightfull soil, among Ponds and Groves; daintily interlaced with pretty Riverets, and inriched with many excellent Gardens; that of the Duke being hardly to be paralleld in all this Continent. First founded by Henry Duke hereof in the time of Otho the first, Anno 972. now grown a large and populous City; the publick buildings, as Churches, Turrets, Libraries, the Senate-house or Guild-hall, and common Market-place, of such excellent Structure; that they serve not only for use and Ornament, but for Admiration. Amongst them none more eminent than the Library in the Ducal Palace, wherein is conceived to be 11000 Volumes, the most part of them Manuscripts. A town made choise of by Maximilian the now Duke of Bavaria, to be the receptacle of the spoils, got by him in the wars of Germany: here being found (at such time as the town was taken by the King of Sweden) 140 brasse Peeces (besides other great Guns) hid under the ground, one of the which was charged, instead of Powder and Shot, with 30000 Crowns in Gold. 2. Landsberg, upon the Leck or Lycus, near the Alpes of Tirol; once of great strength, because a Frontire towards Schwaben: but proving a dangerous neighbour to the Swedish Garrison planted in these parts, during that war against the Duke of Bavaria; was by them taken and dismantled, and is now an open Village only. 3. Martenwald, now a place of note or beauty; heretofore the Inutrium of Ptolemy, seated near the Alpes. 4. Fridberg, well fortified by Duke Ludowick, or Lewis the second, for a Bulwark against those of Ausburg. 5. Here stood also the old Castle of Schyre, built by Arnulph, 2d. son of Arnolph the first Duke of Bavaria; the Seat and honorary title of his posterity (Dynastæ Schyrenses, in the Latine) till Otho of Wiltersback, by the favour of Frederick Barbarossa, and his own good fortune, did atturn that Dukedome.

In the LOWER Bavaria, there first offers it self to consideration, the town of 1. Rain, seated on the Leck, not far from the fall thereof into the Danow: memorable for the skirmish near to it betwixt the Swedes and Bavarians, at the first passing of the Swedish forces over that River; in which John Earl of Tilly, so famous for his long and fortunate conduct, received his deaths wound, of which he died at Ingolstad within few weeks after. 2. Newburg upon the Danow, not far from Rain; the first town of Bavaria taken in by the Swedes, after the said defeat of Tilly. 3. Ingolstad, said to be built by a Tribe, or Nation of the Sueves, called Angeli, and thence called Angeloſtadium, or Angleſtade: first made a City by Ludovick of Bavaria, Duke and Emperor; and in the year 1410. made an University, much privileged by Duke Lewis or Ludowick the fift, and Pope Pius the second. A Town so strong-Bavaria. ſtrongly fortified both by Art and Nature, that it ſeems impregnable: and indeed proved ſo to Guſtavus the late King of Sweden; who here found the firſt check to his proſperous fortunes, being forced to raiſe his ſiege without endangering it, and find work elſewhere. 4. Regensberg (in Latine Ratisbona) on the Danow alſo, where it receives the River Regen, whence it hath its name: built in the place of Tiberina, or Auguſta Tiberii, ſo called of a Colony brought hither by Tiberius Cæſar, about the time of our Saviours paſſion; afterwards called Rhætopolis, or the City of the Rhetians, the chief of Rhætia ſecunda. At this time a fair, rich, and populous City, beautified with an infinite number of Churches and Religious Houſes: antiently an Epiſcopall See; and of late made the ordinarie place for the general Diets of the Empire. In former times the ſeat of the Kings and firſt Dukes of Bavaria, then made Imperial; and now mixt, or both. For being ſtill Imperial, at the leaſt in name, it was ſeiſed on unexpectedly by the now Duke of Bavaria; when the Swedes firſt got footing within his Dominions; held by him with a very ſtrong Garriſon, after the loſſe of Munchen his chief place of reſidence, till at laſt won from him by the Swedes, Anno 1633. 5. Paſſaw, by the modern Latiniſts, Patavia; but by ſome thought to be the Boiodurum of Ptolemie, then a Roman Gariſon. Seated on the Danow, where it meeteth with the Inn, and the Ills; by which divided into three Towns, Paſſaw, Innſtade, and Ilſtade: the whole Compoſitum being a rich, fair, and well-traded City. A See Epiſcopal, and ſubject immediatly to the Biſhop, as chief Lord hereof; who hath his dwelling in the Caſtle of Oberhuſen, adjoining to that part hereof which is called Ilſtade: A place remarkable for many meetings and conſultations of the German Princes: eſpecially for that of the year 1552, in which all former quarrels being laid aſide, the Proteſtants were firſt permitted the free Exerciſe of their Religion, by the conſent and edict of Charls the fift, who had moſt laboured to ſuppreſſe it. More in the Land is 6. Friſing, on the ſwelling of a fine round hill, near the River Ambra, which runs beneath it; called antiently Fraxinum: conceived to be built by ſome of the Preſidents, or Lieutenants for the Roman Emperors; honored with an Epiſcopall See about the year 710. One of the Biſhops whereof, commonly called Otho Friſingenſis, was the beſt Hiſtorian of his time. 7. Landſhut, upon the River of Iſar, in the richeſt and moſt pleaſant Countrie of all Bavaria; a beautifull and well-built City, the work of Lewis Duke hereof, in the year 1208. adorned with a Church of moſt curious building for the ſervice of God, and a magnificent Palace for the uſe of the Duke. 8. Freiſtet, the only Imperial Town, (except Regensburg) in all this Dukedome. The whole number of Cities and great towns in both Bavaria's, is ſuppoſed to be 80; that is to ſay, 34 Cities, 46 great Towns: of which theſe the principal.

The Biſhoprick or Diſtrict of SALTZBURG, being the third part of Bayeren or Bavaria, (according to our former diviſion of it) extendeth from the Inn, or Oenus, towards the confines of Auſtria. The ſoil hereof rocky, drye, and barren, excepting ſome few valleys only, as ſeated in the midſt of the Julian Alps; the habitation heretofore of the Norici Mediterranei, of whom more hereafter. The principal Town hereof is Saltzburg, ſeated upon the River Saltzach, whence it had the name: raiſed out of the ruines of Iuvania, placed hereabouts by Antoninus, the ſtation of a cohort of Roman Souldiers belonging to the firſt Legion. An Alpine City, ſtrongly ſituate among the Mountains; but no leſſe beautifull than many of the lower grounds. The Royall ſeat of ſome of the Bavarian Kings, after of the Arch-biſhops hereof; the moſt powerfull Prelates for Revenue or Juriſdiction of any in Germany: the See firſt fixed here by Rupertus or Rutbertus, the firſt Apoſtle of theſe parts, ſpoken of before; whoſe image or impreſſe is ſtamped to this day on the coins of this Biſhoprick. At the time when Luther firſt endeavoured a Reformation, Cardinal Matthæus Langius was Biſhop here; who did ingenuouſly confeſſe, that the Maſſe did not want its faults, that the Court of Rome was much corrupted, and the lives of Prieſts and Friers fit to be reformed: Sed quod miſellus Monachus omnia reformet, id non eſſe tolerabile; but that ſuch a ſorry fellow as Luther ſhould attempt the work, that by no means to be endured. 2. Newkirch, on the ſame River, near the head thereof. 3. Rotenbourg, on the Eaſt ſide of the Inn, bordering on Bavaria. 4. Traunſhaim, upon the Traun, riſing out of the Lakes. 5. Wildeſmet, one of the fartheſt Northwards; and 6. Biſhops-ſtoffe, one of the moſt Southern, in all this tract.

The firſt Inhabitants of Bavaria (excluding the Diſtrict of Saltzburg) were the Vindelici, as aforeſaid: A people ſo reſolvedly bent to maintain their freedome, againſt the incroachment of the Romans; that when Druſus the ſon-in-law of Auguſtus, and Father of Germanicus Cæſar, made war upon them, the very women thereof took the alarm; & deficientibus telis, infantes in ora militum adverſa miſerunt; and when their darts were ſpent, threw their young Infants (ſaith the Hiſtorian) at the heads of the Romans. After them, in the declining of the Empire, ſucceeded the Boiarians, ſome of the many tribes of the Boii, the moſt diffuſed and multitudinous Nation of Gaul, and Germany. Originally of Gaul, inhabiting the Dukedome of Bourbon, from whence ſome of them paſſed with the Senones and others of the Gauls, to the further ſide of the Alps, (in reſpect of them;) where they took up the Country between the Apennine and the Po. Wearied with many bickerings, at laſt with ſharp and bitter wars againſt the Romans, and by them deprived of half their Country; ſome of them paſſed into Germany, and mingled themſelves with the Tauriſci, then dwelling in thoſe parts which we now call Stiermark: others advancing further, thruſt themſelves into the Norici, (of whom more anon) and ſome retired themſelves into the ſhelters and faſt places of the Hercinian Foreſt. Driven from this laſt by the Marcomanni, they fell into the Countries of the Hermanduri and Noriſci (now the Upper Palatinate) who mingled into one Nation with them, took the name of Boiarians, and by that name firſt known in the time of Clovis, the 5th King of the French: by whoſe perſwaſion, in the 17 year of Anaſtaſius Emp. of the Eaſt, they paſſed over the Danow, and poſſeſſed themſelves of Vindelicia, or the ſecond Rhætia, with ſome part of Noricum, to which they gave the name of Boiaria, as before was ſignified. Governed first by Kings (as all Nations were) of whom we meet with none but Aldigerius (and he the laſt of that race) ſlain, fighting on the ſide of the Almans againſt the French, at the great battel of Zulp, near Colen: after which made ſubject to the Conquerors, as their neighbors and confederates the Almans were; but ſuffered to live under the command and government of their own Princes, by the name of Dukes. Of theſe, from Theodo, the ſon of Aldigerius, to Taſſilo the laſt Duke, outed of his eſtate and honours by Charls the Great, for conſpiring with the Lombards againſt him; are reckoned fifteen Duke in all: whoſe names (for there remaineth little of them but the empty names) we ſhall ſubjoin in the enſuing Catalogue of the DUKES of the BOIARIANS.

493 1 Theodo, ſon of Adalgerius the laſt King; from whoſe younger brother Utilo, deſcended Pepin the Father of Charls the Great.
511 2 Theodo II. ſurnamed the Great.
537 3 Theodebert.
4 Theodo III. the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Boiarians.
565 5 Taſſilo, ſon of Theodebert.
598 6 Garibaldus.
612 7 Theodo IV.
630 8 Taſſilo II.
650 9 Theodo V.
10 Theodebert II.
11 Theodo VI. ſon of Grimoldus, the brother of Theodebert the ſecond.
708 12 Grimold.
13 Hugobert, brother of Grimold.
735 14 Utilo.
765 15 Taſſilo III. the laſt Duke of the Boiarians. Of whom more anon.

Amongſt theſe, few of any note, but 1. Theodo the firſt, ſon of Adalgerius, who abandoning the name of King, becauſe leſſe pleaſing to the French, who had newly conquered them, aſſumed that of Duke: and paſſing over the Danow, extorted the whole Province of Rhætia ſecunda, with part of Noricum, from the Romans, Anno 508. or thereabouts. 2. Theodo the ſecond, named the Great, for his great and many victories againſt the Romans, whom he outed of all Noricum, and Vindelicia; and whatſoever they held on the Dutch ſide of the Alpes. 3. Theodo the 3d of that name, and the 4th in number of the Dukes, converted with his people to the Chriſtian Faith, by the preaching of Rupertus before mentioned, An. 580. 4. Taſſilo the 3d of that name, and the laſt of their Dukes of the race of Adalgerius, or of the old Boiarian bloud: who being depoſed by Charls the Great, the whole countrey became immediatly ſubject to the French, governed at firſt by their Lieutenants. Diſmembred from the French Empire by Lewis the Godly, it was made a Kingdom (Pannonia being added and united to it) by whom conferred on Lotharius his eldeſt ſon, who was afterwards Emperor of the Romans: after his death poſſeſſed by the Kings of Germany, but as a diſtinct Kingdom both in name and title, till the deceaſe of Lewis the ſon of Arnulph the laſt of the direct line of Charls the Great. He being dead, and the Bavarians loth to be made a ſubject Province to the Kingdom of Germany; one Arnulph of the iſſue of the ſaid Charls, with the generall liking of the Boiarians, took upon himſelf the title of King; but being oppoſed therein by Conrade the brother of Lewis, Emp. and King of Germany, as alſo by Henry the firſt who ſucceeded; he changed the title of King into that of Duke, the Founder of the preſent houſe of

The DUKES of BAVARIA.

1 Arnulph, of the houſe of Charls the Great, firſt Duke of Bavaria.
2 Eberhard, ſon of Arnulph, depoſed by Otho the firſt.
3 Berchthold, the brother of Arnulph, confirmed in the eſtate by the ſaid Emperor Otho. After whoſe death, it was conferred on Henry, the brother of Otho the 1. who had maried Judith, daughter of Arnulph the firſt Duke, and ſiſter to Eberhard.
4 Henry, brother of Otho the firſt, ſurnamed Rixoſus, or the Quarrellſom.
5 Henry II. ſon of the former Henry, ſurnamed Hezelo.
6 Henry III. ſurnamed the Saint, ſon of Henry the 2d, the firſt Emperor who came in by election, according to the Order made by Pope Gregory the 5th. After whoſe coming to the Empire this Dukedom was transferred for 14 ſucceſſions from one great Family to another, according to the power and pleaſure of the preſent Emperor, in manner following.
7 Henry IV. ſurnamed Hezzel, brother to Cunegund the renowned wife of Henry the Saint; by whom preferred to this Dukedom, and by him depoſed.
8 Henry Guelph, ſon of Robert Earl of Altorfe in Schwaben, (of the ſtrange Original of which Family we ſhall ſpeak in Brunſwick,) made Duke by the Emperor Conrade the 2d.
9 Guelpho, ſon of Henry Guelph, or Henry the 5th.
10 Erneſt, created Duke hereof by the ſame Conrade the 2d, by whom depoſed again for conſpiring againſt him.
11 Henry VI.

Bavaria.

12 Cuno, accuſed of conſpiracy, and diſplaced by Henry the 3d. to make room for 13 Henry VII. ſon of the ſaid Emperor Henry the 3d. whom he ſucceeded in the Empire by the name of Henry the 4th.
14 Agnes, the mother of the ſaid Henry the 4th. by the gift of her ſon.
15 Otho, by the gift of the Empreſs Agnes, depoſed not long after by Henry the 4th.
16 Welpho III. ſon of Coniza the daughter of Guelph the 2d. by Azon, an Italian Marqueſs; made Duke hereof by the ſaid Emperor Henry the 4th.
17 Welpho IV. ſon to Welpho the 3d.
18 Henry VIII. ſurnamed the Proud, brother of Guelpho the 4th. by the marriage of Gertrude daughter of Lotharius the 2d. Duke of Saxony alſo. Deprived of both by the Emperor Conrade the third.
19 Leopold, ſon to Leopold the 4th. Marqueſs of Auſtria, made Duke by the ſaid Conrade the 3d.
20 Henry IX. brother of Leopold, after Marqueſs, and at laſt Duke of Auſtria.
21 Henry X. ſurnamed the Lion, ſon of Henry the Proud, reſtored by the Arbitrement of Frederick Barbaroſſa (the Duke of Auſtria being otherwiſe ſatisfied:) by whom not long after proſcribed and deprived of both his Dukedoms. After which this eſtate became fixed and ſetled, in the perſon and poſterity of 1180 22 Otho of Wittlesbach, ſo called from the place of his birth or dwelling; deſcended lineally from Arnulph the Lord of Schyre in the Upper Bavaria, and 2d ſon of Arnulph, the firſt Duke hereof; advanced unto this honour by Frederick Barbaroſſa, ſenſible of the too great power of the former Dukes: the whole extent of this eſtate being reduced by this time, to the limits of the modern Bavaria, and the Palatinate of Northgoia.

1183 23 Ludovick, or Lewis, ſon of Otho.

1231 24 Otho II. ſon of Lewis, who by marying Gertrude the ſole daughter of Henry Count Palatine of the Rhene, brought the Electoral dignity into the houſe of Bavaria.

1290 25 Henry Duke of Bavaria, and Count Palatine of the Rhene, the ſon of Otho the 2d.

1294 26 Ludovick, or Lewis II. brother of Henry, Duke of Bavaria, and Elector Palatine of the Rhene.

1312 27 Ludovick, or Lewis III. ſecond ſon of Lewis the 2d. ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Bavaria; Rodolph, the eldeſt ſon, ſucceeding in both Palatinats, and the Electoral dignity. He was afterwards elected and crowned Emperor, known commonly by the name of Ludovicus Bavarus.

1347 28 Stephen, the eldeſt ſon of Ludovick the Emperor; William and Albert his two brethren ſucceſſively enjoying the Earldoms of Hainalt, Holland, &c. in right of their mother.

1375 29 Stephen II. ſon of Stephen the 1ſt. his brothers Frederick and John ſharing with him parts of the eſtate.

1413 30 Ludovick II. ſurnamed Barbatus, depoſed and impriſoned by his own ſon Ludovick, who yet died before him without iſſue.

1447 31 Henry II. ſon of Frederick, the ſecond brother of Stephen the 2d. ſucceeded on the death of Ludovicus Barbatus.

1450 32 Ludovick V. ſurnamed the Rich, the ſon of Henry the 2d. baniſhed the Jews out of his eſtates, and ſeiſed their goods.

1503 34 Albert III. ſon of a former Albert, Nephew of John of Munchen, by his ſon Erneſtus: which John was youngeſt brother to Stephen the 2d. who by the power and favour of Maximilian the Emperor, ſucceeded unto George the Rich: The cauſe of a long and unhappy war betwixt the Electors of the Rhene and Dukes of Bavaria; the worſt whereof, beſides the loſſe of this Eſtate, fell upon the Palatines, proſcribed and outed of their Country upon this quarrel; but upon their ſubmiſſion, reſtored again.

2508 35 William the ſon of Albert the 3d.

1577 36 Albert IV. a great Champion of the Doctrines and Traditions of the Church of Rome; and ſo extreamly affected unto the Jeſuits, that he built Colleges for them at Landsberg, Ingolſtade, and Munchen, his three principal towns.

1579 37 William II. ſon of Albert the 4th. as zealous as his Father, in the cauſe of the Church of Rome; in which exceeded very much by

38 Maximilian, eldeſt ſon of William the 2d. who chiefly out of the ſame zeal ſided with Ferdinand the 2d, in the wars of Germany, An. 1620. and took upon him the conduct of the Armies of the ſaid Emperor, againſt Frederick Count and Elector Palatine, choſen King of Bohemia. In which having done great ſervice to the Imperial and Romiſh intereſte, he was by the ſaid Ferdinand inveſted in the Upper Palatinate, called antiently (but not more properly than now) the Palatinate of Bavaria, together with the Electoral dignity: This laſt conferred at firſt upon him but for term of life, in the Diet at Regensberg, 1623. the Electors of Mentz, Saxonie, and Brandenbourg, then proteſting againſt it; but afterwards in the Diet at Prague, Anno 1628. conferred upon him and his heirs for ever: to the great prejudice of the Princes of the Palatine Family, who by reaſon of their ſimultaneous inveſtiture with the firſt of their houſe, are not to be deprived of their eſtates and dignities for the the offence of their Fathers; the punishment not being to extend beyond the person of the offender. But notwithstanding their pretensions, and allegations, the Duke is still possessed of the title and dignity; confirmed therein by the conclusions of the Treaty of Munster: a new Electorate being to be erected for the Palatine Princes. Austria.

The Arms of this Duke are Lozenges of 21 peeces in Bend, Argent, and Azure.

The ARCHDUKEDOM of AUSTRIA.

The Archdukedom of AUSTRIA, reckoning in the incorporate Provinces, and Members of it, is bounded on the East, with Hungarie, and a part of Sclavonia; on the West, with Bavaria, and some parts of the Switzers, and the Grisons; on the North, with Bohemia, and Moravia; and on the South, with Histria, and some part of Friuly, in Italy. Within which circuit are contained the several Provinces of Austria, properly so called, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, and Tirol: the quality of the whole will be best discerned by the Survey of particulars.

The antient Inhabitants of the whole, were the Norici of the Romans, parted into the lesser Tribes of Sevates, Alauni, Ambisontii, Ambilici, and Ambidrauni: subdued by Drusus, son-in-law to Augustus Cæsar, and made a Province of the Empire. After by Constantine the Great divided into Noricum Mediterraneum, comprehending the Countries of Carinthia, Carniola, Stiria, and some parts of Tirol, with the Bishoprick or District of Saltzburg; of which Solyun was the Metropolis, or Capital City: and Noricum Ripense, containing only Austria, and those parts of Bavaria which lie Eastward of the River Inn; extended all along on the banks of the Danow. Known by no other names while possessed by the Romans; from whom being conquered by the Avares, and other Nations, it gained those several names, and appellations, specified before.

1 AUSTRIA, properly so called, hath on the East, the Kingdom of Hungarie, from which parted by the River Rab; on the West, Bavaria; on the North, the Bohemian Mountains towards the West, and on the other side, the Teya, which separates it from Moravia; on the South, Stiria, or Stiermark. Called by the Dutch, Oostenreich, and contractedly Oostrich, that is to say, the Eastern kingdom (a part assuming to it self the name of the whole) this being the extreme Province of East-France, or the Eastern Kingdom of the French: in the barbarous Latine of those times, called by the name of Austrasia, whence the modern Austria.

The air is generally very healthy, and the earth as fruitful; yielding a plentiful increase, without help of compost, or other soiling; and of so easie a tillage to the husbandman, that on the North side of the Danow, it is ploughed and managed by one horse only. Exceeding plentifull of grain, and abundant in wine, with which last it supplyeth the defects of Bavaria: great store of Saffron, some provision of Salt; and at the foot of the Mountains, not far from Haimbourg, some Ginger also. Nor wants it Mines of Silver in a large proportion. Divided by the River Danow into the Lower, and the Higher: that lying on the North side of the River, towards Bohemia, and Moravia; this on the South side, towards Stiermark.

Places of most importance in the HIGHER AUSTRIA, are 1. Gmund, seated on a Lake called Gemunder-See, bordering on Bavaria, at the efflux of the river Draun, which ariseth out of it. 2. Lints, seated on the confluence of the said Draun, with the famous Danow; the Aredate of Ptolemy: A Town before the late wars almost wholly Protestant; but then being put into the hands of the Duke of Bavaria, began to warp a little to the other side. 3 Walkenstein on the Ens or Anisus, near the borders of Stiermark. 4. Ens, on the fall of that river into the Danow; raised out of the ruines of Laureacum, sometimes the Metropolis of Noricum Ripense, the Station at that time of the second Legion: afterwards an Archbishops See, made such in the first planting of Christianity amongst this people, by S. Severine, Anno 464. On the reviver whereof, (suppressed by the Hunnes, Boiarians, and others of the barbarous Nations) by the diligence and preaching of S. Rupertus, the Metropolitan dignity was fixt at Saltzburg. 5. Waidhoven, near the head of the river Ips. 6. Ips, seated at the influx of that river, and from thence denominated; the Gesodunum of Ptolemy and other antients. 7 Newfull, on a great Lake so named. 8. Wels, on the main stream of the Danubius. 9 Haimburg, on the confluence thereof, and the river Markh: Near to which at the foot of the Mountains now called Haimburgerberg (from the town adjoining) but antiently named Mons Cognamus, is some store of Ginger: a wonderful great raritie for these colder Countries. 10 Newstat, first called so from the newness of it, being built of late. 11. Vienna, by the Dutch Wien, the principal of all these parts, by Ptolemy call Juliobona; Vindebona, by Antonine; the station in their times of the tenth Roman Legion; of whose being setled here, there are many Monuments, both within the City, and without. Seated it is on the banks of Danubius, well built, both in regard of private and publick edifices: each private house having such store of cellarage for all occasions, that as much of the City seems to be under the ground, as is above it. The streets for the most part spacious, and all paved with stone, which makes them very clean and sweet in the midst of winter: fenced with a mighty wall, deep and precipicious ditches on all parts of it; and many Bulwarks, Towers, and Ramparts, in all needfull places: the wals hereof first raised with some part of the money paid unto Leopold Duke of Austria, for the ransom of King Richard the first of England, taken prisoner by him as he passed homewards through this Countrey, from the Holy Land. Esteemed at this day the strongest hold of Christendom against the Turks, and proved experimentally so to be, in that most notable and famous repulse here given them, An. 1526. At what time 200000 of them, under the conduct of Solyman the Magnificent, besieged this City; but by the valour of Frederick the second, Austria second, Elector Palatine of the Rhene, and other German Princes, gallantly resisted, and compelled to retire, with the losse of 80000 souldiers. Nor doth the strength hereof so diminish the beauties of it, but that it is one of the goodliest Towns in all the Empire, the residence for these last ages of the Emperours; made an University by the Emperour Frederick the second, revived and much advanced by Albert Duke of Austria, anno 1356. Adorned with an Episcopal See, many magnificent Temples, and stately Monasteries: but above all with a most sumptuous and Princely Palace, wherein the Archdukes and Emperours use to keep their Courts; built by Ottacar, King of Bohemia, during the little time he was Duke of Austria. In the middle ages, as appears by Otho Frisingensis, it was called Fabiana; but being ruined by the Hunnes, and again re-edified, was first called Biana (the first syllable omitted by mistake or negligence) from whence the Dutch Wien, and the Latine Vienna.

We should now take a view of the Towns and Cities in the LOWER AUSTRIA, if there were any in it which were worth the looking after. The Country having never been in the hands of the Romans, hath no Town of any great antiquity; nor many new ones built or beautified by the Austrian Princes, since it came into their possession: the only one of note being Crems, or Cremia, on the left-hand shoar of Danubius, going down the water. 2. Rets, on the River Teya, bordering on Moravia; and 3. Freistat, at the foot of the mountains on the Skirrs of Bohemia. The old Inhabitants of this tract are supposed to be the Quadi, in that part which lyeth next to Bohemia; the Marcomanni, in those parts which are next Moravia: who intermingled with the Boii, and united with them into the name of Boiarians, won from the Romans the whole Province of the Second Rhatia, and so much of Noricum as lyeth betwixt the Inn and the Ens, leaving the rest to the Avares. who possessed that and the two Pannonia's, extorted also from the Romans in the fall of that great and mighty Empire.

But these Boiarians being conquered by Clovis the Great, and the Avares driven out of Pannonia by Charlemagne; both Provinces became members of the French Empire, till the subduing of Pannonia by the Hungarians. To oppose whom, and keep in peace and safety these remoter parts, some Guardians, or Lords Marchers, were appointed by the Kings and Emperours of Germany, with the title of Marquesses of Ostreich. At first Officiarie only, but at last hereditarie. Made so by the Emperour Henry the first, who gave this Province to one Leopold, surnamed the Illustrious, the son of Henry Earl of Bamberg, of the house of Schwaben; and therewithall the title of Marquesse, Anno 980. This Marquisate was by Frederick Barbarossa raised to a Dukedom, 1158. Henry being the first Duke, whose brother Leopold took Richard the first of England, prisoner, in his return from Palestine: for whose ransome he had so much money, that with it he bought Stiermark, together with the Counties of Neobourg, and Liutz; and walled Vienna. His son Fredericus, surnamed the Warlike, was made King of Austria by the Emperour Frederick the second, anno 1225. Eleven years he continued in this dignity; at the end of which he was spoiled of his royal ornaments by the same hand, for denying his appearance at the Emperours summons, unto whom for some outrages he had been complained of. Finally, he died in the year 1246. discomfited and slain in battel by the King of Hungarie. Leaving no issue of his body, this estate of right should have descended on Frederick, son of Hermannus, Marqueste of Baden, and of Gertrude his wife, the Neece of this Frederick the Warlike, by his brother Henry, who was afterwards beheaded at Naples by Charles of Valois, anno 1268. But Ottacar, son of Primislaus King of Bohemia, pretending to it in the right of Margaret his wife, one of the Sisters of the said Frederick the Warlike, by a strong hand possessed himself of the Dukedom of Austria, which he increased by the addition of Carinthia, and Trevigiana; all which he held, together with the Kingdom of Bohemia, till the year 1278. in which he was vanquish'd & slain by Rodolphus of Habspurg, not long before advanced to the German Empire. Rodolphus thus possessed of these great estates, conferred them on Albertus his eldest son, who had then maried Elizabeth, daughter of Meinard Earl of Tirol, by Elizabeth (or Agnes) his wife, the daughter of Gertrude, and sister and sole heir at last of Frederick, so cruelly murdered at Naples, as before was said. By means of which marriage and investiture, Albert was quietly possessed of the Dukedoms of Austria, Stiermark, Carinthia, Carniola, together with Marca Trevigiana, to which the Earldom of Tirol, and many other fair estates in Schwaben and Alsatia were after added. By whom it was first raised to the title of Arch-duke, is not yet agreed. Some attribute it to Rodolphus of Habspurg, at the investitue of his son Albert into these Estates, anno 1298. Others to Charles the fourth, advancing to that honour Rodolph the Ingenious, anno 1360. Some make it to be first given to Albert Duke hereof, in the year 1430. and others post it lower to the mariage of Philip, son of Maximilian of Austria, and of the Lady Mary of Burgundy, with Joan Princesse of Spain. But by whomsoever given at first, it is now the constant and hereditary title of all this Family: the successive Princes whereof from the first investiture, follow in the ensuing Catalogue of 926 1 Leopold of Bamberg, the first Marquesse.

The MARQUESSES, DUKES, KINGS, and ARCH-DUKES of AUSTRIA.

988 2 Henry, son of Leopold.
1014 3 Albert, son of Henry, surnamed the Victorious.
1056 4 Ernestus, son of Albert.
1075 5 Leopold II. son of Ernest, a companion of Godfrey of Bouillon.
1096 6 Leopold III. son of the second, founder of the Abby of Nenbourg.

1136 7 Leo-

1136 7 Leopold IV. ſon of the third, by his half brother Conrade the third, then Emperour of the Germans, made Duke of Bavaria. Stiria.

1141 8 Henry II. brother of Leopold, Marqueſſe of Auſtria, and Duke of Bavaria; made the firſt Duke of Auſtria by Frederick Barbaroſſa, Anno 1158. the whole Country betwixt the Inn and the Ens, being added by the ſaid Emperour unto his eſtate, on his relinquiſhing of Bavaria to the Duke of Saxony.

1177 9 Ludovick, ſon of Henry, built Ens and Newſtat; of great note in the wars of the Holy Land.

1193 10 Leopold V. ſon of Ludovick, the irreconcilable enemy of our Richard the firſt, taken priſoner by him in his paſſage homewards, and put unto a grievous ranſome, the Dukedom of Stiermark being purchaſed with a part thereof.

1230 11 Frederick the Warlike, ſon of Leopold the fifth, made King of Auſtria by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond; the laſt of the male iſſue of the houſe of Bamberg.

1246 12 Ottocar, ſon of Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, pretending the right of Margaret his wife, ſiſter of Frederick, poſſeſſed himſelf of this Eſtate: adding thereto the Countries of Carinthia and Carniola, which he bought of Ulrick, the laſt Prince thereof; but diſpoſſeſſed of all by Rodolph of Habſpurg.

1283 13 Albert II. ſon of Rodolph of Habſpurg, by his father made Duke of Auſtria, maried Elizabeth, the lineal and direct heir of Gertrude, one of the Neeces, and (on the death of that Frederick, who was ſlain at Naples) the next heir of Frederick King and Duke of Auſtria; after his fathers death choſen Emperour alſo.

1308 14 Rodolph the Ingenuous, his other brother ſharing with him in the eſtate.

1315 15 Albert, ſurnamed the Short, the youngeſt and ſurviving brother of Rodolph, ſucceeded in the whole Eſtate; a great advancer of his houſe.

1358 16 Albert IV. ſon of Albert the Short.

1395 17 Albert V. ſon of Albert the fourth.

1404 18 Albert VI. ſon of Albert the fifth, King of Hungary and Bohemia, in right of Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Sigiſmund the King thereof.

1439 19 Ladiſlaus, ſon of Albert and Elizabeth, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Duke of Auſtria.

1493 21 Maximilian, ſon of Frederick, enriched his houſe with the mariage of the heir of Burgundy.

1519 22 Ferdinand, Grandchild to Maximilian by his ſon Philip King of Spain, and Archduke of Auſtria; ſucceeded his Grandfather in this Dukedom: King of Hungary, Bohemia, and Emperour of Germany.

1565 23 Maximilian II. ſon of Ferdinand.

1577 24 Rodolphus III. ſon of Maximilian the ſecond.

1612 25 Matthias, brother of Rodolphus.

27 Ferdinand III. ſon of Ferdinand the ſecond, now living Anno 1648. Archduke of Auſtria, King of Hungaria and Bohemia, and Emperour of the Germans. Of whole eſtate and the Concomitants thereof, we ſhall ſay more, when we have took a view of the reſt of the Provinces.

2. STIRIA or STIERMARK, is bounded on the North, with Auſtria; on the South, with Carinthia; on the Eaſt, with Hungary; and on the Weſt with Carinthia, Extended in length 110 miles, but in breadth not above 60. or thereabout. For the moſt part mountainous and barren, as being overſpread with the ſpurs and branches of the Alpes, and rich only in Minerals. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

Towns of moſt conſequence, 1 Gratz, ſeated upon the River Mur, and the chief of the Province, from which the third branch of the houſe of Auſtria (ſince the time of Ferdinand the firſt) was called De Gratz, and had the Government of the Country for their part of that Patrimonie. A Town once full of Proteſtants, and thoſe ſo ſtrong, that they could neither be forced out, nor hindred from the free exerciſe of their Religion, till the year 1598. in which Magaret the late Queen of Spain, Siſter to the Archduke Ferdinand du Gratz, was by the Citizens ſolemnly entertained; with whom entred ſo many ſouldiers, that the City was taken; and 14 Miniſters of the Reformed Religion preſently baniſhed. 2. Rachelſpurg, and 3. Pruck, both ſituate alſo on the Mur. 4. Stechaw, an Epiſcopal See ſeated on the Dra, or Dravus, a well known River, not far from the fall of the Mur into it. 5. Petaw, the Patovio of Antoninus, ſeated ſomewhat higher upon the Dravus. 6. Lamboch the Ovilabis of Antoninus, on the Dravus alſo. 7 Voiteſperg, upon the River Kainach. 8. Cely, the Celeia of Pliny, of great antiquity, as appeareth by many Roman Inſcriptions, and other evident ſigns of Age which are upon it; for which cauſe thought by ſom to be that Celia, or built at leaſt out of the Stiria. ruines of it, which Ptolomie placeth in this Tract. It is ſituate on the River Savus, and hath a large juriſdiction over the adjoyning Countries. 9. Canifia, ſeated in a mariſh on the edge of this Country, a place of great ſtrength, both by art and nature; once one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarks againſt the Turks in all theſe parts, and a great eye-ſore to them for many years: but taken by them at the laſt, Anno 1600. And never ſince re-gained by the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria, though many times in vain attempted.

The whole Countrey mountainous and hilly, generally overſpread with the ſpurs and branches of the neighbouring Alps, and rich only in minerals; was antiently the habitation of the Tauriſci (part of the Norici) from whom it took the name of Steirmark: the Germans calling that a Steir, which the Latins call Tauriſcus, or a little Bullock. By which account Steirmark, is nothing but the borders or Marches of the Tauriſci, the utmoſt bounds of their poſſeſſions; as indeed it was. Laid to Pannonia in the diſtribution of the Roman Provinces, it was called Valeria, in honor of Valeria the daughter of Diocleſian. But once diſmembred from the Empire, it fell upon the name of Steirmark, with reference to the Tauriſci, ſpoken of before. Firſt made an Earldom in the perſon of one Ottocarus, advanced unto that honor by the Emperor Conrade the 2d. Leopold, the 4th. from this Ottocarus, (two other Ottocars intervening) was made Marqueſs of Stiermark; and his ſon, Ottocar the 4th, was made Duke hereof, by the Emperor Frederick Barbaroſſa. But being without hope of iſſue, and infected with the uncurable diſeaſe of the Leproſie, he ſold this Country to Leopold the fift of Auſtria; bought with ſome part of that vaſt ſum of money which he extorted for the ranſom of King Richard the firſt. Continued ever ſince in the poſſeſſion of this potent Family, but ſo, that it hath many times been aſſigned over for the portion of the younger brethren: as namely, to Leopold the ninth of that name, one of the younger ſons of Albert the ſhort: Erneſt, the youngeſt ſon of that Leopold; and laſtly to Charls, the youngeſt ſon of Ferdinand the firſt, called Charls of Gratz, father of Ferdinand the ſecond, ſucceſſor to Matthias in Auſtria it ſelf, and all the reſt of the Eſtates incorporate with it: not like hereafter to be ſo impolitickly diſmembred from the chief of the houſe, as in former times.

3 CARINTHIA, by the Dutch called Karnten, is bounded on the Eaſt with Steirmark, and the River Levandt; on the Weſt, with the Diſtrict of Saltzburg, and the River Saltzach; on the North, with Auſtria it ſelf; and on the South with Carniola, and the River Dravus: which having its original in the skirts hereof, paſſeth through theſe Auſtrian Provinces into Hungary, and falls at laſt into the Danow. The Country being ſituate in the worſt part of the Alps, is generally poor and barren, except only in minerals: extending all along the Dravus for the length of 100 Engliſh miles, and 47 in breadth betwixt that River and the Mur, by the which it is bounded.

Places of principal note in it, are 1. St. Veit, or Sancti Viti, the chief town of the Country, ſituate at the meeting of the Glan, and the Wunics, two ſmall Rivers; adorned with a ſpacious market place, and a beautiful Conduit. 2. Vittach, ſeated on the Dravus in a pleaſant valley, encompaſſed about with rocks; the houſes hereof adorned on the outſide with painted ſtories, very delightful to behold. 3. Gurch, a ſmall Town, but an Epiſcopal See. 4. Clagnfoot, on the Lake called Werd-Zee; a well fenced place; called antiently by the name of Claudia. 5. Wolſperg upon the Lavandt, ſo near to Steirmark that it is by ſome reckoned a Town thereof. 6. Lavamundt, on the ſame border, an Epiſcopal See; ſituate at the influx of that River into the Dravus. 7 Freiſach, a town of much antiquity, ſeated on the Oleza. 8. Spital, &c. The ſtory and ſucceſſion of the Dukes hereof, before the uniting of it to the houſe of Auſtria, (this Province and Carniola making but one Eſtate between them) we ſhall ſee anon.

4. CARNIOLA, by the Dutch called Krain, is environed with Sclavonia, Eaſt: Friuli, Weſt; Carinthia, North; and Iſtria, South. It is in length, from Eaſt to Weſt, (extended along the River Savus) 120 Italian miles, and about 76 in breadth. The Alps here being Lower, and leſs cold and rockie, than more towards the Weſt; which maketh it to be the more rich both in corn and wine, and other the productions of nature, than it would be otherwiſe.

The chief Towns are, 1. Newmarckt, 2. Eſling, 3. Marſperg, 4. Pogonock, and 5. Saxenfelt, all upon the Savus; which ariſing in this Country, runneth through the very middle of it, and after falleth into the Danow. 6. Laibach, ſeated on a ſmall River of the ſame name, by Ptolemy called Pamportus; but by Pliny, Nauportus: famous in old Mythologie, for the tranſport of the ſhip called Argo, wherein Jaſon and his Comrades brought the Golden Fleece: who coming out of Pontus, or the Euxine Sea, took their courſe up the Danow, ſo into the Savus, then into this town; hence carried over land into the Adriatick, from thence ſailing into Greece, where they firſt began the undertaking. 7. Goritz, called antiently Noreja, or ſeated in the place where Noreja ſtood, is ſituate on the River Liſontio, an Italian water, which not far off falleth into the Adriatick. A town of ſo much note, that antiently it was an Earldom; and in the diviſion of the Eſtate of Meinard Earl of Tirol, (to whom it formerly belonged) was given to Albert his ſecond ſon, with the ſtile and title of Earl of Goritz: continuing in his houſe till the year 1500. when on the death of Leonard the laſt Earl hereof, it deſcended upon Maximilian the firſt, as next heir unto it; whoſe Succeſſors, not only in the Eſtates of Auſtria, but the Empire alſo, doe ſtill retain the title of Earls of Goritz in their uſual ſtile.

The firſt Inhabitants of both theſe Provinces of Kruin, and Karnten, were the Carni, of Pliny and other Antients, who make them part of Venetia, the tenth region of Italy: but afterwards in the diſtribution of the Roman Provinces, caſt into Noricum, and made a member of the Dioceſe of the Weſtern Illyricum; but ſubject, or ſubordinate rather to the Prafectus Pratorio of Italy. From them not only the Alpes adjoining had the name of Carnicæ; but theſe two Countries had the names by which now they go. United of long time, in the perſons of the Dukes of Karnten, of whom the firſt mentioned upon good good record, was Henry ſon to Berchthold, a Noble man of Bavaria, in the time of the Emperor Otho the third: by whom advanced unto this honour and eſtate, diſpoſed of in ſucceeding times at the will of the Emperors, and given from one family unto another, as their fancies ſerved them. Not fixed in any houſe, till it came to Henry the ſon of Engelbert, Preſident or Prafect of Hiſtria: in which family it continued under this Henry, and his brother Engelbert, Ulric the firſt, Henry the ſecond, Herman, and Ulric the ſecond, the laſt Prince hereof: who by his marriage with Agnes, ſiſter and heir of Otho the 2d. Duke of Meran, added that eſtate to his former Patrimony. But being old, and without children, he ſold his whole eſtate to Ottacar, King of Bohemia, and Duke of Auſtria; by whom theſe Countries were ſurrendred unto Rodolphus of Habſpurg, on the concluſion of the peace which was made between them. And though Rodolphus gave Carinthia to Mainard Earl of Tirol, (in right of whoſe daughter Elizabeth, Albert the ſon of Rodolph was poſſeſſed of Auſtria:) yet on the death of Henry, the ſon of Mainard, without iſſue male, it fell (according to the contract) unto Albert the Short, eldeſt ſon of Albert, and Granchild of Rodolphus; continuing ever ſince in that family, though not alwaies in the chief houſe of the Dukes of Auſtria. Tiroll.

The ſtrange and obſervable ceremonies, with which the Archdukes of Auſtria are acknowledged Dukes of Carinthia, take here out of Munſter. In the meadows adjoyning to the Town of Vite, a certain Country-man to whom that office by inheritance belongeth, ſitteth on a Marble ſtone there being, holding in his right hand a cow, with a black calf; and in his left hand, a mare as lean as a rake. Then cometh the new Duke, attired in a plain ruſtick habit, his Courtiers attending him in their richeſt apparel: at whoſe approach, the Country-man above mentioned, demandeth, What he is that ſo majeſtically cometh thitherward; and the people anſwer, that it is the future Duke. He again asketh, whether he be a juſt Judge, and one that will maintain the liberty of the country, & ſincerity of the Religion; the people anſwer, he will: then he asketh, by what right he will diſplace him of his marble ſeat; to whom the Steward of the new Dukes houſe replyeth, he ſhall give thee 60 pence in ſilver, the cattel now ſtanding by thee, the cloathes which he hath at this time on, and thy houſe ſhall ever be free from tax and tribute. The fellow upon this, taking the Duke by the hand, and bidding him to be a good Prince, giveth him a gentle cuff on the ear, ſetteth him on the marble ſtone, and taking away the cattel, departeth. This done, the new Duke goeth to Saint Vites Church, and having done his devotions, putteth off his ruſtick weeds, and dreſſeth himſelf in clothes befitting a Prince: for ſuch after their ceremonies he is acknowledged.

The Arms of theſe Dukes were Argent, 3 Lions Leopards Sable.

TIROLIS is bounded on the Eaſt, with Friuly, and Marca Trevigiana; by the interpoſing of which or ſome parts thereof, disjoyned from Carniola; on the Weſt, with the Griſons, and ſome part of Switzerland; on the North, with Bavaria; and on the South, with Lombardy. Extended over the greateſt part of the Alpes Rhæticæ, and ſome part of the Juliæ: yet intermixt with many rich and fruitful valleys, thoſe ſpecially which lye on the banks of the Inn, and the River of Adiſe. Nor are the hills ſo void of profit unto the Inhabitants, but that they afford good ſtore of metals digged out of them, eſpecially of Braſſe, and Silver; which laſt have yeelded to the Archduke 230000 Crowns yearly.

Towns of moſt note, 1. Oenipons, or Inſpruch, ſo called from a Bridge on the Inn or Oenus, which gave denomination to the ſecond branch of Auſtria, deſcended from Ferdinand, the ſecond ſon of the Emperour Ferdinand: the houſe of Gratz iſſuing from Charls, the third ſon of that Emperor. Moſt memorable for the haſty flight of Charls the fift, upon the news that Duke Maurice, whom he had lately made Elector of Saxony, was coming againſt him with his Forces. Which ſo terrified him, that he fled away by torch-light, with ſome few of his followers; the reſidue of his Court (moſt of which were perſons of great eminency) trudging in the dark on foot, with the Black Guard and the Skullerie. The Town being many times the Reſidence of the Dukes of Auſtria, who have here a very Royal and magnificent Palace. And to ſay truth, the Town deſerveth to be ſo honoured; amongſt pleaſant Meadows, ſpacious cornfields, and ſhady mountains ſweetly ſeated: the houſes fairly built of ſtone, enriched by the Courts of Judicature here ſetled for all the Country, and provided of a gallant Armorie. 2. Trent, (Tridentum it is called in Latine) ſituate in the confines of Germany, and Italy; for which cauſe the Inhabitants ſpeak both languages. Built on the banks of the River Atheſis, or Adiſe: honoured with an Epiſcopal See, but made more famous by the Council which was there begun by Pope Paul the third, Anno 1545. againſt the Lutherans. For 22 years together before their meeting, daſhed by one Pope, and intimated by another; advanced by Charls the fifth upon wordly Policies, and for as worldly Policies retarded by the Court of Rome: for 18 years after this firſt Convention of it, at ſundry times, aſſembled, ſuſpended, and diſſolved. And finally, when fixed here ſeriouſly by Pope Pius the fourth, Anno 1562. managed with ſo much art and cunning by the Papal party, that nothing was determined among the Prelates, but what had formerly been reſolved on in the Roman Conclave, and certified accordingly by eſpecial Poſts: occaſioning that moſt bitter jeſt of one of the Hungarian Biſhops who was preſent at it, that the Holy Ghoſt was ſent unto them in a Cloak-bag from Rome. The effects of which Council, ſo artificially carried on by the ſtrength of wit, I cannot better deſcribe than in the words of the Hiſtory of it, which are as followeth. This Council, deſired and procured by "godly men to reunite the Church which began to be divided, hath ſo eſtabliſhed the Schiſm, and "made the parties ſo obſtinate, that the diſcords are irreconcileable. And being managed by Prin-"ces for Reformation of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, hath cauſed the greateſt deformation that ever was "ſince Chriſtianity did begin: and hoped for by the Biſhops themſelves to regain the Epiſcopal Autho-"rity, for the moſt part uſurped by the Pope, hath made them loſe it altogether, bringing them into Veteravia. "greater ſervitude. On the contrary feared and avoided by the See of Rome, as a potent means to "moderate the exorbitant power thereof, mounted from ſmall beginnings, by divers degrees, to "an unlimited exceſſe; it hath ſo eſtabliſhed and confirmed the ſame over that part which remaied "ſubject unto it, that it was never ſo great, nor ſoundly rooted. So far the words of the Hiſtory. The next of note is, 3. Falkenſtein, remarkable for mines of Braſſe; as 4. Hal upon the Inn for Saltwiches; and 5. Schwas for the richer mines of Silver. 6. Malk, near the head of the River Atheſis. 7. Pollen, upon the borders of Italy, by the people whereof called Bolgiano, and Bolſano. 8. Tirol, an antient Caſtle, the firſt ſeat of the Earls or Governours hereof, and giving name for that reaſon to the Country adjoyning. 9. Meran, neighbouring the old Caſtle of Tirol, which gave the title of Dukes to a branch of the Caroline race, deſcended from Rathboldus, a baſe ſon of the Emperour Arnulph; poſſeſſed of many large eſtates in theſe Alpine Countries, now appertaining to the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria. From one of which Dukes called Otho of Meranie, maried to Beatrix, heir of the County of Burgundie, the Earls of Burgundie (ſince that time) doe derive themſelves.

The Earls hereof, were at the firſt no other than Provincial Officers; when made Proprietaries, I am yet to ſeek. The firſt of whom we have any certainty, was Mainard, Earl of Tirol and Goritz, who died in the year 1258, leaving his Earldoms to that Mainard, who by Rodolphus Habſpurgenſis was enfeoffed with the Dukedom of Karnten. But Henry the ſon of this laſt Mainard dying without iſſue male; his daughter Margaret, by the conſent of all her people, ſetled her eſtate therein on the ſons of Albert, called the Short: continuing ever ſince in the houſe of Auſtria, though ſometimes made the portion and inheritance of the younger Princes. By Ferdinand the firſt, it was given in Appennage to his 2d. ſon Ferdinand, ſurnamed of Inſpruch for that reaſon, who by marrying with Philippina a Burgers daughter of Augsburg, ſo diſpleaſed his Brethren, that to buy his peace of them, and enjoy his own content with her; it was finally agreed upon amongſt them all, that Tirol ſhould not deſcend upon his Children of that venter. In purſuance whereof after his deceaſe, Tirol fell to the houſe of Gratz: his eldeſt ſon Charles being made Marqueſſe of Burgh, and Andrew his youngeſt, Cardinal of Brixia.

The Arms of theſe Earls when diſtinct from the houſe of Auſtria, were Argent, an Eagle Sable, membred Or.

Thus have we ſeen by what means all theſe Provinces belonging unto ſeveral Lords, became united and incorporated into one Eſtate. Beſides which, there was added to it by Rodolph of Habſpurg, all the Upper Elſats, the Caſtle and Territory of Habſpurg it ſelf, with many fair Eſtates amongſt the Switzers; by Albert the Short, the Country of Sungow; and by his ſons, the Advocateſhip of Friburg, or the Country of Briſgow. So that theſe Princes are undoubtedly the greateſt for power and patrimony, of any in Germany: and would be of a great revenue, if the ill neighbourhood of the Turks did not put them to continual charges; and make the borders of the Country to be thinly planted, and not very thorowly manured. Howſoever, it is thought that they may yeeld yearly two millions of Crowns and upwards, to the Archdukes Coffers.

The Armes of theſe Princes are Gules, A Feſſe Argent; aſſumed by Marqueſſe Leopold at the ſiege of Acon, or Ptolemais in the Holy Land; becauſe his whole Armour being covered with bloud, his Belt only remained white. The Arms thereof in former times having been ſix Larks Or, in a field Azure; ſuppoſed to have been taken by the firſt Marqueſſes, becauſe they poſſeſſed thoſe ſix Provinces, for defence of which the tenth Legion called Alauda, had been fixed at Vienna.

And now we are to take our leave of the Roman Empire, which we ſhall meet withall no more till we come to Hungary; the Countries on the North ſide of Danubius, and the Eaſt ſide of the Rhene, being almoſt as ſoon abandoned, as conquered by them. So that in our ſurvey of theſe Northern Countries, we are not like to find ſuch matter of Antiquity as we had before; but muſt content our ſelves both with Towns and Villages of a later date, and a leſſe continuance. In which we ſhall begin with thoſe Countries which lie on the other ſide of Rhene, bordering on the Eſtates of Cleveland, and the Biſhop-electors; and ſo proceed on Eaſtward till we come to the furtheſt parts of Germany, and the confines of Hungary; afterwards turning to the North till we meet with Denmark, which is next of all to be conſidered.

9. VETERAVIA

VETERAVIA, or WETERAW, is bounded on the Weſt, with the Biſhoprick of Colen; on the Eaſt, with Frankenland; on the North, with Haſſia, and Weſtphalen; and on the South, with the Lower Palatinate. It containeth a combination of many ſmall eſtates, which being joyned in a common leagüe for defence of each other for the preſervation of their Laws Liberties, and Religion; are called the Confederation of Weteraw. The Principal of the States which are thus confederated, are the Earls of 1. Naſſaw, 2. Hanaw, and 3. Stolms, 4. the Lord of Lichteberg, and the Imperial Cities of 5. Friberg, and 6. Wetzelaer.

The County of NASSAW (for fruitfulneſs of ſoyl, and delightſomneſs of ſituation, not inferiour to moſt parts of France) lyeth at the foot of the Mountains, which divide Haſſia from Engern, and Weſtphalen; antiently called Melibocus: a branch of the long ridge of Mountains which were called Abnobi. Chief Towns hereof are 1. Naſſaw, ſituate on the South ſide of the River Lou, not far from the fall of it into the Rhene; the firſt ſeat and honourary Title of this famous family, and ſtill in the poſſeſſion of the Princes of Orange, the firſt branch hereof. 2. Dillingbourg, the uſual ſeat of the Earls of Naſſaw, before their ſetling in the Low Countries; hence named the Earls of Naſſaw of the houſe of Dillingberg, to difference them from others of the same family. 2. Catzenelbogen, which gives the title of an Earl to the owners of it; in Latine, Catti Melibocci, which shews the name to be compounded of the Catti, anciently possessed of these parts of Germany, and the mountainous parts of Melibocus, then inhabited by them. The possession of this town much controverted between the Earls of Nassaw, and the Lantgraves of Hassia. Concerning which, we are to know, that Henry the second son of Lewis, Lantgrave of Hassia, surnamed the Mild, maried with Anne, daughter and heir of Philip the last Lord hereof, and by her had a son called William, who died without issue; and a daughter named Elizabeth, maried to John the 3d. of Nassaw, to whom she brought Henry and William, Earls of Nassaw. Elizabeth on the death of her brother William, laid claim to the estate, as the next heir to him; followed in the pursute thereof, by William Count of Nassaw, her surviving son. Against which, William the 2d. of Hassia did allege a grant or donation of it from his Cousin William, the brother of Elizabeth, as before is said, and having possession of the Town, and the members of it, was made thereby the better able to defend his Title. But at the last it was surrendred by Count William of Nassaw (father of William Prince of Orange) unto Philip the Lantgrave, in the time of Charls the fift, for the sum of 600000 Crowns: the house of Nassaw notwithstanding retaining it amongst their Titles. 3. Herborn, a small University, or Schola Illustris, founded of late by the Earls of Nassaw: in which Piscator was Divinity Reader, and Alstedius (both famous in their times Professor for the Arts and Sciences. 4. Idstein, lying south to Catzenelbogen; and 5. Wisbad, directly south of Idstein, betwixt that and the Mein; these being the title and possessions of the second branch of this Family. 6. Weilborough on the Lou, not far from Witzelver; which gives Title to the third branch of this house, called the Earls of Nassaw in Sarbruck, and Weilborough.

Franconia

As for the Princes of the house of Nassaw, they are very antient; Otho of Nassaw being made Earl of Guelderland in the year 1079. Another Otho of this house, but proceeding from a different branch of it, dying Anno 1190. the founder of the present Family of the Princes of Orange; and of the house of Wisbad and Idstein; out of which descended Adolphus Earl of Nassaw, chosen Emperor, in the year 1292. By the mariage of Engelbert, the seventh Earl of this house of Dillingberg, with Mary daughter of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, they came first to be possessed of Estates in the Netherlands: and by the mariage of Henry, great Grand-child of this Engelbert, with Claude of Chalons, they got the Principality of Orange in France. A family as much honoured for the personal merit of the Princes of it, as any other in Europe; of some of which, although we have already given a Catalogue, (in the description and story of Provence) as Princes of Orange; yet take here the whole succession of them, as

The COUNTS of NASSAW.

1 Otho, the son of Henry, and nephew of Waleran, the first Earl of Nassaw of this line.

1190 2 Henry, the son of Otho, who added Dillemberg, Wisbad, and Ibstein unto his estate. Grandfather by Waldradus his 2d. son, to Adolphus the Emperor.

3 Otho II. son of Henry.

4 Henry II. son of Otho the 2d.

5 Otho III. son of Henry the 2d.

6 John, son of Otho the 3d.

1362 7 Engelbert, the son of John, by Mary his wife, daughter and heir of Philip Lord of Breda in Brabant, added that Town, with many other fair estates in the Netherlands, to his former Patrimony.

8 John II. son of Engelbert, Earl of Nassaw, and Lord of Breda, &c.

1475 9 John III. son of John the 2d.

1516 10 Henry III. son of John the 3d. Knight of the Golden Fleece, maried Claude of Chalons, sister of Philibert Pr. of Orange.

1536 11 Rene, son of Henry the 3d. and of Claude of Chalons, successor to his Uncle Philibert in the Principality of Orange, Anno 1530. and to his Father in the Earldom of Nassaw, Anno 1536.

1544 12 William, the son of John the 3d. by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Hen: Lantgrave of Hassia, and of Anne daughter and heir of Philip E. of Catzenelbogen; reformed the Religion in this Country according to the Lutheran doctrins.

1559 13 William II. son of William the first, succeeded Pr. of Orange, by the Will of Rene his Cousin-German, Anno 1544. and Earl of Nassaw, by the death of his Father, An. 1559. What else concerns this Prince, we have had before. I only add, that William the first besides this William, had 3 other sons; that is to say, Count John, the Father of William of Nassaw, Governor of West-Friseland; Count Ludowick, of great renown in the first wars of the Netherlands, in the course whereof he lost his life, An. 1574. and Count Adolphus, slain in the same wars also, Anno 1568.

1584 14 Philip, eldest son of William the second, and of Anne his wife, daughter and heir of Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Buren, succeeded Earl of Buren on the death of his mother, An. 1551. Prince of Orange, and Count of Nassaw, by the death of his Father.

15 Maurice, son of William the 2d. and of Anne his wife, daughter of Maurice Duke-Elector of Saxonie, Prince of Orange, and Count of Nassaw. At the age of 18. years made General of all the forces of the United Netherlands, which place he managed for the space of 37 years, with great both courage and success.

1625 16 Henry IV. Brother of Maurice, (but by another Venter, the daughter of Gaspar Coligni, Admiral of France) Count of Nassaw, Prince of Orange, and General of the forces of the States united,

1648. 17. Willi-

Franconia 1648 17 William III. ſon of Henry the 4th. ſucceſſor to his Father in all his Honours and commands; A Prince of great hopes and expectations.

The Arms of the Earls of Naſſaw are Quarterly, 1. Azure, a Lion Or, Armed Gules; 2ly. Or, a Lion-Leopard Gules, armed and Crowned Azure; 3ly. Gules, a Feſſe Argent; and 4ly. Gules, two Leopards Or, armed and membred Gules.

Bordering on Francovia or Frankenland, lyeth the County of HANAW, ſo called from the chief Town of it: in which the places of moſt note, are 1. Hanaw it ſelf, in Latine called Hanovia, honoured with a Schola illuſtris alſo; and much enriched by the trade of Printing, with which they uſe to furniſh annually the Marts of Frankefort, diſtant from hence about ten Dutch miles. 2. Pfaffenhoſen, of no note formerly, but like to be remembred in the ſtories of ſucceding times, for the great defeat there given to the Duke of Lorrein, July 31. 1633. who loſt his whole Forces, all his Ordinance, Ammunition, and baggage; and which was worſt of all, his Country: taken in part from him by the Conquering Swedes, who followed him cloſe into his home; but wholly by the French King upon that advantage. 3. Lichteberg, which gives title to a ſecond branch of the houſe of Hanow, called the Lord of Lichteberg. A familie of good eſteem, ſince the time that Otho of Hanaw was ennobled with the title of Earl thereof, which was about the year 1392. before that, Princes of the Empire; and after that, advanced unto greater fortunes, by the addition of the Barony of Minzeberg, in the perſon of Philip the firſt Earl; of the County of Rheineck, in the perſon of another Philip, the third of that name, great Grandchild of the former Philip; and finally, of the Lordſhip and Eſtate of Lichteberg, accrewing to this houſe by the mariage of a third Philip, the youngeſt ſon of Reynard the third Earl hereof, with Anne the daughter and heir of Ludovick, Lord of Lichteberg. The Title and poſſeſſion of the ſecond branch of the houſe of Hanaw, called Lords of Lichteberg, and Hocſenſtein, and Earls of Bitſch: this laſt being an eſtate in Lorrein, accrewing to them by the mariage of a fourth Philip, (the fifth in name and order of the houſe of Lichteberg) with Margaret, ſole daughter and heir of Ludovick the laſt Earl thereof.

Betwixt the Counties of Naſſaw, and Hanaw, on both ſides of the River Lou, lies the Earldom of SOLMS, the firſt Earl whereof, (of whom there is any good Conſtat) was Henry, honoured with this title, Anno 1220. But being I find them in the Catalogue of the Counts Imperial, made before that time, I muſt conclude them to be antienter than the date aforeſaid; though that ſufficient to ennoble a far greater family. By the mariage of Conrade the ninth from Henry, firſt with Elizabeth, one of the daughters of Wil. of Naſſaw, Prince of Orange, and after with the widow of the Earl of Egmond, they came to be of ſuch authority amongſt the Netherlands, as to be privileged with a place and ſuffrage in the Council of the States General: there ſetled at the preſent in their greateſt honour, eſpecially ſince the mariage of Henry of Naſſaw, Prince of Orange, with a daughter of Earl Conrade by his ſecond wife; the mother of William of Naſſaw, now Prince of Orange, and husband to the Princeſſe Mary, the eldeſt daughter of Great Britain. But beſides their Eſtates there, they are poſſeſſed in this tract, of 1. Brannfels, which gives title to the firſt branch of the houſe of Solms. 2. Croneberg, the poſſeſſion of the ſecond branch of this Family; and 3 Solms, on the North ſide of the Lou, the root of both.

Of the Imperial Cities in this Confederation, the firſt is Friberg, called for diſtinction ſake, Friberg in Wederaw; to difference it from another Town of that name in Briſgow; ſituate in the middle of delicious and moſt fruitfull fields, and memorable for the ſtout reſiſtance which it made to Adolphus of Naſſaw, at that time Emperour: who when he could not get it by force, or famine, obtained it by fraud; and put to death no leſſe than 40 of the chief Nobility, whom he found in the Caſtle. So hated for that bloody fact, that he was ſhortly after deprived of the Empire, and ſlain in fight by Albert of Auſtria, his Competitor. The 2d. of the two is Witzelaer, ſeated on the Lou, where it meets with the Dille, which riſing near Dillenberg, a Town of the Earl of Naſſawes, doth here loſe its name into the greater. A Town Imperial, confederate with Friberg, and the Princes before mentioned, for maintaining their common liberties, and the Religion publickly profeſſed amongſt them; being that of the Reformed Churches of Calvins Platform.

FRANCONIA or FRANKENLAND, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Upper Palatinate, and part of Voitland; on the Weſt, with the Confederates of Wederaw, and part of the Rhene; on the North, with Haſſia and Thuringia; and on the South, with the Palatinate of the Rhene, and ſome part of Schwaben. So called from the French, Franci, or Francones, in whoſe poſſeſſion it was, when they were firſt known unto the Romans; the reſidence of their Dukes or Princes in this noble Province, appropriating the name unto it. Called alſo Francia Orientalis, to difference it from the Realm of France, which lay more towards the Weſt. At that time of a larger extent than it is at the preſent, comprehending ſo much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the ſame ſide of the Rhene; but ſubdued from it, and made a Province of it ſelf in theſe later Ages.

The Country on the out parts overgrown wholly in a manner with Woods and Foreſts, and environed almoſt with mountains, part of the old Hercinian Wolds; is within, pleaſant, plain, and fruitfull: ſufficiently plentifull both of corn and wines, but abundantly well ſtored with Rape and Licoras, and yeelding good paſture for Cattel. So that we may compare it to a fine piece of Cloth, wrought about with a coarſe Liſt; or an excellent fine piece of Lawn, with a canvaſe Selvrge.

Chief

Chief Rivers of it, are 1. The Main, or Mœnus, which running thorough the midst of it, is received into the Rhene below Frankfort. 2. The Sala, whence the adjoyning French had the name of Salii; and Conrade, Emperor of the Germans, the surname of Salicus. 3. Radiantis, 4. Sinna, 5. Tubero, 6. Æstus, &c. Franconia

The People of it are ingenious, patient of labour, strong of body, and very industrious, not suffering any to be idle that can earn his living, of what sort soever. The off-spring of the antient French, who having over-mastered Gaul, and the parts adjoyning, left here the seminary of their strength, and a stock of their antient Princes: Marcomir, brother of Pharamund the first King of the French, governing in these parts as Duke, and leaving the estate and title unto his posterity. The catalogue of which Princes, take in order thus:

The PRINCES of the FRANKS, and DUKES of FRANCONIA, of the old FRENCH Race.

A. Ch.

326 1 Genebaldus, the son of Dagobert, descended from the old Regal stock of the Sicambri, united with other Dutch nations about 60 or 70 years before, in the name of Frankes; having subdued those parts which lay towards the River Mœnus, became the first Prince of the Eastern Frankes, or Lord of Francia Orientalis.

356 2 Dagobert, the son of Genebaldus, who added the District of Triers unto his Estates.

377 3 Clodovæus, or Ludovicus, the son of Dagobert.

398 4 Marcomir, the son of Clodovæus, who extended his Dominion Eastwards towards Bavaria, and Bohemia.

402 5 Pharamund, or Waramund, the son of Marcomir, the first of this line which took unto himself the title of King of the French: on the assuming wherof, (aiming at matters of more importance) he left Franconia, or East France, with the Title of Duke, to his brother Marcomir.

419 6 Marcomir, the brother of Pharamund.

423 7 Prunmesser, by some called Priamus, the son of Marcomir.

435 8 Genebaldus II. the son of Prunmesser.

455 9 Sunno, the son of Genebald the second.

478 10 Clodomirus, or Luitomarus, the son of Sunno.

515 11 Hygobaldus, the son of Clodomir, who became a Christian, and added Wormes and Mentz unto his Estates.

541 12 Helenus, by some called Hermericus, a Christian also, who passing over the Rhene, subdued that tract bordering betwixt Triers and Lorrein, which the Dutch call Westerich.

571 13 Gotofridus, the son of Helenus, a Christian also, but not able to perswade his people to the same belief.

595 14 Genebaldus III. the son of Gotofrede.

615 15 Clodomir II. the son of Genebald the third.

638 16 Heribert, the Nephew of Clodomir the second.

668 17 Clodovæus, or Clovis II. the Cousin-german of Heribert.

680 18 Gosbertus, the son of Clovis the second.

706 19 Gosbertus II. the son of Gosbert the first.

720 20 Hetavus, the son of Gosbert the second, the last Duke of Franconia of this line: Who dying without issue male, Anno 740. bequeathed it at his death to Pepin, who afterwards was King of France, Father of Charls the great; according to a former contract made between those Princes. And Charls no sooner had it in his possession, but he bestowed the greatest part of it on Burchard the first Bishop of Wurtzburg, Anno 752. made Bishop of that City by Boniface, Arch-bishop of Mentz (the first Apostle of this People) but a year before. The Bishos of Wurtzburg by this grant were possessed hereof, as long as any of the house of Charls the Great did possess the Empire. But his posterity failing in the person of Conrade, Anno 910. Otho the first (who next but one succeeded Conrade) invested Conrade, husband to Luitgardis his daughter, with this Country; giving him withall the title of Duke of Francony. Four Princes of this house possessed it: that is to say, this Conrade surnamed Salicus; and after him three Henries, father, son, and nephew, successively enjoying the Imperial dignity, by the name of Henry the third, fourth, and fift. This Henry, the last Prince of the male line of Conrade, dying without issue, Franconia fell to Frederick Barbarossa, Duke of Schwaben, as next heir to Henry, by the Lady Agnes his sister, maried to Frederick the Antient, Duke of Schwaben, the grand-father of Barbarossa. But that house being also extinct in the person of Conradine, Anno 1268. and no one heir pretending to the rights therof; the Bishops of Wurtzburg challenged it on the former grant: content to let some great ones have a part of the spoil, that he and his successors might enjoy the rest. By means whereof it came to be divided betwixt the Bishops of Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Mentz, the Elector Palatine of the Rhene, (for antienly so much of the Palatinate and the Bishoprick of Mentz as lay on the Dutch side of the Rhene, were but parts of Frankenland) the Marquess of Onolsbach, the Earls of Swartzenberg, Henneberg, and Hohenloe, and as many of the Free or Imperial Cities as are seated in it. Thus every one did gather sticks when the great Oak fell: the title of Duke of Francony, remaining notwithstanding to the Bishops of Wurtzburg.

1. WURTZ-

Franconia.

1. WURTZBURG, the Metrypolis of Franconia, the ſeat and reſidence of the Biſhop, who is Titular, Duke hereof, is ſituate on the Mein, or Mœnus, in a pleaſant plain environed with Meadows, gardens, and fruitfull Mountains; and very well fenced with walls, trenches, bulwarks, and other Arts of modern fortification: well peopled, and for the moſt part handſomely and neatly built. Paſsing over the Bridge built of free ſtone on many large and ſpacious Arches, you come unto a fair and pompous (though antient) Caſtle; the ordinary dwelling of the Biſhop: and yet ſo ſtrong, that the many vain attempts of the Boores and Citizens, apt to pick quarrels with their Prince, made it thought impregnable; to which the ſituation of it on the top of a hill added ſome advantage, but it proved otherwiſe when beſieged by the King of Sweden, Anno 1631. who after a ſhort, but ſtout reſiſtance, took it by aſſault. Other towns of moſt note which belong to the Biſhops of Wurtzburg, are 2. Forchein, where it is ſaid that Pontius Pilate was born. 3. Gemand, at the meeting of the Mein and the Sal, or Sala. Bretta upon the Salz or Sala, not far from Gemand: remakable enough, if for nothing elſe, for being the birth-place of Melanchthon that renowned Schollar; the Phœnix of Germany as ſome call him and that not unfitly. 4. Chronac. 5 Stapheilſtein. 6. Hocſtad. of which little memorable.

But to return unto the Biſhop as chief Lord of all; he is called in the refined Latine of theſe times, Herbipolitanus, but commonly Wurtziburgenſis; differing in ſound, but not in ſence: For Wurtzburg is no other than a town of Worts, ſituate among plants and gardens, as before is ſaid; and Herbipolis, made up out of ſeveral languages, doth ſignifie no more than a City of Herbs. By whom the Epiſcopal See was here firſt erected, and how the Biſhops hereof came to be entituled unto their Eſtates, hath been ſhewn already. The manner how the new Biſhop is admitted, and the old interred, may be worth our knowledge. On the deceaſe of the former Biſhop, the Lord Elect attended with a great train of horſe is to make his entrance. Aſſoon as coming within the Gates, he alights off his horſe, and putteth off his robes, and being attired in a poor and deſpicable habit, begird about with a rope, bare-headed alſo, and bare-footed, he is conducted by the Earls of Henneberg, Caſtel Wortheim, and Reineck, to S. Saviours Church, being his Cathedral. The Dean and Canons there meeting him, ask him what he would have: to which he modeſtly replyeth, that though unworthy, he is come to diſchatge the office unto which he is called. Then the Dean thus, I admit thee in the name of this whole Chapter, committing to thy care this Church of Saint Saviours, and the Dukedome thereunto belonging, in the name of the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt. Which done he putteth on his Epiſcopal habit, ſayeth Maſs, and from thence paſſeth to the Caſtle, where he gives entertainment to all the Company. The living Biſhop thus inveſted, proceed we next unto the burial of the dead: whoſe body being imbowelled, is kept in the Chapel of his Caſtle, his heart preſerved in a veſſel of glaſs. The next day he is carried to the Monaſtery of Saint James, holding a Crozier Staffe in his right hand, and a ſword in his left; buried with which the next day after, in the Church of S. Saviour. As for the Revenues of the Biſhop, they muſt needs be great; the Biſhop heteof, in the time of Charls the fift, compounding for his peace with Albert, Marqueſs of Brandenbourg, at the price of 220000 Crowns in ready mony, and entring into a bond to pay all his debts, which amounted to 350000 Crowns more. By which we may partly gueſs at the richneſs of his Exchequer, and partly at the greatneſs of his Intrado.

2. The ſecond great Lord of Franconie is the Biſhop of BAMBERG, a City ſeated on the Mein, not far from Wurtzburg; the little River Regnite falling there into it: ſuppoſed by Mercator to be the Granionarium of Ptolemy, and to have took this new name from the hill Baba (ſo called from Baba, daughter of Otho Duke of Saxony, and wife of Albert once Earl hereof) upon which it is ſituate: the right name being Babemberg (remember that Berg in Dutch ſignifieth an Hill) and contractedly Bamberg. A City delectably ſeated amongſt mountains and pleaſant gardens, and in a ſoil exceeding fruitfull of all neceſſaries, and yielding Liquorice in great plenty: the birth-place of Joachimus Camerarius, one of the great lights of Germany, and a See Epiſcopal, the Biſhop of which is exempt from the power of the Metropolitan, ſubject immediatly to the Pope, and Lord of many fair towns and territories in this Country; but much diminiſhed ſince the time of Charls the fift: the Biſhop thereof then being, giving to Marqueſs Albert above mentioned, for a ceſſation from arms, Anno 1530. no leſs than 60 of his Lordſhips (moſt of which fall unto the ſhare of the Marqueſs of Onaldsbach) beſides the titulage or Guardianſhip of his Wards and Clyents. Of thoſe which are remaining in the hands of the Biſhops, the principal are 1. Gragingliac, 2. Schleiſtat.

3. The third great Lord to be conſidered is the Marqueſs of Onaldsbach, or Ansbach, who is Maſter of no ſmall part of this Country, but his Eſtate (as thoſe of the other German Princes,) confuſed and intermixed with his Neighbours. His chief Towns, 1. Onaldsbach or Ansbach, the uſual reſidence of theſe Marqueſſes, and the birth-place of moſt of their Children. 2. Hailbrun, on the edge of Wirtenberg; walled in about in the year 1085. and honored with ſome publick Schools there founded by Marqueſs George Frederick, Anno 1482. 3. Pleinfelt, not far from Nuremberg. Such places as they hold in Voiteland, we ſhall meet with there.

Theſe Marqueſſes are of the puiſſant family of Brandenbourg, by whom this fair eſtate was wreſted from the Female Heirs of Wolframius, the laſt Lord hereof. The firſt who did enjoy this Eſtate and Title was Marqueſs George Frederick, the Son of Albert Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenbourg, called the Achilles of Germany; the Father of Albert the firſt Duke of Pruſſia, and of George, the firſt Marqueſs of Jagendorf; and the Grandfather of that Marqueſs Albert, who in the daies of Charls the Fift ſo haraſſed this Country. But his Male-iſſue by Caſimir his eldeſt ſon, failing in that Albert, Anno 1557. it returned to the Electoral houſe: and by Sigiſmond, a late Elector, was given to Joachim Erneſtus, one of his younger Brethren, who by the Princes of the Union for defence of the Palatinate, was made chief Commander of their Forces, Anno 1620. A charge in which it was ſuppoſed poſed, that he carried himſelf neither ſo faithfully nor ſo valiantly, as he ſhould have done; being much condemned for ſuffering Spinola with his Army to paſs by unfought with, when he had all advantages that could be wiſhed for, to impede his march: the greateſt part of the Palatinate being loſt immediately upon that neglect; and by degrees the reſt of the United Provinces, either taken off from their engagement, or ruined for adhering to it with too great a conſtancie. To him ſucceeded his Son Chriſtian now poſſeſſed hereof. Franconia

As for the other ſecular Princes which have any conſiderable eſtates in this Country, they are the Earls of Henneberg, Hohenloe, Rheineck, Caſtell, Wortheim, Horpach, and Swartzenbourg, together with the Lords of Lemburg, and Rheichisberg: all of them named ſo from the chief Town of their Eſtates, and all thoſe Towns enriched with ſome ſuitable Territory. Of theſe the Earls of Henneberg, Rheineck, Caſtell, and Wortheim, are Homagers to the Biſhop of Wurtzburg, and are to do him ſervice at his Inthronization: the Earldome of Rheineck being now united to that of Hanow, as was ſhewn before; and that of Henneberg moſt famous, in that one of the Earls hereof was Father of that incredible increaſe of Children (as many as there be daies in the year) produced at one birth by the Lady Margaret his wife, ſiſter of William Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans. A Family of as great Antiquity as moſt in Germany, fetching their Pedegree as high as to Charls the Great, without help of the Heralds. But they of greateſt power and parentage amongſt them, are the Earls of SWARTZENBURG, deriving themſelves from one Witikindus, of the houſe of Saxony: who fighting for his Country againſt the French, Anno 779. was taken Priſoner, carried into France, and there baptized at the perſwaſion of Lewis the Godly, ſon of Charls the Great. Witikindus his Son and Succeſſor, being baptized at the ſame time alſo by the name of Charles, was the firſt Earl of Swartzenburg, a Caſtle of his own building on the edge of Turingia, Anno 796. whoſe poſterity do ſtill hold the ſame, but much improved in their Eſtates by mariages and other accrewments. A race of Princes which have yielded many of great influence in the affairs of Germany: amongſt them Gunther Earl of Schwartzenburg, elected Emperor of the Romans, againſt Charls the fourth, by Rodolph Elector Palatine, Ericus Duke of Saxony, Ludovick Marqueſs of Brandenburg, and Henry Archbiſhop of Mentz. By which laſt ſolemnly inaugurated at Aken (or Aquiſgrave) Anno 1349. But being unworthily poyſoned by his Competitor, though he died not of it, yet he was made ſo weak and unfit for action, that he was forced to ſurrender his pretenſions to his mortal enemy; receiving in compenſation for his charges 22000 marks in ſilver, and ſome Towns in Turingia.

Of the Imperial Cities, which ſhare amongſt them the remainders of Frankenlandt, the principal are 1. Frankford on the Meine, ſo called from its ſituation on the River Meine, to difference it from Frankford in the Country of Brandenburg. Divided by the River into two parts, joined together by a Bridge of ſtone; the leſſer part, ſituate on the right-hand ſhore of the River, being called Saxen-hauſen, the greater part, properly called Franck-ford, ſeated on the other. Both under one Magiſtrate, and both together making up a fair, rich, populous, and well-traded Town, of great both riches and repute, by reaſon of the famous Marts here held, in the miſt of Lent and September yearly; and the Election of the Emperor, or King of the Romans, as occaſion is. The City of a round form, compaſſed with a double wall, beautified with ſome walks without the Town on the banks of the River, amongſt Vineyards, meadows, and ſweet groves: called thus, as ſome ſay, from Francus the ſon of Marcomir, ſuppoſed to be the founder of it; or à Francorum vado, as the Ford of the Franks, before the building of the Bridge. 2. Schweinford, on the Meine alſo, in a fruitfull ſoil. 3. Rotenburg, on the River Tuber. 4. Winsheim. Here is alſo the Town of 5. Koburg, which belongeth to the houſe of Saxony, and gives title unto ſome of the younger Princes of it, called from hence Dukes of Saxen-koburg. And hereto may be added 6. the fair City of Nurenburg, conceived by moſt to be within the Upper Palatinate; but by the Emperor Maximilian made a member of the Circle of Franconie, in regard moſt of the Eſtates and poſſeſſions of it lye within this Country. Of which indeed they have ſo plentifull a ſhare, that when Maurice Elector of Saxony, and his confederates had driven Charls the fift out of Germany, Marqueſs Albert before mentioned (whoſe ſword was his beſt Revenue) picking a quarrel with this City, burnt no leſs than an hundred Villages belonging to it, 70 Mannors and Farm-houſes appertaining to the wealthier Citizens, 3000 Acres of their Woods; and after all this havock made of their eſtate, compelled them to compound with him for 200000 Cowns in Mony, and ſix pieces of Ordinance. But being the City it ſelf ſeems rather to belong to the other Palatinate, we ſhall there meet with it.

Amongſt theſe Prelates, Princes, and Imperial Cities is the great Dukedome of Franconia, at this time divided; the title ſtill remaining in the Biſhop of Wurtzburg, and ſome part of the Country: but both the Country and the title of Duke of Francony, not long ſince otherwiſe diſpoſed of. For the Swedes having taken Wurtzburg, Anno 1631. as before is ſaid, together with the City of Bamberg, and all the Towns and Territories appertaining to them; conferred them upon Bernard Duke of Saxon-Weymer, with the ſtile and title of Duke of Franconia. Inaugurated therein in the Cathedral Church of Wurtzburg, July 19. 1643. the Nobility and Gentry of the Country doing homage to him, and all the Magiſtrates and Officers of the ſeverall Cities taking the oaths of Allegiance; the new Duke alſo making Oath, that he would carefully maintain them in their rights and Privileges. In the ſolemnities of which day, the firſt great Gun diſcharged in the way of triumph, broke in the going off without any hurt done, but the wounding of one Souldier only. An omen that all this ſolemn Act would prove but a Pageant, and break in pieces at the firſt giving fire unto it. And ſo accordingly it did: the victory at Norligen, which followed not long after this, putting the Biſhop shops once more into their possessions; and leaving nothing to the new Duke, but an hungry title. And therefore leaving both the old and new titular Dukes, we will here adde the Catalogue of those who were Dukes indeed, and had, together with the Title, the full possession of the Country.

DUKES of FRANCONIA of the DUTCH or GERMAN RACE.

974 1 Conradus, surnamed Salicus, created Duke of Franconia by Otho the first, whose daughter Luitgardis he had married: after the death of Henry the second, elected Emperour, by the name of Conrade the second, Anno 1025.

1040 2 Henry, the son of Conrade, Duke of Franconia, and Emperour, by the name of Henry the third.

1056 3 Henry II. of Franconia, and IV. of the Empire.

1106 4 Henry III. of Franconia, and V of the Empire.

1125 5 Frederick (surnamed Barbarossa) Duke of Schwaben, Nephew of Frederick the Antient, Duke of Suevia, and of Agnes his wife, the sister and next heir of Henry; succeeded in the Empire after the death of Conrade the third, his Uncle, Anno 1153.

1190 6 Frederick II. the second son of Barbarossa, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben.

7 Conrade II. brother of Frederick the second, succeeded in both estates.

8 Philip, the younger brother of Conrade, succeeded in both Dukedoms after his decease; and on the death of Henry the sixth his eldest brother, was elected Emperour, Anno 1198.

1207 9 Frederick III. of Franconia, and the V. of Suevia, son of the Emperour Henry the sixth, whom he succeeded in the Kingdom of Naples, and Sicil, Anno 1202. and on the death of Otho the fourth, Anno 1212. was elected Emperour, of that name the second.

1250 10 Conrade III. of Franconia, the II. of Schwaben, and the IV. of the Empire, the son of Frederick the third, whom he succeeded in all his Titles and Estates.

1254 11 Conradine, son of Conrade the third, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben; dispossessed of his Kingdoms of Naples and Sicil by Manfred the Base brother of his father: and finally beheaded by Charles of Anjou, who succeeded Manfred in those Kingdoms, Anno 1268. After whose death this Royal house being quite extinguished; the Bishops of Wurtzburg did again resume the titles of Dukes of Franconia; content to let some of the greater Lords and Prelates which lived near unto him, to share in the possession of it, as before was noted.

The Arms of the antient Dukes of Franconia, before they were incorporated with the house of Schwaben, were Azure, a Lion Barry of eight peeces Argent and Gules, crowned Or, which, why it is new born by the Landgraves of Hassia, we shall tell you there.

11. WIRTENBERG, and 12. BADEN.

These I have joyned together, though distinct Estates, because both of them taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben; erected both about one time, and lying very close in a round together: bounded upon the East, and South, with the Schwabea properly so called; on the North, with the lower Palatinate; on the West, with the Rhene, and that part of Schwaben which is called Brisgow: parted asunder by the Mountainous ridge of hils called Schwartzwald; Wirtenberg lying on the East-side thereof, and Baden betwixt it and the Rhene.

And first for WIRTENBERG, the air thereof is very healthy, neither too hot in Summer, nor too cold in Winter: the soil near Swartzenwald lying on the West, and the Alpes of Suevia on the South, of it self barren and unprofitable; but in some places by the industry of the Ploughman, made to yeeld good corn. But in the middle parts thereof which lye towards the Neccar, little inferiour for fruitfullness both of corn and wine, unto any in Germany; besides some silver mines near Wiltberg; and about Puellach, a small Town, such abundance of brasse, that the Foundation of the houses seem to be laid upon it.

It took this name from the Castle of Wirtenberg, the first seat of the Princes of it; as that did from the Intuergi, inhabiting the Dutch side of the Rhene; or from the Virthungi, as Beatus Rhenanus thinketh, mentioned by Trebellius Gellio in the life of Aurelianus; to which the word Berg being added for a termination, made it first Tuergin-berg, or Virthun-berg, and after Wirtenberg.

Places of most importance in it, are 1. Stutgard, the Dukes seat, a fair, rich, and populous town, and the chief of the Dukedom; seated in a pleasant and fruitful Plain, not far from the Neccar, yielding a quantity of wine almost incredible. 2. Tubingen, on both sides of the Neccar, united into one with a fair stone Bridge. A Town well built, situate in a very rich soil, and finally adorned with an University here founded by Eberhard, the first Duke of Wirtenberg, Anno 1477. in which Leonardus Fuchsius, that great Herbalist and Restaurator of Physick, was once a Professor of tha Faculty. 3 Constat, upon the Neccar also, not far from which on the top of an hill, stands the old Castle of Wirtenberg, berg, before mentioned. 4. Wiberg, of great esteem for its Mines of silver. 5. Archingen, inhabited chiefly by Jews. 6. Schorndorf upon the Rheems, much resorted to by reason of the hot baths there; as is also 7. Newnburg, on the Entz. 8. Heidenheim, 9. Grieningen, 10. Marbach, of which little memorable. There are also within the limits of this Dukedom many Towns Imperial, as 1. Wimpsen, and 2. Haibrum on the Neccar. 3. Gepping, upon the river Vils. 4. Weil. 5. Reutling, on the Neccar also, made Imperial by Frederick the 2d. Anno 1240. otherwise of no great note but for the Paper mills. 6. Esling. Wirtenberg.

The first Inhabitants hereof, were the Charini of Ptolomy, and part of the Intuergi, spoken of before; made subject with the rest of these parts to the Almains, after to the French, and finally a member of the great Dukedom of Schwaben. From which dismembred in the time of Henry 4th. after the dangerous war raised against him by Duke Rodolphus, advanced by the practise of Pope Hildebrand to the Throne Imperial, it came to have Princes of its own: the first Earl being Conrade, in the year 1100. by the grace and favour of the said Emp. Henry. Increased by the addition of the Earldom of Montbelguard, and many other accrewments, it was made a Dukedom in the person of Eberhard the 6. by Maximilian the 1. Anno 1495. The Earls and Dukes whereof follow thus in order:

The EARLS and DUKES of WIRTENBERG.

1 Conrade the first Earl.
2 Ulric, son of Conrade.
3 John, son of Ulric.
4 Lewis, son of John.
5 Henry, son of Lewis.
6 Eberhard, son of Henry.
7 Ulric II. son of Eberhard.
8 Eberhard II. son of Ulric.
1325 9 Ulric III. son of Eberhard.
1344 10 Eberhard III. son of Ulric.
1394 11 Ulric IV. son of Eberhard.
12 Eberhard IV. son of Ulric.
1417 13 Eberhard V. son of Eberhard the 4th, by his mariage with Henrica, or Henriette, daughter of Henry Earl of Montbelguard, added that Earldom to his house.
1419 14 Lewis, or Ludovick II. son of Eberhard the 5th.
1456 15 Eberhard VI. son of Lewis, Founder of the University of Tubingen, created by Maximilian the 1st. the first Duke of Wirtenberg, Anno 1495. He deceased without issue, Anno 1496.
1496 16 Eberhard VII. son of Ulric, the younger brother of Lewis the 2d. succeeded on the death of Eberhard, his Cousin-German.
1504 17 Henry, the brother of Eberhard the 7th.
1519 18 Ulric V. son of Henry the 2d. expulsed out of his Dukedom by Charls the 5th. for the sack of Reutling an Imperial City; and his Estate conferred on Ferdinand of Austria, the brother of Charls: but after 15 years exile, restored to his Dukedom, by Philip Lantgrave of Hassia. He reformed Religion, and liberally endowed the Universitie of Tubingen. 31.
1550 19 Christopher, the son of Ulric the 5th. a follower of his Fathers steps in Reformation of the Church, and Advancement of Learning.
1568 20 Ludovick or Lewis III. son of Christopher,
21 Frederick, son of George Earl of Montbelguard, the brother of Ulric the 5th. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1597.
22 John Frederick, son of Frederick the first.
23 John Eberhard, eldest son of the former Duke, now living, Anno 1649.

The Revenues of this Duke are supposed to be equal unto those of the Electors Palatine, spoken of before; and were it not for the silver mines in Saxonie, little inferiour to those of that Duke. But for provisions of war, (excepting Powder only) he is meanly furnished. A main defect, considering the ill terms he stands in with the Imperial Cities, betwixt whom and the house of Wirtenberg, there have been always open wars, or secret jealousies.

His Arms are Or, 3 Attires of a Stag born Palie-barrie, Sable.

As for the Marquisate of BADEN, lying on the West side of Schwartzenwald, betwixt it and the Rhene, it is for the most part, except towards those Wolds, a very pleasant and fruitfull Country; and much of the same nature, with the rest of Wirtenberg; so called from Baden, a neat Town, where the Marquesse keeps his seat in Winter; and that so named from the hot Baths there, as is also Baden (called for distinction sake, the Upper Baden) amongst the Switzers; in which respect the City of Bath in Somersetshire had antiently the name of Caer-Baden also. Of these Baths it is supposed that there are in this City at least 300, profitable for many diseases and exulcerate sores, drawing a great resort of people from the neighbouring Countries. This is the chief Town of this Marquisate; from whence the Princes have the Title of Marquesses of Baden. The next to this is 2. Durlach, or Turlach, which gives Title to a second branch of this house; called also sometimes Marquesses of Durlach only, but commonly the Marquesses of Baden-Durlach. 3. Liebenzel, amongst the hills of Schwartzenwald, famous for hot medicinal Springs. 4. Lichtall, remarkable for a Monastery, the burial place of the first Marquesses. 5. Gerspach, in the very heart of that Mountainous tract. 6. Pfortheim, adjoyning to the Wood Hagenscheis, a branch of Schwartzenwald. 7. Retelen, 8 Badenwile, and 9. Susenburg, all seated in the Upper-Baden, being that part hereof which lies next to Brisgow. 10 Milberg, beautified with a fair Castle, the usual retiring place of these Princes in the heats of Summer.

Up-

Northgoia

This Marquisate being also taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, was founded in the person of Herman, of Verona in Italy, who deserving well of the Emperour Henry the 5th. was by him settled in some Lands about these parts, Anno 1120. and after marying with the daughter of an Earl of Baden, was by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa created the first Marquesse of Baden, Anno 1155. The Estate was after much increased by the addition of the Earldom of Hochberg, and the Appendixes thereof in Schwaben; into which Christopher the 13th. Marquesse hereof, succeeded on the death of his Couzin Philip, the last Earl of Hochberg; both Princes descending originally from two brothers: of which the eldest in right of the Lady Judith his wife, was Earl of Hochberg; the second by the favour of the said Frederick Barbarossa, was made Marquesse of Baden. They were Masters also of many fair Estates in the Lower Palatinate, which the Palatines of the Rhene (as was there said) are since possessed of. Other particulars shall be shewn (if occasion be) in the ensuing Catalogue of 1155 1 Herman, the first Marquesse.

2. Herman II.
3 Herman III.
4 Herman IV.
1281 5 Rodolph, son of Herman 4.
1295 6 Herman V. son of Rodolph.
7 Rodolph II. son of Herman the 5th.
1356 8 Frederick, son of Rodolph the 2d.
9 Rodolph III. son of Frederick.
1372 10 Barnard, son of Rodolph the 3d.
1431 11 James, son of Barnard.
1453 12 Charls, son of James; the first of these Marquesses which was possessed of the County of Spanheim in the Lower Palatinate, descending on this house by Matild wife of Rodolph the 2d.
1475 13 Christopher, son of Charls, who after the death of Philip, the last Marquesse of Hochberg, succeeded also in that estate.
1515 14 Barnard, son of Christopher, his brother Ernest succeeding in that of Hochberg.
15 Christopher II. son of Barnard, his elder brother Philibert, and Philip son of Philebert, dying in the life of Barnard.
16 Edward, son of Christopher, intending the sale of his Estates to pay his debts, was forcibly deprived of all by 17 Ernest, Marquesse of Hochberg, nephew of Ernest above mentioned; who by that means not only preserved the Marquisate of Baden, but united that of Hochberg again unto it; and removed his ordinary seat to Durlach.
18 George, brother of Ernest, Marquess of Baden and Hochberg.
19 Frederick, the son of George, born in the year 1594. succeeded his Father in both Estates; and (if living) hath a son called also Frederick, to enjoy them after his decease.

NORTHGOIA, or The UPPER PALATINATE

The Countrie of NORTHGOIA, so called from the Northern situation of it in regard of Bavaria, is sometimes also called the Palatinate of Bavaria, because antiently belonging to that Estate; but general Ober Psalts, or the Upper Palatinate, to difference it from the Lower. It is boumded on the East, with Bohemia; on the West, with Franconia, and part of Schwaben; on the North, with Voiteland; and on the South, with Bavaria. The Country for the most part somewhat rough and mountainous, rich principally in mines of iron, which it yeeldeth in most places, and some of silver about Amberg; extended from Haimbourg to the edge of Bohemia, 80 miles; and from the hill Felchtelberg in the edge of Voiteland, to Weisenberg near the banks of the Danow, 68 miles.

Observable things touching this Province, are chiefly two. First, that out of the mountain Felchtelberg, before mentioned, arise 4 Rivers running to the four quarters of the world; that is say the Eger towards the East, the Mein or Mœnus towards the West, the Sala or Saltza to the North, and the Nab Nabus to the South; so that it may be probably thought, to be the higest hill in all Germany. 2ly. That in the South west cotner of it are two little Rivers, the one called Almul, which falleth into the Danow; and the other Rednitz, which runs into the Mein, and finally into the Rhene: between the heads whereof, being not much distant, Charls the Great once began to dig a Chanel, for making a passage out of the Rhene into the Danow. In which work he employed many thousand men: but partly by excesse of rain, and partly by some strange affrightments (all which they did in the day, being undone in the night) he was fain to desist. Some parts of the intended water-course are to be seen near Wassenburg, spoken of before, which standeth in the middle way betwixt both Rivers.

Chief places of this Country which belong to the Electoral Familie, are 1. Amberg, on the River Vils, enriched chiefly by the commodity of iron digged out of the neighbouring hils; here fashioned into all sorts of Utensils, and hence conveyed in great abundance to the parts adjoyning; but prouder of its mines of silver than those veins of iron, affording to the Princes Coffers 60000 Crowns yearly. 2. Monheim, in the midst of a fruitfull valley, near a wood of Juniper. 3. Newburg upon the River Swartzach, which gives title to the second branch of the Palatine house, called the Count Palatines of Newburg, competitors with the Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg for the Dukedom of Cleveland. 4. Kelhaim, at the meeting of the Danow, with the River Almul. 5. Cham, on the edge of Bohemia, near the River Regen; which paſſing thence falleth into the Danow, near the City of Regensberg. 6. Caſtel, where the Electors for the moſt part hold their Reſidence, when they are in this Country. 7. Awerbach, 8. Saltsbach, 9. Welden, 10. Newmarckt. Northgoia

There are alſo in this Country ſome Towns belonging to the Lantgraves of Luchtenberg, one of the four old Lantgraves of the Empire; the other three being Duringen, Haſſia and Alſatia: ſo called from Lutchenberg an old Caſtle, ſituate on a lofty hill not far from Pfriemd, the chief Town and ordinary ſeat of theſe Lantgraves, ſeated on the River Nab. 2. Gronsfelden, 3. Schonkuffen, an ordinary paſs and baiting place, in the way from Prague to Nurenberg.

But the chief City of this Country, and perhaps of Germany, is Nurenberg it ſelf, Norimbega in the modern, but Noricum in the antient Latine. So called from an antient caſtle called Caſtrum Noricum, the ruines of which are ſtill remaining: encompaſſed with a deep but dry ditch, now of no uſe nor ornament to the City at all; but reverenced for its antiquity as the Mother of Nurenberg. The Caſtle ſaid by ſome to be built in the time of Claudius Ceſar. More probably by ſome of the Norici, who terrified with the invaſion of Attila, in the decline and wain of the Roman Empire, relinquiſhed Bavaria, where before they dwelt, and paſſed over the Danow, there to provide themſelves of a ſafer dwelling. Conquered by the Bavarians, it became, together with their Conquerours, ſubject to the French: in the time of Lewis the 3d. it became Imperial, and was walled and fortified during the reign of Charls the 4th. From that time it encreaſed ſo faſt both in wealth and beauty, that it is counted the greateſt and wealthieſt City in all this Continent, there being reckoned in it 11 ſtone bridges for paſſage over the River Pegnits, which runneth through it; 12 Conduits of freſh water; 13 common Baths, 116 publick Wels, and 128 Streets. Of figure ſquare, environed with a triple wall of 8 miles in circuit, and plentifully ſtored with all ſorts of Ammunition. The Marqueſſes of Brandenburg in former times were the Burgraves of it; at office of great power and juriſdiction; but ſold for a good ſum of mony by Frederick the 3d. Anno 1414. Albert his ſon attempting to recover the old office again, beſieged the Town, having no leſſe than 17 Princes on his ſide, and yet could not force it. That for an Argument of its ſtrength. A proof and evidence of the wealth of it we have ſeen before, in that great havock made of their Towns and Villages, and the great ranſom they were put to by another Albert, ſpoken of in Franconia. And it adds much unto the commendation of the people, that this great wealth is gotten by their indefatigable induſtrie; the Town being ſituate on a barren and ſandie ſoil, and deſtitute of thoſe helps which commonly a navigable River brings into a City: thoſe great poſſeſſions which belong to the State hereof, being gotten out of the fire, as the ſaying is, by their continual working of iron and other manufactures; occaſioning a reſort hither of Merchants from all parts of Germanie.

Other Towns of chief note within this Palatinate, are 1 Altorf, where the Nurenbergers founded an Univerſity for the ſtudy of all Arts and Sciences, Anno 1575. 2. Erſpruck, a great Town and well ſeated, belonging to the State of Nurenberg alſo. 3. Eiſted (Aichſtadium in the Latine) an Epiſcopal See, ſituate on the River Almul. 4. Waſſenburg, an Imperial City on the Borders of Schwaben. Here was alſo in this Province (if not ſtill remaining) the Town of Winsberg, memorable for the piety and gallantry of the women of it. For the Town being beſieged and diſtreſſed by the Emp. Conrade the 3d. for ſiding againſt him with the Guelfs then Dukes of Bavaria, no other conditions could be gotten at the ſurrendry of it, but that the women might have leave to depart in ſafety, and carry all their Jewels with them. Which being obtained, they took their husbands on their backs, and ſo left the Town: and by that noble act ſo moved the affections and compaſſion of the angry Prince, that he ſpared the Town, and gave them all a general pardon. It is ſaid by ſome, that the odious names of Guelfs and Gibelines (with which the peace of Chriſtendom was ſo long diſtracted) took their beginning at this ſiege: the firſt ſo called from Guelfo, brother of Henry the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, in whoſe cauſe they fought; the other from Veibling, (the French and Italians ſpeak it Gueibling) a Town of Frankenland, in which that Emperour was born. Another original hereof, we had in our deſcription of the State of Florence: but I take this to be the more probable of the two, though neither certain.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Nariſci of Tacitus. Afterwards ſome of the Norici fearfull or grown impatient of the Roman yoak, came over the Danubius to them, and built that famous Caſtle called Caſtrum Noricum, where now ſtands Nurenberg. Overpowred by the Boii, and uniting with them in the name of Boiarians, they followed the fortunes of Bavaria, till the year 1339. when Ludovick the Emperour and Duke of Bavaria, on the partition of the eſtate betwixt him and Rodolphus his eldeſt brother, relinquiſhed it for ever to the houſe of the Palatines. Returned for the preſent to the Dukes of Bavaria, on whom conferred, together with the Electoral dignity, by the Emperour Ferdmand the 2d. in recompenſe of the great ſervice don him by Maximilian the now Duke thereof, in the war of Bohemia; and the great charge he had been at, in the reduction of that Kingdom to the houſe of Auſtria. How long it will continue thus, is known only to God, the diſpoſer of all things. Yet neither the Bavarians formerly, nor the Palatines ſince, have been ſo fully Maſters of it, but that the Landgrave of Luchtenberg, and the City of Nurenberg, have put in for a ſhare.

The Arms of which great and puiſſant City are Azure, an Harpie diſplayed, crowned, crined, and armed, Or.

3. The KINGDOM of BOHEMIA.

The Kingdom of BOHEMIA, containing Bohemia it ſelf, with the incorporate Provinces, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Poland and Hungarie; on the Weſt, with the Upper Palatinate, Voiteland, and Miſnia; on the North, with the Marquiſate of Brandenberg, and ſome part of Miſnia; and on the South, with Auſtria, and Bavaria. It comprehends in it, beſides Bohemia it ſelf, the Marquiſate of Moravia, with the Dukedoms of Sileſia, and Luſatia.

1 BOHEMIA, encompaſſed about with woodie Mountains, part of the Hercynian, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Moravia; on the Weſt, with the Upper Palatinate, and Voiteland; on the North, with Miſnia, Luſatia, and ſome part of Sileſia; on the South, with parts of Bavaria, and Auſtria.

It took this name from the Bemi, or Boiemi, the old Inhabitants hereof. By Pomponius Mela called Bemi, with the Addition of Gens magna; by Tacitus they are called Boiemi, who makes them the Deſcendants of the Boii, a Gallick Nation, who to avoid the ſervitude which they feared from Rome, put themſelves into theſe Hercynian Deſerts, which from them was named Boio he mum; by which name it occurreth in Velleius Paterculus. And though the Marcomanni firſt, and the Sclaves and Croatians afterwards, became Maſters of it, theſe laſt continuing their poſſeſſion to this very day: yet it retaineth ſtill the name of Bohemia amongſt the Latines, as that of Bohemerland amongſt the Dutch.

It contains in compaſs about 550 Engliſh miles. The ſoil indifferently fruitfull, and enriched with mines of all ſorts, except of gold. Tinne they have here in good plenty, the mines whereof were firſt found out by a Corniſh-man, baniſhed out of England, Anno 1240. which diſcovery of Tinne in theſe parts, was, as ſaith my Author, in magnam jacturam Richardi Comitis Cornubiæ, (he meaneth that Richard which was afterwards King of the Romans:) and no marvail, for in thoſe times there was no Tinne in all Europe, but in England. Wood they have here good ſtore; and in ſome of their Foreſts a Beaſt called Lomie, which hath hanging under its neck a bladder full of ſcalding water; with which, when ſhe is hunted, ſhe ſo tortureth the Dogs, that ſhe eaſily eſcapeth them. Of corn they have ſufficient for their own uſe, and ſometimes alſo an increaſe above their ſpending, wherewith they do ſupply their neighbours of the Upper Palatinate: but they want wine, the Air here being too ſharp and peircing to produce a good Vintage. And it yields alſo ſtore of Saffron, no where to be bettered; with plenty of medicinable drugs.

The principal Rivers hereof, are 1. the Elb, or Albis, having here its ſpring; of whoſe courſe we have ſpoken elſewhere. 2. Egra, 3. the Muldaw, or Muldavius, and 4. the Warts; all three exonerating themſelves into the Elb, which runneth through the midſt of the Country.

The Kingdom is not (as others) divided into Counties, and Provinces; but into the Territories and poſſeſſions of ſeveral Lords; who have great authority and command over their Vaſſals. The figure of the whole in a manner Circular, the Diameter whereof reacheth every way ſome 200 miles: containing in that compaſs 700 Cities, walled Towns, and Caſtles; and (as ſome ſay) 30000 Villages. Inhabited by a people given to drink and gluttony; and yet valiant, and with ſenſe of honour: this laſt belonging to the Nobility, and Gentry; the former to the common people; but more moderately than moſt others of the German Nations. All of them, Princes or Plebians, rich, poor, noble, and baſe, uſe the Sclavonian language, as their mother tongue.

The chief Bohemian Captain that ever I read of, was Ziſca; who in eleven battels fought in the defence of the Huſſites, againſt the Pope and his confederates, prevailed, and went away victorious: inſomuch, that at his death he willed the Bohemians to flea him, and make a drumm of his skin; perſwading himſelf, if they ſo did, they could never be overcome. A fancy like to that of Scipio African, and Vortimer, King of Britain, ſpoken of before. Scholars of moſt note, John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, two eminent Divines, of whom more anon.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt here preached by S. Methodius, the firſt Biſhop and Apoſtle of the Moravians, (whom ſome call Borſinous) Anno 900. or thereabouts: Borzivoius, the 8th Duke from Crocus, being the firſt Chriſtian Prince; and next to him, Wenceſlaus the ſecond. This laſt moſt cruelly murdered by Boleſlaus, his brother, at the inſtigation of Drahomira, an obſtinate Heathen, mother to them both: who having cauſed the Miniſters of the Lord to be butchered, and their bodies to lie unburied for two years together, was ſwallowed, coach and all, in that very place where their bodies lay. Confirmed by this prodigy, they continued conſtant in the Faith to this very day; though not without the intermixture of ſome notable vanity. For one Picardus coming out of the Low-countries, drew a great ſort of men and women unto him, pretending to bring them to the ſame ſtate of perfection, that Adam was in before his fall; from whence they were called Picards and Adamites. They had no reſpect unto mariage; yet could they not accompany any women, until the man coming to Adam, ſaid unto him, Father Adam, I am inflamed towards this woman; and Adam made anſwer, Increaſe and multiply. They lived in an Iſland which they called Paradiſe, and went ſtark naked; but they continued not long: for Ziſca hearing of them, entred their fools Paradiſe, and put them all to the ſword, Anno 1416. But to make amends for this folly, they were exceeding zealous of the Reformation. For much about the ſame time, the works of Wickliff were brought into Bohemia, by a certain ſcholar who had been Student in the Univerſity of Oxford, which happning into the hands of John Huſſe and Hierom of Praque, two men whereof the Country doth much boaſt, wrought in their hearts a deſire to reform the Church. A buſineſs which they proſecuted ſo earneſtly, that being ſummoned to the Council of Conſtance, they were there condemned for Hereticks, and burned, Anno 1414. yet had their doctrine ſuch deep root in the hearts of the people, that it could never be deſtroyed by the Tyrannies of war, or perſecution (though both were uſed) to this very day; multitudes of the Profeſſors of it living in this Kingdom under the names of Caliſtini, and Sub utraque, as before is ſaid; but much both ſtrengthned and increaſed by the writings of Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, and ſuch other of the Proteſtant Doctors, as travelled in the work of Reformation. But this increaſe of ſtrength and number proved their greateſt weakening. For growing inſolent upon the ſenſe of their ſtrength and power, they formed themſelves into a party, got many of the Romiſh-Catholicks to adhere unto them under colour of aſſerting their Civil rights, and in the heat of ſome diſputes, cauſed certain of the Emperors Counſel to be thrown out of the windows of the Counſel-chamber; and finally about the later end of the reign and Empire of Matthias, they brake out into open Arms. In the courſe whereof, the Calvinians being of moſt power, and having got a King of their own opinions, ſo diſobliged the Lutherans, and more moderate Papiſts, who had concurred with them at the firſt: that being invaded on the one ſide by a Lutheran Army under the command of the Duke of Saxonie, and a Popiſh Army on the other by the Duke of Bavaria, they were, in fine, utterly ſuppreſt, and made inconſiderable: the conquering and ſucceſsful Emperor (Ferdinand the 2d.) taking this occaſion, to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion out of his Dominions.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1. Budweis, (conceived to be the Marobodurum of Ptolomy) a town towards Auſtria. 2. Auguſt, near the head of the Elb. 3 Tabor, a ſtrong Town built by Ziſca, to be a retreat for the Huſſites. 4. Jaromir, and 5. Molmuck, both upon the Elb. 6. Littomiſſel, an Epiſcopal See, bordering on Moravia. 7. Pulſen, the laſt town of this Kingdom which yielded to the prevailing Imperialiſts, in the late long war about that Crown: and then alſo betrayed to Count Tilly for a ſum of money, by ſome of the Souldiers of Count Mansfield, who was then abſent, and had ſo long defended it againſt the Enemy. 8. Elbogen, much eſteemed for the hot medicinable Bathes; ſituate on the River Egra. 9. Egra, ſo called of the ſame River, on which (neer to the borders of the Upper Palatinate) it is ſtrongly ſituate: a large fair City, containing three miles in compaſs. Imperial once, but ſold by the Emperour Ludovicus Bavarus, to John, King of Bohemia, for 400000 marks of Silver: in compaſs leſs, for ſweetneſs of the place, elegancy of the buildings, pleaſantneſs of ſite, and richneſs of ſoil, ſuperiour farre to Prague it ſelf. 10. Prague, the Metropolis of the Kingdom; ſituate in the middeſt thereof, on the River Muldaw: conſiſting of four ſeveral Towns, each of which hath its ſeveral Cuſtoms, Lawes, and Magiſtrates. The principal is called the Old Town, adorned with many goodly buildings, a ſpacious Market-place, and a ſtately Counſel-houſe: the ſecond called the New Town, ſeparated from the Old, by a Ditch of great depth, and wideneſſe. The third, called the Little Town, is divided from the Old, by the River Muldaw, joyned to it by a beautiful Bridge, conſiſting of 24 Arches. And in this part thereof is the hill Rachine; on the ſides of which are many fair and ſtately houſes belonging to the Nobility, over-looked by the ſtrong Caſtle of S. Wenceslaus (ſituate on the top thereof) a magnificent Palace, wherein the Bohemian Kings, and the later Emperors, have kept their Reſidence. The fourth town is that of the Jews, who have here five Synagogues, and live according to their own Law. The whole City rather large than fair, the ſtreets being in winter very dirty, of ill ſmell in the ſummer; the buildings for the moſt part of clay and timber, clapt up together without Art, and of little beauty. And though incompaſſed with walls and Ditches, it is conceived to be but an open town (ſo poor and weak are the defences) inſomuch, that whoſoever is maſter of the Field, will be maſter of the City alſo. And yet beſides the honour of being the Royal Seat; it hath alſo of long time been an Archbiſhops See; and by Charls the fourth, Emperor and King of Bohemia, made an Univerſity. Neer unto this Town was fought that memorable battel, between the Duke of Bavaria, and Count Bucquoy, Lieutenant for the Emperor Ferdinand the ſecond, with 50000 men on the one ſide; and Frederick newly elected King of Bohemia, with the Prince of Anhalt, the Count of Thurne, and 30000 men, on the other ſide. It was fought on the eighth of November, ſtylo novo, wherein (ſuch was the unſearchable will of God) the victory fell unto the Imperials: the young Prince of Anhalt, Thurn, and Saxon-Weimar, with divers others, being taken priſoners; the Bohemian Ordnance all ſurpriſed, Prague forced to yield unto the Victor, and King Frederick with the Queen, compelled to flie unto Sileſia. A moſt lamentable and unfortunate loſs, not to this people only, but to the whole cauſe of the Reformed Religion. Yet it is not unworthy of our obſervation, that this great battel was fought upon a Sunday, the 8th. of November, about the time of the morning Prayer: in the Goſpel appointed for which day (being then the 23. after Trinity Sunday) is that famous paſſage, Reddite CÆSARI, quæ ſunt CÆSARIS, i. e. Render unto Cæſar, the things which are Cæſars; which ſeemed to judge the quarrel on the Emperors ſide.

But whether of the two Prerendents had the juſter Cauſe, may beſt be ſeen by canvaſſing the Records of that State and Nation (for the ſucceſs of War is no ſtanding Rule for meaſuring the equity, and juſtice of the cauſes of it:) by which it will be clearly ſeen, that ſince the erecting of this Kingdom by the Sclaves or Croatians, it hath been evermore diſpoſed at the will of the Emperour, or by election of the States, and People. But I intend not at the preſent to diſpute that point, but only lay down the ſtory of the Kings and People, as in other places; ſince the firſt coming of the Sclavi. A Nation not known by that name till the time of Juſtinian; at what time they inhabited on the banks of the Iſter; but on the further ſide thereof, oppoſite to Illyricum and Thrace, imperial Provinces. Grown famous by their good ſucceſſes againſt that Empire, their name was taken up by the reſt of the Sarmatians of Europe; who either wanting room, or not liking of their colder Countries, paſſed on more Weſtwards: and by degrees poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe parts of Germany, which formerly had been inhabited by the Almans, Burgundians, and Boiarians; but were then either quite forsaken, or but ill inhabited, by the drawing down of those people to the Roman Provinces, which they better liked. Divided at, or after their coming thus far west, into four main bodies; that is to say, the Winithi, possessed of the (now) Marquisates of Brandeubourg, Misnia, and Lusatia, as also of the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania; the Moravians, inhabiting in Moravia, the Lower Austria, and the Upper Hungary; the Poles, possessed of Poland, and the Dukedom of Silesia; and finally, the Bohemian Sclaves, confined within the limits of that Kingdom only. Under what form of Government they lived at their first coming hither, is not certainly known. But being setled in these Countries of Poland, and Bohemia, it was not long before they were erected into several Kingdoms: occasioned by the coming of a new body of Sclaves, Croatians, and others of those scattered Nations, under the conduct of Zechius, a great Prince amongst them; who about the year 640. together with his brother Leches, was banished Croatia for a murther. And being very acceptable to the Sclaves of Bohemia, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own Original extraction, one of the same Language, Laws, or Customs that themselves were of; they admitted him to be their Chief, or supreme Governour, by whatsoever name he was called at first: in honour and memory of whom, the Bohemians in their own language, do call themselves Zechians. After his death, the State relapsed again into a confused Anarchie, till the year 670. at what time not respecting the Progeny of Zechius, the founder of their Commonwealth, and first estate, they fastned upon Crocus, a man of good esteem amongst them, and elected him to be their Duke. Crocus vir justus, & magnæ apud Bohemos opinionis Princeps electus est, as Bertholdus telleth us. Crocus being dead, the Bohemians elected Libussa, his youngest daughter; and of her government soon wearied, they made choice of Primislaus for their Prince, and made him husband to Libussa. A man taken from the Plough (as their stories tell us) to espouse the Princess: it being ordered and agreed on by her many Suiters, that he (whosoever he was) before whom an horse purposely let loose, did first make a stand, should be the Husband of the Lady, and have the government of the State. The Horse first makes a stand before Primislaus, being then at plough (having perhaps some Mare in his Teem;) and he accordingly is received and admitted their Prince. These with the other Dukes from the time of Crocus, the first Legislator of the Bohemians, take in order thus.

The DUKES of BOHEMIA.

1 Crocus, the Law-giver or Lycurgus of Bohemia.
2 Libussa, youngest daughter to Crocus, with Primislaus her husband, (a second Quinctius) Founder of Prague.
3 Neramislaus, son of Primislaus and Libussa.
4 Mnatha, one of the sons of Neramislaus; Co-temporary with Charls the Great.
5 Voricius, son of Mnatha.
6 Wenceslaus.
7 Bela.
8 Nastricius, son of Bela.
9 Bozzivoius, the first Christian Prince of the Bohemians; Co-temporary with the Emperor Arnulph.
10 Sbitignæus, sonne to Bozzivoius.
11 Uladislaus, brother to Sbitignæus.
12 Wenceslaus II. surnamed the Saint, slain by his brother Boleslaus.
13 Boleslaus, a wicked and ungodly Prince.
14 Boleslaus II. son of the former, a great advancer of Christianity amongst his people.
15 Boleslaus III. one of the sons of Boleslaus the second.
16 Jaromir, son to Boleslaus the third.
17 Udalricus, brother of Boleslaus the third, and Uncle of Jaromir.
18 Predislaus, son to Udalricus.
19 Sbitignæus II. son to Predislaus.
1061 20 Vratislaus, brother of Sbitignæus, whom for his manifold deserts, the Emperour Henry the 4th. created the first King of Bohemia, Anno 1086. whose Successors take thus out of Bertholdus and Dubravius.

The KINGS and DUKES of BOHEMIA.

A. Ch.
1086 1 Uratislaus, the brother of Sbitignæus, Duke of Bohemia, was by Henry the 4th at Metz created King.
2 Conrade, brother to Uratislaus, notwithstanding that his brother had three sons, was elected Duke of Bohemia.
3 Brecislaus, son to Uratislaus, the two sons of Conrade being rejected, is by the Bohemians chosen Duke.
1100 4 Borivorius, the 4th son of Brecislaus, is chosen by the Bohemians; his eldest brothers then all living.
1109 5 Sutopulcus, Cousin-German to Borivorius, by the consent and favour of the people, deposed Borivorius, and caused himself to be elected in his place.

6 Uladislaus

6 Vladislaus II. brother to Borivorius, preferred by the people to the throne, before Otho the brother, and Henry the son of Sutopulcus, the last Prince.

7 Sobeslaus, brother to Vladislaus, promoted to the State before the Son of Vladislaus.

1159 8 Vladislaus III. son to Vdislaus the 2d. (the four sons of Sobeslaus omitted) is chosen and crowned the second King of Bohemia, by Frederick the Emperor; but deposed by the States, because he was not by them formally elected, according to their privileges, and customes.

9 Vldericus, the third son of Sobeslaus, his elder brethren yet living, was by the people elected in the room of Vdislaus, and his son Frederick, whom the Emperor Frederick had by force established in the throne.

10 Sobeslaus II. second son to Sobeslaus, was by Frederick above named expelled; and he also by the Bohemians.

11 Conrade, Grandchild to Otho the brother of Sutopulcus, elected by the Bohemians in place of Frederick; between which two Princes there was continual war.

12 Wenceslaus, Unkle unto Conrade, and son of Otho aforesaid, was preferred before many nearer the succession. Him Primislaus expelled, but fearing his return, quitted Prague.

13 Henry, Bishop of Prague, a stranger to the bloud, was by a general consent elected Duke.

14 Vladislaus IV. brother to Primislaus the son of Wenceslaus, being but by, succeeded Henry; and soon after resigned.

1199 15 Primislaus, elected by the Bohemians, and by the Emperor Philip, crowned the 3d. King of Bohemia, at Mentz, was brother to Vladislaus the 4.

1248 16 Ottocarus, notwithstanding that Wenceslaus his elder brother had been Crowned in his Fathers life time, was acknowledged King. He was slain in battel by Rodolphus the Emperor, near Marckh a River of Moravia, Anno 1278.

1278 17 Wenceslaus II. son to Ottocarus.

1284 18 Wenceslaus III. son to Wenceslaus the 2d. the last of the Bohemian Princes of the masculine race.

1304 19 Rodolphus, son to the Emperor Albertus, is by the potency of his Father, and the election of the States, seated on the Throne; being otherwise a Stranger to the blood-royal of Bohemia.

1305 20 Henry, Duke of Carinthia, the son of Meinard, Earl of Tirol, and husband to Anne the second daughter of Wenceslaus the 2d. is chosen by the Bohemians: but being weary of his Government, they elect John Earl of Luxenbourg. Finally, Henry was murdered by one of his Nephews.

1311 21 John, Earl of Luxenbourg, son to Henry the 7th Emperor, and husband to Elizabeth youngest daughter to Wenceslaus the 2d. is elected; the Lady Anne yet living.

1346 22 Charls, son to Iohn, and Emperor of that name the 4th. the Author of the Golden Bull.

1362 23 Wenceslaus the IV. Emperor also, in whose time the troubles of the Hussites, and the valour of Zisca was famous.

1418 24 Sigismund, brother to Wenceslaus, maketh himself King by force; and at his death commendeth Albertus, Duke of Austria, the husband of his daughter Elizabeth, unto the States of the Kingdome.

1437 25 Albertus, Duke of Anstria, elected upon the commendation of Sigismund, by the Bohemian Lords.

1440 26 Ladislaus, son to Albert, who being the brother of two sisters, commended yet one George Pogibrachius unto the States, as fittest to succeed him.

1458 27 George Pogibrachius, neither by affinity or consanguinity of the blood, succeeded. And he, though he had three sons, yet for the benefit of his Country, advised the Nobles, after his death, to elect their King from Poland.

1471 28 Ladislaus II. son to Casimire King of Poland, and to Elizabeth, the younger daughter of Albert Duke of Austria, the issue of Anne the elder sister still living; elected King of Bohemia.

1516 19 Ludovicus, son to Ladislaus, elected and crowned by the means of his Father, then living; King of Hungary also.

1526 30 Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, brother to Charles the 5th. and husband to Anne sister to Ludovicus, by his letters reversal, acknowledged that he was chosen King of Bohemia, not of any right, but of meer free-will, according to the liberties of that Kingdome.

1565 31 Maximilian, eldest son of Ferdinand, was in his Fathers life time, and at his sute, elected King, Anno 1540. into which he actually succeeded on his Fathers death.

1575 32 Rodolphus, Emperor of Germany, and the eldest son to Maximilian, elected King.

1608 33 Matthias, brother of Rodolphus, was at the joint sute of them both, nominated and appointed King of Bohemia, by the generall consent of the States, during his Brothers life time, Anno viz. 1608. which nomination they both protest in their letters reversal, should not be to the prejudice of the liberties and antient customs of that Kingdom.

1618 34 Ferdinand II. Archduke of Austria, and of the house of Gratz, was by Matthias adopted for his son, and declared successor to the Crown of Bohemia, but never formally and legally elected: for which cause amongst others, he was by the States rejected, in like case as Vladislaus the 3d. had formerly been.

Moravia 1619 35 Frederick, Elector Palatine, the ſtrongſt German Prince of the Calviniſts, and moſt potent by his great alliances; was elected King of Bohemia, and crowned at Prague, together with his wife, on the fifth day of November. This Prince derived his deſcent from the Lady Sophia, ſiſter to Ladiſlaus the 2d. King of Poland and Bohemia; and married Elizabeth, daughter to James King of great Britain, and Anne of Denmark; which Anne deſcended from the Lady Anne, daughter of Albertus of Auſtria, and elder ſiſter to Elizabeth, mother to Ladiſlaus the 2d. above named; from whom the claim of Auſtria is derived.

1621 35 Ferdinand III. ſon of Ferdinand the 2. elected King of Bohemia, during the life both of his Father, and of Frederick the Prince Elector alſo; after whoſe death he ſucceeded in this Kingdome both in right and fact: King of Hungary alſo, Archduke of Auſtria, and Emperor of Germany, now living, Anno 1648. more moderate in his Counſels than his Father Ferdinand, and more inclinable to peace; (though honored with a more ſignal victory againſt the Swedes, in the battel of Norlingen, than his Father was in all his life;) which the Concluſions made at Munſter are ſufficient proof of.

Of the Revenues, Arms, and other things which concern this Kingdome, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we have took a view of the reſt of the Provinces which are incorporated into it.

2. MORAVIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Hungary; on the Weſt, with Bohemia; on the North, with Sileſia; and on the South, with the lower Auſtria, and the river Teia: fenced on the Weſt by the, Woods and Mountains of Bohemia, parts of the Hercynian, Forreſt; on the North, by ſome ſpurs or branches of it, called Aſciburgius by Ptolemy; on the two other ſides open like an half moon, or ſemi-circle. The moſt fruitfull place of corn in all Germany, and hath no ſmall ſtore of Frankincenſe; which, contrary to the nature of it, groweth not on a tree, but out of the earth: and that too (which addes much to the miracle, if Dubravius do report it rightly) in the ſhape and figure of thoſe parts, which men and women do moſt endeavour to conceal.

The former Inhabitants of this Province were the Marcomanni, and part of the Quadi, againſt whom, when M. Antoninus the Emperor made war, he had unawares run himſelf into ſuch a ſtraight, that his army was environed with Mountains one way, and enemies the other. To this (as calamities ſeldome go alone) was added the extraordinary heat and drought then being. To the Emperor thus put to his plunges, came the Captain of his Guard, telling him, that he had in his army a legion of Chriſtians (Melitens he calleth them) which by prayer to their own God could obtain any thing. The Emperor ſendeth for them, deſiring them to make ſupplication for the Army; which they did, and God almighty that never turneth a deaf ear to the prayers of his ſervants, when they are either for his glory, the Churches, or their own good; ſcattered and vanquiſhed the Quadi, with thunder ſhot and artillery from heaven; and refreſhed the faint and dying Romans with many a gentle and pleaſant ſhowre. This miracle purchaſed to that legion the ſurname of κεραυνοφόλος, i. e. the thunderer; and induced the Emperor to honor men of that holy profeſſion, and to make an end of the fourth perſecution, A. Ch. 174. Thus Xiphilinus hath it in his Dion; which comming from the pen of an Heathen, as his Author was, is of more credit in a matter of ſuch concernment unto Chriſtianity, than if it had proceeded from Socrates, Sozomen, or any other Eccleſiaſtical Writer.

Places of moſt note herein, are 1. Olmunts, on the River Marck (or Mora) the chief town of the Country, and a ſmall Univerſity; near which, out of the hill Odenberg bordering on Sileſia, ſpringeth the great river of Odera, whoſe courſe we have before preſcribed. 2. Brinn, on the river Schwats, the ſeat of the antient Marqueſſes. 3. Radiſch, and 4. Cremſer, both upon the Marck or Mora. 5. Swaim, on the Teia; 6. Niclasberg; (Mons Nicolai in the Latine) bordering on the Lower Auſtria. 7. Iglaw, 8. Newburg, 9. Weiskorchem, 10. Boſerlitz, of which little memorable. 11. Gradiſco, near to which (and to this place only) the Frankincenſe is found to grow in the ſhape and form before mentioned.

The old Inhabitants hereof (as before is ſaid) were the Marcomanni and the Quadi; after them that Tribe or Nation of the Sclaves, who from their habitation on the river Mora, called themſelves Moravians, and the Country which they dwelt in by the name of Moravia (the Dutch call it Merheren.) Extended at that time over all the Lower Auſtria, to the banks of the Danow on the South, and as far as to the River Tibiſcus (over-ſpreading a great part of the Upper Hungary) towards the Eaſt. Governed at the firſt by their own Kings, the firſt, whoſe name occurs, being Raſtai, in the time of the Emperor Lewis the Godly; by whom taken Priſoner, and his Realm made Tributary to the Empire. After him ſucceeded Harmodurus, and then Suantopulcus, in whoſe time the Moravians and other Nations of the Sclaves, received the Goſpel, by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius two Grecian Doctors: officiating all divine ſervices in the Sclavonian, or vulgar Language. For which when they made ſute to the Pope then being, to whoſe authority (as a part of the Weſtern Empire) they were made obnoxious, and that the Pope and Cardinals delaid the buſineſs; a voice was heard, as if it had come from Heaven, ſaying theſe words, Omnis Spiritus laudet dominum, et omnis Lingua confiteatur ei. Upon which miracle their ſute was granted at the laſt, and a Letter Decretal ſent unto that effect from Pope Iohn the 8th. to Suentopulcus (or Sfentopulcher as ſome call him) above mentioned. A privilege by them enjoyed full 200 years, and then reverſed by Gregory 7th. commonly called Pope Hildebrand, in his letters to Vratiſlaus the firſt King of Bohemia, Anno 1086.

But to return unto the ſtory, Suantobegius ſon to Suantopulcus, ſucceeded next, depoſed, or rather beaten out of his Country, by the Emperor Arnulph, for denying the accuſtomed tribute. A prince of great ſpirit, and of as great command; having at one time under him, not Moravia only, according to the largeſt limits, but Sileſia, Bohemia, and Polonia alſo. Arnulph not able otherwiſe to effect this purpoſe, called in the Hungarians (though at that time Pagans) by whoſe help the Moravian was ſubdued, and his Kingdome ſhattered into pieces: ſeiſed on by the Hungarians, Poles, and other Nations; and finally reduced to the preſent limits. Afterwards it was made a Marquiſate, (but by whom we find not) one of the Marqueſſes hereof being Iodocus Barbatus, elected Emperor Anno 1410. After whoſe death, Sigiſmund his next heir, Emperor and King of Bohemia, gave it to his ſon-in-law Albert Duke of Auſtria, Anno 1417: who in the end ſucceeded him in all his Eſtates, ſince which time it hath alwaies gone along with the Crown of Bohemia. Sil ſia and Luſatia.

The Arms of the old Dukes or Princes of it, were Azure, an Eagle chequered Or and Gules, membred and langued of the ſame.

2. SILESIA, (or SCHLESI, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the Eaſt, with Poland; on the Weſt, with Luſatia; on the North, with Brandenbourg; and on the South, with Moravia. Wholly encompaſſed with Mountains, except towards the North; which lets in a ſharp air upon them: the midland part being full of Woods, but withall of Mineralls.

Chief Cities are Jagendorfe, or Jegerndorfe, of late the Patrimony of John Georgius of the Family of Brandenbourg, commonly called the Marqueſs of Jagendorfe. The Lands and Eſtates in his poſſeſſion, firſt given by Ladiſlaus King of Bohemia, to George ſurnamed Pius, one of the Sons of Frederick of Brandenbourg, the firſt Marqueſs of Anſpach of this houſe, for the many good ſervices he had done him. But his poſterity being extinct, they fell to the ſaid Iohn Georgius, brother to Sigiſmund the Elector: proſcribed by Ferdinand the ſecond, for adhering to the party of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine: A Prince of great note and activeneſs, in the beginning of the late German and Bohemian wars. 2. Munſterberg, which gives the title of Duke to the poſterity of George Pogebraccio, once King of Bohemia, advanced by him unto this honor and a fair Eſtate. 3. Glatz or Gletz, the laſt town of Bohemia, which held out for Frederick the Elector, againſt that Emperor. 4. Glogaw, a ſtrong town on the River Odera. 5. Nieſſe, on a River ſo named, an Epiſcopal See. 6. Breſlaw, in Latine Uratiſlavia, ſo called from Uratiſlaus, the founder of it; once one of the Dukes of this Province, by whoſe procurement it was made an Epiſcopal See, Anno 970. or thereabouts. It is ſituate on the River Odera, all the water wherein could not ſave it from being burnt down to the ground, Anno 1341. but it was preſently re-edified with fair Free ſtone, and is now one of the prettieſt Cities (for the bigneſs of it) in all Germany: fair, populous, and well contrived, with open and even ſtreets; the chief of the Country. 7. Oppolen, on the Odera alſo, well fortified both by Art and Nature, barricadoed by the River on the Weſt, and on the Eaſt with good out-works, ſtrong walls, and a fair Caſtle. 8. Straten. 9. Reichenbach, both made towns of war, ſince the beginning of the Bohemian troubles.

There are alſo within this Province the two Seigneuries of Prignitz, and Croſſen, ſo called from the chief Towns thereof, belonging to the Elector of Brandenbourg; the two Dukedomes of Oſwitz, and Zator, appertaining to the Crown of Poland; as alſo the Dukedome of Lignitz, and Sueinits, all of them bearing the names of their principal Towns; of which two laſt, Sueinits is in the immediate poſſeſſion of the Kings of Bohemia; and Lignitz hath a Duke of its own, but an Homager and Tributary of that King.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Marſigni, Burii, Gothini, and ſome part of the Quadi. In the partition of the Eaſtern parts of Germany amongſt the Sclaves, laid unto the Dukedome or Kingdome of Poland; continuing part thereof till the time of Vdaliſlaus the ſecond: who being driven out of his Kingdome, by his brethren, was by the mediation of Frederick Barbaroſſa, eſtated in this Country, to be held under the Soveraignty of the Kings of Poland. Divided betwixt his three ſons, and afterwards ſubdivided amongſt their poſterities, according to the ill cuſtome of Germany, it became broke at laſt into fourteen Dukedomes, of 1 Breſlaw, 2 Oppolen, 3 Ratibor, 4 Ceſſin, 5 Bethom, 6 Glogaw, 7 Segan, 8 Olents, 9 Steinaw, 10 Falkenbourg, 11 Sueinits, 12. Lignitz, 13 Oſwits, and 14 Zator. Of all which only the two laſt do remain to Poland; the five firſt being made ſubject to the Kings of Bohemia, by Wenceſlaus the ſecond; the five next, by King Iohn of Luxembourg; Lignitz remaining in the poſſeſsion of a Proprietary Duke (as before was ſaid) and Sweinits given to Charls the fourth Emperor and King of Bohemia, by the Will and Teſtament of Boleſlaus the laſt Duke: all Schleſi by this means, (except the Dukedomes of Oſwitz and Zator) being added to the Crown of Bohemia: of which it is rather an incorporate, than a ſubject Province.

4. LUSATIA, by the Dutch called Lauſnitz, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Sileſia; on the Weſt, with Miſnia; on the North, with Brandenbourg; and on the South, with Bohemia. The Country rough and full of Woods, yet plentifull enough of corn, and of ſuch fruits, as naturally ariſe out of the earth: ſo populous and thick ſet with people, that though it be but a little Province, it is able to arm 20000 Foot, as good as any in Germany. Moſt commonly it is divided into the Higher, and the Lower; the firſt confining on Bohemia, the laſt on Brandenbourg.

Places of moſt note in the higher Lauſnitz, are 1 Bautſen, (Badiſſinum the Latines call it) the firſt Town attempted and taken in by the Duke of Saxony, when he took upon him the execution of the Emperors Bann, againſt Frederick Elector Palatine, then newly choſen King of Bohemia: The poor Prince in the mean time in all ill condition, the Saxon being the head of the Lutheran; and the Bavarian chief of the Popiſh party, arming both againſt him. So jealous are both ſides of the active and reſtleſs Calvinian ſpirit; as to leave no means unaſſaied for the ſuppreſſing of it. Seated it is upon the Spre.

Brandenburg.

Spre, and for the moſt part is the ſeat of the Governor, for the King of Bohemia. 2. Gorlitz, upon the River Niſſe, which gave the title of Duke to Iohn, brother of Sigiſmund Emperor and King of Bohemia; and Father of Elizabeth the laſt Dutches of Luxembourg, before it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Burgundy. A fine neat Town, well frequented, and ſtrongly fortified: founded about the year 1131. and not long after ſo conſumed by a mercileſs fire, Anno 1301. ut ne unica domus remanſerit, as my Author hath it, that there was not one houſe left of the old foundation. But it was preſently re-built in a more beautifull form, and more ſtrong materialls, than before it was; both publick, and private buildings, very neat and elegant. 3. Zittaw, on the ſame River, bordering on Bohemia. 4. Lauben, 5. Lubben, 6. Camitz, of which little memorable: but that together with the former they make up thoſe ſix towns which are confederate together in a ſtricter league, for their mutuall defence and preſervation; but under the protection, and with the approbation, of the Kings of Bohemia. Then in the LOWER Luſatia there is 7. Sprenberg, ſo named from its ſituation on the River Spre, which runneth through the whole Country; and in antient times was called Sucvus; ſuppoſed by ſome (and not improbably) either to give name to the Suevians, or to take it from them; that potent Nation, inhabiting originally betwixt this and the Elb. 6 Trabell, upon the Niſſe. Cotthuſe upon the Spre, or Suevus; which together with ſome parts of the Lower Luſatia belongs unto the Marqueſſes of Brandenbourg.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof are by ſome ſuppoſed (and but ſuppoſed) to be the Senones of Tacitus; in the partition of theſe parts of Germany amongſt the Sclaves, made ſubject to the Winithi, or Venedi, the greateſt and moſt ſpreading Nation of all theſe People. When, and by whom firſt made a Marquiſate, I am not able to ſay for certain, but ſure I am, it hath been very much given to the change of Maſters. It had firſt a Marqueſs of its own. Conrade the Marqueſs hereof, who dyed in the year 1156. being by the Emperor Henry the fift made Marqueſs of Miſnia, added it unto that Eſtate: remaining for ſome time united to it. After, being ſeized on by the Poles, it was ſold to Frederick the ſecond, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenbourg: who keeping Cotthouſe and ſome other towns bordering next upon him, in his own poſſeſsion, ſurrendred the reſt on compoſition, to George King of Bohemia; claiming it from a Grant made by Henry the fourth to Vratiſlaus the firſt Bohemian King, anno 87. A grant on which no poſſeſsion followed, unleſs it were the Homage and acknowledgment of the Princes of it; holding it afterwards of that Crown, as the Lord in chief.

Thus have we brought theſe four Provinces into the power and poſſeſsion of the Kings of Bohemia: remaining ſtill diſtinct in their Laws, and Governments (as ſeveral limbs of the great body of the Sclaves, made up into one Eſtate) though joined together in the perſon of one ſupreme Governor: who is ſeverally admitted and acknowledged by each Province diſtinctly, for it ſelf; and not by any one of them, in the name of the reſt. Out of all which ſo laid together, there may be raiſed the ſum of three millions of Crowns yearly, for the Kings Revenues; towards the defrayment of all charges.

The Arms of this Kingdome are Mars, a Lion with a forked tail, Luna, crowned Sol. Which Arms were firſt given by Frederick Barbaroſſa to Vladiſlaus the third, made by him King of Bohemia, in regard of the good ſervice he had done him at the ſiege of Millain. And though Vladiſlaus was depoſed by the States of that Kingdome, becauſe never formally and legally elected by them; yet his ſucceſſors keep thoſe Arms to this very day.

14 BRANDENBOVRG.

The Marquiſate of BRANDENBOVRG, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Kingdome of Poland; on the Weſt, with the Dukedome of Saxony; on the North, with Pomerania, and parts of Mecklenbourg; and on the South, with Miſnia, Luſatia, and Sileſia. So called from Brandenbourg the chief town of it, and becauſe once the Marches of the Empire againſt the Sclaves: divided afterwards into the Old, the New, and the middle Marches; according as they were extended further towards Poland, by little and little as the Emperors were able to get ground of thoſe potent people.

The Country containeth in length from Eaſt, to Weſt, 60 Dutch or 240 Italian miles, and is of correſpondent breadth; the whole compaſs making up 540 miles of the laſt accompt. Within which tract are comprehended 55 Cities or walled Towns, 80 Towns of trade, (Mark-ſtecken, or Market-Towns, as they commonly call them:) 38 Caſtles or Manſion-houſes of Noblemen, 17 Monaſteries, and 10 Parks well ſtored with beaſts of game: the Country otherwiſe (conſidering the extent thereof) but thinly inhabited; nor well provided of neceſſaries, excepting corn, of which theſe North-Eaſt Countries afford very great plenty.

1. ALTE MARK or the OLD MARK, ſo called becauſe the antient Marches of the Empire, againſt the Sclaves, lyeth betwixt Lawenbourg and the Elb; with which it is bounded on the Eaſt. Chief Towns thereof. 1. Tangermond, on the Elb, where it receives the River Tonagra or Angra, honoured ſometimes with the Reſidence of Charls the fourth. 2. Stendall, the chief of theſe Old Marches. 3. Soltwedel, divided into two Towns, the old and the new. 4. Gurdeleben, fortified with the ſtrong Caſtle of Eiſhimpe. 5. Oſterberg. 6. Senhunſen, ſaid by ſome, but falſely, to be ſo called from the Senones whom they would make the old Inhabitants of this Country (by all good Writers made to be originally a Gallick Nation,) 7. Werb, of which little memorable

In the MIDDLE-MARCHES or UPPER MARCH, lying betwixt the Elb and the River Odera, the Towns of moſt note are 1 Butzaw, a Commendatory of the Templers in former times. 2 Spandaw upon the Spre, a well fortified piece. 3 Oderburg, called ſo from that River, on which it is ſit uate: remarkable for a ſtrong Caſtle built by Marqueſſe Albert the ſecond, at which all paſſengers by water are to pay their Toll. 4. Brandenbourg, on the River Havel, a Biſhops See, the Seat of the Lords Marchers in former times, taking name from hence. By ſome ſaid to be built by Brennus, Captain of the Gaules, more truly by one Brando a Prince of the Franconians, Anno Ch. 140. 5. Frankefort (for diſtinction ſake named) ad Oderam, on which River ſituate; the ſoil about it being ſo plentifully ſtored with Corn and Wines, that it is not eaſie to affirm whether Bacchus or Ceres be moſt enamoured of it. It was made an Univerſity by Marqueſs Joachim, Anno 1506. and is alſo a flouriſhing and famous Emporie, though not comparable to that of the other Franckefort, ſeated on the Mein. 6. Berlin, the ordinary Reſidence of the Marqueſs, ſituate on the River Spre, (or Suevus) which riſing in Luſatia falleth into the Albis. 7. Havelbourg, on the River Havel, a Biſhops See, who acknowledgeth the Archbiſhop of Magdebourg for his Metropolitan. Brandenbourg.

3. In the NEWMARCK, extending from Odera, to the borders of Poland; and called ſo, becauſe laſt conquered, and added to the account of the German Empire; there is Cuſtrine, a very ſtrong and defenſible Town, ſeated on the two Rivers Warta and Odera; fortified with great charge by John, ſon of Marqueſs Joachim, and by him intended for his ſeat. 2. Sunnerberg; and 3. Landsberg, both upon the Wart. 4. Soldin, in former times the chief of this Marck. 5. Berlinch, or New Berlin: and 6. Falkenberg, a ſtrong Town, and fortified with as ſtrong a Caſtle towards Pomerania.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country, were the Varini and Naithones, part of the great Nation of the Suevians: and after them, the Helvoldi, Wilini, Beirani, and other Tribes of the Winithi, the greateſt nation of the Sclaves, who poſſeſſed themſelves of it. But Brandenbourg being won from them by the Emperour Henry the firſt, Anno 920. (at what time the Goſpel was firſt preached amongſt them) the Country hereabouts was given by him to Sigifride, Earl of Ringelheim (eldeſt ſon of Theodorick, the ſecond Earl of Oldenburg) a valiant Gentleman, with the title of Marqueſs, or Lord Marcher, Anno 927. conditioned that he ſhould defend thoſe Marches (the old Marck, as they now call it) againſt the Sclaves. Theſe Marqueſſes at the firſt Officiary, at the appointment of the Emperour, and to him accomptable. Sigard the fourth from Sigefride, governing here for Otho the third, was the firſt Elector of theſe Marqueſſes, and Eudo the ſecond of that name, and third from Sigard, the laſt that held this honour at the Emperours pleaſure; that dignity after his deceaſe being made Hereditary, in the perſon of Albert of Anhalt, ſurnamed Urſus, by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa. Which Albert having very much enlarged his border, by the conqueſt and extermination of the Sclaves; cauſed their unpeopled Country to be planted with new Dutch Colonies, out of Holland, Zealand, Flanders, and thoſe parts of the Netherlands. The houſe of this Albert being extinct in John the fourth, it was given by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, to Lewis his ſon; by Otho, the brother of that Lewis, ſold for 200000 Ducats unto Charls the fourth; by Sigiſmund the ſon of Charls, to Iodocus, Marqueſſe of Moravia: but afterwards being redeemed again, it was by the ſaid Sigiſmund conferred on Frederick Burgrave of Nurenberg, in recompenſe of his faithfull ſervice in the wars of Hungary and Bohemia. In his poſterity it remaineth, but much increaſed in power and patrimony, by the additions of the Dukedom of Pruſſia, Cleve, Gulick, and Berg, the Marquiſates of Anſpach, and Iagendorfe; the Earldom of Marck in Weſtphalen, now a part of Cleveland; the Lordſhips of Prignits, and Croſſen, in Sileſia; the Towns of Hoff, and Colmebach, in Voiteland; with the County of Rapin, and the Town and Territory of Cothus in the Lower Alſatia. Inſomuch that this is now the moſt powerfull Family in all Germany. The Marqueſſes hereof from Sigifride to Albert, the ſon of Urſe, &c. follow in this order.

The MARQUESSES of BRANDENBOURG.

A. Ch.

927 1 Sigifride, Earl of Ringelheim, made the firſt Marqueſſe of this border, by the Emperour Henry the firſt.
2 Gero, by the appointment of Otho the firſt.
3 Bruno, Earl of Within, created Marqueſſe hereof by the ſame Emperour.
4 Hugh, the ſon of Bruno, by the favour of Otho the third.
5 Sigard, the brother of Hugh, made by the ſame Emperour, the firſt Marqueſſe Elector.
6 Theodorick, the ſon of Sigard, outed of his command by Miſtivoius, one of the Princes of the Sclaves, named Obotriti.
7 Udo, Earl of Soltwedel (the Sclaves being beaten and expulſed) created Marqueſſe and Elector, by Conrade the ſecond, 8 Udo II. ſon of Udo the firſt, proſcribed by Henry the fourth, for joyning with Rodulph Duke of Schwaben in the war againſt him.
9 Primiſlaus, King of the Obotriti (the Anceſtor of the Dukes of Mecklinbourg) advanced unto theſe honours by the ſaid Henry the fourth, and by him held unto his death. After which made hereditary by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, in the perſon of Albert of Anhalt, the ſon of Urſus.
1152 10 Albert of Anhalt, the firſt Hereditary Marqueſſe; father of Barnard, who was created Elector and Duke of Saxony, in the place of Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa.
11 Otho, ſon of Albert.
12 Otho II. ſon of Otho the firſt.

13 Albert

Brandenbourg.

13 Albert II. brother of Otho the 2d.
14 John, ſon of Albert the 2d.
15 John II. ſon of John the firſt.
16 Conrade, brother of John the 2d.
17 John III. ſon of Conrade.
18 Waldemar, brother of John the 3d.
19 Waldemar II. Nephew of Waldemar the firſt, by his brother Henry.
20 John IV. brother of Waldemar the ſecond, the laſt Marqueſs of the houſe of Anhalt; the Marquiſate eſcheating to the Empire, for want of heirs.
21 Lewis of Bavaria, created Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenbourg, by his father the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, on the ſaid eſcheat.
22 Lewis II. ſurnamed the Roman, on the reſignation of his brother, ſucceeds in the Marquiſate, and Electoral dignity.
23 Otho, brother to Lewis the firſt and ſecond, who ſold the Marquiſate and Electoral dignity to Charles the fourth.
24 Wenceſlaus, ſon of Charls the fourth, afterwards King of Bohemia, and Emperour of the Romans.
25 Sigiſmund, brother of Wenceſlaus, Emperour of the Romans, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Earl of Luxenbourg; who ſold this Marquiſate to Iodocus, Marqueſs of Moravia, and having afterwards redeemed it, conferred the ſame on 1417 26 Frederick Burgrave of Nurenberg, ſolemnly inveſted herein at the Council of Conſtance, Anno 1414. for which inveſtiture he paid unto the Emperour the ſum of 400000 Crowns.
1440 27 Frederick II. ſon of Frederick the firſt, to whom the Emperour Frederick the 3d. gave the Dukedom of Pomeren.
1470 28 Albert, brother of Frederick the 2d, called the Achilles of Germany, relinquiſhed to Bugeſlaus the 10th. the poſſeſſion of Pomeren; but his Succeſſors ever ſince have retained the Title, and kept on foot their pretenſions to it. From Frederick his ſecond ſon, deſcended Albert, the firſt Duke of Pruſſia, Frederick the firſt Marqueſſe of Auſpach, George the firſt Marqueſs of Jagendorf, and Albert called the Alcibiades of Germany, who ſo haraſſed Franconia in the days of Charls the fifth.
1486 29 John, ſon of Albert.
1499 30 Joachim, ſon of John, who founded the Univerſity of Frankford, Anno 1506. and authorized the Reformation of Religion in his time begun.
1535 31 Joachim II. ſon of Joachim the firſt.
1571 32 John George, ſon of Joachim the 2d.
33 Joachim Frederick, ſon of John George.
34 John Sigiſmund, ſon of Joachim Frederick, who had to wife the Lady Anne, daughter of Albert Frederick, the ſecond Duke of Pruſſia, and of Mary Eleanor his wife, eldeſt daughter of William the firſt, Duke of Cleve, Gulick, &c.
1620 35 George William, ſon of John Sigiſmund, and the Lady Anne, claiming in her right, the Dukedoms of Cleve, Gulick, and Berg, the Earldoms of Marck, and Ravenſpurg, and the ſeigneurie of Ravenſtein; which he poſſeſſed a while, divided with his Couſin Volfgangus Palatine of Newburg, ſon of Magdalen the younger ſiſter of Mary Eleanor. But falling out about their partage, the Palatine of Newburg, called in the Spaniard; and the Father of this Marqueſs in behalf of his Son, called in the Confederate States of the Netherlands to aſſert their titles. After the death of Bugeslaus the laſt Duke of Pomerania, he was to have ſucceeded alſo in that eſtate, then poſſeſſed by the Swede. Of the agreement made between them, and the great accrewment thereby following to the houſe of Brandenbourg, we ſhall ſpeak more there.
36 Frederick William, ſon of George William, now Elector of Brandenbourg.

The Religion of this Country is for the moſt part according to the form and doctrine of Luther: firſt introduced and authorized by Marqueſs Joachim the firſt. In which eſtate it continued till the breach betwixt George William, the Father of the preſent Elector, and the Palatine of Newburg. At which time the Palatine having maried a daughrer of Bavaria, the moſt potent Prince of the Popiſh party, reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome, the better to aſſure himſelf of the aid of Spain: and this Elector having maried a ſiſter of Frederick the fifth, Elector Palatine, the moſt potent Prince of the Calvinians, declared himſelf to be of that that party and opinion, the better to aſſure himſelf of the aids of Holland, Anno 1614. But when, on the perſwaſions of his wife, he ſet out an edict for ſuppreſſing the Lutheran forms, and authorizing the Calvinian only throughout his Dominions, (which was the year 1615) the people of this Marquiſate roſe in Arms againſt him: the difference being thus compoſed, that the Lutheran formes only ſhould be uſed in all the Churches of the Marquiſate of Brandenbourg, for the contentation of the people; and the Marqueſs have the exerciſe of his new Religion, for himſelf, his Lady, and thoſe of their opinion, in his private Chapels.

The Territories of this Family are the greateſt, as before is ſaid, of any in Germany; but a great part of it is very barren, and his ſubjects in thoſe parts as poor as the Country: much of his new acceſſions yeelding little but the titles only. So that neither in Revenue or Power, he is able to keep rank with the the Duke of Saxony: his ordinary Revenue hardly amounting at the utmoſt to 200000 l. per annum, which is but half of the receipts of the Duke of Saxony. Pomerania.

The Arms hereof are Argent, an Eagle Gules, membred and beaked Or.

15. POMERANIA.

POMERANIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Pruſſia, from which parted by the River Weſel, or Viſtula; on the Weſt, with Mecklenburg, divided from it by the River Bartze; on the North, with the Baltick Sea, extended on the Coaſt hereof for the ſpace of 200 Engliſh miles; and on the South, with the Marquiſate of Brandenbourg. So named from the Pomortzi, or Pomerani, a nation of the Sclaves, to whoſe ſhare it fell; or from the ſituation of it on the Sea ſhore, as the word in the Sclavonian doth ſeem to import.

The Country is for the moſt part plain, abundantly fruitfull in Corn, carried hence to Dantzig, and tranſported thence to all parts of Chriſtendom, in their times of ſcarcity: yeelding alſo good ſtore of paſturage, and great herds of Cattel; with plenty of butter, cheeſe, honey, and ſome reaſonable quantities of flax. Populous, and thoſe people of ſtrong conſtitution, as living under a ſharp and peircing air. The whole divided into the Continent, and the Ilands; the Continent into the Upper Pomeren, bordering upon Mecklenburg, extended from the Bartze, to the River Odera; the Lower, reaching from the Odera, to the borders of Pruſſia.

Chief places in the UPPER, are 1. Barth, at the mouth of the River Bartze, taking name from thence; a well-traded Town, and many times the ſeat of the Dukes of this hithermoſt Pomeren. 2. Wolgaſt, upon the Baltick Sea, over againſt the Iſle of Uſedom, the chief of this part of Pomeren, from whence the Dukes hereof are called the Dukes of Pomeren-Wolgaſt: the firſt Town taken in by Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, in his famous war for relief of Germany, Anno 1630. 3. Straelſund, a Town of great Trading, and much reſort, ſeated upon the ſame Sea alſo, oppoſite to the Iſle of Rugen; a Town of great name in the courſe of the German wars. 4. Griſpswald, on the ſame Sea, betwixt Wolgaſt, and Straelſund, made an Univerſity, Anno 1456. 5. Anclaw, upon the River Pone. 6. Tribſca, ſituate on a lake, out of which the ſaid River hath its courſe.

Then in the LOWER Pomeren, there is Camin, an Epiſcopal See, ſituate on the Baltick ſhore, over againſt the Iſle of Wollin. 8. Colberg, a ſtrong Town on the ſame ſhore alſo, at the fall of the Perſant into the Sea. 9. Coſtin, the laſt Sea-Town of this tract, lying towards Pruſſia. 10. Stargard, on the Ina, more within the land, as is alſo 11 Griffenberg upon the Roga, and 12 Stetin, on the Odera, once a poor fiſher-Town, now the Metropolis of this part of the Country; riſing to this greatneſſe (after the embracing of Chriſtianity) by the fall of Wineta, formerly the chief Mart-Town of all theſe parts. The ordinary ſeat of the Dukes of the Lower Pomerania, the Dukes of Pomeren Steten, as for diſtinction ſake they are uſed to call them.

The Ilands hereunto pertaining, are thoſe of Rugen, Wollin, Uſedom, touched upon before; but now more punctually to be handled. That of moſt note is RUGEN, over againſt Straelſund, from which divided only by a narrow ſtrait, in length ſeven Dutch miles, and as much in breadth; ſo that the compaſſe of it, if it were exactly round, would amount to 20 German, or an hundred Italian miles; and yet once bigger than it is. But in the year 1309. by the force of an outragious tempeſt, a great part of it lying towards the South-eaſt, as far as to the Iſle of Budon (then conjunct hereto) was torn away, and ſunk ſo deep into the bottom of the Sea, that now the greateſt ſhips that be ſail over it. The Iland plentifull of Corn, the Granary of Straelſund, as they call it commonly; and reaſonably well ſtored with Cattel; full of Bayes, Creeks, and winding ſhores, with many and vaſt Promentories thruſting into the Sea, which gives them great increaſe of fiſhing; Antiently it belonged to the Crown of Denmark, till given by Waldemar the third, to Bugislaus, and Barnimus, Dukes of Pomeren; continuing ever ſince part of that eſtate. The chief Town of it is called Berga, ſituate in the midſt of the Iland, but not containing above 400 Families; others of leſſe note and eſtimation, being, 2. Sugart, 3. Vick, 4. Bingſt, &c. ſmall Towns compared with Villages upon the Continent, but the beſt they have. And yet ſo populous is the Iland, that they are able to arm 7000 good fighting men, if there be occaſion.

The ſecond of the three, in repute and bigneſſe, is that of Wollin, ſituate over againſt Camin: ſo called from Wollin, the chief Town (Julinum it is called in Latine) made an Epiſcopal See by Wartislaus, the firſt Chriſtian Prince of this nation, and on the ſackage of this City removed to Camin. A Town which once ſo flouriſhed in Traffick, that it gave place to none but Conſtantinople; The Ruſſians, Danes, Saxons, Vandales, &c. having here their particular ſtreets. But being miſerably ſacked by Waldemar, King of Danemark, Anno 1170. moſt of the trade hereof was removed to Lubeck, ſince which time it never could come near its former glories. The laſt in reputation is that of USEDOM, ſeated betwixt both, not far from Wolgaſt; ſo called from Uſedom, the chief Town in it, of which little obſervable. All three the habitation of the antient Rugii, who under Odoacer, King of the Heruli, ſubverted the Weſtern Empire, conquered Italy, and made themſelves maſters of it, till ſubdued by the Gothes. Thoſe which remained in theſe Ilands became after ſubject to the Sclaves, and had once Kings of their own: the firſt whoſe name occurs in ſtory, being Crito, the ſon of Ratze, a puiſſant Prince, extending his Dominions into Holſt, Ditmarſh, and the City of Lubeck, which he built, about the year 1100. afterwards beautified and inlarged by Adolph the ſecond, Earl of Holſt, by ſome eſteemed the Founder of it. But his iſſue male failing in the year 1326. it fell by compact made between Pomerania. them, to the Dukes of Pomeren, to whom these Islands ever since have continued subject.

And as for Pomeren it self, the old Inhabitants thereof were part of the Rugii before mentioned, the Reudigni, Longi-navi, and Longi-Diduni, with parts of the Heruli and Burgundians: into whose void rooms, the Pomortzi and other Tribes of the Winithi, (the most potent Nation of the Sclaves) did in fine succeed; extending their Dominions to the banks of the Vistula, which to difference it from Pomeren, was called Pomerella. But that part of it being given by Mestovinus the last Prince thereof, dying without issue, Anno 1295. to Primislaus Duke of Poland: the name and power of the Princes or Dukes of Pomerania, became confined within the bounds before laid down. The first Prince of it whom we meet with on good record, was one Barnimus, of the noble Gryphonian Family, an. 933. whose Grandson Suantiborus, commanded over all this tract. But his Dominions being parted betwixt his sons, Bugislaus who had Pomerella, retained the language and old customs of the Sclavonians; Wartislaus, who possessed the residue, conformed himself to the Laws and Language of the Saxons; the Countrey by that means accounted for a part of Germany: added unto the Empire and accompt thereof in the time of Frederick Barbarossa, by whom Bugislaus and Casimir, sons of Wartislaus, were made Princes of the Empire, and Dukes of Pomeren. The Estate being afterwards divided betwixt Bugislaus and Otho, sons of Barnimus the first; and the house of Otho failing in the person of Otho the third, that part hereof was given by the Emperour Frederick the third, to Frederick the second, Marquesse and Elector of Brandenbourg: the cause of much contention amongst these Marquesses, and the other house of the Dukes of Pomeren, but thus agreed upon at last; that both Princes should continue the Arms and title, the possession of it to be yielded to the Duke of Pomeren, on the failing of whose issue male, it should descend upon the heirs of the house of Brandenbourg. The succession of these Princes followeth in this order.

The DUKES of POMERANIA.

1 Wirtislaus, the first Christian Prince of the Pomeranians, baptized by Otho Bishop of Bamberg, Anno 1124.

1128 2 Bugislaus, son of Wartislaus, created by Frederick Barbarossa the first Duke of Pomeren.

1188 3 Bugislaus II. son of Bugislaus, planted the void parts of Pomeren with Saxon Colonies.

1222 4 Barnimus, son of Bugislaus the second, after whose death Pomeren was divided into two Principalities.

DUKES of Wolgast.

1277 5 Bugislaus II. son of Barnimus.
1319 6 Wartislaus, son to Bugislaus.
1326 7 Barnimus II.
1365 8 Wartislaus II.
1394 9 Barnimus III.
1405 10 Wartislaus III.
1456 11 Ericus, son of Wartislaus.
12 Bugislaus III. commonly called the tenth, the younger Princes of both houses making up the tale, succeeded Otho the third in that part of Pomeren, uniting so the whole into one estate.
1523 13 George, son of Bugislaus the tenth.
1531 14 Philip, son of George, in whose time the Reformation made by Luther was admitted into Pomerania.
1583 15 Bugislaus IV. but the 13th. in the Dutch accompt, son of Philip; his younger brother Ernestus Ludovicus having that of Stetin for his share.
16 Bugislaus V. and 14th. son of Bugislaus the fourth, born in the year 1580. succeeded in Pomeren of Wolgast; as Philip Julius son of Ernestus Ludovicus did in that of Stetin. After whose death Bogislaus became Lord of all Pomerania; in a fair way to have lost all to the prevailing Imperialists, had not the timely coming in of the King of Sweden stopped their violent Progress. But Bogislaus dying without issue in the time of the war, and in him the male issue of the house of Bugislaus the tenth being quite extinguished, George William Marquess and Elector of Brandenbourg put in his claim for the Estate; according to the compact and agreement spoken of before. Betwixt whom and the Swedes, (who under colour of aiding the last Duke, had possessed themselves of all the strong places in the Countrey) it was accorded and concluded at the Treaty of Munster, that all the Higher Pomerania, with the Isles of Rugen, and Wollin, and the town of Stetin, should from thenceforth belong to the Crown of Sweden; the Lower Pomeren to be enjoyed by the house of Brandenbourg, so long as the male issue lasteth; on default whereof, that also to be added unto that Crown; the Arms, and Titles, to be used by both promiscuously. And in regard the Marquess of Brandenbourg was to part with the Upper Pomeren, for the contentation of the Swedes, (without which no firm peace could be made in Germany:) it was also there agreed upon, that the temporal estates of the Bishopricks of Halberstad, Minden, and Camine, together with that of Magdeburg, (after the decease of the present Bishop) should be for ever added to the possessions of that house; the Marquesses and Electors of it to be thenceforth entituled Dukes of Magdeburg, Princes of Halberstad, and Minden. But what will be the DUKES of Stetin.

1277 1 Otho, Duke of Pomeren-Stetin.
1345 2 Casimir, son of Otho.
1368 3 Casimir II. son of Casimir.
1374 4 Suantiborus, brother of Casimir the 2d.
1413 5 Casimir III. son of Suantiborus.
1433 6 Joachim, son of Casimir the 3d.
1451 7 Otho III. son of Joachim, dyed without issue, Anno 1464.

the issue of these conclusions, future times must shew.
The Arms of Pomeren, are A Gryphon.

The Dukedom of MECKLENBURG, is bounded on the East, with Pomerania; on the West, with Holstein, a Province of the Kingdom of Denemark; on the North, with the Baltick Sea; and on the South, with Brandenbourg, and Saxen-lawenburg. So called from Mecklenburg, or Megalopolis, (both names in several languages of the Dutch, and Greeks, signifying a great City,) a great town of that name here being, in the time of the Heruli and the Vandals, (the old Inhabitants of these parts) whose chief City it was; but on their leaving of this Countrey, decayed to nothing. The Country of the same nature as Pomerania, and as rich in corn.

Places of most importance in it, are 1. Wismar, a noted Port, on a Creek or Bay of the Baltick Sea; raised out of the ruines of old Mecklenburg before mentioned, about the year 1240. the Haven hereof capable of the greatest vessels, to which it gives a safe and assured Station, whence the name of Wismar; the word signifying in the Sclavonian language idem ac certum mare (as my Author hath it) as much as a quiet or safe Sea. Now one of the Hanse-towns, and being it lies conveniently for the use of the Swedes, allotted to that Crown by the treaty of Munster; the Duke of Mecklenburg being in recompence thereof, to have the temporalities of the Bishopricks of Swerin, and Ratzenburg. 2. Swerin, seated upon the South side of the Lake so named; an Episcopal See, and honoured with giving the title of a Barony to the Dukes of Mecklenburg. 3. Malcaw, first walled by Niclot, Prince of the Vandals, Anno 1270. 4. Ratzenburg, an Episcopal See, spoken of before. 5. Rostoch, the next in reputation of all the Hanse-towns, to Lubeck and Dantsick. Large, rich, and much frequented by all sorts of Merchants; in compass almost six English miles, situate on the River Warn, neer the fall thereof into the Baltick. Honoured with an University, here founded by John Duke of Mecklenburg, Anno 1419. the first Professors in it being brought from Erdford in Saxony. 6. Stargard, which once gave the title of Duke, to the younger Princes of this house. 7. Sarentine, memorable for a Nunnery, there founded by Duke Magnus the second. 8. Lau, built and fortified by Duke Henry the second, as an out-work to Rostock, which he had lately bought of Christopher, then King of Denmark. 9. Sternberg, of which little memorable. 10 Fridland, on the edge of Pomeren, not far from Stargard, which gave the title of Duke to Albert of Wallenstein, after that called Duke of Fridland, that eminent and prosperous Commander of the Imperial Forces, in the late war of Germany: but miserably murdered after all his services, by command of the Emperour. 11. Fitchtel, both pleasantly and strongly seated, on the edge of a Lake. 12. Dammin, a strong Town on the Marches of Brandenbourg.

The antient Inhabitants of this Country were the Vandals, with the rest of the Heruli, and Burgundians. But the Burgundians being reckoned as a part of the Vandals, were not much took notice of, till their irruptions on the borders of the Roman Empire, made them more considerable: the Princes of these Nations using no other title than Kings of the Heruli, and Vandals. Of these the first is said to be one Anthyrius, son of an Amazonian Lady, who learned his first rudiments of warfare under Alexander the Great. Out of his loins descended a long race of Kings, amongst whom Rhadaguise, who together with Alarick the Goth, invaded Italy, (I know not by what warrant) is accounted one. Gunderick the seventeenth of these Kings, weary of so cold a dwelling, passed towards the South; and having harassed Gaul and Spain, shipped himself over the Straits of Gibralter, and erected the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africk: whose successors we shall meet with there. By Vitalaus, the youngest son of Genericus, the son of Gunderick, the line of these Princes is continued; who after mingling with the Obotriti, and other of the Sclaves, succeeding into the void places of the Vandals, left off the title of Kings of the Vandals, and called themselves Kings of the Heruli, and Obitriti: continuing it to Pribislaus, or Primislaus the second, who wrote himself Pribislaus Dei gratia, Herulorum, Wagriorum, Circipanorum, Palumborum, Obotritorum, Kissinorum, Vandalorumque Rex. Making herein a general muster of those tribes of the Sclaves and Heruli, which remained under his command. But he being vanquished by Henry surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, the title of King was laid aside; his successors contenting themselves with that of Princes. Divided betwixt Henry and Niclot, the Nephews of Pribislaus, by his son Henry, into two Estates: Henry assuming to himself the title of Prince of the Obotriti; and Niclot, that of Prince of the Vandals. But the posterity of Niclot failing in William, the last of that line, Anno 1430. his title, with the lands thereunto belonging, fell to Henry the fat, the fourth Duke of Mecklenburg; to which honour, Albert and John, the sons of Henry the fourth, descended from the elder house, had been advanced by the Emperour Charls the fourth, at Prague, Anno 1348. The succession of which family from Pribislaus, take in order thus.

The PRINCES of the HERVLI, and DUKES of MECKLENBURG.

1158 1 Pribislaus, the last King, and first Prince of the Heruli, after their subjection to the Saxons; restored to this title and his former estate by the bountiful conquerers, to be held under the right and homage of the house of Saxony.

1179 2 Henry, son of Pribislaus, baptized, with all his people, in his fathers life-time, by the perswasion of Henry, Duke of Saxony, and Bavaria; by whom restored to their Estates.

3 Henry II. son of the former Henry, dividing the estate with his brother Niclot.

Saxonie.

1228 4 John, ſurnamed the Divine; ſo called, becauſe created Doctor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Paris, whither he was ſent by his Father to learn good Arts.

1260 5 Henry III. ſurnamed of Hieruſalem; becauſe of his expedition thither againſt the Saracens.

1302 6 Henry IV. ſurnamed the Lion, for his valour and undaunted conſtancy.

1319 7 Albert and John, the ſons of Henry, going to Prague with a Princely train, to attend on the Emperour Charls the fourth, were by him created Princes of the Empire, and Dukes of Mecklenberg, Anno 1348.

1380 8 Magnus, ſon of Albert.

1384 9 John, ſon of Magnus, the founder of the Univerſity of Roſtock, Anno 1419.

1423 10 Henry V. ſurnamed the Fat, who on the death of William the laſt Prince of the Vandals, ſucceeded into his Eſtate.

1447 11 Magnus II. ſon of Henry, founder of the Cathedral Church of Roſtock.

1503 12 Albert II. ſon of Magnus the ſecond.

1578 14 John III. ſon of John Albert.

1592 15 Adolph Frederick, and John Albert, ſons of John the third, diſpoſſeſſed hereof by the Emperor Ferdinand the ſecond, Anno 1628. their Eſtates, with the title of Duke of Mecklenberg, being conferred on Albert of Wallenſtein, Duke of Fridland. Who had not long enjoyed the Title, when Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, the Aſſertor of the liberties of Germany, reſtored it to the proper owners. The heirs to whole Eſtates is Guſtavus Adolphus, the only ſon and heir of John Albert; the other of theſe two Brothers being without iſſue.

The DUKEDOM and ESTATES of SAXONIE.

The Dukedom and Eſtates of SAXONIE (not reckoning thoſe which now paſs under other names, and ſhall hereafter be deſcribed in their ſeveral places) are bounded on the Eaſt, with Bohemia, Luſatia, and part of Brandenbourg; on the Weſt, with Haſſia, Brunſwick, and parts of Lunenbourg, and Holſtein; on the North, with other parts of Brandenbourg, and part of Mecklenbourg; and on the South, with Franconia, and ſome parts of the Upper Palatinate.

It is (we ſee) an aggregate body, conſiſting of two General limbs, 1. The Dukedom of Saxonie, 2. The Eſtates of Saxonie, or Saxonie properly ſo called; The firſt containing the whole Provinces of 1. Oberſax, or the Upper Saxonie, the proper ſeat of the Duke-Elector; 2. Miſnia, 3. Voiteland, and 4. Turingia; The other, thoſe of 1. Anhalt, 2. Mansfield, 3. Meydebourg, and 4. Lawenbourg. And as it is an aggregate body, ſo is it comprehenſive of all thoſe honourary Titles, by which the Princes of Germany are diſtinguiſhed from one another; that is to ſay, the Electorſhip of Saxonie, the Dukedom of Lawenbourg, the Biſhoprick of Meydebourg, the Principality of Anhalt, the Marquiſate of Miſnia, the Lantgravedom of Turingia, the Earldom of Mansfield, and the Seigneurie or Lordſhip of Voiteland. Of theſe eight Provinces, the 4. firſt mentioned are wholly ſituate without the limits and precincts of the antient Saxonie; and yet now are, and have been called long before, the Dukedom of Saxonie, becauſe they make up the whole Patrimony and Eſtate of the Dukes Electors, who ſince the proſcription and deprivation of Duke Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, Anno 1180. in ſome or other of theſe Countries have had their fixed ſeat and habitation. The 4. laſt being parts of the antient Saxonie, and heretofore in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes hereof, do ſtill paſs under the accompt and name of Saxonie, though in the hands of ſeveral owners; all of which do acknowledge a ſuperiority in the Duke Elector, if not ſome great relation to him, and dependance on him: ſo that we have an Heterogeneous body to diſcourſe upon, and therefore muſt conſider ſeverally of the parts thereof, but ſo, that either firſt or laſt we ſhall find them all in the ſucceſſion and affairs of the Dukes of Saxonie, 1. then

The Dukedom of Saxonie is bounded on the Eaſt, with Bohemia, Luſatia, and part of Brandenbourg; on the Weſt, with Haſſia, and part of the Proper Saxonie; on the North, with the Proper Saxonie only; and on the South, with Franconia, and the Upper Palatinate. So called, becauſe the proper Seat, and Patrimony of the Duke Elector; of very different nature both for Air and Soyl; but the laſt eſpecially: as we ſhall ſee by looking over the particular Provinces of 1. Oberſax, 2ly. Miſnia, or Meiſſen, 3ly. Voiteland, 4ly. Turingia, by the Dutch called Duringen.

1. OBERSAX, or the Upper Saxonie, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Marches of Brandenbourg; on the Weſt, with Mansfield, from which parted by the River Salza; on the North, with Meydebourg; on the South, with Miſnia. The Reaſon of the name we ſhall ſee anon. The Air hereof ſomewhat ſharp and peircing, the ſoyl ſufficiently fruitfull, but therein not to be compared with Miſnia, and much leſſe with Duringen, being both of them of a richer and more liberal nature.

Places

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1. Torge, or Torgow, by ſome placed in Miſnia, but by Mercator in this Province. Built on the weſt ſide of the Elb, in form Orbicular, and falling every way from the ſides of a mountain: beautified with a ſtately and pleaſant Caſtle, belonging to the Elector of Saxony, who is Lord hereof; built by John Frederick the Elector, Anno 1535. Near to the City is a Lake of a mile in compaſſe; for which the Citizens pay yearly to the Duke, 500 Guldens. 2. Warlitz upon the Elb once a Commandery of the Templars. 3. Weiſſenberck, lying towards Brunſwick. 4. Kemberg, on the weſt ſide of the Elb. 5. Butefelt, betwixt the Elb and the Mulda; and 6. Wittenberg, on the Elb; in an open plain; but ſtrongly fenced with walls, ramparts, and deep ditches. The chief beauty of it lyeth in one fair ſtreet, extending the whole length of the City; in the midſt whereof is the Cathedral Church, a large Market-place, and the common Council-houſe. In former times the ſeats of the Dukes Electors, till the Electoral dignity was conferred on the houſe of Meiſſen, who liking better their own Country, kept their Courts at Dreſden. But ſo, that Wittenberg is ſtill acknowledged for the head City of the Electorate; and was made an Univerſity for Divines by Duke Frederick, Anno 1508. It was called Wittenberg, as ſome conjecture, from Wittikindus, once Lord of Saxony, when the extent thereof was greateſt: famous for the ſepulchres of Luther and Melanchthon, but chiefly for that here were the walls of Popery broken down, and the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther, of the wonderfull ſucceſſe whereof we have ſpoke already. Miſnia.

Of the affairs of this little Country we can ſay but little, more than the means by which it came into the hands of the Dukes of Saxony, and conſequently to the name which it ſtill retains. Concerning which we are to know, that on the Deprivation of Duke Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, whoſe greatneſſe was grown formidable even to the Emperours themſelves: the Dukedom of Saxony was diſmembred into many parcels; Brunſwick and Luneburg being given unto the Children of the Duke deprived; the lower parts of Weſtphalen ſeazed on by Philip Archbiſhop of Colen; the parts thereof about the Weſer by the Biſhop of Paderborn; Herman the Lantgrave of Turingia laying hold of that part of this eſtate which was neareſt to him; Lubeck and many other of the principal Cities made imperial, or governing themſelves as Free Eſtates; the Anceſtors of the Princes of Anhalt, and the Earls of Mansfield, endowed with large poſſeſſions alſo out of this great Patrimony, the Emperours not only conniving at it, but willingly conſenting to that diſſipation, the better to reward and content thoſe Princes, who had aſſiſted him in his warrs againſt the Duke. By which means there was nothing left of the antient Saxony to be eſtated upon Bernard of Anhalt, whom Frederick Barbaroſſa had created Duke Elector in the room of Henry ſo deprived. And though Duke Bernard for his many good ſervices to the Empire had been before gratified with the City of Witteberg by Conrade the 3d. and had conquered from Duke Henry the whole Country of Lawenbourg, yet all being found too little to maintain the Port of a Duke Elector. It pleaſed the Emperour Frederick to beſtow upon him all thoſe Lands and Territories which lay between the Salza, and the Elb, on the North of Miſnia, to make Witteberg the Electoral City, and give unto the Country thus united to it, the name of Oberſax, or Upper Saxonie, which it continueth to this day.

2. MISNIA, or Meiſſen, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Luſatia; on the Weſt, with Duringen; on the North, with Saxonie, ſpecially ſo called, and ſome part of Brandenburg; on the South, with Voiteland, and ſome part of Bohemia. The Country once overſpread with woods, and full of bogs, rendring the air unwholeſom, and the ſoil unprofitable: both rectified by the care and induſtry of the people; now yeelding ſome mines of ſilver, and great plenty both of Corn and Paſturage: well watered with the Rivers Sala, Pliſſes, Elſter and Mulda.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, are 1. Dreſden, ſeated on the Albis, having continually on her Walls and Bulwarks, 150 Pieces of Ordnance; a ſtable of the Dukes, in which are 128 horſes of ſervice; and a Magazine, out of which 30000 Horſe and Foot, may be armed at a days warning. The Town it ſelf ſituate on both ſides of the River, by which divided into the old Town and the new, joyned into one by a bridge of 800 paces in length: the Country round about it very rich and pleaſant, able to ſuſtain great multitudes; for that cauſe made the ordinary ſeat of the Dukes of Saxony, who have here a ſtrong and ſtately Caſtle. 2. Naumburg, 3. Mersburg, both ſeated on the River Salza, two Epiſcopal Sees. 4. Lipſique, as famous a Univerſity for Philoſophers, as Jene in Lorrein is for Phyſicians. It ſeemeth the Scholars and Citizens will not ſuffer their Beer to periſh, of which here is ſo much drunk and exported; that the very cuſtom of it due unto the Duke, amounteth to 20000 pounds yearly: yet is this Town of no more than two Churches; but wealthy, populous, and built for the moſt part of fair free ſtone, honoured with the Courts of Juſtice for all the Country. Though ſeated on the meeting of Pleſs, Parde, Elſter, 3 Rivers, which lie almoſt on all ſides of it: yet it is not ſtrong, having been thrice taken by the Imperialſts in leſs than 2 years, during the late German wars. Sufficiently famous (if for nothing elſe) for the great battel fought near it, between the late K. of Sweden, and the Count of Tilly: the honour whereof falling to the Swedes and Saxons, (with the death of 15000 of both ſides, and the loſs of all the baggage, Arms and Ammunition of the Imperials) freed all theſe parts of Germany from that civil and ſpiritual bondage, which was intended by the Emperour to be put upon them. 5. Mulberg, on the Elb, where John Frederick the Elector was diſcomfited and taken priſoner by Charls the fifth, by whom deprived not long after of his ſtate and dignity. 6. Meiſſen, on the weſt ſide of the ſame River, in a hilly and uneven ground, built by the Emperour Henry the firſt, for defence of the Empire againſt the Sclaves: a Biſhops See, and the firſt ſeat of the Marqueſſes of this Country, both which, together with the Burgrave of the Town, had their Palaces or Manſion-houſes ſtanding cloſe together on the top of a hill, over-looking both the Town and Country. From this Town the whole Province had the name of Meiſſen. 7. Friberg, near the Voiteland, and Turingia.

Mountains of Bohemia, rich in mines of silver. 8. Roclite, not far from which are rich mines of Tinne; discovered first in these parts by a Cornish-man spoken of before.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Hermanduri, and Suardones, subdued or outed by the Sorabi, a great Tribe of the Sclaves, surnamed Winithi: first conquered by the Emperour Henry the first, who built the strong Town of Meissen to keep them under, and to impede the neighbouring Sclaves from any incroachments on the Empire. Being thus added to the Empire and account of Germanie, it was a while governed by such Officers, as by the Emperours were appointed to guard these Marches: the first Proprietary Marquesse being one Echard, son of the Earl of Oostland, (descended from a younger son of Wittikind, the last King of the Saxons) by the munificence of Otho the third: not made hereditary, till the time of Henry the fifth, who gave it in Fee to Conrade, Marquesse of Landsberg and Lusatia, whose Nephew Theodorick, by his son Otho, surnamed the Rich, maried Judith, daughter of Herman Lantgrave of Duringen; by which match, Duringen accrewed to the house of Meissen, Henry their son succeeding in both estates. To this Henry succeeded Albert his son, and after him successively four Fredericks: the last whereof, on the failer of the house of Anholt, was by the Emperour Sigismund, created Elector, and Duke of Saxony; either because descended from the house of Wittikindus, or as most able to pay for the Investiture, or else best able to sustain the estate and dignity of a Duke Elector, which had but weakly been supported by the former Family. In his posterity these honors and estates do as yet continue. But neither all nor always in the possession of the Dukes Electors. For in the partage made between Ernestus and Albert, the sons of Frederick, (according to the ill custom of Germany) this Country, or the greatest part of it, was assigned to Albert, succeeded in the same by George and Henry his two sons: which was Father of that Maurice, who being setled and confirmed herein by the Duke John Frederick, did after most unworthily take up arms against him, supplanted him, and finally possessed himself of this whole Electorate; of which more anon.

VOITELAND, is bounded on the East, with Bohemia; on the West, with Frankenland; on the North, with Misnia or Meissen; on the South, with the Upper Palatinate. So called, as some say, from the Iuites or Vites (some of that people, who, together with the Saxons and Angles, conquered Britain) of whom it had the name of Viteland, that is to say, the Land or Country of the Vites. But being I find not that the Saxons did spread so far Eastward, I rather think that this name was given it by the Sclaves, who finding it deserted, or but thinly peopled, at their coming thither, might call it by the name of Voidland; from which the alteration unto Voitland, is both plain and obvious. It is the smallest Province of all Germany, and never of such repute as to have any particular Prince, as most others had; but always reckoned as an accessory to some greater Estate. Nor hath it any Town or Cities of great estimation: the chief of those which are, being 1. Olnits, 2. Worda, 3. Cornah, 4. Sebneberg, near the mountains called Sudeta by Ptolemie, famed for silver mines. 5. Gotzberg, 6. Culmbach, and 7. Hoffe, not much remarkable; but only for the Princes of it of the house of Brandenbourg; called formerly Curia Pegniana.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were parts of the Nertereates and Danduti: succeeded to by the French and Sclaves, as they severally descended Southwards into warmer Countries. Possessed and planted by the Sclaves it obtained this name. But being a small Nation, and a small Estate, it never had the honour of a particular Prince: but did most probably belong to the Lords of Meissen, upon which it bordereth; and now, in their right, to the Duke of Saxonie. But so that the Duke of Saxonie is not the sole Lord hereof: the Marquesses of Ansbach of the house of Brandenbourg, possessing the Towns of Hoffe and Colmbach, and some other parts of it: the Patrimony at present of Christian, son of Joachim Ernest, the late Marques of Ansbach, who now enjoyeth them, with the title of the Marques of Colmbach.

4. TURINGIA is bounded on the East, with Misnia, and the River Salza; on the West, with Hassia; on the North, with the wood Hartz, and the Proper Saxonie; on the South, with the mountainous Forest of Duringer-wald, by which parted from Frankenland: the Forest and the Country both so called from the Turingians, the antient Inhabitants hereof, communicating their name to the place they dwelt in.

The Country invironed round about with woody mountains, but within those mountains plain and pleasant, fruitfull in Corn, and very plentifull of woods, which yeeld great profit to the people; not without some mines of gold and silver, and rich pits of salt; able to furnish out a feast, but for wine only, which is the greatest want hereof. The whole length of it is not above 120 miles, and the breadth no more, yet is it so populous and well planted, that there are said to be in it 12 Earldoms, and as many Abbies, 144 Cities, and as many Market Towns, 150 Castles, and 2000 Villages.

The principal of these are 1. Jene, on the River Salza, bordering upon Misnia, an University chiefly of Physicians, founded in the year 1555. by the sons of John Frederick the Elector, taken prisoner and deprived by Charls the 5th. 2. Erdford, on the River Gers, out of which are cut so many chanels, that every street hath almost the benefit of it. A rich, populous, and well-built City, accompted amongst the best of Germanie, and made an University in the time of the Emperour Wencesslaus, Anno 1382. Many times burnt, but still reviving, as the Phenix out of the Ashes, into greater glory. At first immediately subject to the Archbishops and Electors of Mentz, the first founders of it; as being built by William, son of the Emperor Otho the first, and, then Archbishop of that City, of whom whom more anon; but having freed themſelves from him, they have ſince governed themſelves as a free eſtate, and one of the Hanſe Towns, not ſubject to the Duke of Saxonie as their Lord, but their Patron and good neighbour only. 3. Mulhuiſen, and 4. Noorthuiſen, two imperial Cities; but elſe not obſervable. 5. Smalcald, famous for the levy here made Anno 1530. between all the Princes and Cities which maintained the doctrine of Luther, for defence thereof and of one another in the purſuance of that work, by which famous confederacy Luther not only kept his head on his ſhoulders; but the Religion by him reformed, grew to that ſtrength, that no force or policy could ever root it up. 6. Kala, or Hale, on the River Falza; of great reſort for the exceeding quantity of Salt there made, and vended into other places; at which Town Philip the Lantgrave was treacherouſly taken Priſoner, as you ſhall hear anon. 7. Weymar, a Town, which together with the Caſtle of Galha were aſſigned for the Eſtate and maintenance of that religious, though unfortunate, Pr. Jo. Frederick, D. of Saxonie, after his diſcomfiture and impriſonment by Charles the 5th. the ordinary ſeat of the Dukes of the Saxon Weymar, who live here in a ſtately and magnificent Caſtle, made of poliſhed ſtone, moſt artificially contrived, and beautified with Orchards, Gardens, and other pleaſures; but made more pleaſant by the watering of the River Ilma, upon which it ſtandeth. 8. Gotha, upon the River Lonne, ſaid by Rathaimerus to be built by the Gothes, and by them thus named. A place not long ſince of great importance, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle called Grimmenſton, that being made the retiring place of one Grunbachius, and other ſeditious perſons, under the protection of John Frederick, one of the ſons of the deprived Electors; it was taken after a long ſiege by Auguſtus the Elector of Saxonie (to whom the ſtrength of this peece being in the hands of the injured family, was a great eye-ſore) and by the command of the Eſtates of the Empire in the Diet at Regensberg, Anno 1567. demoliſhed, and levelled with the ground.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chaſnari of Tacitus, and after them the Turingi, who with the Heruli, under the conduct of Odoacer, conquered Italy, called by ſome Turcilingi; by others ſuppoſed to be the Tirangetæ of Ptolemy. Not heard of in this Country till the reign of Childerick, the fourth King of the French; then taking up the whole Provinces of Haſſia, and Turingia, under one Biſſinius their King. Their Arms at that time, and long after, Azure, a Lion Barri, Argent and Gules, armed and crowned Or. Being overcome at the great battel of Zulph, near Colen, where they joyned with the Almans, they were afterwards totally ſubdued by Theodorick the French King of Metz, their King Hermanfridus taken, and moſt perfidiouſly ſlain; part of their Country taken from them and given to the Saxons (who aſſiſted in that war againſt them) becomming ſubject for the reſt to the Kings of France. But ſo, that for ſome time after they had Kings of their own, Baderick and Hermanfroy, two brothers, Kings hereof ſucceſſively, being Uncles to Radegond, a Princeſſe of great piety, the wife of Clotaire King of France, Anno 559. In following times it was united to the Empire by Henry the firſt, conferred not long after by Otho the firſt (the ſon of Henry) on William, one of his younger ſons, then Arch-biſhop of Mentz, which he left to his ſucceſſors in that See; governed by their Vidames, and Provincial Officers, till the time of Conradus Salicus; when Ludovicus Barbatus one of theſe Vidams (or Vicedomini) made himſelf the proprietary of it, and left the ſame unto his children after his deceaſe. But in the time of Conrade the 2d. the iſſue of this Ludovicus either failing or diſpoſſeſſed, it was by the Emp. conferred on Lewis of Orleance, ſon to a ſiſter of his Empreſs, the title of Lantgrave being given to them of this family for their greater honour. Under eight Princes of this Line, whereof five ſucceſſively had the name of Lewis, this eſtate continued: next falling to Herman, a brother of the fifth Lewis, who by contributing to the ruine of Henry Duke of Saxonie, ſurnamed the Lion, in favour of Frederick Barbaroſſa, had for his ſhare (in the dividing of the ſpoil) thoſe parts of his eſtates which lay neareſt to him, called then the Palatinate of Saxonie, recovered for the moſt part afterward by the Dukes of Brunſwick, the right Heirs of Henry. He being dead this Country fell to a ſixt Lewis, and laſt of all to Henry the brother of that Lewis, in whom the male iſſue failed, having continued for the ſpace of 252 years. To pleaſe all parties intereſſed in the ſucceſſion, the eſtate before entire, was divided into two parts or Provinces, of which this now called Duringen or Turingia, was allotted to Henry Marqueſſe of Miſnia, ſon of Judith, the daughter of Herman: The Weſtern part thereof, with the title of the Lantgravedom of Heſſen, adjudged to Henry Duke of Brabant, in right of Sophia his wife, daughter of Lewis the ſixth; in the deſcription of which Countries we ſhall hear more of them. United thus to the houſe of Meiſen, in the perſon of Henry the then Marqueſs, Anno 1263. It flouriſhed in long peace and happineſſe under the Princes of that houſe; finally, much increaſed both in power and dignity by the addition of Oberſax, and the Electorſhip of Saxonie, conferred on Frederick the 4th. Marqueſſe and Lantgrave of theſe Countries, Anno 1423. in which eſtate it ſtill continueth, the 4th. and faireſt of all theſe Provinces, which now make up the Dukedom of Saxonie, (as for the reaſons above mentioned it hath long been called) though none of them, nor any part or parcel of them, within the bounds and limits of the antient Saxonie, as before was ſaid.

2. SAXONIE, properly ſo called, or the Proper SAXONIE, is bounded on the South, with Duringen, and the great wood Hartz, part of the old Hercynian Foreſt, and from thence ſo named; on the Eaſt, with part of Miſnia, Oberſax, and the Marches of Brandenbourg; upon the North, with the Dukedom of Mecklenbourg; and on the Weſt, with that of Brunſwick, Lunenburg, and part of Holſtein: So called from the Saxons, once the Lords hereof (of whom more anon) and the ſole part of all their great and many conqueſts, which retains their name.

The Air hereof ſomewhat ſharp, but healthy: the ſoyl in the South-weſt parts hilly and uneven, chiefly rich in Minerals, elsewhere sufficiently fruitfull: Divided into 4. Estates; that is to say, 1. the Principality of Anhalt, 2. the Earldom of Mansfield, 3. the Bishoprick of Meydebourg, 4. the Dukedom of Lawenbourg.

1. The Principate of ANHALT, is bounded on the South, with Duringen, and the Wood called Hartz; on the West, and North; with the County of Mansfield; on the East, with Misnia, much shaded, if not too much over-grown with woods; parts of the Hartz or old Hercynian Forrest, whence it had the name; Holt in the Dutch signifying a wood or Forest; and the Princes of this house created to this dignity by the stile of Principes Hercynniæ in Anhalt. Chiefer Towns of it are, 1. Berneberg, the Dynastie and usual title of this house, before they were created Princes of Anhalt. 2. Builenstede, part of the antient Patrimonie of the first Princes hereof. 3. Dessaw, the birth-place of some, and the burial-place of others of this familie; beautified with a strong Castle built by Pr. Albert the 2d. Anno 1341. 4. Sterveſt, the usual place of the Princes residence. 5. Coeten, a well-fortified place, in vain besieged by the joynt forces of the Archbishop of Meydebourg, and the Earl of Schwartzenwald. 6. Candt, here sometimes also stood the old Castle of Ascandt; the first seat of these Princes, but long since destroyed, now only to be visited in Records and Histories.

We shall be sent no higher than the first besieging of the Roman Capitol by the antient Galls, to find out the pedigree and descent of the Earls of Lyppe; but we must go as high as the Ark for the Princes of Anhalt; some fetching them from Askenaz, the son of Gomer, and nephew of Japhet; from whom and no other this Ascanian Family (for by that name it is called) are to fetch their Pedegree. But to content our selves with more sober thoughts, we are to know, that when Theodorick K. of Metz undertook the Conquest of the Turingians, he was therein aided by the Saxons with 9000. men; under the conduct of one Bernewall, or Bernthobald, a man of great power and rank amongst them; the Saxons recompenced for that service, with such parts of the conquered Countrey as lay neerest to them, and Bernthobald himself rewarded with the Town of Ascandt, Ballenstede, and the Lands adjoyning, Anno 524. to be holden by them under the soveraignty of the French. From which Town and the Castle of Ascandt, afterwards razed to the ground by Pepin K. of the French, (for denying the accustomed tributes) Anno 747. most probable it is that the name of Ascanian Family was assumed by them: So that we may behold it as a Family, of as great antiquity as the most in Europe, little inferiour unto any of the greatest Monarchs. His Successors for the most part busied in wars against their neighbours of Misnia; but rather upon hope of spoyl and plunder, than in way of Conquest: Their power and Patrimony being very little improved, till the time of Albert surnamed Ursus, descended by a long succession of Princes from Bernewald, or Bernthobald before remembred. This Albert having done many signal services unto Conrade the 3d. and his son Frederick Barbaroſſa, (especially in taking the Cities of Breme, and Lunebourg) was by the last created Marquess and Elector of Brandenbourg, Anno 1153. the Father of that Bernard, who by the munificence and bounty of the same Emperor, was created Duke Elector of Saxonie, in the room of Duke Henry surnamed the Lion, Anno 1180. becomming so the stem of the two greatest Princes of all the Empire. Henry the 2. son of this Bernard, was by the same Emperour not long after inriched with much of the lands and territories lying neerest to him, which had before belonged to Duke Henry the Lion, and created the first Prince of Anhalt, the first of all this antient and illustrious Family, which had been honoured with that Title, both Lands and Title continuing in his race to this very day. The two Electorates of Saxonie, and Brandenbourg, being in the mean while translated unto other Families; the most considerable of which Princes, though all men of Eminence, were 1. Rodolph, General of the forces of the Emperour Maximilian the first, against the Venetians, whom he twice overcame in battel. 2. George the Divine, a great Reformer of the Church by his diligent Preaching; whose Sermons and other tractates (learned for the times he lived in) are still extant. 3. Christian, born in the year 1569. Commander of the forces of Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine, in the warres of Bohemia.

2. The Earldom of MANSFIELD, is bounded on the East, with the river Salza, parting it from Oberſax; on the West, with the river Wyeper, which divides it from Brunſwick; on the North, with the Bishoprick of Meydebourg; and on the South, with Anhalt, and part of Duringen; so called from Mansfield, once the chief Town of it, situate on the river Wyeper, but now much decayed; the other Towns of note herein being, 2. Isleben, more in the middle of the Country; for that cause more convenient for the seats of Justice, first setled here by Earl Voldradus, Anno 1448. and by that means made the Metropolis of this Earldom; By some affirmed to have took this name from the Goddess Isis, who after the death of her husband (as is said by Tacitus) visited these parts. Famous more certainly for the birth of Luther, transplanted hence for the study of good Arts to Meydebourg, and chosen thence to be Divinity-Reader in Witteburg; where he hammered out that great work of the Reformation, as before was said; born here in the year 1483. and here deceasing in the house of the Earl of Mansfield, Anno 1546. 3. Wyeper, (or Wypra) so called of the river on which it standeth. 4. Querefort, the honourary title of the Ancestors of the Earls of Mansfield. 5. Rotenberg. 6. Absted. 7. Helderung, bought of the Earls of Houstein.

Some who delineate the Pedegree of these Earls of Mansfield, fetch it out as high as from one Heger one of King Authurs Knights of the round table, born at Mansfield in Nottingamshire: who setling himself in Germany, gave that name to his house; a military original, and very suitable to such an active and warlike Family. But those that do not soar so high high, derive them from the Earls of Quereford, men of authority in these parts; made more considerable by Lotharius Emperor and and Dnke of Saxony, but moſt of all by Frederick Barbaroſſa, who conferred many goodly Lordſhips, lying hereabout (once part of the Eſtate of Duke Henry the Lion) on Burchard the fifth Earl thereof; a conſtant follower of his, not only in his wars againſt Duke Henry before named, but in thoſe alſo which he managed in the Holly-land, in the courſe whereof he died at Antioch, Anno 1187. His Nephew Burchard by a ſon of the ſame name, was the firſt of this Family that had the title of Earl of Mansfield, about the year 1250. Continued ever ſince unto his poſterity (but under ſome acknowments to the Electors of Saxony.) Of theſe the moſt eminent were Valeradus one of the council of Eſtate to the Emperor Sigiſmond Anno 1411. a great improver of the Patrimony of the Earls hereof. 2. John George, Lord Deputy or Lieutenant of Saxony under Duke Auguſtus. 3. Peter Erneſt, Governor of Luxembourg, under Charles the 5th. and Philip the 2d. by whom much exerciſed and employed in their wars with France and their baltick Rebels. 4. Albert, a conſtant Friend of Luthers, and a faithfull follower of John Frederick, the deprived Elector, in whoſe quarrel being outed of his Eſtate, he retired to Meydebourg, which he moſt gallantly defended againſt the Emp. and 5. Erneſius, Nephew of that Albert by his ſon John, ſo famous for the war which he maintained in moſt parts of Germany, againſt Ferdinand the 2d. in behalf of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine, and the States of Bohemia, with ſo great conſtancy and courage. Meydebourg and Lawenbourg.

3. On the North of Mansfield and Oberſax lyeth the Biſhoprick of MEYDEBOURG, having on the Weſt, parts of Brunſwick and Lunenbourg; and on the North and the Eaſt, the Marches of Brandenbourg. So called from the Epiſcopall See founded in Magdeburg the chief City; by ſome called Meydburg, and Meydenburg: whence by a Greek name Parthenopolis; and Virginopolis, by a mungrel word, made of Greek and Latine. A City ſeated on the Elb, divided into three parts, but all ſtrongly fortified; begirt with high walls, deep ditches, and almoſt unconquerable Bulwarks; yet very beautifull withall (before the laſt deſolation of it) of elegant buildings, fair ſtreets, and magnificent Temples. Built in the form of a Creſcent, by the Emperor Otho the firſt, the founder of it, who having tranſlated hither the Archiepiſcopal See, for the greater honor of the place, built the Cathedrall of Saint Maurice, where his wife lies buried, Anno 948. teſtified by the inſcription to be the daughter of Edmund, King of England. A Town which hath long flouriſhed in a great deal of glory, and taſted of as much affliction as any other in Germany. For refuſing to receive the Interim, it was out-lawed by the Emperor Charles the fifth, and given to him that could firſt take it. It was firſt hereupon attempted by the Duke of Meglenberg; but he was in a Camiſado taken Priſoner, his Army routed, his Nobles made Captive, and 260 horſe brought into the City. Next, it was beſieged by Duke Maurice of Saxony, who on honourable terms, was after a long ſiege received into it, Anno 1550. when it had ſtood on its own guard the ſpace of three years. Which long oppoſition of one Town, taught the German Princes what conſtancy could do; it held up the coals of Rebellion in Germany, and indeed proved to be the fire which burned the Emperours Trophies. For here Duke Maurice coming acquainted with Baron Hedeck, hatched that confederacy, by which not long after this great Emperour was driven out of Germany. At laſt it yielded to Duke Maurice, under the protection of whoſe ſucceſſors it hath ſince enjoyed a long courſe of felicity, till the year 1631. in which moſt miſerably burnt and ſacked by the Earl of Tilly: of whom it is obſerved, that after that fact he never proſpered, being ſhortly after totally routed at the battell of Leipſick; and wounded to the death not long after that, near the River Leck. Other places of note in this Biſhoprick, are, 2. Wormſted, beautified with a fair Caſtle, not far from Magdeburg, the ordinary ſeat, or retiring place of the Biſhop. 3. Grabatz, upon the River Struma. 4. Mockern, on the ſame River. 5. Barleben, beneath Meydebourg on the Elb. 6. Lunburg, betwixt the Elb and the Struma; not much obſervable.

The Archiepiſcopal See being tranſlated hither from Valerſleve, and Ureſe, (places too obſcure for ſo great a dignity) by Otho the firſt; and by him endowed with great Revenues, and a goodly territory round about it: the Arch-biſhop hereof was alſo by his procurement made the Primate of Germany; acknowledged ſo by all, but the Biſhop of Saltzburg, and the three Spiritual Electors. For the Adminiſtration of Juſtice in matters Criminal and Civil, the ſaid Otho did ordain an Officer, whom they called the Burgrave; conferring that office firſt on Gero, Marqueſſe of Luſatia. Through many hands it came at laſt to Burchard, Lord of Quernfort, and the Earls of Mansfield; many of which enjoyed this honour: ſetled at laſt by the Emperour Rodolphus of Habſpurg, on the Dukes of Saxony, who by this means came to have great command and influence on the whole Eſtate. The Archbiſhops notwithſtanding continued Lords of it, and the whole territory or Diſtrict adjoyning to it; till the Reformation of Religion: when the Revenues ſeparated from the juriſdiction, were given to Lay Princes, (for the moſt part of the houſe of Brandenbourg) with the title of Adminiſtrator. Finally, by the Pacification made at Munſter, this fair eſtate is to be ſetled for ever on the Electors of that houſe, to be poſſeſſed by them, and their Heirs and Succeſſors, by the title of the Dukes of Magdeburg; the better to content them for the conceſſion which they made to the Crown of Sweden, of a great part of their right and title to the Dukedom of Pomeren.

4. On the Northweſt of Magdebourg, and on both ſides alſo of the Elb, lyeth the Dukedom of LAWENBOURG, bounded on the North, with Mecklenbourg; on the Eaſt, with part of Holſtein; and on the South, with the River Elb, and part of Lunenbourg; So called of Lawenbourg the chief Town thereof, and the ſeat of the Dukes. The Town firſt built, as ſome conceive, by Henry Duke of Saxonie, ſurnamed the Lion, the better to aſſure his Conqueſts on that ſide of the River, by whom it

Lawenburg. was called Leopolis, or Leobourgum, and Lawenbourg for the ſame reaſon by the Dutch or Germans: on the proſcription of which Prince, the Country being waſted, and the Towns deſtroyed, Barnard of Anhalt deſigned his Succeſſor in the Dukedom of Saxonie, liking the ſituation of it, cauſed it to be re-edified in ſtronger manner than before, a great part of the materials of the town of Erdenbourg, being carried croſs the water to inlarge this place. Afterwards being razed by the ſaid Duke Henry, in the courſe of that war, it was re-built again by D. Barnard, the new Elector, who is therefore by ſome writers made the Founder of it. Other places of note herein, are 2. Erdenbourg, a well-fortified piece, oppoſite to Lawenbourg, on the hither ſide of the Elb; not ſo large now as heretofore, the Town of Lawenbourg being made greater by the leſſening of this. 3. Raceburg, an Epiſcopal See, founded here by Duke Henry ſurnamed the Lion, upon his gaining of the Sclaves to the Chriſtian Faith, and of late times the Sepulture of this Ducal Family. 4. Moeln, on the further ſide of the Elb, not far from Lawenbourg, the cauſe of much contention betwixt the Dukes hereof, and the Town of Hamburg, who pretend a title thereunto.

This Country being for the moſt part under the command of the Sclaves, was from them Conquered (together with the whole Country of Mecklenburg) by Duke Henry the Lion, and by his care converted to the Chriſtian Faith: but he being proſcribed, and this Seigneurie extorted from him, by Duke Barnard of Anhalt his ſucceſſor in the Electoral dignity, it was by Albert, the ſon of this Barnard, conferred on John his ſecond ſon, from whom the Dukes of Saxonie, commonly called Dukes of Saxon-Lawenbourg, do derive themſelves; who being pretermitted by the Emperor Sigiſmund at the death of Albert the 3d. the laſt of the direct line of Barnard; or elſe not caring for a title, which carried with it too great ſail, for ſo ſmall a veſſel, as the Eſtate of the Elector at the preſent was, have ſince contented themſelves with their antient Patrimony.

It is now time we ſhould proceed to the Story of Saxony; the antient Inhabitants of which tract were the Longobardi, or Lombards of Magdeburg; and part of the Cheruſci about Mansfield, and Witeberg. Overcome by the prevailing Saxons, they became part of their name and Country, which in the full extent thereof was once far greater than now it is: containing all the Countries betwixt the Rhene and the River Eydore in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſſe; and from the River Saltza, to the German and baltick Oceans. Theſe ſaid by ſome to be a people of Aſia, and there called the Sacæ; who finding that ſmall territory (now a part of Tartaria) too narrow for them, forſook their Country, and at laſt fixed themſelves in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſs; where they firſt took the names of Sicaſons (or Sac-ſons) that is to ſay, the ſons of the Sacæ. The improbality of this we have there diſputed. Omitting therefore that and the like Originations of them, I conceive them (for my part) to be natural Germans; ſome tribe of that moſt populous and potent people of the Suevi; but for the reaſon of the name, let every man enjoy the pleaſures of his own opinion. Certain I am that in Ptolemies time, they were poſſeſſed of thoſe parts beyond the Elb, and thence extended to the Eydore; part of which tract is now known by the name of Holſtein: and were accompted in that time to be no new-commers. Afterwards, as they grew in number, they inlarged their quarters, and paſſing over the Elb in the time of the later Roman Emperors, poſſeſſed themſelves of the void places which were left by the French, then buſied in the conqueſt of more fruitfull Countries; communicating their name to all the Nations which they overcame, as the French had formerly done before them. So that in fine, they ſtrecht themſelves from the River Saltza on the Eaſt, to the German Ocean on the Weſt, and took up the now Dukedomes of Holſtein, Lunenbourg, and Brunſwick; the Biſhopricks of Bremen, Verda, Hilderſheim, Halberſtad, and Magdeburg, the Marches of Brandenbourg, the Earldome of Mansfield, Weſtphalen, both Friſelands, Overyſſell, with as much of Guelderland and Holland, as lay on that ſide of the Rhene. By which accompt the preſent Electoral Family hath not one foot of the old Saxony, in their poſſeſsion: the ſeat and Patrimony of the Electors being removed into other Countries, upon the alterations and changes which have hapned in that Eſtate: the name and title of Saxony, being given to the Country about Witteberg, or no other reaſon, but becauſe it was the chief ſeat of the Duke Electors. But to proceed, a ſtout and valiant Nation queſtionleſs they were, the conquerors of the Iſle of Britain; and the laſt people of the Germans, which yielded up their Countrey unto Charls the Great; by whoſe means gained unto the Goſpell, Anno 785. Their laſt King was called Wittichindus, from whom deſcend the Kings of France, ſince the time of Hugh Capet; the preſent Kings of Denmark, of the houſe of Oldenburg; the Dukes of Burgundy, and Savoy; the Marqueſſes of Montferrat; beſides many other noble and illuſtrious Families, though of leſſer note. The right or direct line of the male iſſue of Wittikind (whom Charls the great created, of a King, the firſt Duke of Saxony) determining in the perſon of Otho the third, Emperour of Germany, it was by him conferred on Barnard Lord of Lunenburg, (but the preciſe time I find not:) Henry ſurnamed the Saint, who ſucceeded this Otho in the Empire, the next in the collateral line, being pretermitted, either becauſe at that time ſetled in the great Dukedom of Bavaria, or becauſe there was no hope of Poſterity by him, or for ſome other private grudge, which I read not of. And it continued in this line, till on the forfeiture incurred by his poſterity, in the perſon of Duke Henry the Lion, it was beſtowed by Frederick Barbaroſſa, upon Barnard of Anhalt, Anno 1180. whoſe iſſue in the right line failing, it was finally eſtated by the Emperour Sigiſmund, on Frederick Lantgrave of Turingia, and Marqueſs of Miſnia, Anno 1423. In his Family it hath ſince continued, but not without a manifeſt breach in the courſe of the ſucceſſion: which hapned, when John Frederick being deprived of the Electoral dignity and eſtate; his couſin Duke Maurice was inveſted in them by Charles the fifth. For that religious but unfortunate Prince (if he may juſtly have the title of unfortunate who ſuffered in ſo good a cauſe, for ſo good a Conſcience) being diſcomfited and taken priſoner at the battle of Mulberg before mentioned, was the next day condemned to die; but pardoned at the last upon the intercession of some powerfull friends, upon condition that he should resign the Electoral dignity, and all the rest of his Estates, into the power of the Emperour: Which done, the Emperour gave him back again of his own accord the Castle of Gotha, and the Town of Weymar, with all the lands & territories thereunto adjoyning; from which last place his posterity are now called Dukes of Saxon Weymar. It was also much insisted on that he should relinquish his Religion, and reconcile himself to the Church of Rome; but thereto he opposed with such Christian stoutnesse, that in the end it was omitted. These matters being thus transacted, the Emperour (with the general consent of the Electors) invested Maurice, Cousin German to the Duke deprived, in the Electoral dignity, and all the Lands, Honours and Estates (the Signeuries of Gotha and Weymar excepted only) which formerly had belonged to him; which though it were a great wrong both to the Person and Posterity of the Duke John Frederick; yet is it observed by some grave writers, to have fallen out not unhappily for the advancement of the Reformation then contended for. 1. In regard of John Frederick, whose Christian patience and magnanimity during the whole time of his imprisonment, added great reputation to the cause for which he suffered. 2. In respect of Duke Maurice, who was a man of far greater parts to advance the work, and every way as zealous in pursuing of it, as the other was. And 3. In relation to the children of the deprived Duke, men not to be relied on in a matter of such weight and moment; insomuch as it was said of him after his decease, Quod filios reliquerit sui dissimilimos. It is now time we should proceed to the investiture of the new Elector. And because these translations of State be not ordinary, I will briefly relate the ceremonies thereat used, as I have collected them out of Sleiden. There were at Wittenberg Scaffolds erected, on which sate the Emperour, and the Princes Electors in their Robes. On the back side of the State, were placed the Trumpeters; right against it standeth Duke Maurice with two bands of horsemen; The first in a full career run their horses up to the pavilion: Out of the second issued Henry Duke of Brunswick, Wolfang Prince of Bipont, and Albert Duke of Bavier. These when they had in like manner coursed their horses about, alighted, ascended to the Throne, and humbly requested the Emperour, that for the common good he would advance Duke Maurice to the Electorship. He consulted with the Electors, made answer by the Bishop of Mentz, that he was content, so Duke Maurice would in person come and desire it. Then came forth Duke Maurice, with the whole troup; before him were born ten ensignes bearing the Arms of as many Regions, wherein he desired to be invested. When he came before the Throne he kneeled down on his knees, and humbly desired the Emperour to bestow on him the Electorship of Saxonie, and all the lands of John Frederick late Elector. His Petition was granted. Then the Bishop of Mentz read unto him the oath, by which the Electors are bound unto the Empire: which Oath, when Duke Maurice had taken, the Emperour delivered unto him a Sword, which was a sign of his perfect investiture. Duke Maurice, now the Elector of Saxony, arose, gave the Emperour thanks, promised his fidelity, made obeysance, and took his place amongst the Electors. This solemnity was on the 24 day of Feb. Anno 1548. Which said, we now proceed unto the Catalogue of

The Dukes of SAXONIE.

785 1 Wittikind, the last King of the Saxons, vanquished, and created the first Duke by Charls the Great.

825 2 Bruno, the brother of Wittikind.

843 3 Luitulphus, son of Bruno.

855 4 Bruno II. son of Luitulphus.

876 5 Otho, brother of Bruno the second.

916 6 Henry, surnamed the Fowler, son of Otho, Emperour of the Romans, and King of Germany.

938 7 Otho II. Duke of Saxonie, and Emperour, called Otho I.

974 8 Otho III. Duke of Saxonie, and Emperour, called Otho II.

984 9 Otho IV. Duke of Saxonie, and Emperour, called Otho III.

10 Barnard, Lord of Lunenburg, created Duke of Saxonie, and the first Elector, by Otho the third, who was the last Duke of the race of Wittikind.

1021 11 Barnard II. son of Barnard the first.

1063 12 Ordulphus, son of Barnard the 2d.

1073 13 Magnus, son of Ordulphus, who taking part with Rodulphus of Schwahen against Henry the fourth, was taken prisoner and deprived.

14 Lotharius, Earl of Quernfort, created Duke of Saxonie by Henry the fourth. He was also Emrour of the Romans.

1125 15 Henry Guelph, surnamed the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, the husband of Gertrude, daughter of Lotharius, by whom created Duke Elector.

1139 16 Henry II. surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxonie and Bavaria, son of Henry the Proud, by his first wife Walfildis, the daughter of Magnus, added to this estate the Country of Mecklenbourg and Lawenbourg, which he had conquered from the Sclaves, becoming by that means so great, that neglecting his duty to the Emperour Frederick, surnamed Barbarossa, and siding with the Pope against him, he was by him publickly proscribed, his neighbour Princes armed against him, and by their joynt forces outed of all his estates every one laying hold of that which lay neareſt to him, by means whereof this great Eſtate being parcelled and divided into many parts; the title of the Duke Elector of Saxonie, was given by the ſaid Emperour to 1180 17 Bernard of Anhalt, ſon of Albert, Marqueſs of Brandenb. and grandchild of Elica, another daughter of Duke Magnus: to whom for his ſeat and habitation, the Emperour gave the City of Wittenberg; the head, ſince that time, of this Electorate.

1212 18 Albert, ſon of Barnard, from whom the Dukes of Lawenburg doe derive their Pedegree.

1273 19 Albert II. ſon of Albert the firſt.

1327 20 Rodolph, ſon of Albert the 2d.

1356 21 Rodolph II. ſon of Rodolph the firſt.

1373 22 Wenceſlaus, ſon of Rodolph the 2d.

1389 23 Rodolph III. ſon of Wenceſlaus.

1419 24 Albert III. ſon of Rodolph the third, the laſt Elector of Saxonie of the houſe of Anhalt.

1423 25 Frederick, Lantgrave of Duringen, and Marqueſs of Miſnia, (on the failing of the houſe of Anhalt, Anno 1422.) created Duke of Saxonie by the Emperour Sigiſmund; the houſe of Lawenburg pretermitted for want of putting in their claim; by the advancement of which Prince, the title of Duke of Saxonie returned again to the houſe of Wittikind (the firſt King and laſt Duke hereof) after it had been alienated into other families for the ſpace of 200 years.

1428 26 Frederick II. ſon of Frederick the firſt.

1464 27 Erneſt, ſon of Frederick the ſecond.

1486 28 Frederick III. ſon of Erneſt.

1525 29 John, brother to Frederick the third.

1532 30 John Frederick, ſon of John the firſt; a great advancer of the Reformation of Religion; impriſoned, and deprived of his Electorſhip by Charles the fifth.

1547 31 Maurice, Couſin German once removed to the Duke John Frederick, as being the Grandſon or nephew of Albert, the younger brother of Erneſtus the Duke Elector) created Duke Elector by Charles the fifth, whom afterwards he drave out of Germany; and was ſlain in the battel of Siffridhuſe, againſt Marqueſs Albert of Brandenbourg.

1553 32 Auguſtus, brother of Maurice.

1586 33 Chriſtian, ſon of Auguſtus.

34 Chriſtian II. ſon of Chriſtian the firſt.

35 John George, brother of Chriſtian the 2d. who firſt ſided with the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond againſt the Elector Palatine; and after with the King of Sweden againſt the Emperour.

The Revenues of this Duke are thought to be the greateſt of any one Prince of Germanie (the Imperial family excepted) amounting at the leaſt to 400000*l. per annum*; though in multitude of Vaſſals, and greatneſs of territory he come ſhort of ſome of them. And to make up this ſum (or perhaps a greater) it is conceived that the profit which ariſeth to him out of ſilver mines, is no leſſe than 130000*l.* yearly; the impoſt laid on Beer in Leipſich only, a City but of two Pariſh Churches (by which conjecture at the reſt) being farmed at 20000*l. per annum*. Then hath he the tenths of all ſorts of increaſe, as of corn, wine, &c. the Salt-houſes at Hall, and ſome other places; very fair lands belonging unto his domain; and beſides this, a ſtanding and perpetual tax laid upon the Subject, towards the maintenance of the war againſt the Turk; granted at firſt in times of danger and hoſtility; but gathered ever ſince in the times of peace (as to that Enemy) under colour of being ready and prepared againſt him. According to the quantity of his Intrado ſo he keeps his State, well ſerved, and better attended, than any other of the Electors: there being at one time in the Court of Chriſtian, the Father of the preſent Duke, three Dukes, three Earls, and five Barons of other Nations (beſides the Nobility of his own) all Penſioners and Servants to him; one of the Princes of Anhalt, and one of the Earls of Mansfield, both Homagers unto the Saxon, being two of the number.

The Arms of Saxonie, are Barre-wiſe of ſix pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowred Vert. Which Bend was added to the Coat by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, when he confirmed Barnard of Anhalt in this Dukedom. For Barnard deſiring of the Emperour to have ſome difference added to the Ducal coat; (being before only Barry, Sable and Or) to diſtinguiſh him and his ſucceſſors from thoſe of the former houſe: the Emperour took a Chaplet of Rue, which he had then upon his head, and threw it croſs his Buckler or Escheocheon of Arms, which was preſently painted on the ſame.

18 BRVNSWICK, and 19. LVNENBOVRG.

The Dukedoms of BRUNSWICK and LUNENBOURG, being both originally taken out of this great Dukedom of Saxonie, extracted both from the ſame root, and many times united in the perſon of the ſame one Prince; ſhall be joyned together in the ſtory, though ſevered in the Chorographie, or deſcription of them; bounded on the Eaſt, with Magdebourg and Mansfield in the Upper Saxonie; on the Weſt, with Weſtphalia; on the North, with Denmark; on the South, with Haſſa. The Air in all parts hereof very cold and comfortleſs, but ſound and healthfull; the ſoil towards the old Marches of Brandenbourg, but meanly fertile; towards Duringen and Haſſia, mountainous & woody; in other parts very plentiful of corn, and well provided also of such other commodities, as usually doe grow in those colder climates. Brunswick, and Lunenburg.

But to take the Chorographie of them severally, BRUNSWICK is bounded on the East, with the Earldom of Mansfield; on the West, with Westphalen; on the North, with Lunenburg; on the South, with Hassia. So called from Brunswick the chief City, and the head of this Dukedom.

Places of most importance in it, are 1. Goslar, upon the River Gose, whence it had the name; Of a poor Village, made a City by Henry the first, much beautified and enlarged by Henry the third, who founded here two Churches and a stately Palace. Now one of the Imperial Cities. 2. Helmstat, in the middle way betwixt Brunswick and Magdeburg; first fortified by Charls, son of Charls the Great, for a bridle to the neighbouring Sclaves: and being after given to the Abbats of Werda, was by them sold to William the Duke of Brunswick. 3. Quedelnberg, built also by Henry the first, much increased since by the neighbourhood of a very rich Nunnery, the Abbesse whereof had formerly the priviledges of a Prince of the Empire. 4 Hildesheim, an antient City, honoured with an Episcopal See by Charls the Great, at the first conversion of the Saxons. 5. Grubenhagen, which gave title to a younger branch of the house of Brunswick; a principality and a member of the Empire. 6. Hannover, on the River Lem, well built, very strongly fortified, and not meanly traded. 7. Brunswick, upon the River Onacter, which passeth through it, passed over by many handsom Bridges; the Metropolis of the antient Saxonie, and at this time the chief of this Dukedom: though of it self Imperial, and one of the Hanse. The City of a Quadrangular form, seated in the midst of a plain very fruitful of corn; in compass about two Dutch, or eight English miles; somewhat larger than Nurenberg, and less than Erdford: containing in that compass not above twelve Churches, whereof two have steeples covered with lead, a third with brass, all the rest with tile. Rich, populous, and strongly fortified, on some sides with a double, on others with a treble wall; within which walls are five Cities, distinguished by privileges, but united by Laws. The whole first built by Bruno, son to Ludolphus Duke of Saxonie, and Uncle to the Emperour Henry the first, about the year 861. from whence it had the name of Brunswick, or Brunonis Vicus; by the more elegant Latinists, Brunopolis. 8. Hamelen, on the East side of the Weser, or Visurgis, encompassed with a deep moat, (occasioned by a stream cut out of the River) round about which are divers fortifications, and planted with Ordnance. Nigh unto this town is the mountain called also Hamelen, unto which the Pied-piper (as they call him) led the children of Halberstad, where they all sunk, and were never more seen; but of this story more hereafter, when we come to Transylvania. 9. Wolfehaiten, or Wolfen buttel, where the Duke doth keep his Court. For though Brunswick giverh him his title, yet will it not yield him any obedience, but reputeth her self among the Hansetowns; for which cause there have been great wars between the Dukes and the Citizens. 10. Halberstade, a Bishops See; the late Bishop (or Administrator of the Bishoprick) being Christian Duke of Brunswick, that noble young souldier, who had vowed his life and fortune to the service of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, his Cousin-german; created by King James one of the Knights of the Garter. A Bishoprick of great revenue, and a very large territory, since the alteration of Religion, given with the title of Administrator, to the sons of Brunswick: but now by the conclusions at Munster, assigned over to the Elector of Brandenbourg, with the title of Prince of Halberstade, the Family of Brunswick being to be recompenced with an alternate succession in the Bishoprick of Osnaburg, and some other additionals. 11. Hetfield, the seat sometimes of the old Palatines of Saxonie; but not else observable. 12. Amelungsbame, another town of the said Palatines, by one of which called Sigifridus, it was beautified with a very fair Abby; the principal towns (in those dayes) of this Palatinate; which bordering on that part of the Turingians which is now called Hassia, was taken in by Herman, one of the Lantgraves of that Country, on the proscription of Duke Henry surnamed the Lion; but on the failer of his line, recovered for the most part by the Dukes of Brunswick, the right heirs of Henry.

The Dukedom of LUNENBOURG hath on the East, the Diocese of Magdebourg; on the West, the Diocese of Bremen, a part of Westphalia; on the North, the Elb; and on the South, the Dukedom of Brunswick. So called from Lunenbourg the chief City, once the seat of the Dukes.

Places of most observation in it, are 1 Lunenbourg it self, situate on the River Elvenaw, an Imperial City, and one of the principal of the Hanse; so called from the Moon here worshipped in the times of Idolatry. Of a round form, and seated in a pleasant valley; but with mountains near it: on one of which called Calberg, is a very strong Castle, of right belonging to the Duke, but in the power of the Citizens; who without this Fort, could not be master of their Liberties. The walls about it are of earth, high and broad, and the Ditches deep; the buildings generally fair (for the most part of brick) the chief whereof is the Common-Councel house; the streets broad and long, with two spacious Market-places; but of no very pleasing smell: the whole about a mile and an half in length, half a mile in breadth; containing six Parish Churches. But the thing most considerable in it is the Fountain of Salt, (the greatest riches of this City) and the house in which the Salt is boiled, containing 52 rooms, and in each room 8 leaden pans, in which are boiled daily 8 tuns of Salt, every tun being sold for 8 Flemish shillings, bought by the Hamburgers, Lubeckers, and other Merchants; some part of the profits of it belonging to the Duke, some to the City, the rest to the Adventurers who employ their stocks on it. 2. Cella, the seat of the Duke of Lunenburg. 3. Gethern, of no great bigness or estimation, but for a strong Castle of the Dukes. 4. Oldendorp, situate betwixt the Venaw and the River Esca, memorable for the great battel fought near unto it, Anno 1633. betwixt the Imperialists and the Swedes, the honour and benefit whereof fell unto the Swedes, who killed upon the place 5000 of the Enemy, besides such as were found dead in the fields and high wayes, all covered over with dead bodies; took

Lunenburg. 1500 of them prisoners, and got into their hands 13 pieces of Ordnance, good store of Ammunition, and three mules laden with silver for the pay of the Army: the reputation of this victory drawing in Hamelen, and other places of importance, which stood out before. 5. Verda, an Episcopal See, but made a Lay fee, as most other Bishopricks amongst the Lutherans; the profits thereof being received commonly by a son of Danemark with the title of Administrator: and lastly by the treaty of Munster, appropriated for ever to the Crown of Sweden; the Kings whereof to be entituled Dukes of Verden. 6. Ratenburg, the chief seat of the Bishops of Verda.

The antient Inhabitants of these Dukedoms were the Dugublini of Tacitus, with some parts of the Chauci and Cherusci: these last of most fame for the blow they gave to Quintilius Varus, Lieutenant in Germany, after Drusus, for Augustus Cæsar. Who behaving himself with great insolency towards the Natives, was set upon by these Cherusci, and their confederates, under the conduct of Arminius, a great Prince amongst them; himself slain, and his whole Army consisting of three Legions, miserably cut off, and despightfully used: which loss, and the shame thereof, so distracted the Emperour, (not formerly accustomed to the like misfortunes) that he was many times observed to tear his beard, knock his head against the posts, and cry out in the bitterness of his passion, Redde mihi legiones Quintili Varo. Having long time after this maintained their liberty (for the Romans kept themselves from that time forwards, on the French side of the Rhene) they were at last subdued by the Saxons: continuing part of that great Dukedom till the time of the 3 Othoes, Emperours of the Romans, and Dukes of Saxonie; who looking on the Empire as a state of Inheritance, diminished both the Grandure and Revenue of their antient Patrimony, partly by the Donation or endowment of many Bishopricks, and partly by the Erection of many petit Seigneuries, to be holden under them as chief Lords of all. Amongst which, that of Lunenbourg was none of the least, continuing as a State distinct, till such time as Barnard Lord of Lunenbourg was by the Emperour Otho the 3d. made Duke of Saxonie, and created the first Duke Elector, whereby again united to the rest of that Dukedom, the greatest part whereof he held in his actual possession, together with a Superiority or Jurisdiction over all the residue (the great Bishopricks excepted only) which had been parcelled out, as before is said, and it continued thus united, till the proscription of Henry surnamed the Lion, spoken of before: whose reconciliation being made, by means of Henry the second of England, whose daughter Maud he had formerly maried, the Emperor Barbaroſſa restored to him again the Cities of Brunswick and Lunenbourg, with their severall Territories; of which his two sons Henry and William were first created Earls, then Dukes, the one of Brunswick, and the other of Lunenbourg, by the Emp. Frederick the second. Which honours and Estates do still remain unto their Posterities. Before I come to the successions of which Princes, I shall crave leave to speak of the Original of the Guelsian Familie, Dukes at the same time, of Bavaria and Saxonie; of which they are at this time the sole remainder. A Family derived from one Guelphus (whence it had the name) the son of Isenberdus Earl of Altorf in Schwaben; whose wife called Jermintrudis, having accused a poor woman of Adultery, and caused her to be grievously punished, for having 12 children at a birth; was afterwards delivered of the like number, and all of them sons. Her husband being absent at the time of her delivery, she commanded the Nurse to kill 11. of them; fearing (it seems) the like shame and punishment, as by her instigation was inflicted on the other woman. The Nurse going to perform this ungodly command, was met by the old Earl, then returning homewards: who asked her what she had in her Apron, she made answer Whelps; he desired to see them, she denyed him. Angry at this refusal, he opened her Apron, and there found eleven of his own sons, pretty sweet babes, and of most promising countenances. Examining the matter he found out the truth, and enjoyning the old Trot to be secret in it, he put the children out to Nurse; six years expired, the Earl invited to a Feast most of his own and his Ladies kinred, and attiring the young boyes all alike, presented them unto their mother. Who suspecting by the number of them, what the matter was, confessed her offence, is pardoned by the good old Earl, and carefully educates her children: Whom the Father commanded to be called by the name of Guelpes, alluding to the Whelps or Puppies, which the Nurse told him she had in her Apron. From the eldest of these Guelphs or Guelpes succeeded that Henry Guelph, son of Robert Earl of Altorf, whom Conrade the second made Duke of Bavaria; many of whose posterity enjoyed that Dukedom: increased at last by the addition of the Dukedom of Saxonie, in the person of Duke Henry surnamed the Proud, Father of Henry called the Lion, and Grandfather of Henry and William the first Dukes of Brunswick and Lunenburg, whose succession followeth in this Order.

The DUKES of BRVNSWICK and LVNENBVRG.

1 Henry surnamed the Lion, the last Duke of Saxony, and the first of this Title.

Brunswick.		Lunenburg.
1195	2 Henry, first Earl, after Duke of Brunswick.	1195	2 William, first Earl, after Duke of Lunenburg.
1213	3 Otho, son of William Duke of Lunenburg; after the death of Henry, Duke of Brunswick also.
1254	4 Albert, son of Otho.	1252	4 John, son of Otho.
1279	5 Albert II. son of Albert.	1261	5 Otho II. son of John.
1318	6 Otho II. son of Albert the second.	1330	6 Otho III. son of Otho the second.

1334 7 Magnus

1334 7 Magnus, ſon of Albert II. on the failing of the other houſe, enjoyed both Eſtates.
1368 8 Magnus II. ſon of Magnus the firſt.
1373 9 Henry II. ſon of Magnus the ſecond.
1415 10 William, ſon of Henry.
1482 11 William II. ſon of William.
1503 12 Henry II. ſon of William the 2d.
1514 13 Henry III. ſon of Henry the ſecond.
1568 14 Julius, ſon of Henry the third.
1589 15 Henry IV. ſon of Julius, who maried the Lady Elizabeth, ſiſter to Anne Queen of England.
16 Frederick Ulric, ſon of Elizabeth of Denmark, and of Henry Julius.
1634 17 Auguſtus, ſon of Henry Duke of Lunenbourg, ſucceeded on the death of of Frederick Ulric, and the failer of the houſe of Brunſwick in him, in this Dukedom.

10 Barnard, brother of Magnus the ſecond.
1434 11 Frederick II. ſon of Barnard.
1478 12 Otho III. ſon of Frederick.
1514 13 Henry III. ſon of Otho the third.
1532 14 Otho IV. ſon of Henry the third.
15 Erneſt, the brother of Otho, ſucceeded in his brothers life time: ſurrendring his Eſtate for an Annual penſion.
1546 16 Henry IV. ſon of Erneſt.
1590 17 Erneſt II. ſon of Henry the fourth.
18 Wolfgangus, the brother of Henry the fourth, and Uncle of Erneſtus the ſecond, now Duke of Lunenbourg, Anno 1648.

The Arms of theſe Dukedoms were firſt the ſame, that is to ſay, Gules, two Lions Or, Armed Azure; which Arms they took by reaſon of their extraction from the Kings of England, then Dukes of Normandie; retained to this day by the Dukes of Brunſwick without any addition. But thoſe of Lunenbourg have added three Coates more unto it: the whole bearing being quarterly, 1. Gules, two Lions Or, Armed Azure; 2. Azure, Seme of Hearts Gules, a Lion Azure, Armed and Crowned Or; 3. Azure, a Lion Argent, Crowned Gules; and 4. Gules, within a Border Componie Or, and Azure; a Lion of the ſecond, Armed of the third.

HASSIA.

HASSIA, is bounded on the North, with Brunſwick; on the South, with Veteravia, or the State of Wederaw; on the Eaſt, with Turingia; and on the Weſt, with Weſtphalia. So called from the Heſſi, who having vanquiſhed the Chatti, the old Inhabitants of this Country, poſſeſſed themſelves of it.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached here by Boniface or Winifred, an Engliſh Saxon, (afterwards Archbiſhop of Mentz) Anno 730. or thereabouts: Of whom I find this memorable Apophthegm, That in old times there were golden Prelates and wooden Chalices; but in his time wooden Prelates and golden Chalices. Not much unlike to which I have read another, but of later date, viz. that once the Chriſtians had blind Churches, and lightſome hearts; but now they have lightſome Churches, and blind hearts.

The Country is very fruitfull of corn, and affordeth good paſturage for the feeding of Cattel, of which they have great droves and herds in many places; with great abundance of Stags, and other Deer for the pleaſures of hunting, harboured in the woods hereof; with which in many parts of it, it is very much ſhaded. It breedeth alſo on the Downs good ſtore of ſheep, enriched with the fineſt fleece of any in Germany; the Staple commodity of this Country: and in the mountainous parts hereof there want not rich Mines of Braſſe, Lead, and other metals; which yield great profit to the people.

Chief Towns herein are 1. Alendorf, on the Weſer, (or Viſnegis) of much eſteem for the ſprings or Fountains of Salt which are thereabouts. 2. Friſlar, upon the Eder, well walled, and ſituate in a fruitfull and pleaſant ſoil; belonging to the Archbiſhop and Elector of Mentz; but in regard of the convenient ſituation of it, much aimed at, many times attempted, and ſometimes forcibly poſſeſſed, both by the Lantgraves of Haſſia, and Dukes of Saxonie. 3. Fuld, on a River of that name, remarkable for the Monaſtery there founded by Boniface, Archbiſhop of Mentz, by the name of Saint Saviours, the Abbot of which, is a Prince of the Empire, Chancellor of the Empereſs, and Lord of a goodly territory in this Country; called from hence Stift Fuld. 4. Frankenberg, on the Eder alſo, ſo called from the French, who incamped there in their wars againſt the Saxons; firſt founded by Theodorick the French King, Anno 520. but much enlarged by Charls the Great, about the year 804. 5. Eſchewege, on the brow of an hill near the River Wert; of great trading for the Woad, of which the fields adjoyning yeeld a rich increaſe. Being deſtroyed by the Hungarians, it was re-edified and enlarged by the Emperour Henry the ſecond: and having ſuffered much miſery in the long war between Adolph, Archbiſhop of Mentz, and the Lantgraves of Haſſia, it fell at laſt into the poſſeſſion of the Lantgrave, Anno 1387. 6. Melſingen, on the River Fuld. 7. Darmſtad, lately, if not at the preſent, the ſeat and inheritance of Count Ludovick, of the younger houſe of the Lantgraves, taken priſoner by Count Mansfield, Anno 1622. and his whole Country expoſed unto ſpoil and rapine: becauſe (beſides many other ill offices) he was the chief perſwader of the Princes of the Union, to diſband their forces, provided for defence of themſelves and the Palatinate; and to reconcile themſelves to the Emperour. 8. Marpurg, the ſeat of the ſecond houſe of the Lantgraves, deſcending from that Philip, who was Lantgrave in the time of Charls the fifth, whom he ſo valiantly withſtood; pleaſantly ſeated on the Lon, amongſt Viny downs, and ſhady Mountains; honoured with an Univerſity founded here by Lewis, Biſhop of Munſter, Anno 1426. and beautified with a magnificent Caſtle (the ordinary dwelling of thoſe Princes) ſituate on an high hill ſomewhat out of the Town, which gives it a very Hassia gallant prospect over the Town and Country. 9. Geisen, a Town belonging to the Lantgraves of Cassels, and a small University also. 10 Dietz, upon the River Lon, belonging also to the house of Cassels, 11. Cassels, the chief Town and ordinary residence of the Lantgraves of the elder house, who are hence sometimes called the Lantgraves of Cassels: commodiously seated in a pleasant and fruitfull soil, and well fortified with strong earthen walls, and deep ditches; but the houses in it of no great beauty, being composed for the most part of wood, thatch and clay.

Within the limits of this Province is the County of WALDECK, nor subject to the Lantgraves of Hassia, though included within the bounds of it before laid down, taking up the Western parts thereof, where it meets with Westphalia: in figure very near a square, each side of which is of the length of six ordinary Dutch, or 24 English miles. The soil much of the same nature with the rest of Hassia, save that it hath some veins of Quicksilver, and inexhaustible mines of Coal, which the other wanteth; these last in greatest plenty about Veldung, and the strong Castle of Eisenburg, two of the best Towns and places of it. Others of chief note, 3. Waldeck, it self on the River Eder, the first seat of the Earls hereof, who have here an antient Castle, from wheuce the whole Country takes its name. 4. Mengerhuse, in a fair Castle whereof live the present Earls. 5. Witterberg, in a pleasant and fruitfull Soil, betwixt the Rivers Twist and Abra. 6. Corbach, famous in the times of Albertus Magnus, for its golden Mines, yielding great profit to these Earls. The Pedegree of which Earls is fetched from one Witichind Earl of Swalenberg, whom Charls the Great made Advocate or Patron of the Church of Paderborn in Westphalia, being an Office in these times of great jurisdiction. By Witichind the second, one of his Successors, this Office was surrendred into the hands of the Chapter, for the sum of 300 marks in silver: and to cut off all further claims, Henry, the nephew of this Witichind, by his son Otho, was by the Chapter gratified with the Town of Waldeck, of which he was the first Earl: whose nephew Henry, surnamed Ferreus, subdued Corbach, Anno 1366. and added it to his Estate. By a third Henry, grandchild of this Ferreus, or man of Iron, this Earldom formerly held in fee of the Church of Paderborn, was first put under the patronage and protection of the Lantgraves of Hassia, Anno 1428. as it continueth to this day: the Earls hereof content with their own estates, and more addicted to the Book, than unto the sword, have acted little in the wars to improve their fortunes.

The antient Inhabitants of the whole, both Waldeck and the rest of Hassia, and also of the County of Nassaw in Veteravia, near unto adjoyning, were the Catti, or Chatti, mentioned by the Antients: first conquered (after the withdrawing of the Roman forces) by the Hessi, and both subdued not long after by the Thuringians. Subject unto the Lantgraves of Duringen, till the death of Henry, the last of the male issue of Lewis of Orleans. In the division of whole estate, the Western moiety of Duringen fell to the share of Henry, Duke of Brabant, one of the Competitours, who leaving the title of Lantgrave of Duringen to the Marques of Misnia, took to himself the title of the Lantgrave of Hessen, in memory of the Hessi spoken of before. Of his Successors the most puissant was that Philip, who in the time of Charles the fifth, much swayed the affairs of Germany, Anno 1520, he discomfited King Ferdinand, and restored Ulrick to the Dukedom of Wirtenberg; Anno 1530. he united all the Protestant Princes and Cities of Germany in a common league at Smalcald; for the defence of the Protestant Religion; Anno 1545, he undertook the cause of Goslaria against the Duke of Brunswick, whom in a set battel he took prisoner, together with his son, and possessed his Country; Anno 1548. he united all the Princes and Cities of Germany in an offensive and defensive league against Charls the fifth. But that war succeeded not prosperously. For the Duke of Saxonie, his perpetual Confederate, being taken prisoner, he submitted himself to the Emperour at Kale, or Hale in Duringen, his sons-in-law, Duke Maurice, the Marques of Brandenbourg, and Wolfang Prince of Deuxponts, having given their bonds for his return. The conditions of his pardon were, first, that he should dismantle all his Towns except Cassel. 2. That he should yeeld up unto the Emperour all his munition. 3. That he should pay unto the Emperour 150000 Crowns. The same night he was by the Duke of Alva invited to supper, his sons-in-law of Saxonie and Brandenbourg accompanying him. After supper, he was contrary to the Laws of Hospitality, and the Emperours exact promise, detained prisoner. The fallacy stood thus. In the Emperours compact with the three Princes, the words were, that the Lantgrave should be kept, Nicht in einig gefengknes, that is, Not in any prison: which the Emperours Secretary by a small dash of his pen, turned into Nicht in ewig gefengknes, that is, Not in everlasting Prison. Well, in prison he staid five years; which being expired, he was again set at large by Duke Maurice, the overthrower and restorer of the German liberty. The residue of these Lantgraves in their several times, occur in the ensuing Catalogue of 1263 1 Henry of Brabant, son of Henry, Duke of Brabant, and of Sophia his wife, daughter of Lewis the sixth, Lantgrave of Thuringia; after a nine years war betwixt him and the Marquesse of Misnia, divided the estate, and took unto himself the title of Lantgrave of Hessen.

The LANTGRAVES of HASSIA.

1308 2 Otho, and John, sons of Henry.

1323 3 Henry II. and Lewis, sons of Otho.

1376 4 Herman, the son of Lewis.

1414 5 Lewis II. son of Herman, surnamed the Milde.

1458 6 Lew-

1458 6 Lewis III. ſon of Lewis the Milde.
7 William, the eldeſt ſon of Lewis the third, diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by 8 William II. his youngeſt brother.
1509 9 Philip, the famous Lantgrave ſpoken of before, ſon of William the ſecond.
1567 10 William III. eldeſt ſon of Philip, ſucceeded in one moiety of the eſtate, and reſided at Caſſiles: the other moiety being divided betwixt his brethren Ludowick of Marpurg, and George of Darmſtad, father of Ludowick of Darmſtad before mentioned.
1590 11 Maurice, eldeſt ſon of William the third.
12 William IV. ſon of Maurice, now living, 1648.

Weſtphalia.

The Arms of theſe Lantgraves are Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces, Arg. and Gules, Crowned Or. Which being properly and originally the Arms of the antient Dukes of Franconie, were given by Conradus Salicus, Duke of Franconia, and Emperor, to Lewis of Orleans, at ſuch time as he inveſted him in the Lantgravedom of Turingia: on the expiration of whoſe line, challenged and born by the Lantgraves of Haſſia, as the direct Heirs of Lewis the 6th. and his brother Henry, the laſt made Princes of that houſe.

WESTPHALIA.

WESTPHALIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Haſſia, Brunſwick, and part of Lunenburg; on the Weſt, with the Biſhoprick of Colen, Cleveland, Overyſſell, Weſt and Eaſt-Friſeland, and the German Ocean; on the North, with the Elb, and the Dukedom of Holſtein; and on the South, with Wetteravia, and ſome part of Haſſia.

It was thus called of the Weſtphali, a tribe or diviſion of the Saxons, diſtinguiſhed heretofore into the Tranſalbinos, inhabiting in the County of Holſtein, now a part of Danemark: the Ooſtphali, betwixt the Elb, the Ocean, with the River of Saltza, and the Weſer; taking up the Biſhopricks of Breme, Verden, Hildeſheim, Halberſtat, and Meydburg, with the Dukedoms of Lunenburg and Brunſwick: the Angrivarians, taking up the north-weſt part of the modern Weſtphalen, betwixt the Biſhoprick of Breme, and the Earldom of Colen: and finally, the Weſtphali, or Weſtern-Saxons, inhabiting the reſt of the modern Weſtphalen, with the Earldoms of Mark, Berg, Zutphen, the ſeigneury of Over-yſſell, and ſome parts of Guelderland, and Holland: But the Saxons being ſubjugated by the power of the French, and ſeveral new eſtates erected out of that old ſtock; the remnant of the Weſtphali and Angrivarians, (the Biſhoprick of Breme being added unto the accompt,) were comprehended and united in the name of WESTPHALEN.

The ſoil, according to the ſeveral parts of it, is of different natures: the parts adjoyning to the Weſer being deſert, and barren; thoſe towards the Earldoms of Mark and Bergen, mountainous and full of woods; the Biſhoprick of Bremen, except towards the Elb, full of dry ſands, heaths, and unfruitfull thikets, like the wild parts of Windſor Forreſt betwixt Stanes and Fernham. In other parts exceeding plentifull of corn, and of excellent paſturage; ſtored with great plenty of wild fruits, and (by reaſon of the many woods) abundance of Acorns: with infinite herds of ſwine (which they breed up with thoſe natural helps) of ſo good a relliſh, that a Gammon of Weſtphalian Bacon, is reckoned for a principal diſh at a great mans Table.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chauci Majores about Bremen, the Chanani, Angrivarii, and Bructeri, inhabiting about Munſter, Oſnaburg, and ſo towards to the land of Colen; and part of the Cheruſci (before ſpoken of) taking up thoſe parts which lie neareſt unto Brunſwick, and Lunenbourg. All of them vanquiſhed by Druſus, the ſon-in-law of Auguſtus; but ſoon reſtored to their former liberty, by the great overthrow given by the Cheruſci, and their aſſociates, to Quintilius Varus. Afterwards uniting into one name with the French, they expulſed the Romans out of Gaul: leaving their forſaken, and ill-inhabited ſeats, to be taken up by the Saxons; with whom the remainders of them did incorporate themſelves, both in name and nation. Of that great body it continued a conſiderable Member (both when a Kingdom and a Dukedom) till the proſcription and deprivation of Duke Henry the Lion; At what time, the parts beyond the Weſer were uſurped by Barnard Biſhop of Paderborn; thoſe betwixt the Weſer, and the Rhene, by Philip Archbiſhop of Colen, whoſe ſucceſſors ſtill hold the title of Dukes of Weſtphalen: the Biſhopricks of Breme, Munſter, Paderborn, and Minden, having been formerly endowed with goodly territories, had ſome accrewments alſo out of this eſtate: every one catching hold of that which lay neareſt to him. But not to make too many ſubdiviſions of it, we will divide it only into theſe two parts; viz. 1. Weſtphalen ſpecially ſo called, and 2. the Biſhoprick of Bremen.

In WESTPHALEN ſpecially ſo called, which is that part hereof which lyeth next to Cleveland, the places of moſt obſervation are, 1 Geſeke, a town of good repute; 2. Brala, a village of great beauty; 3. Arusberg; and 4. Fredeborch, honoured with the title of Prefectures; 5. Wadexborch; 6. Homberg, lording it over fair and ſpacious territories. All which, with two Lordſhips, and eight Prefectures more, diſperſed in the Dukedom of Engern, and County of Surland, belong unto the Biſhop of Colen; the titulary Duke of Weſtphalen, and really of Angrivaria, (Engern) as he ſtiles himſelf: the title and poſſeſſion of Duke of Engern, being acquired unto this See by Bruno Archb. hereof, ſon of Henry the firſt, Emp. and King of Germany, ſurnamed the Fowler, with the conſent of Otho the firſt his elder brother. 7. Mountabour, (perhaps Mont-Tabor) ſeated in that part hereof, which is called Weſterwald; a town of conſequence, belonging to the Elector of Triers. 8. Rhenen, 9. Schamlat;

Westphalen, and Breme.

9. Schamlyt, and 10. Beckem, reasonable good towns, all of the Bishoprick of Munster. 11. Munster it self, famous for the Treaty, and conclusions made upon that treaty, for the peace of Germany; seated upon the River Ems, and so called from a Monastery here founded by Charls the great, which gave beginning to the Town; supposed to be that Mediolanum, which Ptolomy placeth in this tract. A beautifull, and well fortified City, and the See of a Bishop, who is also the Temporal Lord of it. Famous for the woefull Tragedies here acted by a lawlesse crew of Anabaptists, who chose themselves a King (that famous Taylor, John of Leiden) whom they called King of Sion, as they named the City New Jerusalem; proclamed a community both of goods and women, cut off the heads of all that opposed their doings: and after many fanatick and desperate actions, by the care and industry of the Bishop and his confederates, brought to condign punishment. The Story is to be seen at large in Sleidan, Mr. Hookers Preface, and some modern pamphlets; wherein, as in a Mirrour, we may plainly see the face of the present times. 12. Osnaburg, first built, as some say, by Julius Cæsar; as others, by the Earls of Engern; but neither so antient as the one, nor of so late a standing as the others make it; here being an Episcopal See founded by Charls the Great, who gave it all the privileges of an University. Liberally endowed at the first erection of the same, and since so well improved, both in Power and Patrimonie, that an alternate succession in it by the Dukes of Brunswick hath been concluded on in the Treaty of Munster, as a fit compensation for the Bishoprick of Halberstad, (otherwise disposed of by that Treaty) of late enjoyed wholly by that Family. 13 Quakenberg, on the River Hase. 14. Warendorp; and 15. Wildshusen, towns of that Bishoprick. 16. Paderborn, an Episcopal See also, founded by Charls the Great, at the first conversion of the Saxons; more antient than strong, yet more strong than beautifull. 17. Ringelenstein; and 18. Offendorf, belonging to the Bishop of Paderborn. 19. Minden, upon the Weser, another of the Episcopal Sees founded by Charls the Great, and by him liberally endowed with a goodly Patrimony: converted to lay-uses since the Reformation, under colour of Administration of the goods of the Bishoprick; and now by the conclusions at Munster, setled for ever on the Electors of Brandenbourg, with the title of Prince of Minden. 20. Rintelin, a strong town, conveniently seated on the Weser, not far from Minden; to the Bishop whereof it doth belong.

Hitherto one would think that Westphalen had formerly been a part of Saint Peters Patrimony, belonging wholly to the Clergy; but there are some Free Cities, and secular Princes, which have shares therein. As 1. Warburg, a neat town, but seated on an uneven piece of ground, near the River Dimula; a town which tradeth much in good Ale, brewed here, and sold in all parts of the Country: heretofore a County of it self under the Earls hereof, now governed in the nature of a Free Estate, and reckoned an Imperial City. 2. Brakel, accompted of as Imperial also. 3. Hervorden, a town of good strength and note, governed by its own Laws and Magistrates, under the protection of Colen. 4. Lemgow, belonging heretofore to the Earls of Lippe; but by them so well privileged and enfranchised, that now it governe h it self as a Free Estate. Here is also 5. The town and County of Ravensburg, belonging antiently to the Dukes of Cleve, and now in the rights of that house, to the Elector of Brandenbourg: As also 6. the Town and County of Lippe, lying on the west side of the Weser; the Pedegree of the Earls whereof some fetch from that Sp. Manlius, who defended the Roman Capitol against the Galls, (they might as well derive it from the Geese which preserved that Capitol;) others with greater modesty look no higher for it, than to the times of Charls the Great; one of the noble Families of the antient Saxons. 7. Here also stands the town and Castle of Aremberg, commanding over a large and goodly Patrimony thereunto adjoyning; which being much increased by the accession of Sedan in the neighbouring Belgium, was by the Heir general of his house conveyed in mariage to Engelbert, the 9th Earl of Mark, whose second son, called Eberhard (but the only one he had by this venter) succeeded in his Mothers Estates and honours; which were kept undivided till Eberhard the 6th Lord thereof of the house of Mark, contenting himself with the titles and Estates of Aremberg, left Sedan and the peeces which belonged unto it, to his younger brother Robert. The Great Grandchild of this Eberhard, called also Robert, created the 1. E. of Aremberg, left his estates and titles to his sister Margaret, maried to John Lord of Brabanson, a person of great note and power in the Belgique Provinces, and faithfull to the last in the cause and quarrel of King Philip the 2d. in which finally he lost his life, Anno 1568. leaving both his Estates and title unto Charles his son, frequently mentioned by the name of Charles Earl of Aremberg in the Stories of the Belgique Wars, in which he was no lesse considerable for his Eminent valour, than for his singular fidelity to his Lord and Master. Some other Lords and Earls here are, but these most considerable: all of them Homagers of the Empire but their acknowledgments hereof little more than titular; though since in danger of performing more real services; the Emperour Ferdinand the 2d. after the surprize of Holstein, and some part of Danemark, Anno 1627. gaining so far upon this Countrie, that had not the King of Sweden come in so seasonably, he had made himself absolute master of it; and by the opportunity of the situation of it on the back of the Netherlands, forced the United States to some great extremities. As for the title of Duke of Westphalen and Engern, it hath been long used (as before was said) by the Bishops of Colen: as also (but with better right, as to that of Westphalen) by the house of Lawenburg, descended from the antient Electoral Family; writing themselves in that regard Dukes of Saxonie, Westphalen, and Angrivaria or Engern.

2. The Bishoprick of BREME lyeth on the other side of the Weser, extending as far as to the Elb, and the German Ocean. So called of 1. Breme the principal City, seated on the Weser, there broad and navigable; the City by that means well traded, populous, and rich; beautified with fair and even even ſtreets, and very ſtrongly fortified, againſt all invaſions, both by Art and Nature; the Town being ſo ſeated amongſt Fens, occaſioned by the overflowings of the River, that it may be eaſily drowned on all ſides, to keep off an enemy. Adorned alſo with a ſpacious Market-place, a fair Counſel-houſe, and a large Cathedral, the See of the Arch-biſhop; who is the temporal Lord of the Town and Territory. Other towns of ſpecial note are 2. Oſenbridge, not far from Breme, from whence great quantity of Linnen is brought yearly to England, and other places. 3. Aruſten, on the Weſer alſo. 4. Oterenberg, on the River Bolla, not far from the fall thereof into the Ocean. 5. Buxtertrude, on the Elb, not far from Hamburg, but on the hither ſide of the water. 6. Stode, Stadt, or Stadium, ſeated on the River Zuinghe, near the fall thereof into the Elb; accompted the antienteſt town in all Saxony, and one of the firſt which was enrolled amongſt the Hanſe; and by eſpecial privilege had the pre-emption of all the Rheniſh wine that paſſed by them, and the right alſo of coining mony. But being over-topped by the power and trade of Hamburg, (5. Dutch miles from it) it grew at length ſo poor, and in ſuch decay, that their yearly Revenues came but to 90 l. per annum. ſo that they were fain to ſell their privileges to the Town of Hamburg, and put themſelves under the protection of the Biſhops of Breme. Revived again upon the comming thither of the Engliſh Merchants, who finding ſome hard meaſure from the Hamburgers, fixed their Staple here: by means whereof the Citizens in ſhort time grew exceeding wealthy; the buildings fair and beautifull, the Town ſtrongly fortified. Situate in a place ſo eaſily overwhelmed with water, that the people in oſtentation of their ſtrength and ſecurity, uſed to have Ordinance of Stone planted over their Gates. But the late German wars have made them ſenſible of their folly: when notwithſtanding their new works, and an Engliſh Gariſon under Sir Charls Morgan, they were compelled to ſubmit themſelves to the Earl of Tilly, Anno 1627. recovered after by the Swedes in the courſe of their victories.

East-Friſeland.

As for the Biſhoprick of Bremen it was firſt founded by Charles the Great, in the perſon of Willibode an Engliſh Saxon, one of the firſt Preachers of the Goſpel in theſe parts of this Country. The town before that time a poor Village only, being made an Archiepiſcopal See, and the Metropolitan of all the Churches of the North, quickly grew up into eſteem, as the Biſhop did in power and patrimony, till they became Lords of this tract. Governed ſince the Reformation of Religion, by Lay-Biſhops or Adminiſtrators of the Rents of the Biſhoprick; which under that title they inverted to their proper uſe. And now of late by the Concluſions made at Munſter, ſetled as an Inheritance on the Crown of Sweaen, to be enjoyed, together with the Biſhoprick of Verda, by the Kings thereof; with the title of Dukes of Breme, and Verden: the antient liberties of thoſe Cities, formerly granted by their Biſhops, being ſtill preſerved.

EAST-FRISELAND.

EAST-FRISELAND is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Weſer, by which parted from Weſtphalen; on the Weſt, with the River Ems, which parteth it from Groyninger, and the reſt of West-Friſeland; on the North, with the German Ocean; and on the South, with the Earldom of Mark, a part of Cleveland. So called from the Friſii, who caſting out the old Inhabitants, poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and called it by their own name, Friſeland: divided by the Ems or Amiſus, into the Weſtern, ſpoken of amongſt the Netherlands; and the Eaſtern or East-Friſeland, in which now we are.

The nature of the ſoil we ſhall ſee anon, when we come to the ſubdiviſions of it. Chief Rivers, beſides thoſe of Ems, and 2. Weſer, ſpoken of elſewhere, 3. Jade, which falleth into a great Bay or Arm of the Ocean, called from hence Die Jadie. 4. Dalliart, on which ſtandeth the City of Emden, 5. Delm, and 6. Honta, neighboured by Delmenhorſt, and Oldenborch, towns of this Country. The whole divided into 1 the County of Emden, or East-Friſeland properly ſo called; and 2 the Earldom of Oldenburg.

1 EAST-FRISELAND ſpecially ſo called, hath on the Weſt, the River Ems; on the North, the Ocean; on the Eaſt, and South, the Earldome of Oldenbourg: called alſo the County of EMDEN, from the fair town of Emden, the chief City of it. The ſoil hereof is very fruitfull both in corn and paſturage; ſending great ſtore of Oxen, Horſes, Wool, Swine, Butter, Cheeſe, and all ſorts of Grain, into other Countries; all of them excellent in their kind, not eaſily to be bettered (if equalled) in any place whatſoever. Chief towns herein are 1 Emden, ſo called from the Ems, on which it is ſituate; Dollaert a ſmall River falling here into it: a noted and well-traded town, beautified with a Haven ſo deep and large, that the greateſt ſhips with full ſail are admitted into it. The people rich, affirmed to have 60 ſhips of 100 tuns apiece, and 600 leſſer Barks of their own; beſides 700 Buſſes and Fiſher boats, maintained for the moſt part, by their Herring fiſhing on the Coaſts of England. The buildings generally fair, both private and publick, eſpecially the Church, the Town Hall, and Earls Palace. This laſt a ſtrong and ſtately Caſtle, ſituate at the mouth of the Haven, and on all ſides compaſſed by the Sea, and yet not ſtrong enough to preſerve the Townſmen in their due obedience: who about 50 years ago, taking advantage on the abſence of their Earl, kept him out of their Town, becauſe he ſeemed not to approve the Calvinian humor; and have ſince governed in the nature of a Commonwealth, confederate with the States of the United Provinces, for their better eſtabliſhment and ſupport. So eaſily is Religion made a maſk to diſguiſe Rebellion. 2 Auricks, by ſome called Oſeling, ſeated in the Inlands, rich, and well walled, of great reſort by reaſon of the pleaſure of hunting, afforded very liberally in the Foreſts and Woods adjoining; drawing hither the Nobility and Gentry in great abundance. 3. Eſen, on the Sea ſhore, which gives the title of an Earl to the Lord thereof; as doth also 4. Jevere, situate on the West of the River Iada, but both Earls subject to the Earl of East-Friseland. 5. Vredeburg (that is to say, the Free Village) so called from some immunities granted by the Earls; possessed a while by those of Brunswick, who fenced and garrisoned it for themselves, but in the end recovered by Ezard the 2d. Earl. 6. Broick, the seat and proper Government of the Ancestors of these Earls; from whence the parts adjoining are called Broickmerland. 7. Norden, another Præfecture or Captain-ship of the said Ancestors. 8. Dunort, a strong Castle and retiring place of the Earls. 9. Linghen, upon the Ems, a strong town well fortified and as well garrisoned; belonging to the King of Spain, as Vicar to the Empire over all Friseland, even to Ditmersh and the confines of Danemark. A dignity procured by Maximilian, Grandfather to Charles the 5th. of the Emperor Frederick the 3d. in right whereof, the King of Spain, as heir of the House of Burgundy, hath some preheminence over Emden, of little use to him since the falling off of the Belgick Provinces More Towns of note I find not in it, but of Castles, stately dwelling houses, and well-built Villages, an incredible number; standing so thick, that in many places they join together: some of them being withall so large, so well peopled, and of streets so spacious, that they may compare with many Cities in Germany; of all which the most City-like is named Leere.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Chauci Minores, described by Plinie to be so barbarous a people, and so destitute of all necessarie provision for the life of man, that they had no drink but rain water, preserved in great troughs before the doors of their Cottages. These outed or subdued by the Frisons, a neighbouring people, possessing North-Holland, the District of Vtrecht, with the Countries of Groyning and West-Friseland: who having once passed over the Ems, extended their Dominions as far as Danemark. Governed by Kings, but intermingled with, and overpowered by, the Saxons, til the time of Charls the Great, by whom the last King Roboald overcome in fight was perswaded to receive the Sacrament of holy Baptism. But being told that his friends and kinsfolks were in hell, because no Christians: neither will I (saith he) be of that profession, for I love to be amongst my kindred. After this, Friseland was a member of the French Kingdome, till the erecting of the Earldom of Holland by Charls the Bald, Anno 893. at which time all Friseland on the West side of the Ems, was conferred upon him; possessed, but not without much war and bloudshed, by his Successors; the Frisons ever and anon rebelling against them, and killing divers of them in the open field. Those parts of it on the other side of the Ems, remained unto the German Empire; governed by Deputies, Lieutenants, and Provincial Earls, accomptable to the Emperors for the Administration, till the year 1453. in which Ulrick Governor hereof for the Emperor Frederick, having got the town of Emden out of the hands of the Hamburgers, was made Earl of East-Friseland; transmitting the Estate & title unto his posterity.

Earls of EAST-FRISELAND.

1453 1 Ulricus, son of Enno, the son of Ezardus, Captains or Governors for the Empire in Broick and Norden, made the first Earl of East-Friseland by the Emperor Frederick.
1466 2 Ezard, the son of Ulrick, who got Vreburg from the Citizens of Brunswick.
1528 3 Enno, the son of Ezard, who regained Greetzil, formerly usurped by the Dukes of Gueldres.
1540 4 Ezard II. son of Enno, who maried Katherine daughter to Gustavus the first of Sweden.
5 Enno II. son of Ezard the 2d. and the Lady Katherine.
1586 6 Rudolphus Christianus, son of Enno the 2d. who being well affected to the Lutheran forms, (first introduced in the time of Enno the 1.) was by a Calvinian party grown up in Emden, dispossessed of that City, Anno 1592.
1608 7 Enno Ludovicus, son of Rudolphus Christianus, succeded in this Earldome on the death of his Father, and is still living for ought I can hear unto the contrary.

The Arms of the Earls of East-Friseland, are Augent, four Bendlets Azure, charged with ten Heurts Or, 4. 3. 2. 1.

2. The Earldome of OLDENBOURG, containeth that part of this Country which lyeth on the West side of the Weser, betwixt the Bishoprick of Munster and East-Friseland, specially so called, and so extending Northwards to the German Ocean. So called from Oldenbourg the chief City of it, and the head of this Earldome.

The soil hereof exceeding rich, but in pastures specially, which breed them infinite Herds of Cattel; and furnish not this Country only, but some of their German neighbours, and many of the more Nothern nations, with Horses, Beeves, Sheep, Swine, Butter, Cheese. Here is also good store of Pulse, Barley, and Oats; plenty of fruits and trees of all sorts. Large Woods, and those well stored with Venison, which yield unto the Gentry the delights of hunting. But the air cold and foggy in some extremity; especially in Winter, and nigh the Sea.

Chief towns hereof are, 1. Oldenborch, on the River Honta, repaired, if not built, by Otho the Great, who founded the Church of S. Iohn Baptist. A Town of no great state or beauty, the houses generally of clay, but the Castle (the dwelling place of the Earls) of well-hewn stones; of an orbicular form with deep ditches of water, the Town and Castle both being strongly fortified. 2. Delmonhorst, on the River Delm, a strong place and of great importance, built in the year 1247. by Otho brother of Earl Christian the 2d. and having been 65 years in possession of the Bishops of Munster, was suddenly surprised on Palm Sunday morning, by Anthony Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1547. continuing ever since part of this estate. 3. Beck-husen, on a River, which falleth not far off, into the great Bay or Arm of the Sea, which is called Die Jade. 4. Equarten. 5. Ovelgard, both seated on a long Languet or Demy-Iland, bebetwixt the said Die Jade, and the River Weser, called Butiada: both taken, and the last well fortified by Iohn Earl of Oldenborch, Anno 1520. belonging formerly to the Prefecture of East-Friseland, but never brought under the command of the Earls thereof. 6. Westerberg, the chief Town, of a spacious territory. 7. Vriesiade, a strong piece, on the River Iade, built by Earl Christiern, one of the younger branches of the house of Oldenburg, about the year 1400. 8. Mellum, 9. Iadelle, places of principal importance; the one on the River Iade, the other near the Ocean. Here is also within this Earldome the Province of Amerlander, supposed by some to have been the seat of the Ambrones; who accompanied the Cimbri and Teutones in their expedition towards the Roman Provinces, and were slain by Marius. Oldenbourg

As for the Earls of Oldenbourg, they derive themselves from Walpert, one of the Nephews of Witikindus, the last King and first Duke of the Saxons: who having about the year 850. built a strong Castle on the borders of Bremen, in the honour of his wife Altenburg, (whom he dearly loved) called it Attenburgum, so called by the Latinists to this day, by the Germans Oldenborch. But his male issue failing in Frederick the 7th. Earl, it came to one Elimar, the son of Haio, a Noble man of the Frisian bloud; who had maried Richsa, the daughter of Iohn, the fift Earl of this Family. From him in a direct line descended Christian or Christiern, eldest son of Theoderick; who being fortunately advanced to the Crown of Danemark, Anno 1448. left his Estate in this Earldome (but reserving the title, according to the fashion of Germany) to his brother Gerrard, the better to take him off from his pretensions to the Dukedome of Sleswich, and the Earldome of Holst; in which he did pretend a share. The patrimony of it much improved, by the additions of the Countries of Rustingen, Oystingen, and Wangerland, all lying on the German Sea; bequeathed by the last Will and Testament of the Lady Mary, Countess of Jevere in East-Friseland, to Iohn Earl of Oldenburg, the third from Gerrard. The succession of these Earls, in regard the Royal line of Danemark, and by consequence of Great Britain, is descended from them, I have here subjoined, in this ensuing Catalogue of 850 1 Walpert, of the race of Witikind the first Earl of Oldenburg.

The EARLS of OLDENBOVRG.

856 2 Theoderick, the son of Walpert.
3 Theoderick II. the son of Theoderick the first.
4 Otho, son of Theodorick the 2.
5 Iohn, the son of Otho, accompanied the Emperor Henry the 2d. in his wars against the Greeks; and Saracens, Anno 1007.
6 Huno, surnamed the Glorious, son of Iohn.
7 Frederick, son of Huno, fortunate in his Wars against the Frisians; the last of the male line of this house.
8 Elimarus, the son of Haio, a Noble man of the Frisian bloud, and of Richsa his wife, the daughter of Iohn the fift Earl.
1120 9 Elimarus II. son to Elimar the first.
10 Christianus, son of Elimar the 2d. surnamed the Couragious, or the Warlike, a professed enemy of Henry the Lion Duke of Saxony; from whom he took the City of Breme.
11 Maurice, the son of Christian, an associate of Arnulph Earl of Holstein, in his wars with Danemark.
12 Christian II. son of Maurice.
13 II. Iohn, son of Christian 2d.
14 Iohn III. son of Iohn the 2d.
15 Conrade, the son of Iohn the 3.
16 Christian III. son of Conrade, a Student in Colen, where initiated into holy Orders, which he relinquished much against the will of his Brother Maurice, on the death of his Father.
17 Theodorick, son of Christian the 3d. the first Earl of Delmenhorst of this line; which fell to him at the death of Nicholas Archbishop of Breme, descended from a younger son of Iohn the 2d.
1440 18 Christian IV. son of Theodorick, and of Hedunigis sister and heir of Gerrard and Adolphus Dukes of Sleswick and Earls of Holstein; elected, on the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus, to the Crown of Danemark, Anno 1448.
1448 19 Gerrard, the brother of Christian the 4th. a Prince of an unquiet spirit, alwaies in wars, and alwaies worsted; he lost the Town of Delmenhorst to the Bishop of Munster.
1500 20 Iohn IV. son of Gerrard, repaired the ruines of his estate, and setled the distractions of it in the time of his Father, being then in exile; and after very much enlarged it by the reduction of Butiada.
1526 21 Antony, the son of Iohn the 4th. by a sudden surprise recovered Delmenhorst from the Bishop of Munster, Anno 1547. which he strongly fortified.
1573 22 Iohn V. son of Antonie, enlarged this Earldome with the Provinces of Fustingen, Oystingen, and Wangerland; bequeathed to him by the last Will of the Countesse of Jevere in East-Friseland.
23 Anthonie II. brother of Iohn the 5th. in whose life time he was Earl of Delmenhorst, and after his death of Oldenburg also: still living, Anno 1648. for ought I can learn unto the contrary.

16 Christian III. son of Conrade, a Student in Colen, where initiated into holy Orders, which he relinquished much against the will of his Brother Maurice, on the death of his Father.
17 Theodorick, son of Christian the 3d. the first Earl of Delmenhorst of this line; which fell to him at the death of Nicholas Archbishop of Breme, descended from a younger son of Iohn the 2d.
1440 18 Christian IV. son of Theodorick, and of Heduigis sister and heir of Gerrard and Adolphus Dukes of Sleswick and Earls of Holstein; elected, on the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus, to the Crown of Danemark, Anno 1448.
1448 19 Gerrard, the brother of Christian the 4th. a Prince of an unquiet spirit, alwaies in wars, and alwaies worsted; he lost the Town of Delmenhorst to the Bishop of Munster.
1500 20 Iohn IV. son of Gerrard, repaired the ruines of his estate, and setled the distractions of it in the time of his Father, being then in exile; and after very much enlarged it by the reduction of Butiada.
1526 21 Antony, the son of Iohn the 4th. by a sudden surprise recovered Delmenhorst from the Bishop of Munster, Anno 1547. which he strongly fortified.
1573 22 Iohn V son of Antonie, enlarged this Earldome with the Provinces of Fustingen, Oystingen, and Wangerland; bequeathed to him by the last Will of the Countesse of Jevere in East-Friseland.
23 Anthonie II. brother of Iohn the 5th. in whose life time he was Earl of Delmenhorst, and after his death of Oldenburg also: still living, Anno 1648. for ought I can learn unto the contrary.

And

And thus we see the present estate of Germany, distracted and divided amongst many Princes, Prelates, and Incorporate Towns, the chief of which are herein mentioned and described. But besides these there are many others of less note, and smaller Territories, which yet are absolute and free: insomuch, that in one daies riding, a Traveller may twice or thrice meet with divers Laws, and divers coins; every free Prince and free City (whose laws the Emperors are sworn to keep inviolable) having power to make what laws, and coin what money they will. And hence in the censure of Kingdomes, the King of Spain is said to be Rex hominum, because of his Subjects reasonable obedience; the King of France, Rex Asinorum, because of their infinite taxes and impositions; the King of England, Rex Diabolorum, because of his Subjects often insurrection against, and deposition of their Princes: but the Emperor of Germany, is called Rex Regum, because there is such a number of Reguli, or Free Princes which live under his command; or rather at their own command, (for they do even what they list) as the Emperor Maximilian the first, well noted.

And to say truth, the publick Government hereof is nothing lesse than Monarchical: the Emperor being accompted amongst the Princes, but as the chief Officer of the Empire; not reckoned of by Bodin and others of our great Statists and Civilians, as an absolute Monarch; such as the Kings of England, France, and Spain, are confessed to be. For the privileges of the Free Cities being made perpetual, the great Estates hereditarie, and the Empire eligible; the Emperors were brought at last to such low condition, as to be made accomptable to the States of the Empire: who if they be perswaded in their consciences, or but think they be so, that he is likely by his mal-administration to destroy the Empire, or that he will not hearken unto good advice, ab Electorum Collegio Cæsarea majestate privari potest (as my Author hath it) he may be deprived by the Electors, and a more fit and able man chosen into the place: and that too, as the Emperor Jodocus Barbatus hath declared in one of his Constitutions, Anno 1410, sine infidelitatis vel Rebellionis crimine, without incurring the crimes of treason or disloyalty. So that the supreme power and majesty of the Empire, seems to reside especially and contractedly in the Electoral College; diffusedly, in the Imperial Diets; by way of execution in the Chamber of Spires, and other the supreme Courts of the several Circles. But that which makes that body which they call the Empire, is the Assembly of the Prelates, Princes and Commissioners of the Free Cities, in their Diets or Parliaments; the Emperor presiding in them: whom he that saw adorned in his royal Robes, with the Imperial Crown and Scepter, with the titles of Cæsar and Augustus given at every word, would think that the whole action did take life from him: whereas indeed he hath not so much privilege as a negative voice, but is to put in execution such Decrees and Sanctions, as these estates assembled have thought fit to make; not able to do any act by his own authority, which may speak him Emperor. But on the other side, the Princes take power unto themselves, of making laws for, and imposing taxes on their subjects: of raising war upon one another, or against a third, and doing many other acts of supreme authority, which in the Emperor would be counted matters of mal-administration. Such points as these, together with the appointing of Judges and the like chief Magistrates, (as they relate unto the Empire) are not to be concluded of, but in general Diets; which may be summoned by or without the Emperor, as occasion serveth. And to this weakning of the majesty and power Imperial, the neighbouring Princes have afforded their best assistance; jealous of their own interesse and decrease of power, if that vast body so well limbed should be strongly joynted; and all the several members of it united under the command of one Supreme head. Clear proof whereof we have in those solemn leagues, and confederations, made in their several times against Charls the fift, and the late Emperor Ferdinand the 2d. as soon as they began to be in some possibility of setling the imperial Majesty in its proper Splendor, and bringing down the Princes of it to a lower pitch.

As for the means by which the Empire is attained, it is, and hath of long time been by the way of Election, as before was noted. The businesse first projected in the Court of Rome, by Gregory the first, then Pope, who being a Native of this Country, thought it the most expedient course to continue the Imperial Title among those of his nation. But whatsoever was pretended, the design of it chiefly was to make the Emperors less powerfull, and distract the Germans (whom they feared) into parts and factions: that so the Popes might have the better opportunity to grow great in Italie. And that the Emperor might be such as the Pope should like of, the matter was so ordered, that the one half of the Electors should be alwaies of the Ecclesiasticks, who being obnoxious to the Popes, and for the most part driving on their interesse, were very like to serve him on all occasions. The Electors only six in number, that is to say, 1. The Arch-bishop of Mentz, Chancellor of the Empire; 2. The Archbishop of Colen, Chancellor of Italy; 3. The Archbishop of Triers, Chancellor of France; 4. The Count Palatine of the Rhene, Arch-Sewer; 5. the D. of Saxony, L. Marshal; and 6. the Marques of Brandenburg, L. Chamberlain. Upon equality of voyces the D. of Bohemia (now King) was to come in for a Seventh; who by Office is to be chief Cup-bearer in all great solemnities. For upon daies of great solemnities, as Elections, Inaugurations, the first daies of the Imperial Diets, and the like to these, these Offices are performed only: and then performed in this manner following, either in person, or by Proxy. Before the Palace gate stands an heap of Oats, so high that it reacheth to the breast of the Horse on which the D. of Saxony rideth; having in his hand a Siver wand and a Silver measure, both which together are to weigh 200 Marks. The Duke still sitting on his horse, filleth up the measure with Oats, then sticks his wand in the remainder of the heap, delivereth the measure of Oats unto some of his Servants who stand neerest unto him; and so attends the Emperor into the Court. The Emperor being entred and sate down at the Table, the three spiritual Electors standing orderly together, say the Grace before him. Then cometh the Marques of Brandenbourg on Horse-back also, with a Basin of water in his hand (the basin being ing of the weight of 12 Marks of silver) and a fine clean Towell on his arm; which, alighting from his horse, he holds to the Emperour till he wash. Next comes the Palatine of the Rhene, mounted on his horse, with four silver platters full of meat, every one of the weight of three marks of silver; which, descending from his horse, after due reverence made, he carrieth and placeth on the Table. And finally the Duke (or King) of Bohemia, entring the great Hall on Horseback, as the others did, with a Napkin on his Arm, and a covered Cup in his hand of the weight of 12 Marks in silver, alighteth from his horse, and presenteth the Cup unto the Emperour. But we must know, that of late times these offices are seldom or never performed by the Electors in their own persons. It is enough if they send their Ambassadors, or substitute some one or other of the Emperours Court to doe it for them.

The Election is usually celebrated at Frankford on the Main, to which place the Electors or their Deputies are to make repair, upon the day appointed by the Archbishop of Mentz; (whose office it is, (as being Chancellour of the Empire) to issue out the Summons for this Assemblie. In their passage unto Frankford, they are to be sufficiently guarded by every Prince, thorow whose Territories or Dominions they are to travel; their Attendants not to exceed the number of 200 horse, of which 50 only to be armed. When they are met they goe into S. Bartholmews Church (the most capacious of that City) where, after the high Mass is said, the three Spiritual Electors laying their hands upon their brests, and the Temporal Princes on the Book, make oath to choose a fit temporal Head for the People of Christendom. Upon equalitie of voices, as it sometimes happeneth, the Bohemian hath the casting voice, and concludes the business; If in the space of 30 days they have not agreed upon a man, then must they have no other allowance, but of bread and water, nor be suffered to goe out of the City, till that necessity compelleth them unto some agreement; which being at the last resolved on, and declared accordingly, the Prince so elected is presently saluted by the Title of King of the Romans; the Title of Emperour not properly to be given unto him, until he have received the Imperial Crown at the hands of the Pope; though since the time of Charls the fifth, without any such trouble to themselves, or the Popes of Rome, the Title both of Emperour and Imperial Majesty is usually conferred upon them from their first Election. The election being finished and signified to the party chosen, the Inauguration was held antiently at 3 several places, viz. 1. At Aquisgrave, or Aken, in the Land of Gulick, where he received the silver Crown for the Kingdom of Germanie. 2ly. At Millain, by the Archbishop whereof he was crowned with the Iron Crown for Lombarie, or the Realm of Italy. 3ly. At Rome, where, at the hands of the Pope himself, he was crowned with the Golden Crown for the Roman Empire. But since, those journeys unto Rome and Millain have been long laid by; the Emperours holding their Elections to be strong enough to make good their title to that dignity, being meerly titular, and their inauguration at Aken, to be as effectual, as if they had also visited the two other Cities. The form of which Elections, the Privileges of the Electors, and other fundamental Constitutions of the German Empire, we find summed up together in the Golden Bull of Charls the 4th. by whom first promulgated, Anno 1359. But we must know, that since the publishing of that Bull, the business of election hath received some change as to the number and the persons of the Parties interessed. For first it pleased the Emperour Ferdinand the 2d. on the Proscription of Frederick the first Elector Palatine, to transfer the Electoral dignity, with the Office of Archi-Dapifer, or Arch-Sewer, from that house to the Duke of Bavaria, the Title of Elector of Bavaria, with all the powers and privileges which belonged unto it, to be infeoffed upon him and his heirs for ever. Which action of the Emperor being protested against by some of the Electors, in favour of the Palatine Family, and in due care unto themselves, in not admitting such a dangerous precedent for the time to come; it was at last concluded and agreed on by the Pacification made at Munster, Anno 1648. that the Duke of Bavaria and his heirs enjoying the said Electoral dignity, with the Upper Palatinate, according to the translation of it from the Palatine family spoken of before; an eighth Electorate should be added to the former number, to be enjoyed together with the Lower Palatinate, by Charls Ludovick, the now Prince Elector Palatine, and his heirs, who also on the failer of the Line of Bavaria, are to be repossessed of their antient rights, the Title of Arch-Treasurer, being given unto them at the present instead of that of Archi-Dapifer, or Arch-Sewer, which they had before.

Now as a step unto the Empire, and for the better assurance of the Imperial Dignity to the Austrian Family, it was cunningly projected by Charls the fifth (having received the Imperial Crown from Pope Clement the 7th.) that his Brother Ferdinand should be chosen King of the Romans, whilst himself was living, and by that means be the more certain of the Empire after his decease. Which policy being followed by all his Successors, the title of Rex Romanorum, or King of the Romans, is grown to be the Title of Heir apparent, or designed Successor, in the present Empire of the Germans; as that of Cæsar was from the time of Adrian, in the Empire of the antient Romans. Insomuch as Rex Romanorum is now defined to be one, who is already so far estated in the Empire, that on the death, deprivation, or resignation of the present Emperour, he is immediatly to succeed. And so accordingly it hath happened since this act of Charls. Who though he laboured under-hand to leave the Empire unto Philip his son and heir, whom he found capable enough of so high an honour: yet he could not do it; it being thought by many understanding men, that on notice of this under-hand practice, his brother Ferdinand, who had the like mind to transmit the Empire to his own Posterity, did secretly lend Prince Maurice his helping hand to drive him out of Germanie, as in brief he did. As for reasons, or to say better, the pretences, upon which Charls did institute this Rex Romanorum, the (for questionless the true reason of it was to perpetrate the Empire in the Austrian Family) they were these that follow. 1. Because that having the command of many Nations, he could not always personally at-attend the affairs of Germanie. 2ly. The troubled eſtate of Chriſtendom, of the Empire ſpecially, occaſioned by the preachings and works of Luther. 3ly. The late Rural war raiſed by the Boors of that Country, on the coming out of theſe new doctrines, and not yet throughly extinct. 4ly. The violent power of the Turks, who by his conqueſt of a great part of Hungary, was grown too near a neighbour to them. And 5ly. The imminent diſobedience in all parts of the Empire. All which conjunctly ſeemed to require ſome Prince both of Power and Title, to aſſiſt him in the bearing of ſo great a burden; and by theſe and the like ſuggeſtions he effected his deſign herein, though thereby he changed in a manner the Imperial Stile: For whereas the firſt Emperours of the houſe of Charls the Great, were Emperours of the Romans, and Kings of Germany; the later Emperours of the houſe of Charls the fift, may not improperly be called Emperours of Germany, and Kings of the Romans. It is true indeed, that the wiſe and underſtanding Duke of Saxonie, ſaw further thorow theſe pretences, than the reſt of the Electors either did or would, and that the main Plot was no other, than to make Germany (as Galba ſaid in his Oration unto Piſo, of the Empire of Rome) unius quaſi familiæ hæreditatem, hereditary in times following to the houſe of Auſtria: and thereupon did openly deny his ſuffrage to the ſaid Election. But finding that the Major part of the Electors were reſolved upon it, he moved for an Act to paſs, prohibiting the continuance of the Imperial Title in any one Family, more than three Succeſſions: in which not able to prevail (as the Game was plaid) he left the Electors to themſelves, by whom Ferdinand was choſen King of the Romans, and not long after crowned at Aken, with the uſual rites, Jan. 16. Anno 1531. The ſame courſe followed by this Ferdinand, when poſſeſſed of the Empire, in cauſing his ſon Maximilian to be elected Rex Romanorum, whilſt himſelf was living; and ſo by all the reſt ſince then, as before is ſaid.

As for the Forces of the Empire, for by that name we are to meaſure the abilities and power of Germanie; we may diſcern them by thoſe Levies which have been raiſed upon particular occaſions, or by the joint conſent of the Free Eſtates aſſembled in the Imperial Diets. Firſt for particular Levies made by private perſons, we find 12000 Foot and 8000 Horſe, raiſed by the Prince Palatine of Zweybruck, for aid of the French Hugonots againſt their King; and on the other ſide, no fewer than 7000 Horſe, under the conduct of the Duke of Aumal, and the Earl of Mansfield, for the ſervice of that King againſt the Hugonots. And as for Levies made by conſent of the States, we find that Charls the 5th. had under his Enſigns at Vienna, 90000 Foot, and 35000 Horſe; Maximilian the 2d. at Javerin in Hungarie, 34000 Horſe, and full 100000 Foot: and finally, that in the war betwixt Charls the 5th. and the Proteſtant Princes, there were no leſſe than 150000 men on both ſides; which numbers, no one Country in Europe is able to equal. In a word, it is generally conceived, that the Empire is able to raiſe 200000 Horſe and Foot, with Arms, Canon, and ammunition of all ſorts, proportionable; which the inſtances before brought do moſt plainly evidence.

Touching the Revenue of the Empire, I find them eſtimated by Boterus, and ſome others ſince, at ſeven millions of Crowns yearly. Which may be true enough, taking the Kingdoms of Hungarie and Bohemia, with the hereditary Eſtates of Auſtria, into the accompt. But ſince they are not ſo united unto the Empire, but they may at ſome time or other be disjoyned again, no reaſon they ſhould come into the reckoning, unleſs it be as the Revenue of the Emperour, though not of the Empire. But as for the Revenue of the Empire it ſelf, taken abſtractedly from the perſonall and patrimonial Eſtate of the Emperour, whoſoever he be, it can amount to no ſuch ſum: the tribute paid by the Free or Imperial Cities (at leaſt 60 in number) amounting to no more per annum, then 15000 Florens, or 1500 l. Engliſh; and what is that, but like a Pepper-corn for a quit-rent in that mighty Continent? By this we may conjecture what the reſt may come to. And though in the way of ſaving charges (which may be reckoned as a part of his income alſo) the Princes and Free Cities be bound to aid him in the time of war againſt the Turk, with 3842 Horſe, and 16200 Foot, which he may challenge without troubling the Diets for it: yet war is ſuch a great devourer, that if the Diets do not grant him greater helps, he is like to be but a ſorry gainer by the undertaking; beſides the ſmallneſs of thoſe forces conſidered with the numbers they are able to raiſe, and the puiſſance of the enemy whom they are to encounter.

Finally, for the Arms of the Empire, they are Sol, an Eagle diſplayed with two heads, Saturn, armed and crowned Mars: the two heads ſignifying (as ſome think) the Eaſtern and the Weſtern Empires. Cuſpinian, a learned German, conceives rather, that theſe Arms are two Eagles conjoyned, and not one Eagle with two heads: and that they were taken up by the German Nation, in memory of the three Legions of Quintilius Varus diſcomfited by them; at what time they ſeiſed on two of the Roman Eagles (the Military Enſign of that people) the third being caſt into the Fennes by the Standard-bearer. But whether it be one or two, certain it is, that the one head is quire pulled off, and the whole body quite ſtripped of all its Feathers; the Imperial dignity being little more than titular, deſpoyled and ſtript of all Authority appertaining to it.

THE Kingdom of DENMARK, or DANEMARK, reckoning in the additions of the Dukedom of Holstein, and the great continent of Norway, with the Isles thereof, now all united and incorporated into one Estate, is bounded on the East, with the Baltic Sea, and some part of Sweden; on the West, with the main Western Ocean; on the North-East, with a part of Sweden; full North, with the main Frozen Seas; and on the South, with Germanie, from which divided on the South-west, by the River Albis; and on the South-East, by the Trave; a little Isthmus or neck of Land uniting it to that Continent.

It took this name from the Danes, of long time the Inhabitants and Possessors of it; so called quasi Danorum tractus, sive Regio, (as Mercator hath it,) because the Country of that people: but rather quasi Danorum limes, the bounds or marches of the Danes, bordering close upon the Dutch; from whom it hath the name of Danemarch.

As for the situation of it in regard of the Heavens, it lieth partly in the Northern temperate Zone, and partly within the Artick Circle: extending from the middle Parallel of the tenth Clime, or 55 degree of Latitude, where it joyneth with Germanie, as far as the 71 degree, where it hath no other bound but the Frozen Ocean. By which accompt, the longest day in the most Southern parts hereof, is 17 hours and a quarter, but in the parts extremely North, they have no night for two whole months, three weeks, one day, and some seven hours over; as on the other side, no day for the like quantitie of time, when the Sun is most remote from them, in the other Tropick. The air hereof by consequence must be sharp and bitter, even in the very warmest places. Of which, and of the nature of the soil, we shall speak more punctually, in the Description and Survey of the several parts.

The Inhabitants generally are of good stature, clear of complexion, well coloured, for the most part healthfull and long-lived: for though they eat and drink beyond measure, they have good digestions. In manners very severe, crafty and provident in the managing of their affairs; but proud withall, and (as the Historian said of another person) Omnium quæ dixerant fecerantve Ostentatores, great Vaunters of whatsoever they do or say, highly opinionated of their own actions, and peremptory in maintaining their own opinions; Religious observers of their words and contracts, and strict in executing Iustice; especially in punishing of Theeves and Pirats. Such of them as do follow the wars, prove reasonable good Souldiers both by Sea and Land; but fitter for the sea than field service: the Magistrate wise rather by experience, than studie; though they love learning, and easily attain all languages which they give their minds to: the old men covetous, the young men thrifty, and the Merchant ambitious. The Nobility and Gentry are generally of as antient families, as most in Christendom, here being some of those houses still remaining, which were present at the pacification made betwixt Charls the Great, and Hemingus King of the Danes: and, which adds much unto their honour, they keep their blood unmixt from mariages with the Vulgar sort; and reckon it for an high disgrace to change their Arms, or make any addition thereunto. The women are fair, discreet and courteous, and know well how to govern their households; exceeding fruitfull in bearing children, but delivered of them with great difficulty. Both Sexes speak the Dutch, or German common (but with some difference in the pronunciation) to all the Northern Nations in Norway and Swethland.

Of no great note for men of learning in the former times; It hath been fortunate in these last, for 1. Tycho Brahe, that renowned Astronomer. 2. Hemingius, a well-known Divine. 3. Bartholinus, a Physician and Philosopher of good esteem. 4. John Cluverus, the Historian, &c. More famous for great Captains, and men of war; especially for 1. Godfry or Gottricus, who setled the government of this Kingdom, and endangered the great Realm of France. 2. Sueno, and 3. Canutus, the fortunate Conquerours querours of England. 4. Waldemare the 3d. a right valiant Prince; but unſucceſsfull in his wars againſt the Hanſe-Towns, then newly entred into league. 5. Chriſtiern the 2d. a great Commander in the wars; but of greater cruelty. 6. Chriſtiern the 4th. little inferiour unto any of his Predeceſſors; to whom we may ſubjoyn (though of different ſex) Qu. Margaret, the Semiramis of theſe Northern Countries; a Lady of a Maſculine Spirit, and not more fortunate than daring in all enterpriſes, as ſhe declared in the conqueſt of Sweathland, and ſubjection of Norway, by her united to this Crown.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached to thoſe of Holſtein (the next neighbouring Country unto Germanie) by S. Angarius, Biſhop of Bremen, the general Apoſtle of thoſe Northern parts, in the year 826. Lewis the Godly then being Emperour of the Weſt. In whoſe time Harald King of Denmark being expulſed his Kingdoms by the ſons of Godfrey or Gottricus, was baptized at Mentz with a great number of that people which attended on him, by the hands of Ebbo Archbiſhop of Rhemes, employed by the Emperour in that ſervice: the converſion of the whole Nation following not long after, by the power and diligence of the Emperour Otho the firſt, aſſiſted by the Miniſtry of one Poppo, the firſt Biſhop of Arthuſen; Sueno, or Swain, then reigning amongſt the Danes. The Norwegians came not in till after, converted in the reign of Olaus the third, Anno 1055. or thereabouts: the Engliſh aſſiſting in the work, and the good King ſo zealous in it, that he was canonized a Saint, after his deceaſe. Relapſing for the moſt part to their antient Gentiliſm, they were finally regained unto Chriſtianity, by the means of Pope Adrian the fourth, an Engliſh man, about the year 1156. before his aſſuming of the Popedom, called Nicolaus Breakſpear. But by whomſoever firſt converted, the Popes of Rome would needs pretend ſome power and juriſdiction over them. Which when they began to exerciſe with too much authority, Waldemar the third is ſaid to have returned this anſwer, Naturam habemus à Deo, Regnum à Subditis, Divitias à Parentibus, Religionem à Romana Eccleſia, quam ſi nobis invides renunciamus per præſentes; that is to ſay, We hold our life from God, our Crown from our Subjects, our Riches from our Anceſtors, our Religion from the Church of Rome; which if you envy us, we do here remit it by theſe preſents. But this renunciation though then threatned, was not made till afterwards: when the whole maſſe of Popery was aboliſhed by King Frederick the firſt, uſing therein the Miniſtry of Bugenhage, a Divine of Pomeren; by whom reformed according to the doctrine of the Lutheran Churches.

As for the Government of the Church ſince that Reformation, it continueth as before it was, by Archbiſhops and Biſhops, in number as before; but much abridged of their Revenues, and a great part of their power. For Frederick, though he found it neceſſary to remove the old Biſhops, (not one of which would be perſwaded to the change of Religion) yet he ſubſtituted others in their places, allowing them a convenient maintenance, with a power of Preſidence in all Church-Aſſemblies, where they are to take the advice of other Presbyters along with them; and out of ſuch Aſſemblies, to receive complaints, to provide remedie againſt ſcandals, and to order all matters, as peculiar Inſpectors, which concern the Church. So that in all the Kings Dominions there are two Archbiſhops, and thirteen Biſhops: that is to ſay, the Archbiſhop of Londen, the Biſhops of Roſchilt, Odenſee, Ripen, Wiborch, Arthuſen, Sleſwick, and Haderſleve, for the Kingdom of Denmark; the Archbiſhop of Nidroſia, the Biſhops of Bergen, Anſlo, Staffanger, and Hammar, for the Realm of Norwey; and the Biſhops of Halar, and Schalholt, for the Iſle of Iſeland: the Churches of Holſtein, (formerly under the Biſhops of Hamburg and Lubeck) being governed by Super-intendents, as the reſt of the Lutherans.

The whole body of the eſtate (as appears by this) conſiſteth chiefly of three members; viz. 1. the Dukedom of Holſtein, containing Wagerland, Ditmarſh, Stormaria, and Holſtein, ſpecially ſo called: 2. the Kingdom of Denmark, comprehending both Juitlands, part of Scandia, and the Hemodes, or Baltick Iſlands: and 3. the Kingdom of Norwey, conſiſting of Norwey it ſelf, and the Iſlands of the Northern Ocean. Which parts we ſhall ſurvey in order, as before laid down, premiſing firſt a word or two of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, in which the Dukedom of Holſtein, and the two Juitlands are contained.

The CIMBRICK CHERSONESE.

The CIMBRICK CHERSONESE, hath on the Eaſt, the Baltick Sea; on the Weſt, the main German Ocean; on the North, the narrow Strait or Fretum, which they call the Sundt; on the South-weſt, the great River of Albis; on the South-Eaſt, the ſmall River of Trave; betwixt which is the neck or Iſthmus, which unites it to Germanie. I know that ſome contract it into narrower bounds, and limit it upon the South, with the River Eydore: but I have drawn it down to the Elve and the Trave, which give it more reſemblance to a Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iſland, than the other doth; diſſenting in this point from the common opinion. It had the name of Cherſoneſus ἀπὸ τῆς χερσὸς καὶ νήσου, à terra & inſula, it being the ſame with a Peninſula in the Latine; of which name there are 5 moſt famous, that is to ſay, firſt, Peloponneſus in Greece, which is now called Morea. 2. Thracia Cherſoneſus in Thracia, near the Sea Propontis. 3. Taurica Cherſoneſus in the Euxine Sea, now a part of Tartarie. 4. Aurea Cherſoneſus in India, which we now call Malaca (of all which we ſhall ſpeak in their proper places) and 5. Cimbrica Cherſoneſus, where now we are. This laſt ſo called from the Cimbri, the firſt Inhabitants hereof, originally deſcended from Gomer, the ſon of Japhet; thence called Gomerii, and Cimmerii, by contraction Cimbri. Leaving the Plains of Phrygia, as too narrow for them, they ſought out new dwellings, and are ſaid to have firſt dwelt in the banks of Palus Mœotis; where they gave name to Boſphorus Cimmerius, there being. Being overcome by the Scythians, they removed their ſeats more Northward, into a Country bounbounded, according to Plutarch, by the great Ocean, on the one side; and the forest of Hercynia, on the other; within which bounds is the Peninsula or country where we now are. They were a people of extraordinary big stature, having blew and red eyes, and lived most upon theft: so that for their sakes, Κίμβρους ὑπονομάζουσι γέρμανοι τοὺς λῃστὰς, the Germans called all theeves Cimbers. It hapned that the Ocean overflowing a great part of their Country, compelled them to seek new seats: whereupon in great multitudes abandoning their dwellings, they petitioned the Romans, then lording over a great part of the World, for some place to settle in. This request being denyed, they proceeded in another manner, winning with their swords, what their Petitions could not obtain. Manlius, Sillanus, and Cepio, all Roman Consuls, perished by them; so that now (saith Florus) Actum esset de Imperio Romano nisi illi seculo Marius contigisset: for he, as we have elsewhere told you, utterly overthrew them. The next Inhabitants hereof were the Saxons, Juites, and Angles; upon whose removal into Britain, the greatest part of it was peopled by the Danes, who still possess it. Holstein.

It containeth in length about 100 Italian miles, and 80 of the same miles in the breadth; and comprehendeth in that tract or extent of ground, 30 walled towns, 6 Episcopal Sees, (besides those of Hamburg, and Lubeck, which are under the Archbishop of Bremen) and 20 Royal Castles and Palaces, as well for the reception of the Nobles and great men of the Country, as the private retirements of the King. The soil naturally more fit for pasturage than tillage; feeding such multitudes of Oxen, that from hence no fewer than 50000 are sent yearly to Germany. Divided at the present into the Dukedom of Holstein, and the Province of Juitland.

The Dukedom of HOLSTEIN taketh up the Southern part of the Cimbrick Chersonese, where it joins to Germanie, extending as far North, as the River Eydore, which divides it from Jutland. So called from the Dutch word Holt; which signifies a Wood, or Forest, according to the nature of it; the Countrey being low, marishie and full of Woods, as it continueth to this day. It contains in it these four Provinces, 1 Wagerland, 2 Stormarsh, 3 Ditmarsh, and 4 Holst, or Holstein specially so called.

1 WAGERLAND is that part of Holstein, which lies on the South East of this Chersonese, bounded on the East, with Mecklenbourg and the Baltick sea; on the West, with Holstein specially so called; on the North, with the Sea Baltick also; on the South, with some part of Mecklenbourg. So called from the Wagrii, a Tribe or Nation of the Sclaves, who possessed this tract; from whence the name of Wagria, in our Latine writers.

Chief towns hereof are, 1. Lubeck, pleasantly seated on the confluence of the Trave and the Billew, near the fall thereof into the Baltick, from which distant five Italian miles. The River capable of ships of a thousand Tun, which commonly they unlade at Tremuren, the Port Town to the City; seated upon the very brink of the Sea, where the united Rivers have their fall into it. It was first built by Adolph, the second Earl of Holstein, Anno 1143. but so well privileged by him and his next successors, that in short time it bid defiance to its founders, (the cause of many differences betwixt it and those Princes) and was made a Dukedom of it self. By Frederick the first it was united to the Empire, after whose death they chose themselves another Duke; who having governed them five years, was subdued by the Danes, and the City made subject to that Kingdom: remaining so, till delivered by the Emperour Frederick the second. By whom again once infranchised, it became Imperial: afterwards listed amongst the Hanse-towns, and the first in estimation of all the company; having above 600 ships of all sorts (some of a thousand Tun and upwards) which belong unto it. But being their Trade is for the most part on the Baltick Seas, which are generally free from Pirats, they are most of them built for burden, and are slow of sail, and little serviceable, if at all, for a fight at Sea. But to return unto the City, it is built upon all the sides of a rising hill, on the top whereof standeth the Church of Saint Mary, (once the Cathedral of the City, for it was Episcopal) whence is a descent to all the gates of the City, affording to the Eye a most pleasing prospect. The buildings very beautifull, and all of brick, the streets streight and even; the Churches (ten in number) in good repair, adorned with excellent imagerie, and much admired even by skilfull workmen: and unto every private house a pipe of water is conveyed from the publick Conduit; according to the pattern whereof, it hath been observed that the Conduits were first made in London, and other places. In a word, there is not any City of Germany, or the more Northern Countries, which can equallize it, either for the beauty and uniformity of the houses, the pleasant gardens, fair streets, delightfull walks without the wals, or for the Citizens themselves, who are much commended for their civility to strangers, and strict execution of justice without partiality. The whole in compass about six miles, fortified with a double wall, deep ditches, and unfordable Rivers. 2. Segeberg, on the River Trave, four Dutch miles from Lubeck, and near the head of that River. 3. Oldesloe, on the same River, in the midst betwixt both. 4. Gronneburg, and 5. Newkerk on the Baltick shore: and 6. Stendorp, more within the land; near the edge of a Lake, out of which runs the River Suentin.

Southwest of Wagerland, lyeth STORMARSH, betwixt the Elb and two lesse Rivers called the Billen and the Store: from which last, and the marishness of the situation, or from that River and the Marsi, once the Inhabitants hereof, comes the name of Storemarsh. Places of most importance are 1. Crempe, on a little River so named, which falls not far off into the Store, and both together not much further into the Elb. A town well fortified by Christian the fourth, and reckoned one of the Keys of the Kingdom; as well appears by the resistnce which it made to the Duke of Fridland, against querours of England. 4. Waldemare the 3d. a right valiant Prince; but unſucceſsfull in his wars againſt the Hanſe-Towns, then newly entred into league. 5. Chriſtiern the 2d. a great Commander in the wars; but of greater cruelty. 6. Chriſtiern the 4th. little inferiour unto any of his Predeceſſors; to whom we may ſubjoyn (though of different ſex) Qu. Margaret, the Semiramis of theſe Northern Countries; a Lady of a Maſculine Spirit, and not more fortunate than daring in all enterpriſes, as ſhe declared in the conqueſt of Sweathland, and ſubjection of Norway, by her united to this Crown.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached to thoſe of Holſtein (the next neighbouring Country unto Germanie) by S. Angarius, Biſhop of Bremen, the general Apoſtle of thoſe Northern parts, in the year 826. Lewis the Godly then being Emperour of the Weſt. In whoſe time Harald King of Denmark being expulſed his Kingdoms by the ſons of Godfrey or Gottricus, was baptized at Mentz with a great number of that people which attended on him, by the hands of Ebbo Archbiſhop of Rhemes, employed by the Emperour in that ſervice: the converſion of the whole Nation following not long after, by the power and diligence of the Emperour Otho the firſt, aſſiſted by the Miniſtry of one Poppo, the firſt Biſhop of Arthuſen; Sueno, or Swain, then reigning amongſt the Danes. The Norwegians came not in till after, converted in the reign of Olaus the third, Anno 1055. or thereabouts: the Engliſh aſſiſting in the work, and the good King ſo zealous in it, that he was canonized a Saint, after his deceaſe. Relapſing for the moſt part to their antient Gentiliſm, they were finally regained unto Chriſtianity, by the means of Pope Adrian the fourth, an Engliſh man, about the year 1156. before his aſſuming of the Popedom, called Nicolaus Breakſpear. But by whomſoever firſt converted, the Popes of Rome would needs pretend ſome power and juriſdiction over them. Which when they began to exerciſe with too much authority, Waldemar the third is ſaid to have returned this anſwer, Naturam habemus à Deo, Regnum à Subditis, Divitias à Parentibus, Religionem à Romana Eccleſia, quam ſi nobis invides renunciamus per præſentes; that is to ſay, We hold our life from God, our Crown from our Subjects, our Riches from our Anceſtors, our Religion from the Church of Rome; which if you envy us, we do here remit it by theſe preſents. But this renunciation though then threatned, was not made till afterwards: when the whole maſſe of Popery was aboliſhed by King Frederick the firſt, uſing therein the Miniſtry of Bugenhage, a Divine of Pomeren; by whom reformed according to the doctrine of the Lutheran Churches.

As for the Government of the Church ſince that Reformation, it continueth as before it was, by Archbiſhops and Biſhops, in number as before; but much abridged of their Revenues, and a great part of their power. For Frederick, though he found it neceſſary to remove the old Biſhops, (not one of which would be perſwaded to the change of Religion) yet he ſubſtituted others in their places, allowing them a convenient maintenance, with a power of Preſidence in all Church-Aſſemblies, where they are to take the advice of other Presbyters along with them; and out of ſuch Aſſemblies, to receive complaints, to provide remedie againſt ſcandals, and to order all matters, as peculiar Inſpectors, which concern the Church. So that in all the Kings Dominions there are two Archbiſhops, and thirteen Biſhops: that is to ſay, the Archbiſhop of Londen, the Biſhops of Roſchilt, Odenſee, Ripen, Wiborch, Arthuſen, Sleſwick, and Haderſleve, for the Kingdom of Denmark; the Archbiſhop of Nidroſia, the Biſhops of Bergen, Anſlo, Staffanger, and Hammar, for the Realm of Norwey; and the Biſhops of Halar, and Schalholt, for the Iſle of Iſeland: the Churches of Holſtein, (formerly under the Biſhops of Hamburg and Lubeck) being governed by Super-intendents, as the reſt of the Lutherans.

The whole body of the eſtate (as appears by this) conſiſteth chiefly of three members; viz. 1. the Dukedom of Holſtein, containing Wagerland, Ditmarſh, Stormaria, and Holſtein, ſpecially ſo called: 2. the Kingdom of Denmark, comprehending both Juitlands, part of Scandia, and the Hemodes, or Baltick Iſlands: and 3. the Kingdom of Norwey, conſiſting of Norwey it ſelf, and the Iſlands of the Northern Ocean. Which parts we ſhall ſurvey in order, as before laid down, premiſing firſt a word or two of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, in which the Dukedom of Holſtein, and the two Juitlands are contained.

Holſtein. whom it held out 13. moneths, and yeelded at the laſt upon good conditions, Anno 1628. 2. Tychenberg, (Tycbopol s my Auchor calls it) a Dutch mile from Crempe, but on the very bank of the river Elb, where it receives the Rhin, a ſmall River, upon which it is ſeated: firſt built, and afterward well fortified by Chriſtiern the fourth, of purpoſe to command the Elb, and put a ſtronger bridle in the mouths of the Hamburgers, Anno 1603. now held to be the ſtrongeſt piece of all his Dominions; the only Town of all this Dukedom, which yeelded not to the prevailing Imperialiſts in their late wars againſt the Danes, An. 1628. 3. Bredenberg, a ſtrong town, belonging to the Rantzovés, one of the beſt pieces of the Kingdom; remarkable for the ſtout reſiſtance which it made to Wallenſtein, (Duke of Fridland) in the war aforeſaid: who at laſt taking it by aſſault put all the ſouldiers to the ſword. 4. Pippenberg, another ſtrong place, and of very great conſequence. 5. Jetzeho, on the River Store. 6. Gluck-Stade, upon a Creek or Bay of the German Ocean, repaired and fortified by the ſaid Chriſtiern the fourth (who much delighted in the place) to command the paſſage up the Elb. 7. Store. 8. Hamburg, upon the Billen, where it falls into the Elb; an antient City, built in the time of the Saxons, repaired by Charls the Great, and walled by the Emperour Henry the fourth. Accounted ſince that time an Imperial City, and made one of the Hanſe, on the firſt incorporating of thoſe Towns. Which notwithſtanding, on a controverſie ariſing about that time, betwixt the Earl of Holſtein and the people hereof, it was adjudged to belong to the Earls of Holſt; and that determination ratified by Charls the fourth, Anno 1374. In purſuance whereof the Hamburgers took the Oath of Allegeance, to Chriſtiern Earl of Oldenburg, the firſt King of Denmark of that houſe, as Earl of Holſt; acknowledging him and his ſucceſſors for their lawfull Lords: though ſince they have endeavoured to ſhake off that yoak, preſuming very much on their power at Sea, and the aſſiſtance which they are aſſured of upon all occaſions from the reſt of the Hanſetowns. As for the Town it ſelf, it is ſeated in a large plain, with fat and rich paſtures round about it: well fortified by art and nature; the Haven being ſhut up with a ſtrong iron chain. The buildings for the moſt part of brick, but more beautifull than well contrived, and the ſtreets ſomewhat of the narroweſt. The publick ſtructures very fair, eſpecially the Counſel-houſe, adorned with the Statua's of the Nine Worthies, carved with very great Art; the Exchange, or meeting place for Merchants, and nine large Churches. The Citizens generally rich, maſters of many as great ſhips as ſail on the Ocean, ſome of them 1200 tun in burden; which bring in great profit; beſides the great reſort of Merchants, and their Factors, from moſt places elſe; ſometimes the Staple town for the Cloth of England, removed on ſome diſcontents to Stode, and from thence to Holland. It is obſerved, that there was in this town at one time 177 Brewers, and but 40 Bakers, nor more than one Lawyer and one Phyſician. The reaſon of which diſproportion was, that a Cup of Nimis was their only Phyſick; their differences ſooner ended over a Can, than by order of Law; Bread being accounted but a binder, and ſo not to be uſed, but in caſe of neceſſity.

Betwixt the Rivers Store and Eydore, coaſting along the German Ocean, lies the Province of DITMARSH, moſt properly called Tuitſchmarſh, from the mariſhneſs of the ground, and the Dutch Inhabitants; or from a mixture of thoſe people, with the Marſi, ſpoken of before. The people being naturally of the Saxon race, retain much of the ſtomach and animoſity of the antient Saxons: never brought under the command of the Earls of Holſt (as Wagerland, and Storemarſh were) till Holſt it ſelf was joined to the Crown of Denmark. And though it was aliened from the Empire by Frederick the third, and given in Fee to Chriſtiern Earl of Oldenburg, the firſt King of that houſe, An. 1474, yet would they not ſubmit unto his authority: but held it out againſt him and ſome of his ſucceſſors, whom in the year 1500 they vanquiſhed in the open field; till broken, and made ſubject, by the valour and good fortune of King Frederick the ſecond, Anno 1559. Chief places in it are 1. Meldorp upon the Ocean, the chief Town of the Province; the Inhabitants of which are ſo wealthy, that many of them cover their houſes with copper. 2. Londen, oppoſite to a Peninſula or Demi-Iſland called Eldenſtede on the Weſt ſide whereof it ſtandeth. 3. Heinincksſte, and 4. Tellincksſte; of which nothing memorable.

And as for HOLSTEIN it ſelf, the fourth and laſt member of this Eſtate, though the firſt in power and reputation, it taketh up the Inland parts, betwixt Storemarſh and Juitland, ſave that it hath an outlet into the Baltick, on the Northweſt of Wagerland. Chief places in the which are, 1. Kyel, (Chilonium in Latine) ſeated upon a navigable Arm of the Baltick Sea, parting Wagerland from the Dukedom of Sleſwick: a Town well traded, and having a capacious haven, ſeldom without good ſtore of ſhipping, from Germany, Lifeland, Sweden, and the reſt of Denmark. 2. Rendesberg, the beſt fortified piece in all this Province. 3. Niemunſter, on the Northweſt of the Store, not far from the head of it. 4. Wilſtre, on a ſmall River ſo called. 5. Bramſtede, 6. Borſholm, not much obſervable, but for a Monaſtery in which Henry one of the Earls hereof (of a younger houſe) turned Monk and dyed, Anno 1241.

The antient Inhabitants of this and the other three, were the Saxons, Sigalones, and Subalingii, placed here by Ptolemie; whom I conceive to be no other than ſome Tribes of the Cimbri, of whom this Cherſoneſe took name. The two laſt paſſing into the name of the firſt, and in the declination of the Roman Empire marching over the Elb, and ſpreading all along the Coaſts of the German Ocean, moleſted with their piracies and depredations, the ſhores of Britain. Known by that means unto the Britains, they were invited to aſſiſt them againſt the Scots: which action with the aid of the Jutes and Angli, (Inhabitants together with them of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe) they performed ſo honeſtly, as to make themſelves maſters of the beſt part of the Iſland. Such as remained behind not being able to defend their own againſt the Sclaves, were fain to quit the parts lying next to Mecklenburg: which being peopled by the Wagrii, took the name of Wagerland. But the Saxons being vanquiſhed by Charls the Great, these on the North side of the Elb, became a part of the great Dukedom of Saxonie; and so continued [illegible] dismembred by Lotharius both Duke and Emperour: who gave the proper Holst (or Holstein, specially so called) with the Province of Storemarsh, to Adolph Earl of Schaumburg, who had deserved well of him in his wars, with the title of Earl of Holstein, Anno 1114. By Adolph the second, his successor, setled in this house, who having made a full conquest of it, caused it to be planted with Colonies of Dutch or Germans, from Holland, Westphalen, and Friseland; by which means the name of Sclaves was at last worn out. By Gerrard the fifth, the Dukedom of Sleswick was also added; conferred upon him by the bounty of Margaret Queen of Denmark, in whose wars he served. Adolph the last Earl of this house dying without issue, the whole Estate fell on Christiern, son of Theodorick, Earl of Oldenburg, and of Heduigis his wife, sister and heir to Adolph before mentioned: who being called to the Crown of Denmark, compounded with his brother Gerrard for the sum of 50000 Marks: and having gotten Ditmarsh also of the Emperour Frederick the third, prevailed so far, as to have the whole Estate erected into a Dukedom, Anno 1474. to be held by him and his successors of the sacred Empire. Which said, we will next add the Catalogue of Iuitland.

The EARLS and DUKES of HOLSTEIN.

1114 1 Adolph of Schaumburg, by Lotharius, Emperour, and Duke of Saxonie, made the first Earl of Holstein.

1137 2 Adolph II. son of Adolph the first,

1164 3 Adolph III. son of Adolph the second, vanquished by Canutus, King of the Danes, lost himself and his Country.

1232 4 Adolph IV. in his fathers life time recovered his estate from Waldemar the successor of Canutus, overcome by him in a well-fought battel, Anno 1226. his father then prisoner to the Danes.

1261 5 Gerrard, the 2d. son of Adolph the fourth, his elder brother John making choice of Wagerland, succeeded in Holstein.

1281 6 Henry, the son of Gerrard, the first that set up a Custome-house at Hamburg, for receipt of his tols and taxes.

1310 7 Gerrard II. son of Henry, slain treacherously by the Danes.

1339 8 Henry II. son of Gerrard the second.

1381 9 Gerrard III. son of Henry the second, created the first Duke of Sleswick, by Queen Margaret of Denmark.

1404 10 Henry III. son of Gerrard the third.

1427 11 Adolphus V. commonly called the XII. (those of the younger houses being reckoned in) the last Earl of this house.

1459 12 Christiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, Sweden, and Norwey, son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of his wife Heduigis, sister of Henry, and Adolphus, the two last Earls, succeeded in the Earldome of Holstein: inlarged with the addition of Ditmarsh, and erected into a Dukedom by the Emperor Frederick the third, Anno 1474. But seeing that Otho Earl of Schaumberg, pretended a right unto the whole, as the next heir male, according to the constitutions of the Empire of which it was holden; and Gerrard the brother of Christiern put in for his share, according to the ill custom of Germanie, of which it was then counted part: he was fain to buy his peace of both: giving to Otho 43000 Florens in ready mony, with the Towns of Pinnenberg, Haltzburg, and Bramstede, the antient possessions of the Earls of Schaumberg; and 50000 marks to his brother Gerrard, besides his whole interest in the Earldom of Oldenburg, as before was said. By this means Holstein was united to the Crown of Denmark, the Kings whereof as Dukes of Holst, being counted Princes of the Empire; but neither send unto the Diets, nor contribute any thing at all to the publick taxes, nor acknowledge any kind of subjection to it, more than meerly titulary. Only it was ordained at the request of the Subjects, when first they were incorporated into that Kingdom, that in case of any grievance, or unjust sentence in the ordinary Courts of Justice, wherein they found no remedie in the supreme Council of the Province; it might be lawfull for them to appeal to the Imperial Chamber, as they had done formerly. Which as it was granted to content them at the present time, on sufficient caution; so hath it seldom or never been put in practice: the very grant or privilege (if such it were) being in a manner worn out of memory. But since this uniting of the two Estates, the title of Duke of Holstein, and a good part of the Country, was given unto Adolphus, brother of Christiern the 3d. (created by Queen Elizabeth one of the Knights of the Garter, An. 1560) who governed it interchangeably with the King in their several turns: after whose death, and the death of all his children dying without issue male, the Title of it was conferred on Ulrick, son of Frederick the second, and brother of Christiern the fourth; created Knight of the Garter by King James, Anno 1605.

IUITLAND.

IUITLAND, containeth all the rest of the Cimbrick Chersonese, divided from the Dukedom of Holst by the River Eydore, the antient boundary betwixt the Saxons and the Danes: but principally by a long trench and wall from one Sea to the other, of such breadth that a chariot or two horsemen a breaſt might ride upon it. Firſt built in imitation of the Picts wall in England, by Godfred King of Denmark, in the time of Charles the Great: either to hinder the dayly incurſions of the Saxons, as ſome, or to ſtop the current of the victories of the ſaid Charles, as others think. The tract whereof, ſtill very eaſie to be ſeen, is called Dennewerck, (or the Danes work) to this very day.

It was ſo called from the Juites, who together with the Angli, and neighbouring Saxons, made a conqueſt of the beſt part of Britain. The Country ſo abounding in Cattel, that it ſendeth yearly into Germany 50000 Oxen, beſides great ſtore of Butter, Cheeſe, Tallow, Hides and Horſes: divided commonly into North-Juitland, and South-Juitland; or Juitland ſpecially ſo called, and the Dukedom of Sleſwick.

SOUTH-JUITLAND, or the Dukedome of SLESWICK, is that part of the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe which lies next to Holſtein: called South-Juitland, from the Southern ſituation of it; and Sleſwick, from the chief Town of it, and the head of this Dukedom. The Country, for the moſt part, plain, little ſwelled with mountains: the fields whereof do interchangeably yeeld both fiſh, and corn. For during one three years they ſow it conſtantly, and reap the fruits of it; and for the next three let the Pooles overflow the land, to the end the fiſh may eat up the graſs (whom they catch as often as they pleaſe) and the mud which is left behind inrich the ſoil. But beſides their Pools, they have alſo on the Baltick ſhores many goodly Bays; not only commodious for Merchants, but well-ſtored with fiſh, and with Salmons ſpecially.

Chief Towns herein are 1. Flensburg, ſeated amongſt very high Mountains, on the ſhore of the Baltick Sea, where there is a Port ſo deep, ſo ſafe, and ſo commodious, that all the Inhabitants thereof in a manner may lade and unlade their ſhips, cloſe to their houſes. 2. Huſem, upon the German Ocean, not far from the mouth of the River Eydore. 3. Haderſleve, a Biſhop See, if not rather ſome Town or Manor of the Biſhops of Sleſwick, ſituate on a navigable inlet of the Baltick Sea, where with it is almoſt incompaſſed: beautified with the fair Caſtle of Hansburg, begun by John the eldeſt ſon of King Chriſtiern the firſt, then Duke of Holſt; but finiſhed by Frederick the ſecond, King of Denmark. 4. Londenberg, in the Peninſula called Elderſtede, over againſt De Sorants, an Iſland of the German Ocean. 5. Sternberg, the ordinary reſidence of the Governour for the King of Denmark. 6. Gottorp, a ſtrong Fort or Caſtle of the Duke of Sleſwicks, at the end of a large Bay or in-let of the Baltick alſo: remarkable for the Toll-booth, or cuſtom-houſe there erected, at which there, is Toll paid one year with another for 50000 Oxen, ſent out of North-Juitland into Germanie. 7. Sleſwick, originally by the Danes called Heydebui, built, as they ſay, by Hethe, a Queen of that Nation; but by the Saxons called Sleſwick, as the Town upon the River Slea, there running into the Baltick, and giving to the Town a fair and commodious Haven. This of long time hath been accounted the chief Town of this Province, honoured with an Epiſcopal See, and being made the head of the Dukedom; ſo giving name unto the whole. A Dukedom firſt erected by King Henry of Denmark, who gave it to Waldemar, great Grandchild of Abel, a former King, Anno 1280. to be held by him under the right and ſoveraignty of the Kings thereof. But the male-iſſue failing, it returned to the Crown, and was by Margaret Queen of Denmark, conferred on Gerrard, Earl of Holſtein, as before was ſaid, Anno 1386. Repenting afterwards of that Act, ſhe extorted it out of the hands of the Widow of Gerrard; again recovered by the valour and good fortune of his ſon Adolphus. After whoſe death it fell, together with Holſtein, upon Chriſtiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, as before related; by whom incorporated with that Crown; never ſince aliened, but aſſigned ſometimes in portion for the younger Princes; the Patrimony at this time of the ſons of Alexander, ſurnamed of Sunderburg, (the place of his Nativity) ſon of John, one of the younger ſons of King Chriſtiern the third.

NORTH-JUITLAND, the moſt Northern part of all the Cherſoneſe, hath on the South, the Dukedom of Sleſwick; but on all other parts the Sea. Divided commonly, according to the number of the Biſhopricks, into four Dioceſes, or Diſtricts, that is to ſay,

1. the Dioceſe of RIP or Ripen, bordering next to Sleſwick, containeth 30 Prafectures or Herets, (as they uſe to call them) ſeven Cities, or walled Towns, and ten Caſtles. The chief of which are 1. Ripen, the Epiſcopal See, ſituate near the German Ocean. 2. Koldins, on a Creek of the Baltick Sea; where Dorothy the Dowager of Chriſtiern the third, built a publick School, (one of my Authors calls it an Univerſity.)

2. The Dioceſe of ARTHUSEN lying on the North of Ripen, but more towards the Baltick, containeth 31 Herets or Prefectures, ſeven Cities, or walled Towns, and five Caſtles. The chief whereof are 1. Arthuſen, the Epiſcopal See, ſeated on the Baltick, enjoying a commodious Port, and well-frequented; the firſt Biſhop hereof being that Poppo, who converted this Nation: Chriſtianity and Epiſcopacy going, for the moſt part, hand in hand together. 2. Schunderburg, on the South of Arthuſen. 3. Kalla, a ſtrong Caſtle of the Kings, ſeated in the inmoſt part of a large Bay, occaſioned by the Premontorie, or Cape of Hillenis; extending hence two Dutch miles to the high hill of Ellemanberg. Oppoſite whereunto, and pertaining to this Juriſdiction, lie the Iſlands of 1. Samſoe, 2. Hiolm, 3. Tuen, 4. Hiarnee (perhaps Gerno) 5. Hilgenes, and others.

3. The Dioceſe of WIBORCH, on the North of Arthuſen, containeth ſixteen Herets, the Iſlands of 1. Jegen, 2. Hanſholm, 3. Oſtholm, 4. Ciſland, 5. Egholm, and 6. Bodum: three Cities, or walled Towns, and as many Caſtles. The principal of which are 1. Wiborch, the Epiſcopal See, an Inland City; but ſituate on a water which runneth into the Bay of Limford. The ordinary ſeat of Judicature, for both the Juitlands; for all Cauſes, as well Criminal, or Civil: the Court continually ſitting from one day to another, unleſs perhaps the Judges doe ſometimes adjourn it for their own refreſhments.

4. The

4. The Diocese of BYRGLAVE, or Vandalia, lying furtheſt North, is commonly ſubvided into four parts or members; that is to ſay, 1. Thyland, lying South of the Bay of Limford, on the Baltick ſide, whoſe chief Town is 1. Alborch; the ordinary ſeat and reſidence of the Biſhop of Vandalia, from hence many times ſtiled Alburgenſis; ſituate on the Bay aforeforeſaid, which opening into the Baltick Sea, extendeth thorow the main Land Weſtwards, almoſt as far as the German Ocean 2. Morſee, lying on the Ocean, and containing three Prefecturet, or Herets, the Town of Nicopen, the Caſtle of Lunſted, and the Iſle of Ageroe. 3. Hanhwet, on the horthweſt of the Bay of Limford, containing four Herets, the Town of Thyſtad, where Chriſtiern the third founded a publick School, or ſuch another Univerſity as that of Kolding; the Caſtle of Orumne, and the Iland of Oland, and Oxcholm. There is in this part alſo, the high Rock called Skaringelim, a noted Sea-mark; fitly ſerving to give notice to the Sayler, of the Quickſands which lye underneath it, and about this Coaſt. 4. Venſyſſel, Venſilia, or Wenſlie, that is (as Mercator doth expound it) Vandalorum ſedes, the ſeat of the Vandals; taketh up all the reſt of the north of Jutland, containing ſix Prefectures; the Ilands of Groyſholm, 2. Hartzholm, and 3. Tydſholm; three towns, and one Caſtle, the moſt remarkable of which is Schagen, with the moſt northerly point of all this Cherſoneſe. In this part is a very high mountain called Mount Alberg, in which are found ſome marks and remainders of the antient Gyants, as the Inhabitants believe, and report accordingly.

Baltick Iſlands.

The Inhabitants of both Jutlands in the time of Ptolemy, and before, were the Cobandi, Chali, Phunduſii, Charudes, and in the moſt Northern tracts the Cimbri; of whom the four firſt were but Tribes or Nations. Theſe moving towards the South in that great expedition againſt Spain, made by the neighbouring Vandals, on the Roman Empire, occaſioned the Jutes and Angli to inlarge or ſhift their dwellings: each taking up the parts which lay neareſt to them. The Jutes, or Gutæ, being a people of Scandia, and there placed by Ptolemy, took up the Nothern parts thereof from them, named Jutland: the other being a people of the Suevi, dwelling on the South of the Elb, poſſeſſed them of thoſe parts which lay next the Saxons, their old friends and confederates, (their chief Town being Sleſwick) where Angelen, now an obſcure village, once of greater note, doth preſerve their memory. But theſe uniting with the Saxons, in the conqueſt of Britain, and leaving none behind which were fit for action, or not enough to keep poſſeſſion of the Country againſt new Invaders; gave opportunity to the Danes to come in upon them. By whom theſe Countries being conquered, as far as to the River Eydore, were planted by Colonies of Danes, and made a part of that Kingdome; of whom we ſhall ſay more in the cloſe of all: firſt taking a ſurvey of the Baltick Ilands, and ſuch Provinces on the main land of Scandia, as properly make up the Kingdome of Denmark.

2 The BALTICK ILANDS.

The BALTICK ILANDS are in number 35. and are ſo called, becauſe they lye diſperſed in the Baltick Ocean. At this day it is called by the Germans, De Ooſt zee; antiently by ſome, Mare Suevicum; by Pomponius Mela, Sinus Codanus; by Strabo, Sinus Venedicus; but generally, Mare Balticum: becauſe the great Peninſula of Scandia, within which it is, was by ſome Writers of the middle and darker times, called Baltbia. It beginneth at the narrow paſſage called the Sound; and interlacing the Countries of Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and Poland, extendeth even to Livonia, and Lituania. The reaſons why this Sea being ſo large, doth not ebbe and flow, are 1. the narrowneſs of the ſtrait, by which the Ocean is let into it; and 2. the Nothern ſituation of it, whereby the Celeſtial Influences have leſſe power upon it. The principall of this great ſhole of Ilands, are 1. Seland, 2. Fuinen, or Fionia, 3. Langeland, 4. Lawland, 5. Falſtre, 6. Azze, 7. Alen, 8. Toſinge, 9. Wheen, 10. Fimera, and 11. Bornholim. Some other of leſs note we ſhall only name, and ſo paſſe them over.

1. SELAND, the greateſt Iland of the Baltick Seas, is ſituate near the main Land of Scandia, from which parted by a narrow Strait or Fretum, not above a Dutch mile in breadth, commonly called by the name of the Sundt, or Sound. A Strait thorow which all ſhips which have any trading to, or from the Baltick, muſt of neceſſity take their courſe: all other paſſages being barred up with impaſſable Rocks; or otherwiſe prohibited by the Kings of Denmark, upon forfeiture of all their goods. So that being the only ſafe paſſage which theſe Seas afford, one may ſometimes ſee two or 300 ſhips in day paſs thorow it: all which pay a toll or impoſition to the King according to their bils of lading. And to ſecure this paſſage, and command all Paſſengers, there are 2 ſtrong Caſtles, the one in Scandia, called Helſinbourg, whereof more anon; the other in this Iland, which is called Croneberg.

But before we come unto this Caſtle, we muſt view the other parts of the Iland, being in length two daies journey, and almoſt as much in breadth: the ſoil ſo fertile, that without any manuring or charge at all, it yieldeth plenty of all neceſſaries for the life of man. It was antiently called Codonania, and containeth it in fifteen Cities or walled Towns, and twelve Royal Caſtles. The principal whereof, are 1. Haffen, or Hafnia, the Metropolis of the Ilands; by the Dutch called Copenhagen, or the Haven of Merchants, ſituate near the Sea, with an handſome Port; the Iſle of Amager which lyeth on the Eaſt-ſide of the Town, making a very ſafe road for all kinds of ſhipping. The town of an orbicular form, and reaſonably well fortified; but the buildings mean, for the moſt part of clay and timber, only to be commended for a ſpacious Market-place. Yet herein, as the chief Town of all the Kingdome, and ſituate in the heart of thoſe dominions, is the Palace Royal; built of Free ſtone, in form of a Quadrangle, but of no great beauty or magnificence. Moſt memorable for the Univerſity here founded by Henry or Ericus the ninth; but perfected by King Chriſtiern the firſt, by whom, and the ſucceeding Princes, liberally endowed. 2. Frederikſburg, amongſt Woods of Beech, built for a place of pleaſure by Frederick the ſecond, where the King hath a fine houſe, and a little Park; in which (amongſt other forein Beaſts) are ſome fallow Deer tranſported hither out of England, in the 24 year of Queen Elizabeth. 3. Roſchild, not walled, but counted for a City, as a See Epiſcopal; the Biſhops whereof have antiently had the honor of Crowning, and Inaugurating the Kings of Denemark. In the Cathedral Church whereof are to be ſeen the Tombs of many of the Daniſh Kings; ſome of them very fair and ſumptuous, the moſt mean, and ordinary. 4. Sore, of old times beautified with a goodly Monaſtery, the Revenues whereof, at the alteration of Religion, were converted to the maintenance of a Free-School, built here by Frederick the firſt. But in the year 1623 Chriſtiern the fourth, adding hereunto the Revenues of two other diſſolved Monaſteries, the one in the Ile of Lawland, and the other in Juitland, founded here a new Univerſity: for the better ſupply of learned Miniſters for the Churches of Denemark, and Norwey, (which before could not be provided for out of Copenhagen;) and furniſhed it with men of eminence in all Arts and Sciences, for its firſt Profeſſors. 5. Elſinure, or Helſingore, a village only, but much frequented by Sea-faring men, as their Ships paſſe by the Sound, upon which it is. Near unto which is 6. the ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle of Croneberg, built with uncredible charge and pains by King Frederick the ſecond; the foundation of it being laid on huge ſtones ſunk into the Sea, and ſo faſtned together, that no ſtorm or tempeſt, how violent ſoever, is able to ſhake it. Well fortified, as well as founded, and mixt of a Palace, and a Fort, being ſince the firſt building of it the moſt conſtant reſidence of the Kings of Denemark: who from hence may eaſily diſcern each ſhip which ſails thorow the Sundt, each of which addeth more or leſs unto his Revenues. A profitable and pleaſing proſpect. By the Commodity of this, and the oppoſite Caſtle, the King doth not only ſecure his Cuſtomes, but very much ſtrengthen his Eſtate: the Caſtles being ſo near, and the Strait ſo narrow, that by the addition of ſome few Ships, he may keep the greateſt Navy that is, from paſſing by him.

Unto the Government and Juriſdiction of this Iland belong many others, the principal whereof are 1. Amagria, or Amagger, which helps to make up the Port, or Road of Copenhagen, ſpoken of before; planted with Hollandyrs brought hither by the procurement of Chriſtiern the ſecond. 2. Mund, or Moem-land, the chief Town whereof is called Stegoe. 3. Huene or WHEEN, a little South of Croneberg Caſtle; a Dutch mile in length, but not quite ſo broad: remarkable only for the ſtudies of that famous Aſtronomer Tycho Brahe, to whom Frederick the ſecond gave this Iland; that living in a private and ſolitary place, removed from all company but his own Family only, he might with more convenience attend his Books. At this day moſt obſervable for the Caſtle of Uranopolis, or Urenbourg, in which the greateſt part of his Mathematical inſtruments are preſerved in ſafety.

III. FIONIA, or FUINEN, the ſecond Iland of accompt in all the Baltick, is ſituate betwixt Seland, and Juitland; from which laſt parted by a Strait called Middlefar Sundt, ſo narrow, and of ſo ſmall a Sea, that the Iland and the Cherſoneſe ſeemed joined together. A Country of a pleaſant and delightfull ſituation, and as fruitfull withall: containing twelve Dutch miles in length, and four in breadth; and therein 24 Herets, or Prefectures, 16 Towns, and ſix Royal Caſtles, beſides many goodly Villages, and Gentlemens houſes. The chief whereof are 1 Odenſee, or Othenſche (called in Latine Othonia) an Epiſcopal See, founded here, at the firſt converſion of this people, by Otho the Great, whence it had the name. The Town not large, but beautified with two fair Churches, the one dedicated to Saint Canute, the other to Saint Francis; ſituate in the midſt of the Iland, from which the reſidue of the Towns are almoſt equally diſtant; and ſo commodiouſly ſeated for trade and Merchandiſe, as they do not only traffick in the Baltick Sea, but in Sweden, Norwey, Ruſſia, Flanders, and Germany. 2. Nibourch, 3. Faborch, 4. Suibark, 5. Middlefar, whence the ſtrait ſo named: 6. Bogens, and 7. Kertominde; all ſeated on ſome Haven, or convenient Greek: the principal of the Caſtles being 1. Newbourg, 2. Hagenſcow, 3. Eſchebourg, 4. Hinſgagell, 5. the Court of Rugard. In this Iland, not far from the Caſtle of Hagenſcow, is the mountain Ochenberg, where Iohn Ranzovius, Anno 1530. diſcomfitted the great Army of Chriſtopher, the Brother of Anthony, Earl of Oldenburg, coming in thoſe unſetled times to invade the Kingdom, under colour of reſtoring Chriſtiern the ſecond, formerly depoſed: in which fight the Earl of Hoye, and Teckleburg, were both ſlain in the place, and the Kingdom after that in quiet from the like pretenders.

South of Fionia, and under the Government hereof, are about 90 leſſer Ilands, moſt of them inhabited; the chief of which are

IV. LANGELAND, ſeven Dutch miles in length, in which, beſides many Villages, and Gentlemens houſes, we have the Town of Raidkeping, and the Caſtle of Franeker.

V. LALAND, disjoined from Selandt, by a little narrow ſtrait called Groneſundt; ſo plentifull of corn and Cheſnuts, that ſhips full fraighted with them, are ſent yearly hence. An Iland, which beſides many Caſtles, Villages, and Manſion houſes of the Gentry, hath five good Towns, viz. 1. Nyſtadt, 2. Naſco, 3. Togrop, 4 Richus, and 5. Mariboans; in which laſt antiently was a very rich Monaſtery, the Revenues whereof are now imployed for the indowment of the new Univerſity of Sora, founded by Chriſtiern the fourth, as before was noted.

VI. FALSTRE, four Germau miles in length, affording plenty of corn yearly to ſome neighbouring Ilands. Chief Towns wherein are, 1. Nicopen, which for the elegancy of the place, and pleaſantneſſe of the ſituation, is called the Naples of Denemark. 2. Stabecopen, from whence there is the ordinary paſſage into Germany, ſeven Dutch miles hence. "Scandia.

VII. TUSINGE, not far from Suiborch, or Swineburg, a Town of Fionia, a Dutch mile in length ſituate in a dangerous and troubleſome Sea; from whence is no ſafe paſſage either to Selandt, Fuinen, or Juitland, though much diſtant from neither. Chief places in it are, 1. Aſcens, towards Juitland, 2. Niburg, towards Selandt, and 3. the Court of Keltorp, belonging to the noble Family of Roſencrantz.

VIII. FIMERA, or FEMEREN, a fruitfull and well-peopled Iland, having in it the Towns of 1. Denborch, 2. Stabul, and 3. Pietterſborn. A place of great importance to the Crown of Denmark, not ſo much in danger of being made ſubject to the Imperialiſts, by the taking of Holſtein, and both Juitlands; as by planting a ſtrong Garriſon in this ſmall Iland: and therefore with all diligence recovered by the King again, and better fortified than before, againſt all invaſions, Anno 1628. Of the remaining Ilands which pertain unto Fionia, we find the names of 1. Aroe. 2. Romſo, 3. Endelo, 4. Ebelo, 5. Boko, 6. Brando, 7. Zoroe, 8. Agernis, 9. Hellenis, 10. Ierdo, 11. Birkolm; of which nothing memorable.

Amongſt theſe Ilands, but not ſubordinate to Fionia, are,

IX. ARIA, belonging to the Dukedom of Sleſwick, conſiſtiug of three pariſhes, ſome Gentlemens houſes, and the Town and Caſtle of Koping; ſuppoſed to be the habitation of the Arii, ſpoken of by Tacitus, but a Colony rather of them, as I ſuppoſe. And not far off,

X. ALSEN, another little Iland, but of more repute, called in Latine, Elyſia; oppoſite to the Gulf, or Bay of Flensburg, in the Dukedome of Sleſwick, to which it alſo appertaineth. Well ſtored with Beaſts for profit, and Game for pleaſure; ſo populous, that ſome thouſands of men may be eaſily and ſuddenly raiſed in it: conſiſting of 13 Pariſhes, and four Towns, that is to ſay, 1. Gammelgard, 2. Oſterholm, 3. Norborch, and 4. the good Town and Caſtle of Sunderburg, one of the ordinary reſidences of the Dukes of Sleſwick, and honoured with the birth of many of the Princes of the Royal Family. Some think it was the habitation antiently of the Elyſii, ſpoken of by Tacitus, and by him placed next unto the Angli. But being the Angli in thoſe times dwelt about the Elb, I rather think, that when ſome Colonies of the Angli ſeated themſelves in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, as before was ſaid; ſome of the Arii and Elyſii might go along for company, and plant themſelves near them, in theſe Ilands.

XI. BORNHOLM, the laſt of all the Baltick which belong to Denmark, is ſituate more Eaſtward, oppoſite to that part of Scandia, which is called Blecking, betwixt it and Pomeren. An Iſle of excellent paſturage, breeding plenty of Cattel, wherewith, as alſo with butter, cheeſe, wool, hides, and ſome ſtore of fruits, they ſupply the wants of ſome of their neighbours; beſides good quantities of powdered Beef, and Mutton, which they barrell up, and ſell to Mariners. It containeth many good Towns, and wealthy Villages; the chief whereof is Bornholm, which gives name to the Iland. Both Town and Iland pawned by ſome former Kings unto thoſe of Lubeck; from whom redeemed by King Frederick the ſecond, for a great ſum of money, after it had been in their poſſeſſion about 50 years.

Theſe Ilands in the time of Pomponius Mela, were by one general name called the Hemodes, in number reckoned to be ſeven; the reſidue either not inhabited, or not taken notice of, are no where mentioned in the Antients. Of theſe ſeven, the greateſt and beſt peopled, was called Codonania (ſuppoſed to be Selandt,) in which the ſaid Author placeth the Tentoni. By Ptolemi it is called Scandia Minor, with reference to the great Peninſula of Scandia, ſuppoſed by him to be an Iland. From this, or from the Sea adjoining, called Sinus Codanus, the people of theſe Iſlands, and the next Eaſtern Continent, took the name of Danes; ſpreading their name afterwards, as they did their Conqueſts; of wh ch more anon. In the mean time we muſt croſſe over the Sound, and take notice of ſuch other parts of this Kingdom, as lye on the other ſide thereof, in the vaſt Continent, or Demi-Iland (which you will) of Scandia: of which ſomewhat muſt be firſt premiſed, in regard, that not only ſome parts of Denmark, but the whole Country of Norwey (the Nothern Ilands excepted) are contained in it.

SCANDIA.

SCANDIA, by Pliny and Solinus called Scandivania, by Jornandes Scanzia, hath on the Eaſt, that Bay or branch of the Baltick, which is called the Finniſch, and Bodner Seas; on the North, and Weſt, the main Ocean; on the South, where it points towards Germany, the Baltick, or Ooſt-Zee, as the Dutch call it: joined to the main continent of Sarmatia by an Iſthmus, or neck of Land, at the bottom of the Bodner See, not far from Wardhuys. In regard of ſo great Seas on all parts thereof, it was generally by the Antients thought to be an Iland, but incomperta magnitudinis, of an unknown greatneſs, as both Pytheas, and Xenophon Lampſacenus do affirm in Pliny: by one of which it is called Baſilia, by the other Baltia; from whence the name of Baltick to the Sea adjoining. But later Navigations, and experience, have confuted that opinion; by which it is found to be no Iland, but a part of the Continent, and a great one too; containing the whole Kingdome of Norwey, the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Sweden, and ſome part of Denmark. That part hereof which belongs to Denmark, ſituate in the South-eaſt of this great Peninſula, and divided into the three Provinces, of Hallandia, Scania, and Bleſcida: and in them 23 Herets or Prefectures, and fifteen Cities.

1. HALLANDIA or HALLANDT, hath on the Eaſt, the wild Woods which part it from

Goib-

Scandia. Gothland; on the West, the intervening Sea betwixt it and Juitland; on the North, Sweden, properly and specially so called; on the South, Scania, or Schonen. A Country which for the healthfulnesse of the Ayr, pleantnesse of the soil, commodiousnes of Havens, plenty of Fish, pleasure of hunting, for inexhaustible mines of Brasse and Lead, (with some veins of Silver) frequency of well-peopled Towns and villages, and civility of the Inhabitants, not inferiour to any. Places of most importance in it, are 1 Laholm, 2 Halmstad, 3 Falkendorch; all of them on the Sea, at the mouth of navigable streams, whose names I find not: 4. Warburg, upon the Sea side also, but fortified with a very strong Castle on the top of an hill. Taken and garrisoned by the Swedes, Anno 1569. and not without great difficulty recovered by the Danes again, Anno 1569.

II. SCANIA, or SCHONEN, hath on the East, Blesida, or Blecking; on the West, the Sound, running along the shore hereof for the space of twenty German miles; on the North, Hallandt; on the South, the Baltick or Oost Zee. The Country of the same nature with Hallandt, as before described; the Character of that pertaining to all the three: this having over and above, as peculiar to it, that the Sea shores are stored with such sholes of Herrings, that sometimes Ships are scarce able with wind and oar to break through them, and row off the Harbour. It is in length 72 miles, 48 in breadth. Chief Towns in which, are 1 Lunden, an Archbishops See, the Metropolitan of Denmark and Norwey, advanced unto that honor by the means and mediation of Ericus the first, who purposely made a journey to Rome to effect that business: the Church of Danemark being before that time subject to the Archbishops of Breme. This was about the year 1100. It is situate somewhat within the Land; but the Cathedral easily discernible by Mariners as they sail along. The City mean, and were it not for the Cathedral, of no beauty at all. But that indeed affirmed to be a work of much magnificence and Art; especially for the Clock, the Diall, and some outward adjuncts. For in the Diall curiously set out with divers colours, are to be seen distinctly, the year, month, week-day, and hour of every day, throughout the year; with the Feasts, both moveable and fixed, together with the motion of the Sun and Moon, & their passage through each degree of the Zodiack. Then for the Clock, it is so framed by Artificial Engines, that whensoever it is to strike, two horse-men encounter one another, giving as many blows apiece, as the Bell sounds hours: and on the opening of a door, there appears a Theatre, the Virgin Mary on a Throne with Christ in her Arms, and the three Kings or Magi, (with their several trains) marching in order, doing humble reverence, and presenting severally their gifts; two Trumpeters sounding all the while, to adorn the Pomp of that procession. 2 Malmoge, or Elbogen, (called by both names) at the very Southern point hereof, just opposite to Coppenhagen in Seland, a well-traded Port: the birth-place of Gaspar Bartholinus, otherwise called Malmogius Danus, that great Mathematician; supposed to be the Author of the Clock and Dial, before described. 3. Trelleberg, on the North of Elbogen. 4 Landiscron, on the Sea side, of great strength and consequence. 5 Helsemburg, a mean Town, but fortified with an impregnable Castle, just opposite to Helsinare, and Croneberg in Seland; the other of the two keyes which openeth into the Sound. 6 Radneby, a frontire Town bordering on Verendia, a province of Swethland. 7 Christiania, or Christendopp, a strong piece built by Christiern the fourth, anno 1604. compassed by the Sea, and fortified by Fens and Marshes, thought to be impregnable.

III. BLESCICA or BLECKING, is bounded on the East and South, with the Baltick Sea; on the North, with Verendia, a Province of Swethland; on the West, with Scania or Schonen: more mountainous and barren than either, but yet partaking somewhat of the former character, which we had of Hallandt. Chief Towns here of are 1 Usted, on the mouth of a River falling into the Baltick. 2. Christenberg, in Latine Christianopolis, on the borders of Swethland; raised out of the ground by Christiern the fourth, to defend his Kingdome on that side, Anno 1602. but not long after by a warlike stratagem surprised by the Swedes, in the late war betwixt those Kingdomes, in the year 1611. Destroyed and dis-peopled by that Nation, who looked upon it as a dangerous and unpleasant object, but since repaired and repleni shed. 3 Abuys, upon the River which divides the Kingdomes, not far from Christernberg.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Gutæ and Dauciones, taking up the South parts of this great Peninsula. Meridionalia tenent Gutæ & Dauciones, as we find in Ptolemy, Geogr. l. 2. c. 11. which in all probability must be meant of these Provinces. Of these the Gutes passing over into the Cimbrick Chersonese, possessed themselves of the North parts of it, since from thence called Juitland. The rest uniting with the people of those many Islands, which lye together in the Bay or Gulph called Sinus Codanus (now the Baltick Sea) took the names of Danes: and not from Dan, I know not what King thereof, above a thousand years before the birth of our Saviour. First taken notice of by that name in Gornandes de Rebus Geticis, who lived about the time of Justinian the first; about which time, or not long after, it is conceived, that they made themselves Masters of so much of the Cimbrick Chersonese, as had been formerly possessed by the Juites and Angli; whose forsaken or ill-peopled seats they possessed themselves of. After this we hear little of them till the time of Charles the Great, living in a confused estate, sometimes made subject to the Norwegians, somtimes to the Swedes, but alwaies without Law and order; till by their King Godfrey or Gotricus they were regulated by Laws, and reduced to an orderly kind of life, Anno 797. About this time they first began to infest the Coasts of England, invaded Friseland, with a Fleet of 200 sail: and had much weakened and endangered the great Empire of France, if the unseasonable death of Godfrey; and the quarrels which arose about the succession after his decease, had not kept them off. Their affairs at home being again well setled, they imployed their whole Forces against England, as the weaker enemy: over which they tyrannised 250 years, and reigned 26. under three Kings of that Nation. Outed of that, and the terror of their name being over, they have been moſt buſied with their neighbours of Sweden, and Germany: improving their eſtate, but rather by mariages and civil contracts, than by force of Arms, with the addition of the Kingdom of Norwey, and the Dukedom of Holſtein; their pretenſions to, and for a time the poſſeſſion of the Crown of Sweden, getting them nothing in concluſion but blows and loſſes. So that we have no more to do, than to ſumm up a catalogue of the Kings hereof, till the uniting of the two Crowns of Denmark and Norwey; leaving the reſt that follow to another place. Scandia

The KINGS of DENMARK.

A. Ch.
797	1	Gotricus, the firſt Legiſlator of the Danes, and the eſtabliſher of their Kingdom, a prudent and valiant Prince.

1252	34	Chriſtopher, brother of Abel and Ericus.
1260	35	Ericus VI. (VIII) ſon of Chriſtopher.
1287	36	Ericus VII. (IX) younger ſon of Ericus, ſupplanted his elder brother Chriſtopher,
1327	37	Chriſtopher II. eldeſt ſon of Ericus, firſt diſpoſſeſſed of his birth-right by his brother Ericus; after whoſe death, he ſucceeded in the Crown, by the help of his half Brother the Earl of Holſt.
1334	38	Waldemar III. ſon of Chriſtopher the ſecond, againſt whom and his encroachments, the Sea-towns, commonly called the Hanſe, did firſt confederate, and vanquiſhed him in many battels.

1376 39 Mary

Norwey. 1376 39 Margaret, daughter and heir of Waldemar the third, maried with Aquin King of Norwey, ſo uniting the kingdoms: of whom and their ſucceſſours we ſhall ſpeak hereafter; when we have took a view alſo of the kingdom of Norwey, and the Appendixes thereof.

NORWEY.

NORWEY is bounded on the East, with Swethland, from which parted by a perpetual ridge of rough and wild mountains, called the Dofrine hills; on all other parts by the Sea: that is to ſay, by the frozen Sea upon the North; the German or Norwegian Ocean upon the Weſt; and on the South, with the Daniſh Sea, interpoſing betwixt it and the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe. Being in breadth from Schagen, the moſt Northern point of Juitland, to Congell, the moſt Southerly town of Norwey, no leſs then 250 miles.

It is called Norwey, quaſi tractus ſeu via Septentrionalis, from the Northern ſituation of it, containing in length 1300 miles, in breadth not above half ſo much: inhabited by a people given to hoſpitality, plain dealing, and abhorring theft. Antiently they were great warriers, and became terrible to all the more Southern Nations; by whom called Normans, (that is to ſay, Homines Boreales, or Northmen, as Willielmus Gemiticenſis rightly hath it:) being at that time a mixture of all the Northern Nations together, or of the Norwegians and Swethlanders apart from the Danes; whoſe ſteps they followed in their frequent, or rather continual Piracies, on the Coaſts of England, France, and Ireland. By Helmoldus in the ſame ſenſe, they are called Nordluidi, a name made into Latine, out of the Dutch word Nord, and the French word leiu, ſignifying men of a Northern place or Nation.

Of the poſition of it in regard of the Heavens we have ſpoke already; but more particularly it reacheth from the firſt Parallel of the twelfth Clime, where the Pole is elevated 58 degrees 26 minutes, as far as to the 71 degree of Latitude. By which accompt the longeſt day in the Southern point is but 18 hours; whereas at Wardhuys, being ſituate furtheſt North of all this Countrey, they have no night for almoſt three whole moneths together.

The Country for the moſt part rocky, mountainous and barren, full of vaſt woods, extreme cold, and but ill inhabited. In the beſt parts thereof it affords little corn; and in the moſt northern none at all: inſomuch that the common ſort of people are fain to uſe dried fiſh (that which we commonly call Stock-fiſh) inſtead of bread. But the better (that is, the richer ſort) buy corn of ſuch Merchants as come to traffick with them. Their chief commodities are Stock-fiſh, rich furres, train-oyl, pitch, and tackling for ſhips, as maſts, cables, deal-boards, and the like; which the Inhabitants exchange for corn, wine, fruits, beer, and other neceſſaries for mans life. The Countrey is exceedingly troubled with certain little beaſts which they call Lemmers. They are about the bigneſs of a field mouſe, and are by the Inhabitants ſaid to drop out of the clouds in tempeſtuous weather. They devour, like the Locuſts, every green thing on the earth; and at a certain time dye all in heaps (as it were) together: and with their ſtench ſo poiſon the air, that the poor people are long after troubled with the Jaundies, and with a giddineſſe in the head. But theſe beaſts come not ſo often to infect the land, as the Whales doe to terrifie and moleſt the ſhores, the Weſtern Seas being very deep, and therefore a fit habitation for thoſe great Leviathans: againſt whoſe violence and fury, the Mariners and people of the Sea coaſt have found a Remedie, which is by caſting out ſome water intermixed with the oyl of Caſtor; the ſmell whereof doth force them to retire immediately. Without this help there were no fiſhing on theſe Coaſts, which is the greateſt Staple commodity (beſides materials for ſhipping) which the Countrey yeeldeth.

The Towns here, are exceeding thin, and in them the houſes for the moſt part very poor and miſerable; commonly patched up of durt and hurdles, not much unlike our ordinary Cottage houſes in the Fen-Countries. Diſtributed into five Prefectures or Governments, according to the number of the Caſtles which command the ſame. Of theſe,

1 The firſt moſt towards the South is the Caſtle of BOHUS, to which are ſubject the towns of 1. Marſtrand, ſeated in a Demi-Iſland begirt with Rocks; of moſt note for the infinite quantity of herings caught hereabouts. 2 Congel, upon the Sea, a town of Merchandiſe, oppoſite to Schagen in Denmark. 3 Oddewald.

2. AGGERHUIS, the ſecond of the five Royal Caſtles, hath under its command the Towns of 1 Anſlo, or Aſloia, on a Bay or Gullet oppoſite to Juitland, an Epiſcopal See, and of moſt eſteem of all the Countrey, by reaſon of the Courts of Judicature which are therin held. 2 Tonsberg, or Koningsberg, that is to ſay, the Kings or the Kingly mountain, formerly a retiring place of the Kings of Norwey. 3 Fredrichſtrad, built by one of the Fredericks, Kings of Danemark. 4 Schin or Schon, remarkable for its mines of iron and copper. 5 Saltzburg, 6 Hammar the greater, and 7 Hammar the leſſe, divided by the interpoſing of the Bay called Sinus Mœſianus, in former times the See of a Biſhop, ſince removed to Aſloia; or rather thereunto united in theſe later times, as many poor Biſhopricks be in Ireland.

3 BEGGER-HUSE is the third Caſtle of command herein. Subordinate whereunto are 1 Bergen, the principal Town of the countrey, an Epiſcopal See, and the ordinary reſidence of the Governor for the Kings of Denmark; ſituate amongſt high mountains, at the bottom of a deep Creek or arm of the Ocean called Carmefunt. A noted Port, and much reſorted to by Merchants of moſt forein Nations; bringing in corn, meat, bread, beer, wine, and Aqua vitæ, to ſupply the natural wants and defects hereof; and in exchange tranſporting hence fiſh, furrs, cordage, and other materials for ſhipping ping. In which regard, accounted formerly one of the four chief ſtaple Towns of the Dutch Merchants of the Hanſe: the other three being London in England, Novogrod in Muſcovie, and Bruges in Flanders. But of late time this Bergen hath loſt moſt of its trade, removed hence to Wardhuis, neerer unto Muſcovie: as the great town of Novogrod, by reaſon of the change of navigation through the Baltick into the Northern paſſage, hath given way to S. Nicolas; and Bruges was deprived of her traffick by Antwerp, from whence it is removed to Amſterdam. For the Hollanders by blocking up the haven, but eſpecially by keeping Bergen ap Zome, have ſuch a command over the river, that no Veſſell can paſſe or repaſſe without their licence. 2 Staffanger, an Epiſcopall See alſo, but not elſe obſervable. Iſeland.

4 The Caſtle of TRUND-HEIM, is the fourth, ſituate in the Town of Trondheim, formerly called Tronden, and in Latine, Nidroſia; the See of an Archbiſhop, who is the Metropolitan of Norwey. A beautifull City heretofore, but ſince the ſubjection of this Countrey unto the Danes, reduced to a Burrough. So called of the River Nider, upon which it is ſeated, and Roſa the name then of the principal Church: which in time gave place to the Cathedral, for greatneſſe and neatneſſe of the fabrick, all of poliſhed ſtone, not giving place to any in Europe; about the year 1530. much defaced with fire, which began at the Altar, the damage done by it being eſtimated at 7000 Crowns. A great ſum of money in thoſe times, and ſo poor a Countrey. So that by caſting up our reckoning, we find in Norwey, one Archbiſhop, and four Biſhops, that is to ſay, the Archbiſhop of Trundheim or Nidroſia, the Biſhops of Bergen, Anſlo, Staffanger and Hammar: Of the ſame power, juriſdiction, and revenue, ſince the Reformation, as thoſe of Denmark; whereof, and of the firſt converſion of this people to the Chriſtian Faith, we have ſpoke already.

5 The fifth and laſt Caſtle which commands this country, is that of WARDHUYS, ſo called of the town of Wardhuys; as that is from the Iſle Ward, in which it is ſeated. A ſmall Caſtle, and the town in former times but mean and poor, ſituate in the extreme North point of all this Kingdom; but in thoſe times accounted (as it eaſily might) for the chief of this Prefecture, and honoured in the ſummer time with the ſeat and reſidence of the Governour; retiring more Southwards in the winter; at what time, by reaſon of the extremity of the cold, and long abſence of the Sun for months together (the Town lying within the Artick Circle) it is hardly habitable. But of late times it is much improved both in wealth, and building; by reaſon of the removal of the Engliſh trading from Novogrod near the Baltick Sea, to the Town of St. Nicolas, not far from hence; drawing by that means the trade of Muſcovie, and Norwey, more neer together. So that now it is not only uſefull unto the Danes, in regard that it ſomewhat aweth the neighbouring Lappians, and commandeth the Natives; for that cauſe fortified very ſtrongly by King Frederick the ſecond: but made very profitable to him alſo, by the reſort of Dutch, and Engliſh, who muſt of neceſſity touch at it (if they make no ſtay here) in their way to Muſcovie. Other Towns in theſe two laſt Prefectures are not worth looking after.

And ſo much for the Continent or mainland of Norwey; let us next look upon the Iſlands in the Northern Ocean, wich belong unto it.

The ISLANDS in the NORTHERN OCEAN.

The NORTHERN SEA, ſo named from its northern ſituation, is by ſome called Mare Scythicum, becauſe it coaſted along the ſhores of Scythia; by Juvenal called Oceanus glacialis, becauſe often frozen; by Pliny in the ſame ſenſe, Mare Amalchium, the word in the Scythick language ſignifying frozen, or congealed; by the Ruſſes, or Muſcovites, Myrmanskoy More; by the Cimbrians in their tongue, Mari moruſa, that is to ſay, the dead Sea, becauſe of the ſlowneſſe of its motion, often clogged with ice; and in the ſame ſenſe, mare pigrum by Tacitus. This Tacitus doth beſt deſcribe it, from whom take it thus, Trans Sueones Mare aliud pigrum & prope immotum, &c. Beyond the Swedes, there is another Sea, ſo ſlow and almoſt immovable, that many think it to be the bounds which compaſs the whole world. Some are perſwaded that the ſound of the Sun is heard, as he ariſeth out of this Sea; and that many ſhapes of gods are ſeen, and the beams of his head, Illuc uſque (& fama vera) tantum natura, At this Sea (the report is credible) is the end of nature and the world. The Engliſh were the firſt of all civil people, who adventured to open and diſcover the paſſages of it, under the conduct of Richard Chancellour, arriving by this way in Ruſſia, An. 1553. and tracing out the way, which others of that Nation, together with the Flemings, Hollanders, and ſome towns of the Hanſe, have ſince followed. Of which more in Muſcovie. The principal Iſlands diſperſed in it, are 1 Groenland, 2 Iſeland, 3 Freezland, belonging to the Crown of Norwey, to be ſurveyed at the preſent; Nova Zemla, and Sir Hugh Willoughbies Iſland, appertaining (if to any) to the Knez, or great Duke of Muſcovie; of which more hereafter.

I. ISELAND, is ſituate under the Artick Circle, in length 144 German miles, 65 in breadth. So called from the abundance of ice in it, and about it, frozen continually for the ſpace of 8 months, and ſo vehemently chilled with Northern winds, that it yeeldeth neither corn nor trees, except Juniper only: yet there is graſs in ſuch aboundance, that the people are of opinion, that if they doe not ſometimes keep their cattell from feeding, they are in danger to ſurfeit and dye with fulneſſe. Beaſts for labour here are, both Horſes and Oxen; the Oxen and Kine without hornes, but the Sheep not ſo: and they have alſo here a fine breed of little Doggs, known amongſt us by the name of Iſeland doggs, the delight of Ladies; as alſo white Faulcons, and white Ravens, Eagles with white tails, with Hares and Bears of the ſame colour. By reaſon of their want of corn, the people eat

Freezland. Stock-fish (as in Norwey) instead of bread; yet notwithstanding, by reason of the benefit of the sea, and accesse of strangers, they have all things necessary brought unto them (even to wood and timber) of which the richer sort make use: giving the Merchant in return, sometimes the flesh of Beeves and Mutton; but ordinarily, butter, skins, horses, hawks, brimstone, and fish especially, the staple commodity of the Country. Of which they have such plenty, and of so good condition, that a piece of Iseland Ling is counted with us, as a fit dish for a Noblemans Table.

The people, for the most part, are of a plain and simple nature, living (as in the Golden Age) on that which nature gives them, without help of Art, more than that of making cheese and butter: the mountains serving them for Towns, and the Rivers for drink, and lodging all under one roof, with their horses and oxen. They use neither Physick, nor Physicians, yet live so long (and probably the longer for it) and many of them attain to the age of 150 years and more. The women are exceeding fair, but they know not how to attire themselves; nor is there any difference in apparel betwixt the Sexes, so that it is not easie to know one from another. Few of them but have some familiar Spirit to doe them service: and notwithstanding the endeavour of the Ministers to purge them from this impiety; yet it is so graffed in them, that they cannot leave it.

It is observable, that notwithstanding the cold condition of this Island, yet in many places it is full of heats, and fire under the ground; which by the Antiperistasis of the cold air, stopping the pores of the earth, and taking from it the liberty of evaporation, doth burn more vehemently: insomuch that there are three high Mountains, whose tops are always covered with snow, and yet continually burning. The names of them are Hecle, Helge, and La-Croix, but the first the principal; by some called Heclefort, which sometimes casts out fire, sometimes flaming water, then black ashes, and pumice stones in so great abundance, that it darkneth the Sun, and makes the Country for six miles round about it to be uninhabited. Stranger things are not spoken of Aetna, than of these three mountains: and here the superstitious people have the same opinion which they have in Sicil. viz. That underneath must needs be hell, and the habitations of the damned. But to judicious men the natural reason of these flames is plain and obvious; occasioned by those veins of brimstone (great quantity whereof they send into forein parts) on which the foundation of the hills is laid: here being many Bathes, and fountains of hot water, which have sulphur swimming at the top.

At the first planting of this Island, the people did not trouble themselves with building Towns, but every one seated himself where he thought convenient; and dwelling in cels, and caverns digged in the bottom of the rocks. By means whereof the inland parts have not many houses: but the Sea coasts, since the coming of so many strangers to them, begin to be built in many places; the buildings for the most part being of timber, roofed with flags, with an hole on the sides of the roof to let in the light. So that we are not to expect many fine Towns or Cities: the principal of them which are, being 1. Halar in the North, and 2. Schalholt in the southern part; both Bishops Sees; having petty Schools, consisting of 24 scholars a piece, to whom the Latine tongue is taught at the charge of the Bishops. 3. Haffenfordt, an Haven Town, where under Tents the Dutch Merchants barter their commodities: and 4 Bedstede, a Castle, the ordinary residence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark.

It hath been generally conceived that this Island is that Thule, which the Poets so often speak of; as, Tibi serviat ultima Thule, in Virgil; Nec sit Terris ultima Thule, in Seneca, the Tragedian: nor did there want some reason to perswade them to this opinion; this being indeed the furthest part of the old known world. But greater reasons are against it. For when Solinus saith, multæ sunt circa Britanicum insulæ, è quibus Thule ultima; I hope Thule must be one of the British Isles. And when Tacitus saith of Agricola, insulas quas Orcadas vocant domuit, despecta est & Thule; I am sure that Iseland is so far from being kenned by any one of the Orcades, that it is at least eight degrees distant. So that Thule must be sought for in another place, and where that is hath been shewed already. As for Iseland it was so far from being known unto the Antients, that it was hardly known unto those of Norwey, till the year 874. when some of the Norwegians driven out of their Country by Harald the first, who first suppressing the many petit Kings of the Norwegians, made many of them seek new dwellings, of which some few arrived here: where finding room enough to plant in, and no great loss (if any) by change of their dwelling, they invited many of their friends and Country-men to come unto them, Anno 1070. they were converted to the Gospel by some Preachers sent hither from Adelbert the Archbishop of Breme. By whose perswasion and procurement they founded two Episcopal Sees; adding thereto in tract of time, eight Religious houses: that is to say the Monasteries of Pingore, Remestede, Modur, and Monkeniere. under the Government and jurisdiction of the Bishop of Hallar; and those of Vedey, Pernebar, Kirckebar, and Skirde, under the Bishop of Schalholt. In the year 1260. it was first brought under the Crown of Norwey, following since that the fortunes of it, in all changes both of Church and State: made subject with it to the Kings of Denmark; together with it reformed in matters of Religion, according to the confession Ausbourg; retaining still their Bishops, with a limited power, and turning the Revenues of their Monasteries unto other uses, as there they did, according to the will and pleasure of their Lords of Denmark.

II. Southwest of Iseland lies another, and as cold an Isle, commonly called by the name of FREEZELAND, from the continual Frosts unto which it is subject. By the Latines it is called Frizlandia, to distinguish it from Frisia, or Friseland, in Germany. Situate under the North frigid zone, but not so much within the Arctick as Iseland is: the longest day here in the height of summer, not exceeding 20 hours: and yet the soyl so cold and barren that it beareth neither corn, nor fruit, the Inhabitants living most on fish; which as it their only food, so is it also their chief com-commodity, wherewith to entertain or invite the Merchant. And hereof there is such abundance caught upon their coasts, that they are never without the company of Hanſemen, Scots, Hollanders, Danes, and Engliſh; by which laſt ſo frequented in theſe later times, that it hath been called by ſome, the Weſtern England. For quantity it is ſomewhat bigger than Iſeland; but by reaſon of the bitter air, and the defects above mentioned, very thinly inhabited. The chief Town of it is called Freezeland, by the name of the Iland; ſituate on the Eaſtern ſhore of it. Beſides which, there are ſome others ſet down in the maps; as 2. Sameſcot, 3. Andefort, 4. Sorund; but not much obſervable. Weſtward hereof, as Zieglerus (and out of him Maginus) telleth us, is a leſs Iſland called Icaria, giving the name of Mare Icarium to the Sea adjoyning: ſo called (by his miſtake or tranſlation of the Fable) from Icarus the ſon of Dædalus, a King of Scotland, who did once (but no body knows when) Lord it over theſe Iſlands. Groenland.

III. GROENLAND, ſo called, as ſome ſay, from the greenneſſe of it in the Summer; as others ſay by Antiphraſis, becauſe never green, by reaſon of the ſharpneſs of winter. But the former Etymologie is more agreeable to the ſtate of the Country. For though it be continually covered with ſnow, except in June, July, and Auguſt, (inſomuch that though the people be always clad with Furres and Skinnes, yet they feel no heat) yet in thoſe months it is exceeding freſh and green, and affords good paſturage. It is ſituate for the greateſt part, within the Arctick, between the 65 and 77 degrees of Northern Latitude: ſo that the longeſt day in the Southern part is 21 hours and an half; and in the moſt Northern, they have no night for three moneths and two weeks. The known length of it is affirmed to be 600 miles, and may be much longer than ſo for ought that any body knows: there being no perfect diſcovery made of it hitherto; though much frequented by the Engliſh and Hollanders, (two great Sea-faring Nations) for the benefit of Whale-fiſhing, much there in uſe. Their chief commodities are Fiſh, white bears, wild Deer, and ſome ſtore of Cattel there bred upon their Paſtures; but houſed for the moſt part all the Winter: the greateſt part of the people dwelling in Caves, and delighting in Necromancy, to which more willfully addicted than thoſe in Iſeland, becauſe leſs acquainted with the Goſpel.

Places of moſt importance in it are 1. Saint Thomas, (in which there is a Monaſtery of Dominican Friers) ſeated in the North-Eaſt part of the Iland; concerning which Mercator ſpeaks of one thing which is very obſervable: relating, that it is not far from a flaming or burning mountain, ſeated upon hot ſcalding ſprings, conveyed by pipes of ſtone into the Monaſtery, and ſerving both as a ſtove to warm them, and for a fire to boyl their Victuals. The walls of the Monaſtery built of Pumice ſtones caſt out of that Mountain; which being tempered with the water of thoſe burning ſprings, doth make a glutinous ſubſtance, ſerving in ſtead of Lime, and as long durable. The Gardens of the Convent, in regard of this heat, flouriſh all the year with herbs, and ſweet-ſmelling flowers: and the adjoyning Sea for the ſame reaſon being never frozen, affords good plenty of fiſh and fowl, the whole year about; not only for the Monks, but the neighbouring Ilanders. So far, and to this purpoſe he. The ſecond Town of Note, is Ilva, not far from this Monaſtery: and 3. Munderpre on the South-Eaſt point. Others, as in a Country not well diſcovered, we have little notice of: though it be near 300 years ſince Nicolas Zeni, a Venetian, caſt by tempeſt on the Coaſt of Freeze-land, and by the King thereof employed upon new diſcoveries, Anno 1380. firſt made it known to us of Europe; immediately on that diſcovery poſſeſſed by the NORWEGIANS, and made a Member of that Crown.

As for the NORWEGIANS themſelves, now their fellow Subjects, they were firſt known in the time of Ptolemy, by the name of Chedini; poſſeſſing then the Weſtern parts of Scandia. Uniting with their Neighbours, both Danes and Swethlanders, they became better known in the flouriſhing times of the French Empire, by the name of Normans; firſt called ſo by Eginhartus in his Hiſtory of the life of Charles the Great, infeſting then the Sea-coaſts of France, and Belgium. Under this name they fell ſo heavily on the French, eſpecially in the times of Charls the Simple, that they extorted from him that goodly Country, ſince of them called Normandy; conferred on Rollo, firſt Duke thereof, Anno 912. whoſe Succeſſors much increaſed their glory by the Conqueſt of England; as ſome private adventurers of them did, by the Conqueſt of the Kingdoms of Naples, Sicil, and Antioch. Afterwards ſetling on their own bottom, every one of theſe Northern Nations acting by it ſelf, they were called Norwegians: ſometimes, as formerly commanding over all three Kingdoms, ſubject ſucceſſively to each; but moſt an end governed by their own Kings, till their final ſubjugation by the Danes. And as a Nation acting ſolely, and by it ſelf, they ſubdued Ireland, under the conduct of Turgeſius, who tyranized there for a time; as alſo all the Orcades, and the Iſle of Man, ſold, or ſurrendred by them, upon good conditions, to the Engliſh and Scots, who by thoſe Titles ſtill poſſeſs them. The Catalogue of their Kings, leaving out all thoſe of the darker times (parallel to our Brute, and the firſt Scotiſh Fergus) as meerly fabulous; we will begin with King Suibdagerus, who was King of all the three Kingdoms, and at his death divided them again amongſt his three ſons; whoſe Succeſſors Munſter thus reckoneth.

18 Sueno, King of Denmark by Birth, and of Norwey by Conqueſt.
19 Olaus III. ſon of Swain, or Sueno, ſucceeded in the Realms of Denmark and Norwey; Canutus his younger brother being King of England. In this Kings time the Norwegians firſt received the Goſpel.
20 Canutus, King of England, ſucceeded his brother Olaus in the Kingdom of Denmark and Norwey, to which he alſo added the Crown of Sweden.
21 Sueno II. by whom the Kingdom was reſtored to the Norwegians.
22 Canutus II.
23 Magnus.
24 Harald II.
25 Magnus II. King of Sweden, and Norwey.
1326 26 Magnus III. King of Sweden, and Norwey, intending the Crown of Sweden for Ericus his eldeſt ſon, conferred that of Norwey on Hacquin, or Aquinus his ſecond ſon.
1359 27 Aquinus, King of Norwey, younger ſon of Magnus the third, maried with Margaret, eldeſt daughter of Waldemar the third, King of Denmark; ſo uniting the Kingdoms. And though Olaus the only ſon of this bed died young, without any iſſue; yet the Danes having once got footing in Norwey, ſo aſſured themſelves of it, that they have ever ſince poſſeſſed it as a ſubject Kingdom: keeping the Natives ſo poor and low, that they are not able to aſſert their former liberties; and not permitting them to uſe any ſhipping, ſo much as for tranſporting their own commodities, for fear they ſhould grow wealthy and ſtrong at Sea. Beſides, the ſtrong Garriſons maintained in moſt parts of the Country, keep it in ſuch an abſolute awe, that they dare not ſtir againſt the Danes, if their ſtomachs ſerved them. So that now Norwey being made ſubject to the Crown of Denmark, or both made fellow-ſubjects to the ſame King: We muſt next look upon theſe Kings, not as Kings of each, diſtinct and ſeparate from the other; but as they are in fact and Title.

The KINGS of DENMARK and NORWEY

1376 1 Haquin, or Aquinus, King of Denmark, and Norwey; of this laſt by deſcent, of the other by mariage.
1380 2 Olaus, ſon of Aquinus and Margaret.
1383 3 Margaret, wife of Aquinus, mother of Olaus, and daughter of Waldemar the third, after the death of her ſon (in whoſe time ſhe governed as his Guardian) took upon her the Kingdom in her own right; not only keeping Norwey in the ſtate ſhe found it, but adding unto Denmark the Crown of Sweden, won by the vanquiſhment of Albert, Duke of Mecklenburg, then King thereof. A gallant and magnanimous Lady, the Semiramis of Germanie.
1411 4 Ericus, Duke of Pomeren, and Knight of the Garter, ſon of the Lady Mary, Dutcheſs of Pomeren, daughter of Ingelburgis, the ſiſter of Margaret, by whom adopted for her Heir; ſucceeded after her deceaſe in all the three Kingdoms: outed of all before his death, by a ſtrong Faction made againſt him, and his eſtates conferred on 1439 5 Chriſtopher, Count Palatine of the Rhene, and Duke of Bavaria (but in title only) the ſon of Margaret, ſiſter of Ericus; choſen by the joynt conſent of all the States of theſe kingdoms. After whoſe death, (without iſſue) the Danes conſidering the great advantage they had gotten by the addition of Norwey; pitched upon Adolphus, Duke of Sleſwick, and Earl of Holſt, for the next ſucceſſor: that they might get in thoſe eſtates to their kingdom alſo. Who excuſing himſelf by reaſon of his Age, and want of Children, commended to them Chriſtiern, Earl of Oldenburg, his kinſman, and next heir, who was choſe accordingly.
1448 6 Chriſtiern, Earl of Oldenburg, upon the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus, choſen King of Denmark and Norwey; ſucceeded his ſaid Uncle in the eſtates of Holſt, and Sleſwick, continuing ſince united unto that Crown: and added alſo thereunto by conqueſt the kingdom of Sweden.
1482 7 John, ſon of Chriſtiern, ſucceeded in all three kingdoms; knight of the Order of the Garter.
1514 8 Chriſtiern II. ſon of John, King of Denmark, Norwey, and Sweden, which laſt he held under with great cruelty: hated, by reaſon of his Tyranny towards all ſorts of people, and outed of his kingdoms by his Uncle Frederick, Anno 1522, by whom at laſt taken, and kept in priſon till he died, Anno 1559.

1523 9 Fre-

1523 9 Frederick, brother of John, and Uncle of Chriſtiern the ſecond, choſen King of Denmark, and Norwey, on the abdication of his Nephew; reformed Religion in both Kingdoms, according to the Confeſſion of Ausbourg.

1535 10 Chriſtiern III. ſuppreſſed with great trouble, the party formed againſt him in behalf of Chriſtiern the ſecond; perfected the Reformation begun in the time of his Father, and was a great Benefactor to the Univerſity of Copenhagen.

1559 11 Frederick II. ſon of Chriſtiern the third, ſubdued Ditmarſh, before unconquered by the Danes, or the Earls of Holſt, and added it unto that Dukedom: both being united to that Crown, though held of the Empire; Knight of the Garter.

1588 12 Chriſtiern IV. ſon of Frederick the ſecond, brother of Anne, Queen of Great Britain, and Knight of the Garter; engaging in a warre againſt the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond for the liberty of Germany, was ſuddenly beat out of all the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe by the prevailing Imperialiſts, but compounded the buſineſſe upon very good terms, and was reſtored to all his own.

1648 13 Frederick III. the youngeſt ſon of Chriſtiern the fourth, his elder brethren being all dead without iſſue, ſucceeded in the Crowns of Denmark, and Norway.

Having thus muſtered up the Kings of theſe ſeveral Kingdoms, taken diſtinctly, and conjunct; we muſt next look upon the way of their coming to their Regal throne, their form of Government, together with the powerableneſſe and revenues incident unto it. As for the manner of their coming to the Regal Throne, the Danes pretend the Kingdom to be Elective, and not Hereditary: yet ſo as they have alwayes ſet the eldeſt ſon on the throne of his Father; unleſs ſome extraordinary occaſion have diſpoſed it otherwiſe. But they that look upon their Stories in the former times, can ſee no ſuch matter: the Kingdom going generally in the way of Succeſſion, unleſſe by Faction or uſurpation ſome popular and powerfull Pretender hath interloped; as oftentimes hath hapned in ſuch other Eſtates, as are hereditary meerly, without claim or colour of Election. Tis true, that the male iſſue failing in Olaus, the ſon of Margaret; and the Princes which pretended by the Females after her deceaſe, not being of ſufficient power to aſſert their titles: the Kingdom was transferred to the houſe of Oldenburg, who held it on no other ground than by that of election. Which being an extraordinary caſe, is to make no Precedent; though ſeconded by the outing of King Chriſtiern the ſecond, and the advancement of Frederick unto that Eſtate: being acts of violence and force, and juſtified only by the falſe Topick of ſucceſſe. But whoſoever loſt by the hand, the Danes got well by it; King Frederick taking up the Crown upon ſuch conditions as have made him and his ſucceſſors little more than Titulary. For he was fain to ſwear at his Coronation, that he would put none of the Nobility to death, or baniſhment, but by the judgement of the Senate; that the great men ſhould have power of Life and Death, over their Tenants or Vaſſals; that no Appeal ſhould lie from them to the Kings Tribunal, nor the King be partaker of the Confiſcations; nor finally, advance any to Commands and Honours, but by conſent of his Great Council. Which Oath being alſo taken by his Succeſſors, made Bodinus ſay, Non tam re ipſa quam appellatione Reges eſſe; that they were only Kings in Title, but not Kings indeed. Yet in regard that the Nobility (ſo they call their Gentry) have but ſmall Eſtates, none of them above the degree of Knights, (except only the Princes of the Bloud) and that degree conferred by the King alone; it is not often found that they have dared to croſſe or oppoſe their King, but when ſome of the Royal Family (out of private ends) have concurred with them in it: as in the caſe of Chriſtiern the 2d. depoſed by the people, but thoſe people headed, and ſet on by his Uncle Frederick, who had an eye upon the Crown.

As for the Senate, or Great Council, ſpoken of before, it conſiſts wholly of men choſen out of the Nobility, (who are to prove their Gentry by a long deſcent) ſeldom exceeding the number of 28, to each of which, there is allowed a convenient Salary, with ſome fair Caſtle in the Country for his retirements, during his being of that body: his whole eſtate being freed alſo for that time, from all publick payments. Without their counſel and advice, the King is neither to determine of Peace or War, or to enter into any new Leagues, or Confederacies, nor impoſe any Tax upon the Subject; and unto them and the King joyntly, is the laſt Appeal: ſuch being the conſtitution of this Eſtate, that all Cauſes and Controverſies are firſt decided in the Prefecture or Heret (184 in number) where they firſt ariſe; from whence it is lawfull to appeal to the Judge of the Province, from him to the Chancellour of the Kingdom, and finally to the King and Council. By the Lawes of Waldemar the firſt, who firſt reduced the Laws into fet form, and writing, the Biſhops were to ſit with this Council in all cauſes of moment: diſcharged from that employment by King Chriſtiern the third, by whom it was alſo ordained, that the Clergy ſhould not ſell any of the Church-lands, without leave of the King.

The Forces which this King or kingdom are able to raiſe, may beſt be ſeen by ſome of their particular undertakings: thoſe ſpecially of Chriſtiern the ſecond, who at the requeſt of Henry the ſecond of France, ſent a Navy of an hundred ſail into Scotland againſt the Engliſh, and therein no fewer than 10000 Souldiers; and of Frederick then Duke of Holſt, who in his war againſt this Chriſtiern, (whoſe removal from the Crown he had then projected) brought 80000 men into the field, to make good his quarrell. And queſtionleſſe, conſidering the many Ports, and Ilands, that this Crown is Maſter of, both within the Baltick, and without, it cannot be but he may ſuddenly raiſe a ſtrong power at Sea: And then conſidering that each of the Nobility, which are here numerous enough, is bound to find a certain number of Horſe upon all occaſions; as are thoſe alſo who hold lands of the Kings, which the Danes call Verlehninge: it will accordingly be concluded, that they are able to make good Levies,

The Revenue of this King conſiſteth principally in the great impoſt laid upon all ſhips which paſſe through the Sound: the greatneſſe whereof may eaſily be conjectured at by the multidude of ſhips, which of neceſſity muſt paſſe by it in the trade of the Baltick; though of late ſomewhat leſſned of what it was, ſince the Engliſh found out, and frequented the Northern paſſage into Muſcovia. There are alſo ſome Crown-lands, and a great yearly Toll made of the Cattel, which paſs into Germany; as alſo of the fiſh tranſported into other Countries. And yet it is conceived, that the Treaſures of this King are not very great: partly becauſe there is no other important commodity, but fiſh, to draw Merchants thither; and partly that there is not any one Town of any great Traffick in all his Realms, for the entertaining of commerce.

The chief Order of Knighthood in it, is that of the Elephant, inſtituted by Frederick the ſecond. Their badge, a Collar powdred with Elephants towred, ſupporting the Kings Arms, and having at the end the picture of the Virgin Mary.

The Arms hereof are Quarterly, 1 Or, three Lions Paſſant Vert, crowned of the firſt, for the kingdom of Denmark: and ſecondly Gules, a Lion Rampant Or, Crowned and Armed of the firſt, in his pawes a Dansk hatchet Argent, for the kingdom of Norwey. What Arms belong to him as Duke of Holſt, and Sleswick, I am yet to ſeek.

There are in Denmark,

OF SWETHLAND.

SWETHLAND is bounded on the Eaſt, with Muſcovie; on the Weſt, with the Dofrine hills, which divide it from Norwey; on the North, with the great Frozen Ocean, ſpoken of before; on the South, with Denmark, Liefland, and the Baltick Sea. So called from the Sueci, Suethans, or Suethidi, and the word Land added for a termination; of which more hereafter.

It is in length from Stockholm, unto the borders of Lapland, above a 1000 Italian miles; and in breadth from Stockholm, lying on the Bodner Sea, to the borders of Denmark, about twenty good dayes journey on horſeback: inſomuch as they which have travelled the length and breadth of it, on this ſide of Lapland, and the Gulf, or Bay of Bodner, account it little leſs than all Italy and France together: but taking in Lapland, and the Provinces on the other ſide of the Gulf, bigger than both by the quantity of 900 miles.

The ſituation of it in regard of the heavenly bodies, is the ſame with Norwey, under the ſame Parallels and Degrees; but of ſo different a temper, both for ſoil and air, as if diſpoſed of under ſeverall and long diſtant Climes. For the Air here is very pure, but not ſo ſharp and inſupportable, as it is in Norwey: though in ſome places, where the Moors and Waters ſettle, for want of care to open and cleanſe the water-courſes, they have great foggs and miſts, which do ſomewhat putrifie it. And for the ſoil, it is more fertile than any of the other Northern Provinces: ſo that beſides thoſe neceſſaries which they keep for themſelves, they uſually tranſport into other Countries ſtore of Malt and Barley; together with great quantities of Braſs, Lead, Steel, Copper, Iron, the hides of Goats, Bucks, Oxen, and coſtly Furrs. They have alſo ſome Mines of Silver, not mixt with any other metal; plenty of fiſh, in their Lakes and Rivers; abundance of Pine-trees, Firre, Oaks, both for ſhips and houſes; yielding besides, among the woods, good store of Tarre, and Honey, and some other necessaries. But hereof we shall speak more punctually in the several Provinces.

The principal mountains of this Country are the Dofrine hills, a vast and continuall ridge of mountains, which divide it from Norwey. And though they want not Rivers fit for common uses, yet partly by reason of their great frosts and flakes of Ice, partly by reason of the falling of trees which lie cross their Chanels, they have not many Navigable, or of any great fame. The principal of such as be, are 1 Meler, at the mouth whereof stands the City of Stockholm; 2 Lusen, 3 Dalecarlie, giving name to the Province so called, or as denominated from it. And of the Lakes, whereof here are exceeding many, that of most note is the Lake of Werett, which receiving into it 24 Rivers, disburtheneth it self at one mouth, into the Baltick; with such noise and fury, that they call it commonly the Devils head.

The people are naturally strong and active, provident, patient, and industrious; hospitable towards strangers, whom they entertain with great humanity: so healthy, that if they do not shorten their dayes by excess and riot, they live commonly to 140 years of age; and so laborious, that a Beggar is not seen amongst them. Of no great note for Arts or Arms in the times foregoing, not much addicted to the one, and so kept under by the Danes, that they could not grow eminent in the other; but much improved in both respects in these later dayes: Ericus, the first King of the present race, who cleared his Country of the Danes, and Gustavus Adolphus the last King, who freed the Germans from the yoke of the house of Austria, not being easily to be matched in the Arts of Warre. And since they began to give themselves to the sweets of learning, this Countrey hath produced (amongst some other learned men) Olaus Magnus, Archbishop of Upsal, of great note for his History of the Goths and Vandals; the first fruits of this Nation in the liberal Sciences. And it is probable, by reason of their late commerce with the German Nations, they will give better testimony to the world hereafter of their proficiency in this kind, as being generally exceeding apt to learn the Arts Mechanical, every man in a manner being his own Artificer, without imploying Smith, Mason, Carpenter, or any other manual trades: very valiant both on foot and horse-back, which their long wars against the Danes, and their late wars in Germany, haven given good proof of. Their women are discreet and modest, free from that intemperance which these Northern parts are subject to. Both sexes use a corrupt Dutch, common to all three Northern kingdoms: except in Finland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Bodner sea, where they partake somewhat of the Muscovite, or Russian language.

The Christian Religion was first planted amongst them, by the care and diligence of Ansgarius Archbishop of Breme; the Apostle general of the North. Corrupt with Popish superstitions, it was reformed, according to the Augustane Confession, in the time of Gustavus Ericus, the first of the present Royal famile; sollicited thereunto by one Petre Nevicius, a Lutheran Divine, and Lawrence the Archdeacon of Strengnes; but chiefly moved (as others say) by a desire to appropriate to himself the goods of the Church. And this appears to have had some strong influence upon him in it, in that he presently seised upon what he pleased; and made a Law, that Bishops should enjoy no more than the King thought fit: yet having pretty well lessened their Revenues, he was content they should remain as formerly, both in power and number, reserving to himself and his successors the nomination of the persons; but so as the approbation of the Clergy (in a kind of election) doth usually go along with the Kings appointment.

The Bishops are in number seven; that is to say, 1 of Lincopen, containing in his Diocese 226 Parishes; 2. of Vexime, under whom are 210. 3. of Scara, ruling over the same number of Churches; 4. of Strengnes, under whom are an hundred only; 5. of Aboe, the greatest for extent of all, as comprehending under it 500 Parishes; 6. of Wiburg; and 7. of Habsay, whose Dioceses for the most part lye out of the bounds of Sweden, in Muscovie, Livonia, and some other of the out parts of Poland: all of them under the Archbishop of Upsal, as their Metropolitan, whose Diocese extending into Lapland, and Finmarch, containeth 171 Parish Churches. By which accompt there are in all the kingdom of Swethland, but 1417 Parishes; but many of them of a thousand, or eight hundred families: the people being dispersed in Forests and other places, where they have store of timber to build them houses, and store of pasturage for their Cattell; which is the reason why they have not so many great towns, nor so well-inhabited, as is usual in far lesser Countries. As for the Authority of these Bishops, they still retain their voice in Parliament, and with them so many of the inferior Clergy, as are from every Socken, (a certain number of Parishes like our Rural Deaneries) deputed to appear there in the name of the Church: the affairs whereof the Bishops do direct and order, as well in as out of publick meetings, according to the Ecclesiastical Constitutions formerly established; and if any great occasion be, they may either advise with their Consistorials, or call a Diocesan Synod, (as they think most fit) and therein make such Lawes and Canons, as they conceive to be most proper for their own edification.

The whole kingdom is divided into two parts, the one lying on the East, the other on the West side of the Bay, or Gulph of Bodner, called Sinus Bodicus in Latine, being a large and spacious branch of the Baltick Sea, extending from the most southernly point of Gothland, as far as to Lapland on the north. According to which division, we have the Provinces of 1. Gothland, and 2. Sweden, lying on the West side of the Gulf; 3. Lapland, shutting it up upon the North; 4. Bodia, or Bodden, and 5. Finland, on the East side thereof; and 6 the Swedish Islands, where it mingleth with the rest of the Baltick.

Goths.

1. GOTHLAND.

GOTHLAND, is bounded on the East, with the Bodner Sea; on the West, with the Mountains which divide it from Norwey, and so much of Denmark as lies in the same continent with it; on the North, with Sweden; on the South, with the Sea Baltick. So called either from the Goths, whose original Country it is commonly affirmed to be; or quasi good lande, from the goodness and fertility of the soyl; Goot landia, quæ Germanice Terra bona sonat (as Maginus out of Munster hath it) the soyl being very fruitfull for Corn and Cattel, affording plenty of Mines, with great store of Fish; and generally a better conditioned Country, than any of the rest of these Northern Regions.

It is divided commonly into Ostrogoth, or East-Gothland; Westergoth, divided from the former by the great lake of Weret, spoken of before; and South-Gothland, subdivided into Smalandia, Tuiscia, and Verendia. Chief Towns whereof in Ostrogoth, are 1. Lincopen, a Bishops See; 2. Loduse, adorned with a very fair Haven: in Westergoth; 3. Scara on the lake Weret, a Bishops See also; 4. Elseburg, on the Western Sea, betwixt Denmark and Norway; a place of consequence, and flankerd with two very strong Castles in the parts adjoyning, the one called Croneberg, and the other Goldberg. 5. Tragualle, remarkable for iron works, occasioned by the mines adjoyning. And finally in South Gothland, there is 6. Vexim, or Vexio, another of the Episcopal Sees. 7. Walburg, a reasonable fair Town, with a strong Castle. 8. Elcholm in that part hereof which is called Verendia, near the confines of Denmark. 9. Colmar, a noted and well-traded Port on the Baltick Sea, beautified with a Castle, not inferior to that of Millain; and so well fortified throughout, that at the taking of it by Christiern the fourth of Denmark, Anno 1611. there were found mounted on the works 108 brass peeces of Ordnance, six men of war to guard the Haven, with all manner of Ammunition in proportion to them. 10. Gottenberg, (or Gothorum Burgus) the chief Town of the Goths or Gothland, as the name importeth, enjoying a commodious Haven on the Baltick also, and very much frequented for the trade of Germany, to which it serves exceeding fitly; the principal Town of all this Province, and for that cause the ordinary seat or residence of the Governour for the King of Sweden.

The first Inhabitants of these South parts of Scandia, are commonly affirmed to have been the GOTHS; whom Jornandes in his Book de Rebus Geticis, makes to have issued out of this Country, and to plant themselves on the North banks of the Ister, near the Euxine Sea, some time before the Trojan war: ascribing to them whatsoever is reported in old writers of the antient Scythians, as their encounter with Vexoris or Sesostris, the King of Egypt, the Act and atchievements of the Amazons: their congress with Alexander the Great, in his Persian war, and the like to these. In which Jornandes being himself a Goth, is no more to be credited than Geofrie of Monmouth, a Welchman, in the story of Brute, and his successors, to whom he doth ascribe the taking and sack of Rome under the conduct of Brennus, whom he makes to be the brother of Belinus, a King of Britain. Most probable it is, that they were originally a Dutch, or German people, part of the great Nation of the Suevi, called by Tacitus the Gothones, inhabiting in his time (as it is conceived) in the land of Prussia. Who finding their own Country too narrow for them, might pass over the Baltick, into the next adjoyning Regions; and not well liking that cold clime, might afterwards in some good numbers goe to seek new dwellings, and at last seat themselves on the banks of the Ister, where Jornandes found them. That they were Dutch originally, besides the general name of the Gothones or Goths, and those of Ostrogothes, and Wisigothes, into which they were afterwards divided; the particular names of Alaric, Theodorick, Riccared, (the names of their Kings and Captains) seem to me to evidence. That they were once seated in this Country doth appear as plainly, 1. By the name of Gothland, here still remaining; 2ly. by the title of Rex Gothorum, which the Kings of Swethland keep in the Royal stile; and 3ly. by some inscriptions in antient unknown Characters, engraven on the rocks near Scara in the Continent, and in Wisby in the Isle of Gothland; supposed by learned men to be some monument of that people. And finally, that their fixt dwellings, when first known by this name amongst the Romans, was on the North side of the Ister; is evident by the testimony of all antient Writers, from the time of Antoninus Caracalla, with whom they had some tumultuary skirmishes in his way towards Persia; till their violent irruption into Italy and the Western Provinces: most famous in this interval for a great fight with Decius the Roman Emperour, whom they overcame and slew in battel, Anno 253. In the time of Valens, and Valentinian, the Roman Emperours, a quarrel being grown amongst them, managed by Phritigernes and Athanaricus, the leaders of the opposite factions; Phritigernes overthrown in fight, had recourse to Valens; from whom he received such succours, that giving his adversary another day for it, he obtained the victory. Whereupon Phritigernes and his party received the Gospel, but intermixt and corrupt with the leaven of Arianism, by the practice of Valens, who sent them none but Arian teachers, to whom and their factions in the Church he was wholly addicted. Afterwards the whole Nation being driven over the Ister, by the barbarous Huns, they obtained of Valens the out parts of Thrace for an habitation; on condition they should serve under the pay of the Emperour, and become Christians: the cause that Arianism over-spread the whole Nation generally, which had before infected but one party only. Ulphilas a devout and learned man, was their first Bishop; who for their better edification in the way of godliness, invented a new Gothick Character, and translated the Scriptures into that language: in the study whereof they so well profited, that many of them in the time of their first conversion, suffered death for it, at the hands of Athanaricus, and were counted Martyrs. Burdned by Valens, and denied their accustomed pay, they harasse and depopulate the rest of Thrace, marching ing towards Constantinople: encountred in the way by Valens, whom they overcame, and killed after all his favours. Vanquished by Theodosius the succeeding Emperour in many battels, they became good neighbours, inlarging their bounds with his leave and licence as far as Pannonia, and grown into such estimation with him, that Ricimer and Franita, two of that Nation, did obtain the Consulship; not to say any thing of that exorbitant power and favour, which Gainas had attained unto in the Court it self. Made insolent by so great honours, and apt to pick quarrels with their Patrons, they invaded Italy in two great bodies, consisting of no fewer than 200000 fighting men: the first whereof under the conduct of Rhadaguisus, was discomfited and cut in pieces, by Stilico Lieutenant to Honorius the Western Emperour, at Fesulæ in the straits of the Appennine. The other by his treachery permitted to passe, sacked Rome, and subdued the most part of Italy, under the leading of Alaricus. He dying immediatly after this great victory, left the fruits of it to his son Athaulfus; who marying with Galla Placidia, the Emperours sister, relinquished Italy, and had all Gaul Narbonnoise, and a great part of Hispania Tarraconensis assigned unto him; where he erected the kingdom of the Westgothes, or Western Goths, possessed of Spain and Tingitana, for the space of 300 years and upward, when they lost that kingdom to the Moors, as hath there been said. In the mean time, the Goths which were left in their own Countries, distinguished from these by the name of Ostro-Goths, by reason of their more Eastern situation, kept themselves in quiet: first subdued by the Huns, and when by Wilamar, freed from that subjection, not intermedling or attempting any thing against the Empire, till called by Zeno Emperour of Constantinople into Italy against Odoacer and the Heruli, who had then subdued it. Which action they managed with so much prudence, and good fortune, by their King Theodorick, that they vanquished Odoacer, possessed Italy, and held it above 60 years; when broken in many set battels by Belisarius and Narses, Lieutenants for the Emperour Justinian; their kingdom and name there came unto an end. Goths.

As for the Kings of the Goths, we have a succession of them in Jornandes, from Berig, who first conducted them out of Scandia towards the East; till the going of Theodorick into Italy; but made up with so little probability, that I dare give no more credit to it, than to the stories of Brute, Dan, Fergus, or the Lady Scota, Pharaohs daughter. Such of whom there is any certain knowledge and succession, are these few that follow:

The KINGS of the GOTHS.

344 1. Athanaricus king of the Goths, in the time of Constantius and Constans, the sons of Constantine the Great.

357 2 Alaricus, the first of that name, in the time of Constantius.

3 Phritigernes, King of the Goths in the time of Valens, the first Christian Prince among that People.

370 4 Athanaricus II. in the time of the Emperours Valens, Gratian, and Valentinian, the second; under whom the Goths were first setled on this side of the Ister.

379 5 Rhadaguisus, who in the time of Honorius, first led the Goths into Italy; slain at the battel of Fesulæ.

410 6 Alaricus II. who pursuing the war of Italy, sacked Rome, subdued Naples, and the most of Italy.

412 7 Athaulfus, the son of Alarick the second, who first erected the kingdom of the Wisigothes in Gaul, and Spain, continuing there for the space of 300 years and upwards: the present Kings of Spain coming from this stock.

417 8 Athalaricus, King of the Goths remaining in the East, at the departure of Rhadaguise and Alaricus, distinguished from their plantations, by the name of Ostrogothes: vanquished by Attila, they became subject to the Huns, in the time of Theodosius the second, and Valentinian the third Emperours of the East, and West.

9 Wilamir, one of the blood Royal of the Goths, Vassal to Attila at the first, whom he assisted or served rather, in the great battel near Tholouse against the Romans: but taking advantage of some quarrels amongst the sons of Attila, shook off that yoke, and recovered the kingdom of the Goths, in the time of the Emperour Marcianus.

10 Theodomir, son of Winithar, and brother of Wilamir, in the time of Leo Emperour of Constantinople.

11 Theodorick, son of Theodomir, kept at Constantinople in his youth, as a Pledge or Hostage for his Father, where he was instructed in all the Greek and Roman learning, and made the adopted son (as is said by Scaliger) of the Emperour Zeno; by whom he was sent into Italy against Odoacer and the Heruli, erecting there the kingdom of the Ostrogothes; which continued till the reign of Justinian, when destroyed by Belisarius and Narses, as before is said; the name of Goths in Italy being thus extinct, but their blood intermixt with the best Italian. The sum of their whole story, for varieties sake, take thus out of Du Bartas.

The warlike Goth, which whilom issued forth
From the cold frozen Islands of the North, Incamp'd by Vistula; but th' Air almost
Being there as cold as in the Bahick Coast,

He

Lapland.

He with victorious Arms Sclavonia gains,
The Tranſilvanian, and Valachian plains.
Then flies to Thracia, and then leaving Greeks,
Greedy of ſpoil, four times he bravely ſeeks
To pluck from Rome, then Mars his Minion,
The Plumes which ſhe from all the world had won:
Guided by Rhadaguiſe, and Alarick,
Bold Vindimarus, and Theodorick.
Thence flies to France; from whence expulſt, his Legions Reſt ever ſince upon the Spaniſh Regions.

The Arms of theſe Kings are ſaid to have been Or, three Ravens with diſplayed wings Purple, membred Gules. And let this ſuffice for the original, ſucceſſes, and final period of the Goths; reſerved by me unto this place, becauſe moſt commonly conceived to be their original Countrey; at leaſt the place out of which they iſſued, when they firſt moved towards the Eaſt to ſeek new dwellings.

SWEDEN.

SWEDEN is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Bodner Sea; on the Weſt, with the Dofrine Hils, which part it from Norwey; on the North, with Lapland; on the South, with Gothland. So called from the Suethans, or Suethidi, the old Inhabitants hereof, of whom more anon. A Country ſufficiently fruitfull, but for the goodneſs of the ſoil inferiour to Gothland; and not ſo well planted or inhabited as that is, by reaſon of the vaſt Woods which they will not ſuffer to be deſtroyed, and the greatneſs of ſome mariſhes hitherto undrained: but might be made as rich and fertile, if the people would; as appeareth by that plenty of corn growing amongſt the woods, though much hindred by their ſhade and thickneſs, both from Sun and rain. But for the character of this Country we had it formerly, when we ſpake of Swethland in the general; relating ſpecially to this, as the principal part.

And as the largeſt and principal part of this great body, it contains in it many Provinces, and ſubdiviſions, as namely, 1. Upland, 2. Suderman, 3. Noricia, 4. Weſtman, 5. Dalecarle, 6. Wermelund, 7. Coperdale, 8. Geſtricia, 9. Helſingen, 10. Middelphat, 11 Angerman, bordering on Lapland, the furtheſt of theſe Provinces towards the North. Many of which have no Towns or Citles of any greatneſs, or beauty, the people living thin, and ſcattered, where they have wood for building, paſturage for their Beaſts, and elbow room enough for themſelves and their Cattel. Of theſe the principal are, 1. Upſal, an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſity, ſituate not far from the Bay of Bodner: beautified with a large Cathedral, wherein many of the antient Kings of Swethland are interred. From this City the Country hereabouts is ſtiled Archiepiſcopatus Upſalenſis. 2. Holm, by the Inhabitants called Stockholm, by the Ruſſians Stecolnè; the Royal ſeat of the Kings, a noted and well-traded Port, and the chief of the kingdom: exceeding ſtrong both by Art and Nature, as being ſituate in the Mariſhes, like Venice, at the mouth of the Lake, or River of Meler, the paſſage to it out of the Bay, being very narrow, and by conſequence eaſily defended; and yet ſo deep withall, that the greateſt ſhips of burden may ſail up to the City: the Port within the Strait being ſo ſafe and capacious, that it is able to receive at one time 300 ſail, which uſually ride there without any Anchor. The Caſtle of this City is conceived to be one of the ſtrongeſt holds in the world; fortified for the more aſſurance of it with 400 braſs peeces, many of which are double Canons. 3. Nicopen, a Sea Town on the ſame Bay alſo. Theſe three are in that part hereof which is called Upland. Then there is 4 Strengnes, an Epiſcopal See; and 5. Telge, on the Lake of Meler, in the Province of Suderman: the title and eſtate of Charls, Father of Guſtavus Adolphus, late King of Sweden; before his getting of the Crown, called Duke of Suderman. Next, in the Province of Weſtman, there are 6. Arbogen, on the Weſt ſide of the ſaid Lake of Meler; and 7. Aroſe, rich in ſilver mines; out of which are made the beſt Dollars of Sweden: the mines here being ſo rich and profitable, that out of every fifteen pound weight of ſilver, the workmen draw a pound weight of gold. 8. Helſinge, upon the Bay of Bodner, in the Province of Helſingen, taking name from hence. 9. Ozebo, or Ourbou, a ſtrong piece in Neriſia; and 10. Leſinger, on the Bay of Bodner, one of the furtheſt North of Sweden, diſtinctly and ſpecially ſo called.

LAPLAND.

LAPLAND, the moſt Northern part of all Scandia, hath on the Eaſt, Ruſſia; on the Weſt, the Province or Prefecture of Wardhuys, in the kingdom of Norwey; on the North, the main frozen Ocean; and on the South, Bodia, or Bodden, on both ſides of the Bay ſo called.

It is named thus originally from the Lappi or Lappones, the Inhabitants of it; as they are from their blockiſh behaviour; the word Lappon ſignifying the ſame with ineptus or inſulſus in Latine, for ſuch they are: rude, barbarous, and without the knowledge of Arts or Letters, as alſo without corn and houſes, or any certain habitations (except only in Finmarch:) feeding for the moſt part on fiſh, and the fleſh of wild beaſts, with the skins whereof ſowed together they hide their nakedneſs. Generally they are meer Idolaters, giving divine honour all day following to that living creature whatſoever it be, which they ſee at their firſt ſetting out in the morning: great Sorcerers, and abhorring ring the sight of strangers, whom till of late they used to flee from, at their first approach; but within few years past beginning to be more sociable and familiar. In a word, they are the true descendants of the antient Finni (possessed in old times of all that tract, which lyeth between the Bay of Finland, and the Frozen Ocean) whose natural rudenesse and barbarity, unmixt with the conditions of more civil people, they do still retain. Finland.

It is divided into the Eastern and the Western Lapland. The former appertaining to the Knez or great Duke of Muscovie, by which people the Inhabitants are called Dikilopti, or the wild Lappians; is subdivided into Biarmia, and Corelia; of which, if there be any thing in them worth taking notice of, we shall there speak more. The latter doth belong to the Crown of Sweden, subdivided into 2. parts also, that is to say, Finmarch, and 2. Scricfinnia.

1 FINMARCH, being that part hereof which lyeth next unto Norwey, is the more populous of the two; the people for the most part idolatrous, but by the neighbourhood of the Norwegians, and resort of strangers unto Wardhuys, and the parts adjoyning, somewhat civilized; and in the borders of both kingdoms savouring of Religion; possessed of sheds or sorry houses, and those houses reduced to parishes, under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Upsal; the chief of which, (if there be any chief amongst them) are named 1. Samman, and 2 Hielso. Called Finmarch, as the antient bounds and Marches of the Finni, (of whom more anon) and therefore erroneously by Magnus, made a part of the kingdom of Norwey.

2 SCRICFINNIA, lyeth between Finmarch and Russia. The name derived from the Finni, a great people of Scandia, and Scriken a Dutch word signifying leaping, sliding, or bounding, for such is their gate. An etymologie not much improbable, in that the wooden-soled shoes, with sharp bottoms, which they used for their more speedy sliding over the ice, of which this countrey is full, are by the Germans (who also use them) called Schrikeshoenen, or sliding-shoes. The antient Writers call this people Scricfofinni.

These are indeed the natural and proper Laplanders; and unto these the former character doth of right belong. Of stature very low, little more than Pygmies, but strong and active; well skill'd in Archerie, and patient of cold and labour. Much given to hunting of wild beasts, whom they kill with their bowes, devour the flesh, and cloath themselves with their skins, which they tie at the top of their heads, and leave no place open but for the sight; giving thereby occasion unto some to write, that they are hairie all over, like kine or horses. Such Deer (whereof they have great plenty) as they take unkilled, they make to draw in little carts, as they shift their Quarters. But having served them for a while, they are killed at last, though perhaps for nothing but their skins: a certain number of which they pay yearly to the King of Sweden, in the way of tribute. Three companies of these Laplanders, so clad and armed as aforesaid, came into Germany in the year 1630. to serve Gustavus in those wars; looked on with admiration by all spectators.

Towns we must look for none here, where no houses be: and yet there are some sheds and cabbins on the Sea shore; which Mariners having made for their refreshment when they came on land, have bestowed some names on, and possibly in time may become good towns, now not worth the naming.

BODIA, BODEN, or BODNER, is situate on the South of Scricfinnia, betwixt it and the Bay or Gulf hence named; extending southwards on the West side of it, till it joyns to Sweden, and on the East side, till it meet with the Province of Finland. Hence the division of this countrey, into the Eastern, Northern, and Western Bodden; with reference to the situation of it on the Bay aforesaid. The countrey not very plentifull of grain or fruits, but full of great variety of wild beasts, whose rich skins yeeld great profit unto the Inhabitants; and by reason of the commodious situation on all sides of the Bay, well stored with Fish. Antiently it was part of the possessions of the Finni, but how or whence it had the name of Bodia, or Bodden, or Bodner, I am yet to learn. But whence soever it had the name, certain I am, that from hence the Gulf adjoyning, is called Sinus Bodicus, Bodner Zee, by the Dutch or German.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Barkara, in West Bodden, betwixt the Bay and a great navigable lake; 2. Gernia, a well-traded Emporie at the very bottom of the Bay, in North Bodden; 3. Helsingeliac, more North than that, towards the borders of Lapland, and 4 Kerlaby, in East Bodden, on the bank of the Gulf, conveniently seated for a town of Trade.

3. FINLAND.

FINLAND hath on the North, Bodia; on the South, the Baltick Sea, or Mare Sucvicum; on the East, Sinus Finnicus; on the West, Sinus Bodicus. It is by Munster thought to be called Finland, quasi fine land; quod pulchrior et amœnior sit Suecia, because it is a more fine and pleasing countrey than Sweden it self. But indeed it is so called from the Finni, or Fenni; a potent Nation, who have here dwelt; whose character is thus framed by Tacitus. Finnis mira feritas, fœda paupertas, non arma, non equi, non penates; victui herba, vestitui pelles, cubile humus, sola in sagittis spes. The Finnes, saith he, are wonderfully barbarous, miserably poor, without Arms, Horse, or Houshold Gods: Herbs their food, the ground their bed, and the skins of beasts their best apparell, armed only with their Arrows, and in them their hopes. A Character which agreeth every way with our present Finlanders, especially ſpecially thoſe of Scricfinnia, and ſome parts of Finmarchia; who are not ſo well reclamed to civility, as the other are; but very different from that which Jornandes gives them, who living within 400 years after Tacitus, before they had much (if any) entercourſe with forein Nations; telleth us of them, that they were Scanziæ Cultoribus omnibus mitiores, more tractable and civil than any of the Inhabitants of Scandia, not excepting the Suethidi themſelves. If ſo, they did deſerve to live in ſo good a Countrey, more plentifull and plain than Sweden, and neither ſo hilly nor ſo mooriſh.

The principal places in it are 1. Abo, an Archbiſhops See, ſituate on the moſt Southern point of it, ſhooting into the Baltick. 2. Wiburg, a Biſhops See alſo, whoſe juriſdiction for the moſt part is without this Province, on ſome part of Ruſſia; all Finland being in the Dioceſe of the Biſhop of Abo. A town conveniently ſeated at the bottom of the Bay or Gulph of Finland (called Sinus Finnicus in Latine) which divides this Country from Livonia: well fortified, as the chief Bulwark of this kingdom, againſt the Muſcovite; and ſo well garriſoned withall, that the keeping of this town, and Rivallia, in the borders of Liefland, do coſt the King of Sweden 100000 Dollars yearly. 3. Udden, on a point or Promontory of the ſame Gulf, oppoſite to Narve, another Garriſon of this king, in Liefland. 4 Verma, upon the Bodner Zee. 5 Cronaburg, more within the land, at the efflux of a River out of the Lake called Puente. 6 Deckala, on the banks of the great Lake called Hoſela. 7 Varta, more northwards towards Lapland: of which laſt four, I find not any thing obſervable in the way of ſtory.

6. The SWEDISH ILANDS.

And now at laſt I come to the Swediſh Ilands, here and there interſperſed in the Baltick Seas, betwixt the Iſle of Bornholm, which belongs to Denmark, and Liefland or Livonia, appertaining to the King of Poland: the principall of which, are 1. Gothia, or the Iſle of Gothland, and 2. Inſulæ Ulandæ, or the Iſles of Oelands.

1. GOTHIA; or the Iſle of GOTHLAND, is ſituate over againſt Colmar, a ſtrong town in the Continent of Gothland; in length 18 Dutch miles, and five in breadth. Of a rich ſoil, but more fit for paſturage than tillage, yeelding great herds of Cattel, ſtore of game for hunting, plenty of fiſh, excellent marble, and aboundance of pitch, which it ſends forth to other Countreys. There are in it 18 large and wealthy Villages; beſides the Haven town of Wisbich, heretofore rich, and of very great trading, as much frequented by the Merchant as moſt in Europe; but now much decayed, and neither ſo well peopled, nor ſo rich as formerly. The trade removed hither from Wollin in Pomerania (deſtroyed by Waldemar the firſt of Denmark, An. 1170.) made it flouriſh mightily; the greateſt traffick of the Baltick being managed here: but after that, by reaſon of the long and continual wars, betwixt Denmark and Swethland for the poſſeſſion of this Iſle, it became unſafe; the Factorie was transferred unto other places. For being conveniently ſeated to annoy the Swedes, the Danes have much contended for it, and ſometimes poſſeſſed it; but at the preſent is in the hand of the Swethlander. By ſome conceived to be che Eningia ſpoken of by Pliny.

2. OELAND, or the Iſles of Ulandt, ſo called in the plurall number, becauſe there are many of them, of which this the principall; is ſituate over againſt Abo, the chief City of Finland. Of no great note, but that it is commodiouſly ſeated to invade, or annoy this kingdom; and therefore very well fortified, and as ſtrongly garriſoned: here being the good towns of 1. Viburg, 2. Vames, and 3. the ſtrong Caſtle of Caſtrolm.

Beſides which Countreys here deſcribed, the King of Sweden is poſſeſſed of the ſtrong townes of Narve, and Rivallia, and Pernow in Liefland; of Kexholm, or Hexholm, in Corelia, a Province of Ruſſia; with very fair and ample territories appertaining to them: ſubdued and added to this Crown by John the ſecond, Anno 1581. except Rivallia, which voluntarily ſubmitted to Ericus the ſecond King of this preſent Race, Anno 1561. But being theſe Towns and Territories are not within the bounds of Swethland, we ſhall defer all further diſcourſe thereof, to a place more proper.

The firſt Inhabitants of this kingdom, beſides the Goths and Finni, ſpoken of already, were the Sitones, and Suiones, mentioned in Tacitus; together with the Phavonæ, the Phiræſi, and the Levoni, whom we find in Ptolemie, placed by him in the Eaſt and middle of this great Peninſula. Which being the general names of ſome mighty Nations, are by Jornandes branched into leſſer tribes, of the Suethans, Theuſtad, Vagoth, Bergio, Hallin, Liothida, Athelnil, Galirigoth, Raumaricæ, Rauragnicii, Grannii, Aganzia, Ibnixia, Arochitamii, Enageræ, Othingi, and divers others by him named. But from what root the name of Sweden, Swedes, or Swethland, by which the chief Province of it, the people generally, and the whole kingdom is now called, is not yet agreed on; nor ſpoken of at all by Munſter, or Crantzius, which two, (but ſpecially the laſt) have written purpoſely of this people. Gaſpar Peucerus deriveth them from the Suevi, who antiently inhabited in the North parts of Germany, beyond the Albis; from whom, the Baltick ſea was called Mare Suevicum: which people he conceiveth to have been driven by the Goths and Daci, into this countrey; and by the change of one letter only to be called Suci. But this hath no good ground to ſtand on, though I meet with many others which are more improbable. For when they left thoſe colder countreys, they fell into theſe parts, which are ſtill called Suevia (the Schwaben of the modern Dutch) where we find them in the time of Cæſar. And after, in fatali illa gentium commigratione, when almoſt all the Northern Nations did ſhift their ſeats, we find ſuch of them as had ſtaid behind, to have accompanyed the Vandals in their on-falls into Gaul, and Spain. Of any expedition of theirs croſſe the Baltick ſeas, ne gry quidem; nothing to be found, in more antient Authors. We muſt therefore reſerve the original of this people either to the Suiones, or the Suethidi, or perhaps to both: both being antiently setled in these Northern Regions. Of the Suiones we read in the book of Tacitus, inscribed De Moribus Germanorum; by whom reported to be strong in men, armour, and shipping: and that they were Inhabitants of Scandia, appears by two circumstances in that Author. 1. That the people were not permitted to wear weapons, quia subitos hostium incursus prohibet Oceanus, because the Ocean was to them a sufficient Rampart; which could not be affirmed of the antient Suevians, but agreeth very well with the situation of this present Country, defended by the Baltick, and vast Northern Ocean, from the sudden assaults of any enemy. 2. Because the Sea which hemmed in that people was conceived to be the utmost bound of the World; trans Suiones mare aliud, quo cingi claudique terrarum orbis fines, as his words there are: which we know to hold good of this Country. Adde unto these this passage of the old Annals of the Emperour Lewis the second, where it is told us of the Danes, relicta patria apud Suiones exulabant, that they were banished into the Countrey of the Suiones, which cannot so well be understood of any place, as of this Sweden; being next neighbour unto Denmark. And 4ly, that this people, both by Munster and Crantzius, are as well called Suiones, as Sueci, or Suedi; which sheweth what they conceived of their true Original. Then for the Suethans or the Suethidi, whom Jornandes speaks of in his book De rebus Geticis, they are by him placed in the Isle of Scandia (for such this great Peninsula was esteemed to be by most antient writers.) Now that these Suethidi are no other than the present Swethlanders, appeareth 1. by the propinquity of the names; 2. In that he maketh the Finni, and Finnaithæ, the next neighbours to them; And 3. in that they are affirmed by the same Author, to have furnished the Romans with rich Furs, and the skins of wild Beasts, with which commodities this country is abundantly well stored. Now to which of these two Nations, either the Suiones, or the Suethidi, those of Sweden are most indebted for their original, will (I conceive) be no great controversie: the Suethans, and Suethidi, of Jornandes, being no other than a tribe of the Suiones, though the greatest and most powerfull of all those tribes; placed therefore in the front to command the rest, and so most like to give the name unto the whole.

Their government was antiently under Kings, affirmed so to be by Tacitus, who telleth us also that they were absolute and free, nullis exceptionibus, non precario jure regnandi; not bound in Covenant with their people, nor holding their Estates at the will of the Subject. But their Historians have gone for Antiquity hereof, beyond the story of Brute, or the Trojan warre, (beyond which very few of that strain have dared to pretend;) as high as unto Magog, the son of Japhet, reigning here within 90 years after the flood. But letting pass these dreams and dotages of the Monkish times, certain it is, that sometimes they were under the Danes, sometimes under the Norwegians, sometimes had distinct Kings of their own: and finally sometimes were comprehended with the Danes, and Norwegians, under the general name of Normans; conducted by one King, or Captain, upon forein actions. Omitting therefore the succession of their former kings, of whose very being there is cause to make great question; we will begin our Catalogue of them with Jermanicus, who entertained Harald King of Denmark, and his brother Regenfride, driven out of that kingdom by Gotricus or Godfrey, the Contemporary of Charlemagne; of whose successors Munster giveth us more certainty.

1387 29 Margaret, Queen of Denmark, Sweden, and Norwey, the Semiramis of Germany, having united the three kingdoms under her command; caused an Act of State to be passed in Colmar, a chief town of Swethland, for the perpetuation of this Union unto her Successors: the Lawes and Privileges of each kingdom, continuing as before they were.

1411 30 Ericus IV. Duke of Pomeren, adopted by Margaret, of whose sister Ingelburgis he was descended; was in her life time chosen King of the three kingdoms, into which he succeeds actually after her decease: but outed of them all by a strong faction raised against him, Anno 1439, he dyed in a private estate in Pomeren, anno 1559.

1439 31 Chri-

1448 32 Carolus Canutus, one of the meanest of the Nobility, and not long pleasing to the great ones: whose displeasure when he had incurred, and feared the consequents thereof, he gathereth together all the treasure he could, fled unto Dantzick, and there ended his dayes.

1455 33 Christiern, King of Denmark and Norwey, called in by a party of the Swedes, and crowned King of Swethland; but outed again under colour that he had not kept conditions with them: the kingdom governed after that (for a time) by Marshals.

1458 34 John, King of Denmark and Norwey, the son of Christiern, received king by the Swedes, then overpowred by the Muscovite: but their turn being served, they expelled him again; returning to their former Government under Marshalls. Of which Marshals (descended from Steno Stur, the Uncle of Carolus Canutus by his Mothers side) there were three in number; viz. 1 Steno, 2 Suanto, and 3 Steno Stur the second: of which the two first dyed natural deaths, and the last being by Christiern the second slain in battell, this kingdom was again possessed by the Danes.

1519 35 Christiern II. King of all three kingdoms, used his victory so cruelly here, and his subjects so insolently at home, that here he was outed by Gustavus Ericus, and driven out of Denmark by his Uncle Frederick.

1523 36 Gustavus Ericus, descended from the antient race of the kings of Sweden, having vanquished and expelled the Danes, was on the merit of that action chosen king of Swethland; which still continueth in his house.

1561 37 Ericus V. son to Gustavus 8.

1569 38 John II. brother of Ericus, maried Catharine the sister of Sigismund the second, king of Poland.

1593 39 Sigismund, the son of John the second, in the life time of his Father chosen king of Poland, Anno 1586. but was dispossessed of the Crown of Sweden (after a long warre) by his Uncle Charls.

1607 40 Charls II. Duke of Suderman, the youngest son of Gustavus Ericus, and brother of John and Eric, the two former kings; first governed here as Viceroy for his Nephew Sigismund. But having an aim upon the Crown (to which he found the Lutherans not very favourable) he raised up a Calvinian party within that Realm; according to whose principles, he began first to withdraw his obedience from his naturall Prince, and afterwards to assume the Government to himself: speeding so well in his design, that after a long war, he forced his Nephew to desist from all further enterprises, and made himself king, Anno 1607.

1611 41 Gustavus Adolphus, sonne of Charles, having setled his affaires in Sweden, and made peace with the king of Denmark, with whom his father was in warre at the time of his death; fell first upon his Cousin Sigismund, the king of Poland, from whom hee took many places of importance in Prussia, and Livonia; and in pursuance of that warre was made Knight of the Garter. Afterwards, having setled a Truce with him, he passed into Germanie, then in great danger of being absolutely inthralled to the house of Austria. In which he prospered so beyond all expectation, that in one year he passed over the Elb, the Rhene, and the Danow (which no Conquerour ever did before:) and having twice vanquished the Imperialists led by Tilly, and restored many of the German Princes unto their estates; was in the current of his victories, slain in the battell of Lutzen, Novem. 1632. his body royally conveyed to Swethland, and there interred.

1632 42 Christina, sole daughter of Gustavus, of the age of seven years, acknowledged Queen of Sweden; the estate governed by the Counsails of the Nobility. After a long war, with variable successe, in Germany, they came at last to this Accord in the Treaty of Munster; That she and her Successors, Kings and Queens of Swethland, should peaceably enjoy all the Higher Pomeren, with the Isles of Rugia, Wollin, and the Town of Stettin, in Lower Pomerland; the Town and Port of Wismar, in the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and the whole Bishoprick of Bremen, Pomeren, and Verden, and the Prefecture of the Town of Wilchusen; with the title of Dukes of Bremen, Pomerea, and Verden, Princes of Rugia, and Lords of Wismar; and by those titles to have place, as Princes of the Empire, in all Diets and Assemblies which concern the publick. By which agreement (if it hold) the Swedes have not only got a good footing in Germanie, a strong influence upon all the Counsels of the Empire, a dore open for more forces (if occasion be) and a free passag into the Western Ocean, which before they wanted: but may in time prove absolute Matters of the Baltick sea; and make the Hamburgers, those of Lubeck, and possibly the kings of Denmark and the Empire it self, be at their devotion.

But leaving these things to the doubtfull issue of contingencie, let us next look upon the Forces and Reveunes of the Crown of Sweden, before the time of Gustavus Adolphus, or as he found it at his succession to that Crown. For though the Swedes pretend their kingdom to be Elective, especially especially since the failing of the Royal Line in Magnus the fourth, and Albert of Mecklenbourg: yet still the eldest son, or next heir, succeedeth; unless put by, by faction and strong hand, as in the case of Sigismund, and his Uncle Charls; Which Charls so ordered his affairs, that having engaged the kingdom in a war against his nephew, he was sollicited at the last to accept of the Crown: to which he would by no means yeeld, till a Law was made, for the entailing of the same for ever unto his posterity, whether male or female, as an Hereditary Crown. But whether Hereditary or Elective, the King once setled in the Throne, is an absolute Monarch: having not only power to levie taxes on his subjects, as he seeth occasion, as five, six, seven, eight dollars, or more, yearly upon every Housholder, according to the proportion of his estate; but also to grant a certain number of Paisants unto such as he means to favour, to be as subjects and vassals to him, according to his well-deserving. And whereas in the constitution of this Government, every Parish hath a Lanasman or Consul to decide the controversies of the same; as every Territorie hath its Vicount, and each Province his Lamen: there lyeth an Appeal from the Landsman unto the Vicount, and from the Vicount to the Lamen; who if they be supposed not to judge uprightly, then the Appeal lies unto the Counsel, and from the Counsel of Estate to the King himself, (in whom is fixed the Soveraignty, and DERNIER RESORT) and not unto the King and Counsel, as before in Denmark.

The Forces of this King are either by Sea, or Land. By Sea, he is Commander wholly of the Bay of Bodner, and hath a great power in all the rest of the Balick: being able to set out 70 good Men of War, as John the second did in the year 1578. seven of which were good Gallions, and all the rest did carry above 50 cast peeces of all sorts; besides many other good Vessels fit for service. And if a Navie of this size will not serve the turn, he is not only furnished with timber, cordage, and all other necessaries for the building of Ships, and with good store of Ordnance and Ammunition for present use; but is able to raise upon a sudden 6000 Mariners, and upon little warning as many more: all which he entertaineth at no other charges in a manner, than to find them victuals, insomuch as John the second, before mentioned, did use to say, that that which cost the King of Spain a million of Crowns, cost not him 100000 Dollars.

For his Land forces, they may best be estimated by the Trained Bands (as we may call them) in every Province: there being in all 32 Vexilles (or Ensigns) of Foot constantly trained and mustered in the several Provinces; each Vexille comprehending 600 or 700 men, amounting in the total to 20000 Foot, all in a manner Musketiers, ready to march whensoever the Kings occasion shall so require. And then for Horse, there are eleven Cornets in continual readiness, for Sweden, and Gothland, and two for Finland, maintained at the charges of those Countries: to which the King may add at his own charges as many more as he pleaseth. And for an instance of what this King is able to doe, without putting his estates in hazard by draining them too dry of men to make good his kingdom: we find that John the second in his Navy of 70 Ships spoken of before, had above 18000 Land-Souldiers, besides Mariners. And in the Army which Gustavus Adolphus, the late King, brought into Germanie, there were mustered no fewer at one time, than 12000 Horse, and 34000 Foot, all Finnes and Swethlanders. For the accommodating of which Armies with Artillerie, and the like Engines of war, it is thought that the Kings hereof are masters of 8000 great peeces, for the most part brass, with Mortar peeces and Granadoes in proportion to them.

But that which makes his Land forces most considerable, is their hardness in enduring the extremities of wind and weather; insomuch that it is usual with them, to stand Centinel a whole Winters night of 18 hours long, without being relieved: their exact Discipline, and obedience to their Commanders, and finally their indefatigable industry in making their own shoes, apparel, stocks for Muskets, and all other necessaries. Which doth not only make them fit to endure any labour which is put upon them in the wars; but keeps them from idleness, and the pride of Mutinies; the ordinary effect, in great Armies, of sloth and ease. Nor do they want incouragement on the Kings part neither; who first, gives to every Souldier victuals, which he accompts not in their pay, and that according to his obedience and desert; 2. If a Souldier be taken Prisoner, him the King doth usually redeem at his own charges; and 3. if a Souldiers horse be slain under him, the King supplyeth him with another: which makes the Souldiers (very sensible of such obligations) exceedingly conformable unto his commands, how dangerous soever they may seem to be.

Finally, as for his Revenues, they must needs be great, there being four ways allowed him to amasse his treasures. First, the Revenues of the Church, consisting before the Reformation of seven Bishopricks, and sixty Monasteries, which enjoyed very great possessions; all seized on by Gustavus Ericus, and by him incorporate to the Crown; excepting only what is given back to maintain the Bishops. 2ly. Mines, which are here of all metals in very great plenty, except of Gold and Silver, which they have more sparingly; the tenth whereof in all places belongs to the King, and yeelds him such a fair Intrado, that in the year 1578. the Kings part out of two or three Mines of Copper only, amounted to 30000 Dollars. 3. Tenths out of all increase, as Rie, Wheat, Barley, Fish, Oxen, Skins, and the like commodities; the sum whereof though not certainly known (because the increase is so uncertain) yet it was once computed, that the tenth of the Oxen only, came in one year to 18000 Dollars, besides provision for his housholds. 4. And lastly, Customs imposed on Merchandise, and paid in all his Haven Towns for all commodities imported, or exported, of what sort soever. Besides all which, he hath his Contributions in all times of war, power of imposing taxes (though moderately used) as his necessities require: and on the mariage of a daughter, the kingdom is to provide her portion, which of late times hath been fixed at the certain sum of 100000 Dollars, besides Plate and moveables. Out of which several Items to sum up the total: It was observed, that in the year 1578. King John the second (all charges, ordinary and extraordinary, being first deducted) did lay up in his Treasury no less than 700000 Dollars: which was a vast sum for those times, considering especially the great charge which he king had been at that year, in furnishing a Navy of 70 sail, and raising 18000 Land-souldiers, (besides Horse) for defence of his Realm against the Danes. And yet it is conceived by some knowing men, that his Revenues would be much greater than they are, if he did employ strangers to work the mines, which the Natives do not husband to the best advantage; and yet are fearfull to discover them to other Nations, upon some jealousies, which they are naturally addicted to: or if he would turn Merchant, and in his own ships send out Corn and Cordage, with Masts and Timber fit for building; and in them bring back salt and other necessaries, which his kingdom wants, setting them at a far less price than now they goe at, and yet gaining very greatly by it too.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, three Crowns, Or.

There are in Swethland

RVSSIA.

RUSSIA, is bounded on the East, by Tartarie; on the West, with Livonia, and Finland, from which divided by great mountains, and the River Poln; on the North, by the Frozen Ocean, and some part of Lapland; and on the South, by Lituania, a Province of the Kingdom of Poland, and the Crim Tartars inhabiting on the banks of Palus Maotis, and the Euxine Sea. It standeth partly in Europe, and partly in Asia, the River Tanais or Don running through it; the common boundary of those great and noted parts of the world.

It was thus called from the Rossi or Russi, a people of Mount Taurus, or Taurica Chersonesus (if not both) who in the declining times of the Greek Empire, possessed themselves of some parts of it; and being the prevailing people, imposed their name on all the rest. Called also Russia Alba, to distinguish it from Russia Nigra, a Province of Poland, quod incolæ omnium gentium ipsius imperio subjectarum (as one observes discoursing of the affairs hereof) vestibus albis & Pileis plerunq; utantur, because the Inhabitants use to wear white caps and vestments. And why not thus? sithence the people of Margiana, and Sogdiana in Asia, have the name of Jeselbasse, only because they wear green turbants, as the word imporeth. Finally, it is called Moscovie, from Moscovie the chief Province of it; as that denominated from the Moschi, of whom more anon.

In reference to the heavenly bodies, it is said by some to be situate betwixt the 8th. and 20th. Climates; the longest day in the Southern parts, being but 16 hours and an half; and almost 22 hours and an half in the Northern parts. But this is to be understood only of the Province of Moscovie, properly and specially so called; and not of the whole Empire of the Moscovite, acccording to the bounds before laid down. For taking in the Northern Provinces belonging to it, as East Lapland, Condora, and Petzora, lying within the Arctick Circle, the longest day in Summer will be full 6 months (for so long do those Countries see no night at all) which is a mighty disproportion, from the length of the longest day in the most Southern parts, being but 16 hours and a half, as before is said. And by this rule we are to take the dimensions also. For though some make the length hereof from North to South, that is to say, from Cala in the North, to Astrachan near the Caspian Sea, to be no more than 2260 Verſts, or 3690 Italian miles; yet they confeſs, that reckoning forwards from Tromſchna, the furtheſt point of Petzora, the full length thereof will be nigh ſo much more. And for the breadth, reckoning from Narve, on the Bay of Finland (now in poſſeſſion of the Swedes) to the Province of Severia in the Eaſt, it amounteth to 4400 Verſts, or 3300 Italian miles; each Verſt being eſtimated at ¾ quarters of an Engliſh mile. Which mighty Territory, if it were peopled anſwerable to ſome other parts of the world, would either make it too great for one Prince too hold; or make that Prince too great and puiſſant for all his neighbours.

The people, as is commonly reported of them, are very perfidious, crafty, and deceitfull in all their bargains, falſe-dealers with all they have to do with, making no reckoning of their promiſes, and ſtudying nothing more than ways to evade their Contracts. Vices ſo generally known, and noted in them, that when they are to deal with ſtrangers, they diſſemble their Country, and pretend to be of other Nations, for fear leſt no body ſhould truſt them. Deſtitute of humane affections, and ſo unnatural, that the Father inſults on his Son, and he again over his Father and Mother: So malicious one towards an other, that you ſhall have a man hide ſome of his own goods in the houſe of ſome man whom he hateth, and then accuſe him for the ſtealth of them. They are exceedingly given to drink, inſomuch that all heady and intoxicating drinks are by Law prohibited, and two or three days only in a year allowed them to be drunk in. For the moſt part they are ſtrong of body, ſwift of foot, of a ſquare proportion, broad, ſhort, and thick; grey-eyed, broad bearded, and generally furniſhed with prominent paunches. The Commons live in miſerable ſubjection to the Nobles, and they again in as great ſlavery to the Duke or Emperour; to whom no man of all the vulgar dares immediatly exhibit a Petition, or make known his grievances: nay the mean Lords and Officers are ſqueamiſh in this kind, and but on grea ſubmiſſion, will not commend unto the Duke a poor mans cauſe. They are altogether unlearned, even the Prieſts meanly indoctrinated; it being cautionated by the great Duke, that there be no Schools, leſt there ſhould be any Scholars but himſelf; ſo that the people uſe to work commonly on the Lords day, holding it fit to be kept by none but Gentlemen; and to ſay in a difficult queſtion, God and our great Duke know all this; and in other talk, All we enjoy health and life, all from our great Duke, According to whoſe pleaſure every man is preſcribed what habit he ſhall wear, both for matter and faſhion ſuitable unto their condition. In the time of my Author, their habit was a long garment without plaits, which hung down to their heels; commonly of white or blew, with very ſtrait ſleeves; on their legs wearing buskins up as high as the calf, for the moſt part red, high at the heels, and beſet with nails of iron. The ſtuff, and trimming of the dreſs is the only difference betwixt the Noble and the Paiſant.

The women are attired alſo much after this manner; but if great and noble, ſuffered to ſet forth themſelves with ſtore of pearls and precious ſtones, which hang ſo thick about their ears, that they do almoſt pull their ears from their heads. A ſecond mariage is conceived no blemiſh in point of chaſtity, but the third condemns them of incontinence: naturally ſubject enough to the luſts of the fleſh, but private, and fearfull to offend; if once laſcivious, then moſt intollerably wanton. It is the faſhion of theſe women to love that husband beſt which beateth them moſt; and to think themſelves neither loved nor regarded, unleſs they be two or three times a day well favouredly ſwadled. The Author of the Treaſury of times, telleth a ſtory of a German Shoomaker, who travelling into this Country, and here marying a widow, uſed her with all kindneſs that a woman could (as he thought) deſire; yet did not ſhe ſeem contented. At laſt learning where the fault was, and that his not beating her was the cauſe of her penſiveneſs, he took ſuch a vein in cudgelling her ſides, that in the end, the hangman was fain to break his neck for his labour.

They uſe the Sclavonian language but ſo corrupt and mixt with other languages, that they and the Sclavonians underſtand not one anothers meaning, but by circumſtance only: yet in Jugaria (out of which the Hungarians are thought to have iſſued) they ſpeak a corrupt Hungarian; and in Petzora and the Country of Czeremiſſians, they have a language to themſelves, diſtinct from others.

They firſt received the Chriſtian Faith in the year 987. or as ſome ſay, Anno 942. by the preaching and miniſtry of the Greeks; ſent hither by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople: of which Church they are conſtant followers, both for rites and doctrine; but not without ſome ſuperſtitions of their own ſuperadded to them, viz. not coming near a Croſs, Church or Monaſtery, but they kneel down, and make the ſign of the Croſs, ſaying, Miloy Hiſpodi, i.e. Lord have mercy upon us; nor entring into any Church, until waſhed and bathed. They bear a deadly hatred to the Jews, whom they ſuffer not to live amongſt them; and ſo great friendſhip unto a Calf, that they hold it a great offence to kill one, or to eat his fleſh. Their Church is governed by 18 Biſhops, and 2 Metropolitans; all of them ſubordinate to their Archbiſhop or Patriarch; as he, in former times, to the Conſtantinopolitan, by whom he uſed to be confirmed. But about an hundred years agoe they withdrew themſelves from that ſubjection; the Patriarch being nominated by the Great Duke, and conſecrated by two or three of his own Suffragans. Without the counſel and advice of this Patriarch, the Emperour or Great Duke doth nothing of any moment. The Biſhops are all choſen out of the Monaſtick or Regular Clergy; which makes the Monks (being all of the Order of S. Baſil) to live very religiouſly; in hope to be advanced to the Epiſcopal dignity. And for the Secular Clergy, or Parochial Prieſts, there is not much required of them, but to ſay their Maſſes (which being in their own language they may eaſily do,) and to read now and then one of S. Chryſoſtoms Homilies, tranſlated heretofore for the uſe of thoſe Churches: after the death of their firſt wives not permitted to marry, in other things little differing from the reſt of the people. Once in the year it is lawfull and uſual with them to hold a Synod, at which the Patriarch hath his Crozier or Paſtoral ſtaff carried before him, as the Popes Legate hath the Croſſe; where they make Conſti- tutions for the publick government, and the regulating of Divine matters; most punctually and carefully observed by the Prince himself.

As followers of the Greek Church (but so as to be counted a Church distinct) they differ much both from the Romish, and Reformed: 1. Denying the Holy Ghost to proceed from the Father and the Son; 2ly. Denying Purgatory, but praying for the dead; 3ly. Beleeving that holy men enjoy not the presence of God, before the resurrection; 4ly. Communicating in both kinds, but using leavened bread, and mingling warm water with the wine, which both together they distribute with a spoon; 5ly. Receiving children of 7 years old to the Sacrament of the Eucharist, because then they begin to sin; 6ly. Forbid extreme unction, confirmation, and fourth mariages; 7ly. Admitting none to Orders but such as are married, and yet prohibiting mariage to them that are actually in Orders; 8ly. Rejecting carved Images, but admitting the painted; 9ly. Observing four Lents in the year; 10ly. Reputing it unlawfull to fast on Saturday, or to eat blood, or any thing that hath been strangled, according to the first Council holden at Hierusalem; 11ly. And finally, dissolving mariage by divorcement, upon every slight occasion, or conceived displeasure. Which diversity betwixt the Romanists and this people, in point of Religion, ha h bred such a difference betwixt them in point of Affection, and made them so ill conceited of one another; that if a Muscovite be known, or but suspected to have conversed with any of the Church of Rome, he is accounted to be a polluted person, and must be solemnly purged, and purified, before he be admitted to partake of the blessed Sacrament.

In mat ers of war the people are indifferent able, as being almost in continual broils with their Neighbours: and have a custom, that when they go to the wars, every Souldier giveth to the Emperour, or great Duke, a piece of money, which at the end of the war he receiveth again; and by that means the number of the slain is exactly known. At their funerals they use to put a penny into the mouth of the party deceased, a pair of shoes on his feet, and a Letter in his hand, directed (such is their superstition) to S. Nicholas, whom they deem to be the Porter of Heaven: an opinion doubtless very prejudicial to the Popes, and S. Peters prerogatives.

This Country is not so populous, as spacious. The Eastern parts are vexed with the Tartars; who like Æsops dog, will neither dwell there themselves, nor suffer the Moscovites to plant Colonies in them: the Western parts almost as much molested by the Sweden and Polonian Kings; the Southern, by the Turks, and Precopenses; and the Northern, by the coldness of the air, which is of such vehemency, that water thrown up into the Air, will turn to ice before it fall to the ground. The better to resist the extremity of this cold, not only the clothes of this people, but their very houses are lined with thick Furs. Every Gentleman or man of note hath in his dwelling house a stove or hot-house, in which they keep, as it were, to thaw themselves. Such as travel on the way, use often to rub their nose or ears, with snow or ice, to settle and recall the motive spirits into those parts; which otherwise they would be in danger to lose: the ignorance of which preventing Chirurgery, was not the least cause, that in the year 1598. of 70000 Turks which made an inrode into Moscovie, 40000 were frozen to death. By reason of these extremities of frosts and cold, it is the custom of this people to lay the bodies of their dead all the winter long, on heaps in the Belfrees of their Churches; where they lie without putrifying, or any ill savour, till the end of March; at what time the air beginning to wax warm, and the earth to be fit for digging, each family looks out their dead bodies, and takes care to bury them. This excess of cold in the air, gave occasion to Castilian in his Aulicus, wittily, and not incongruously to feign, that if two men being somewhat distant, talk together in the Winter, their words will be so frozen, that they cannot be heard; but if the parties in the Spring return to the same place, their words will melt into the same order that they were frozen and spoken, and be plainly understood. Such is their Winter, neither is their Summer less miraculous. For the huge Seas of Ice, which in a manner covered the whole surface of the Country, are at the first approach of the Sun suddenly dissolved, the water quickly dried up, and the earth dressed in her holy-day apparel: such a mature growth of fruits, such flourishing of herbs, such chirping of birds, as if here were a perpetual Spring. The reason of which strange and sudden alteration, is conceived to be the long lying of the snow on the face of the earth; keeping it from the rigour of the winter frosts; which being dissolved by the Sun in the beginning of the Spring, doth so thorowly drench and soke the ground, (being of a light and sandie mold) and consequently make it the more penetrable by the beams of the Sun, shining hotly on it; that it forceth in a manner the Herbs and Plants to shoot forth in great plenty, and that too in a shorter time than can be imagined.

The whole Country generally is very much over-spread with Woods, parts of the great Hercynian Forest, heretofore over-running all the North, and still more visible here than in other places: either by reason of the idleness of the people, naturally given to sloth and ease; or for that the Country is not populous enough to overcome them; or that there is already ground enough for tillage to supply their necessary uses. For here do grow the goodliest and tallest trees of the world, through which, by reason of their thickness, the brightnes of the Sun-beams can hardly peirce; affording shelter to great multitudes of Cattel, but of wild beasts especially, whose skins are better than their bodies: as Bears, Marterns, Zibellines, Wolves, black Foxes, whose skins are of very great estimation. Of the timber of these trees are squared all necessaries, both for Forts and Houses; the Fortifications in this Country being made of huge beams fastned together, (the chinks filled with earth) not easily shaken by battery, though much subject to fire. And out of them issueth an unspeakable quantity of Pitch and Rozin, which are hence distilled: besides an everlasting fountain of wax and honey; the Bees, without the Midwifry of the Art of men, building their Hives or houses in the hollow trees. Concerning this there goeth a story (reported and beleeved for a certain truth) of a Countryman, who accidentally had ſlipped down into a great hollow Tree, where he ſtood up to the breſt in honey; continuing there two daies without other ſuſtenance: at the end whereof a Bear comming to partake of the bootie, he laid hold of his legs; and ſo terrified him with his cries, that he made him leap out with the man at his heels. The Country yieldeth alſo great ſtore of Flax and Hemp, which is tranſported yearly into other Countries; and would make them very excellent cordage, if the people had any skill in manufactures, or mechanical Arts: and in ſome places rich paſtures, and ſuch ſtore of Corn, that therewith they do furniſh Lapland, and the North parts of Sweden. Fiſh they have alſo in good plenty, which they ſalt and drye, and either vent it to the Merchant, or lay it up in ſtore for their Forts and Families. By which accompt it will appear that the principall commodities which they ſend abroad, are rich Furs, Flax, Hemp, Whales greaſe, Honey, Wax, Pitch, Rozin, Nuts, Fiſberds, and the like: which either the Dutch and Engliſh buy of them at the Port of S. Nicolas, or the Armenians at Aſtrachan near the Caſpian Sea: giving them in return, Cloth, Silks, Tapeſtry, and ſome other Merchandiſe, tranſported to the value of 500000 Rubbles yearly. Particularly of Wax 50000 poad (every poad containing 40 Engliſh pounds) of Tallow 100000 poad, 100000 hides, 100 ſhips laden with Flax and Hemp; the reſt of their Commodities proportionably in the time of my Author: ſince whoſe time the trade hereof hath been much increaſed.

This Country not improperly may be called (as by ſome it is) the Mother of Rivers. The chief of which are 1. the Don, called Tanais by the old Geographers, and by them thought to be the only Boundary betwixt Europe and Aſia; the Northern parts of this Country being then unknown. It disburtheneth it ſelf into Palis Mæotis, and hath its fountain not out of the Riphean Mountains, as was thought of old; but out of a great Lake called Iwanowefero, in the Foreſt of Okonitzkilies, or Jephapinolies, ſome 20 Engliſh miles from the City of Tulla; and having run a great way Eaſtward, turneth back again, and then proceedeth Southwards towards the Mæotis, as was ſaid before. 2. Boryſthenes, now called Nieper, whoſe ſpring was unknown unto Herodotus, but now diſcovered to be near Daieperk, a Village of Muſcovie (ſpecially ſo called) in the Foreſt of Wolkonskie. Whence paſſing South, and running by the Town of Smolensko, it receiveth many other Rivers, and amongſt them that of Doſna, (by the antient Writers called Hipanis) notwithſtanding whoſe muddy waters, it ſtill retains its natural clearneſs, and ſo falls into the Euxine Sea. 3. Tarunus (ſo called by Ptolemy) or Daina the leſſe (to difference it from Duina the greater:) which riſing not far from the head of Boryſthenes, out of the Lake of Duina, and waſhing the walls of Riga, the chief Town of Livonia; loſeth it ſelf in the Baltick Sea. 4. Dſina, or Dwine (commonly called Duina the greater) ſo called from the meeting of two Rivers, the Juch and the Sachan (whereof more hereafter) of which that of the longeſt courſe, not known unto the antients, hath its head in the Province of Permia, and its fall into the Frozen or Northern Ocean, at the Port of S. Nicholas. 5. Occa, or Ocyne, riſing in the Territory of Miſceneck, and making all the Country fruitfull through which it paſſeth; emptieth it ſelf into the Volga. 6. Volga, by Ptolemy called Rha, by the Tartars, Edil; which riſeth 25 Dutch miles from Moſco, towards Lituania; and fetching a great compaſs in and out, after it hath ſwallowed up many leſſer Rivers, diſchargeth it ſelf with 70 mouths into the Caſpian Sea, now called Mer di Bachu. Here are beſides theſe Rivers many notable Lakes, as thoſe of Duina, and Volga, out of which the ſaid two Rivers iſſue; that called Ilmen, not far from Novogrod the Great, 80 Italian miles in compaſs; that of Ladoga, 100 Dutch miles in length, and 60 in breadth, in which are many pleaſant Iſlands: and that called Bideloyeſero (Lacus Albus in Latine) about 12 German miles long, and as many broad, into which 360 Rivers are ſaid to diſcharge their ſtreams; in the midſt whereof is a very ſtrong Caſtle, ſaid to be impregnable, in which the great Duke keeps the moſt part of his treaſure, and into which he doth withdraw in the times of danger and ſedition.

As for the Mountains of this Country, here are the Montes Amadoci, Riphæi, and Hyperborei, ſo much talked of, and ſo little known amongſt the Antients. A continual and craggie chain of hils running croſs Sarmatia Europæa, South and North; and thence Eaſtwards, into Aſiatica. Beginning not far from the fall of Boryſthenes into the Euxine, they extend directly towards the North, and are there called Montes Amadoci. Afterwards bending for a long ſpace, towards the North-eaſt, they are called Riphæi; and then paſſing on directly Eaſt, by reaſon of their Nothernly ſituation, called Hyperborei. And though Sir Walter Rayleigh ſay, I know not on what authority, that there are no Riphean Mountains in Rerum natura: yet Mercator placeth them in this tract, and telleth us, that in regard of their being alwaies covered with ice and ſnow, they are hardly paſſable: calling theſe and the ſaid Hyperborei (in his Europa) by the name of Cingulum terræ, or the Girdle of the Earth, a great part whereof (though known in divers places by different names) they do ſeem to compaſs.

It is divided, for the better Government hereof, into four parts (by them termed Chetfords) and thoſe governed by four Lieutenants, not reſident upon their charges, but attending on the Emperors perſon whereſoever he goeth, and there holding their Courts; but eſpecially at Moſco, the prime ſeat of the Empire: where from their Under-Deputies they receive the complaints of their Provinces, and inform the Emperors Counſel of the buſineſs, and from them again receive inſtructions for Reformation. But as to the Chorography of it, it is divided into the Provinces of Muſcovie ſpecially ſo called, 2 Novogrod the Great, 3 Smolensko, 4 Moſaiskie, 5 Pleſcow, 6 Corelia, 7 Biarmia, 8 Petzora, 9 Condora, 10 Obdora, 11 Jugra, 12 Severia, 13 Permia, 14 Rhezan, 15 Wiathka, 16 Caſan, 17 Aſtrachan, 18 Novogordia inferior, 19 the Mordwits, 20 Worotine, 21 Tuvir, 22 Wolodomir, 23 Dwina, and 24 the Ruſſian Ilands. Others of leſs note (of which there is no want) are reduced to theſe. In my Deſcription whereof I ſhall not be ſo exact and punctual as I have been hitherto: the Country not being much travelled by Strangers; nor any of the Natives ſuffered to go into forein Nations; or permitted (out of jealouſies Muſcovie. ſies of State) to hold diſcourſe with the Ambaſſadors of neighbouring Princes, but only in the Emperors hearing. By means whereof the Chorography of this vaſt Empire is come but lamely to our hands; though the Power, Politie, and Revenues of it, being points diſcernible by the Miniſters of other Princes, and by the courſe and conduct of their affairs; are as well known as thoſe of leſſe diſtance. Which ſaid, we will firſt begin with Muſcovie, the prevailing Province, that which gives name to this whole Empire; with reference to which the ſituation and poſition of the reſt of the Provinces, is ſet forth unto us in our Authors.

1 MUSCOVIE, ſpecially ſo called, is ſeated in the very center of this Eſtate, and ſo more fit to order the affairs thereof; the largeſt Province of the whole, extending from Eaſt to Weſt 600 Dutch or 2400 Engliſh miles: ſo populous with all, that beſides 30000 Boiares, or Gentlemen, bound to ſerve on Horſe-back at their own charges (like the Turks Timariots;) the Great Duke is able to raiſe 70000 Foot (which is a great matter for a Country ſo little cultivated.)

The ſoil hereof is ſtiff and clammy, but might be made more profitable than it is, were it well manured, or ploughed and ordered, as it is in all other Countries. For here, and in moſt parts elſe of this large Dominion, the people are accuſtomed to ſow no more of their land, than what they dig with the ſpade, or can break up with a ſtick very ſharply pointed; whereof they carry great numbers into the field, that when one breaks they may uſe another.

Chief places in this Province are 1 Moſco, the Imperial ſeat, and the See of the Patriarch, ſo called of the River Moſco upon which it is ſituate. Exceedingly improved both in ſtate and beauty, ſince the time that Daniel the fourth Lord of Muſcovie, removed the ſeat Royal hither, from Valadomire, where before it was: inſomuch that it was once grown to nine miles in compaſs, containing then 41500 Families; but being fired by the Tartar, Anno 1571. (at what time there were burnt 800000 perſons) it is reduced to five miles only. The houſes for the moſt part, of wood and dirt, the ſtreets very miry; without either Ditch, Wall, or Rampart to defend it againſt an Enemy. In ſtead whereof there are two Caſtles, in the outward parts of it, the one called Kitagorod, the other Balſigorod; environed with the River Moſco, and another water called Neglinna, which here fals into it. It contains 16 Churches, moſt of them of the ſame materials as the houſes are: and the Palace of the great Duke ſituate in the midſt hereof, (which for the greatneſs of it may be thought a little City) fortified with 17 Towns, 3 Bulwarks, & a continual Garriſon (if the great Duke be there) of 25000 men for the guard of his perſon. 2. Sloboda, a Biſhop See, North-eaſt to Moſco, on the banks of one of the greateſt Rivers which fall into the Volga. 3. Ruſtchow, the Title of a Dukedome, fortified with a Caſtle of wood (of which ſtuff moſt of the fortreſſes of this Country are made) ſituate 23 leagues from Moſco towards the Weſt, on the banks of the Volga; which hath its fountain in the Territory and precincts herof. 4. Jaroſlave, on the Volga alſo, a Town and Caſtle diſtant about 46 Dutch miles from Moſco, formerly the eſtate and patrimony of the ſecond ſons of the Great Duke, but united to the Royal Domain, by Iohn Waſiliwick, and by him added alſo to the ſtyle Imperial. It is alſo one of the Sees Epiſcopal. 5. Ruſtow, the See of one of the two Metropolitans, ſituate in a fruitfull ſoil, well ſtored with fiſh, and yielding good plenty of ſalt. One of the antienteſt Principalities of all this Empire, and held accuſtomably by the ſecond ſon of the Great Duke, as a ſtate diſtinct: but conquered by Iohn Vaſiliwick, Anno 1565. and added to the ſtyle and Patrimony of the Great Duke himſelf, the younger ſons being from thenceforth put off with penſions. 6. Vologda, a Biſhop See, ſituate in a fenny and woody Country; very ſtrong by nature, and beautified with one of the ſtrongeſt Caſtles of all this Eſtate, where the Great Duke doth ſometime lay a part of his treaſure: that part eſpecially which is raiſed of the Engliſh and Dutch Merchandiſe; which being landed at the Port of St. Nicolas, is firſt brought hither, where having paid a new toll or cuſtome, it goeth on to Moſco. Betwixt this City and that of Jaroſlave before mentioned, for the ſpace of an hundred Engliſh miles, where ſtood in former times 50 goodly Villages, (ſome of them of a mile in length) the Country in a manner is left wholly deſolate, and without inhabitant; abandoned by the people, by reaſon of the inſurportable preſſures which were layd upon them.

2. SMOLENSKO. 3. MOSAISKI. 4. PLESCOW.

The Dukedome of SMOLENSCO, is ſituate on the courſe of the River Nieper, or Boryſthenes, full of many thick Foreſts, from whence they carry a great number of rich skins yearly. Places of moſt obſervation in it, are 1. Smolensko, ſituate on the Nieper, a Biſhops See, about 80 Polonian miles from Moſco; begirt on every ſide with Mountains, and ſpacious Woods. A large Town, and of great eſteem in theſe parts of the Empire; and giving name unto this Province; which heretofore was governed in a free condition under the patronage and protection of the Kings of Poland: in the time of Alexander a late King therof, by Baſilius the Great Duke conquered, and added unto this Eſtate. Taken by the Polanders, in the year 1610. after a long ſiege of two years, with the ſlaughter of 200000 Muſcovites, and the loſs of many of the beſiegers; but reſtored again to Michael Fedrovitius the Great Duke, on the making of the peace between them. 2. Biela, a principality of it ſelf, having the honour of a Caſtle, and reckoned in the uſual ſtyle of the Knez or Emperor.

3. MOSAISKI, hath in length 350 Italian miles, and as much in breadth, ſo called from Moſaiskie, the chief Town hereof, and a Biſhops See; taken, together with the Territory or Province appertaining to it, from Alexander King of Poland, by Iohn the Great Duke, Father of Baſilius before mentioned.

4. PLESCOW or PSKOW, contains in length 350 Italian miles, in breadth 230 or thereabouts; so called from Plescow or Pskow, the chief City of it, and a Bishops See: great, powerfull, and well walled about, the only walled City of all this Empire. So large within the walls, that when it was besieged by Stephen King of POLAND, there were in it for defence thereof 70000 Foot, and 7000 Horse, besides the natural Inhabitants of it; which in all ordinary computation must be many more. It belonged formerly to the Poles, in the right of the Dukedome of Lituania; taken from them by Basilius the Great Duke of Muscovie, Anno 1509. by whom and his successors used in the Royal style. Novogrod.

5. NOVOGORD

5 NOVOGORD or NOVOGROD, is one of the largest Provinces or Dukedomes in all Russia; bordering on Livonia, towards Sinus Finnicus, or the Gulf of Finland. A colder Country and lesse fruitfull than that of Muscovie, because situate somewhat further North: the longest Summer day in Mosco not being above 18 hours, whereas in Novogrod the chief City hereof, it is very neer 20. By consequence the winter nights being of that length, must make the Air exceeding cold, and the soil as comfortless: Here is in this Province the great Lake Ilmen, spoken of before, 80 Italian miles in compass; as also that called Ladoga, before also mentioned.

Towns of most estimation in it are 1. Novogrod it self, the wealthiest and goodliest City of all the North, affirmed to be in greatness not inferiour to Rome; called therefore Novogrod the Great (to difference it from another of the same name near unto Valodomir:) an Archbishops See, and one of the four Mart-Towns of the Hanse-Merchants, resorted to from all parts for the trade of Muscovie, brought thither by land, and thence transported through the Baltick to most parts of Christendom. So confident in those times of their power and strength, that they used to say, that men could do nothing against God and them: but found the contrary when taken from the Crown of Poland, by the Great Duke of Muscovie. The trade thereof since much decayed, by the finding out of the North-east passage to the Port of St. Nicolas, where the English and Dutch Merchants barter with the Muscovite. Yet still it keeps the reputation of the principal City, situate on the River Naf, which the Dutch call Ny; the buildings for the most part of wood and clay: distant from Mosco 120 Dutch miles, and about 200 from the main body of the Baltick; betwixt which and this City lyeth the whole Bay of Finland, the entrances whereof upon the Dwina, (which leads towards Novogrod) are fortified with the strong Towns and Garrisons of Narve, and Rivallia, both in the hands of the King of Sweden; which is another great hinderance to the trade of this Town. 2. Narve, on the North bank of Dwina, where it falls into the Bay of Finland, or Sinus Finnicus, in the Province or Territory of Wichidaw: heretofore reckoned of as a part of Livonia, but being taken by Basilius the Great Duke, with the rest of this Country, and the Town of Novogrod it self, Anno 1477. it was impregnably fortified by the care of his son Vasiliwich, who for a reward unto the Architect being a Polonian, put out both his eyes, to disable him from building the like again. But having left all the natives in their own habitations, without abating either their strength or number, the Town and Castle not long after was betrayed to the King of Sweden, who still holds it. 3. Pozow or Pozovia, and 4. Volocolue, two strong pieces, situate in the borders against the Polanders. 5. Vobsco, besieged by Stephen King of Poland, with an Army of 100000 men; forced to retire without taking it, with the loss of many of his best Captains and common souldiers. It is distant from Novogrod 28 Dutch miles, the Country about it called Volsk: where they say for certain, that all Cattell which are brought thither, of what hair or colour soever they be, upon a little stay there become all white. The people of this tract have a Language (or some Dialect rather) peculiar only to themselves. 6. Juvanogrod, a strong Castle not far from Vobsco, 40 miles from Novogrod; a frontire Castle against the Swedes garrisoned in Narve, to repulse whose inrodes it was built.

In this Country, and not far from the Town of Novogrod, was fought that memorable battell betwixt the Sarmatians, and their Slaves. For when the Asiatick Scythians went to plant themselves in Media, and the parts adjoining; some of the Sarmatians, then Inhabitants of this tract, went along for company. Their long stay, caused their wives, despairing of their return, to comfort themselves with their slaves, both at bed and board; to whom they brought a lusty increase of youths: who being well grown, and hearing that the Sarmatians were upon their coming back, joined together against them; the slaves to retain that wealth and freedome which they were possessed of; the women for fear of the displeasure of their Husbands; and the young men for defence of their Fathers and Mothers. With joint forces they go out to meet them, before their entrie into the Country; neither are the Masters slow in their advance, hoping to take them unprovided. At Novogrod they have the first sight of each other. The Masters scorning to defile their swords on so ignoble an Enemy, assault them with whips; and by the terror thereof got a signall victory. In memory of which battell, the people of that City have ever since stamped their mony with the figure of an Horseman shaking a whip in his hands: And it is the custome of all Muscovie, that the maids in the time of wooing, send such a whip, curiously wrought by her own hands, to that Suter, whom she resolves on for her husband; in token of her future subjection to him. But of this more hereafter in another place.

6. CORELIA. 7. BIARMIA.

6. Sixty Dutch miles from Novogrod, lyeth the Province called Corelia, extending Northwards as far as to a branch of the Frozen Sea, where the longest day is 20 hours and a half: the nights propor-

Petzora. tionable in the Winter, make it cold and barren. It bordered on the East of Finland, from which parted by a long and rough ridge of Mountains. By reason of which situation betwixt two great princes, the people are enforced to pay tribute to both, though properly the Subjects of the Great Duke of Muscovie. Chief Towns whereof are Kexholm, or Hexholm, in the hands of the Swedes; and 2. Corelnburg, the chief Town of the Province, belonging with the rest of the Country, unto the Moscovite. By some this Province is made a part of the Eastern Lapland; but, I think, erroneously: the people having some good Towns, and savouring of some humanity; neither of which are known or heard of amongst the Laplanders. 3. Nordenberg, on the mouth of a lake, which by the River called Warfuga, emptieth it self into the Bay of S. Nicolas.

On the North side of that branch or Arm of the Frozen Ocean, which bounds Corelia, lyeth the Western part of Lapland, which by a proper name is called BIARMIA: the country of the Dikiloppi or wilde Lappians, as the Moscovites call them, to whose Duke or Emperor they are subject. We had their character before, when we were in Swethland; nor shall we need to repeat it here: as barborous and as rude as the worst sort of those mentioned in Scricfinnia, and as Idolatrous as they; but more (if more may be) inclined to lustfullnesse, than the others. In the winter Solstice, when the Sun entreth into Capricorn, they have night for three whole months together: during which time lurking in their Caves, they have leisure to consult with the Prince of Darknesse; being very great Sorcerers, able (as some affirm) to raise Winds, Clouds, Tempests, and do many strange things. Towns here are none. Some sheds and Cabbins on the Sea Coasts, patched up by the Saylers, for their reception and refreshment as they came on land, and named according to their fancies; but not here considerable.

8. PETZORA. 9. JUGRIA. 10. OBDORA.
11. CONDORA.

Opposite to Biarmia, or East-Lapland, on the other side of the Bay leading towards the Port of S. Nicolas, lyeth a large Promontary or Headland stretching out far into the North, beyond the Arctick; comprehending in it four Provinces of the Russian Empire: that is to say, Petzora, Jugria, Obdora, and Condora; belonging formerly to the Tartars, but won from them of late years by the Russian Emperors; extending by that means their Territories to the River Ob, but not a whit improving them in power or Patrimony. Howsoever somewhat must be said of them, because parts of this great body which we are to dissect.

1. PETZORA, so called from a River of that name, is fenced on every side by Mountains and unpassable rocks; extending Northwards to the Sea, and crossed with a vast chain of hils, part of the Hyperborei, spoken of before: so high, that a certain man having travelled in the ascent of them 17 daies together, is said to have returned back again, despairing to attain the top of them. Covered in the winter time with perpetual snows, in the summer with as scorching heats, by the continuall lying of the Sun on all parts thereof. The people are of a plain and simple nature, and received the Russian faith and Empire at one time together, Anno 1518. The chief Town of it 1. Petzora, or Pechora, at the fall of that River into the Sea; a small Town, but having three Churches in it: the people whereof though otherwise sufficiently simple, as before is said, do in the summer time catch Patrich, Ducks, Swans, Geese, and other fowl, which they salt and lay by till the Winter, and then live upon them. So good a Tutor is the Belly, that the Poet did not unfitly give it the titles of Artis Magister, and Ingenii largitor venter; whereof this may serve for one example.

7. CONDORA lyeth on the North of Petzora, more near the Pole; by consequence a colder Country, and of worse condition; in one half of the Country being continual day, and the other half as long a night. The people Universally Idolaters, worshipping some Images (or Idols) in the shape of a man, others in that of Bears, Wolves, &c. which they adorn with the richest furs they can get, and hide them in their Caves for fear of the Russes: who if they chance to light upon them, as they hunt those parts for Sables, Foxes, and Bevers; take away their Furs, and bestow a greater heat upon them in fires. The chief Town hereof is Pustozrea, over against Nova Zemla, on or near the great lake called Ozera, whence it hath the name; situate in the 68 Degree of Northern Latitude, 50 minutes over.

10 OBDORA, so called from the River Ob, on both sides of whose banks it lyeth, is the most North-Eastern Province of all these Dominions: won to the obedience of the Russes, in the Reign of Theodore the son of John, Great Duke of Muscovie. At what time the people had no Cities, lived in Hoords or Companies, eat the Beasts they took, knew no corn nor bread. They were then very good Archers, sharpening their Arrows with fish bones; with which bones and the sinews of the Beasts, they sewed Furs together for their Clothing; which they wear inward in the Winter, outward in the summer, covering their Houses with Elks-skins. By this Theodore were some Castles built on the River side, to which he sent condemned persons, and brought it into the form of a petit Kingdom. But his successor Boris built Tooma, the chief town hereof, with divers other Towns on both sides of the water, not worth naming here. But notwithwanding this subjection to the Muscovite, they continue still in their Idolatry, worshipping an antient Idol, in form of an old woman, holding in each Arm a Child, and a third at her feet, called by them Zlatu Bahu, or the Golden old wife; to which they offer pretious Furs, sacrifice Harts, and therewith do consult touching things to come. But some accompt this for a Fable, or a meer mistake.

11. JUGRIA or JUHAR, lyeth also on the Northern Seas, but more South than either of the other; betwixt Petzore or Pechora, and the Province of Dwina: the longest day in Summer being not above 21 hours, or not fully that. The people for the most part Idolaters, and worship the same Images as do those of Obdora: affirmed by some to be the Progenitors of the present Hungarians; who coming out of this Countrey over-ran all Pannonia, and their fixed there dwellings. For proof of which it is affirmed that they speak the old Hungarian language; not used but in this countrey, and the North parts of Hungarie, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus: Which more learned men affirm to be the Jazigian, the language of the Jazyges, who anciently possessed that countrey in the times of the Romans. But leaving this dispute to another place, certain it is, that they are subject to the Moscovite: but so poor and miserable a people, that they have few towns, and not many houses; and so bare of money, that in stead thereof they pay Furs for tribute to their Emperour. Severia, &c.

not

12. SEVERIA. 13. PERMIA. 14. RHEZAN.

12 SEVERIA, or SIBIOR, as the Moscovites called it, lieth in a long tract on the banks of the River Ob, or Oby, south of Obdora, and the rest of the four last Provinces. The Country very fruitfull, and abounding with all things necessary, notwithstanding that there be great Deserts, and some Forests also: but those Forests well stored with black Foxes, Ermines, Sables, and the like wild beasts; which yeeld more profit by their rich Furs, than any more fertile Countrey doth by its Corn and fruits. Insomuch that in the year 1589. there were collected out of this Province only, in the way of tribute for the Emperour, 466 timber of Sables, (every Timber containing 40 skins) five Timber of Marterns, 180 Cases of Black Foxes, (every Case containing 40 skins) besides other commodities. The woods also do afford good plenty of Honey, and the plains of Herbage; well watered with the River Sem, which falleth into the Desna, and both together into that of the Nieper, or Borysthenes. There are in it many Towns and Castles, the principal whereof are 1. Sibier, on the West side of the River Ob, which gives name to the Province; 2. Branki, not far from the great Forest from hence named. 3. Starodus, 4. Potuvolo, and 5. Czeznigo.

The people hereof, by reason of their continual skirmishes with the neighbouring Tartars, are the most warlike Nation of all the Russes: heretofore governed by a Duke or Prince of their own, who at the first acknowledged no Superiour; but afterwards was severally and successively Tributary to the Lituanians, the Polanders, and the Moscovite; and finally, the last Duke being falsly accused of treason, was outed of his estate by Basilius the Great Duke; who added it to the rest of his Dominions, as it hath continued ever since.

13. PERMIA is situate on the South-west of Sibior, or Severia, a large Province, distant 250 Dutch miles from Mosco: so called from Perm, or Permia, the chief town hereof, situate on the River Vischore, or Vistorna. The second Town of note is called Siewiarskey. The people (as also those of Sibior) are of the Moscovite Religion, and live most by hunting wild beasts, whose flesh they eat, and make good merchandise of their skins, many of which they pay yearly to the great Duke in way of tribute; who makes a good commodity of them, selling them to the Merchant at excessive rates. They have no corn of their own growth, nor will they buy any elsewhere; but in stead of bread, eat the flesh of Stags, dryed and prepared in the Sun: speaking a language of their own, different from the rest of the Russes; and in stead of Horses and Oxen, make use of great dogs and stags, whom they train up to draw their sleds, from one place to another. There is good store of woods amongst them; but they want Cedars, and they have paid dearly for that want. For John Vasiliwich meaning to pick a quarrel with them, sent to them for certain loads of Cedar wood, whereof he knew there grew none in their Countrey; and upon word returned that they had no such wood, he fined them at 12060 Rubbles.

14. RHEZAN, a great and goodly Province, is situate betwixt the River Tanais, and that of Ocke; the most fruitfull Countrey of all Russia, and (if report be true) of the whole world also: it being credibly affirmed that one grain of corn doth bring forth six ears; the stalks hereof growing so thick, that an horse can hardly passe through them, or a Quail flie out of them, but with very much difficulty. Here is also great plenty of fruits, better than are to be found elsewhere in Russia; together with good store of Honey, fish, fowl, and other commodities: besides Ermins, Bevers, and the like, common in these Countries. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Tulla, famous for the fountain or spring-head of the River Tanais, which ariseth near it. 2. Colluga, well garrisoned for fear of the Crim Tartar. 3. Corsira, a Bishops See; as is also 4. Rhezan, the principal of the Province, which it giveth name to, seated upon the banks of the River Ocque. A Country populous and well-planted, affording to the Great Duke 15000 Boyares, or Gentlemen which serve on horseback, and betwixt 30 and 40000 foot.

15. WIATHKA, 16. CASAN, 17. ASTRACHAN.

15. South-east of Rhezan, beyond the banks of the River Kamme, and about 150 Dutch miles from Mosco, lyeth the Province called WIATHKA; fennie and barren, but well stored with fish and honey, and wild beasts good plenty. Heretofore subject to the Tartars, and then the receptacle or retreat of all fugitive servants, here very gladly entertained: but the Tartarians being expulsed, it was made subject by Basilius to the Dukes of Moscovie. I do not read of any Towns which should be here, which makes me think that they do still retain so much of the Tartar with them, as to live in Hoords, and Companies, without any fixt dwellings: or at the best, in scattered houses, not hitherto united into Towns

Novogordia inferior.

Towns and Villages: except it be the Town of Wiathka it ſelf, built ſince the ſubjection of it to the Muſcovite; and made a Gariſon to defend theſe out-parts of this Empire, againſt the incurſions of the Tartars.

16. CASAN, a kingdom formerly of Tartaria Deſerta, lyeth on the Southeaſt of Wiathka, the moſt Civil people of the Tartars, but owing much of that civility to their converſation with the Moſcovites, (though none of the civilleſt themſelves,) tilling their lands, and building houſes where they may with ſafety. For although the ſoil hereof be tolerably fruitful, and fit for habitation, yet the Country for the moſt part is deſolate and ill inhabited; partly by reaſon of ſome vaſt deſerts, lying betwixt the Cities of Caſan, and Aſtrachan; but principally in regard of the Crim Tartar, who will not ſuffer the Moſcovite to plant it with Colonies of his own people, nor the Natives to live there in quiet, except only in the Weſtern parts, where protected by Garriſons. Chief Towns hereof are 1. Caſan upon the River Volga, which gives name to the kingdom; ſince the ſubjection of this people to the great Duke, and their converſion to the faith, made a Biſhops See. 2. Surick upon the River Sure, in the middle of the vaſt deſerts betwixt Caſan and Aſtrachan; built by Baſilius the Great Duke, for a ſtage or reſting place for Merchants and Travellers, that there they might repoſe themſelves without fear of the Tartars. The people hereof had once a King of their own, as before was ſaid; the laſt of which named Chelealcesk, ſubmitted himſelf unto Baſilius the Great Duke, and became tributarie: but afterwards revolting, he was vanquiſhed by John Vaſiliwich, Anno 1553. and this kingdom thereupon united to the Empire of Ruſſia; the Emperors ſince that time writing themſelves Czar Kaſanski, or King of Caſan. And poſſible enough it is, that Baſilius, who firſt made it tributary, might from hence take the name to Baſilius Caſan, according to the cuſtom of the antient Romans.

Under the Government hereof are the Czeremiſſi, a people that live in great Foreſts without any houſes, living for the moſt part of honey and the fleſh of wild beaſts, with the skins of which they are apparelled. Their language different from the reſt, ſwift of foot, and very good Archers, carrying their Bows in their hands continually, and practiſing their children ſo timely in it, that they give them nothing to eat (after ſuch an age) untill they can hit a white which is ſet before them.

17. ASTRACHAN lyeth alſo South-eaſt of Caſan, more near unto the Caſpian Seas; parted from Caſan by thoſe deſerts ſpoken of before, but ſituate on the ſame branch of the River Volga: which having run a courſe of 2000 Italian miles, diſchargeth it ſelf into this Sea with no leſſe than 70 mouths or chanels. It took this name from Aſtrachan, the chief town hereof, ſituate about 20 Italian miles from the fall of one of thoſe 70 mouths or chanels, into the Caſpian: by the commodiouſneſſe whereof, it is one of the beſt towns of trade in all theſe dominions, the Armenian Merchants coming hither, and bartering their ſilks, and manufactures, for the furs and other natural commodities of the Ruſſes, or Moſcovites. A kingdom formerly, but a kingdom of leſſe eſteem than that of Caſan; conquered (together with it) by Baſilius the Great Duke, Anno 1494. and by him made Chriſtian. But afterwards revolting, they were more abſolutely ſubdued by John Vaſiliwich, who brought into the field againſt them, no fewer than 120000 horſe, and 20000 foot, (enough to over-run a far greater Country) and yet had hardly got the better, but for the terrour of his great Ordnance, which the others wanted. Upon that victory it was made a Member of the Empire of Ruſſia; the Emperour whereof hath ſince ſtyled himſelf, the King of Aſtrachan.

18. NOVOGORDIA Inferior,
19. The MORDWITS.

But it is now time we return towards Europe, out of which we have wandred up and down in the skirts of Aſia, in tracing out the ſeveral Provinces of this Empire; ſince our firſt croſſing over the Bay of Grandvic, or Saint Nicolas, into the Countrie of Petzora. But in our way we muſt firſt take a view of the Dukedom of Novogrod the Lower; ſo called, to difference it from Novogrod (ſurnamed the Great) ſpoken of before: ſituate almoſt in the midſt betwixt Caſan and Moſco, diſtant from the laſt 100 Polonian miles, and 60 miles from the borders of the other; every Polonian mile being reckoned at four Italian. The Country generally very rich, both for tillage and paſturage; inferiour unto none in all this eſtate, but Rhezan and Wolodomir only. So called from Novogrod, the chief town, ſituate at the confluence of the Ock and Volga, beſides which it hath the neighbourhood of a very great Lake, which ſtoreth it plentifully with fiſh. A City of great eſteem in all this Empire, partly for the great number of houſes, in which not eaſily equalled by any other; partly for an impregnable Caſtle, cut out of the main Rock with incredible charges, in the time of Baſilius the Great Duke; but principally for a ſtately and magnificent Temple, built above 600 years agoe, in imitation (or emulation, as ſome ſay) of the famous Church of S. Sophia in Conſtantinople. To this Town the ſtory of the Scythian or Sarmatian ſlaves, ought, in my mind, to be aſcribed; though commonly reported of the other Novogrod, in the Weſt parts of this Empire. My reaſon is, becauſe it is not likely that the Sarmatians dwelling on the borders of the Baltick Sea, ſhould croſſe all this Country, to join with the Aſiatick Scythians ſo remote from them, in a needleſſe war: which thoſe of this tract might well do, as near neighbours to them, if not of the ſame Nation or extraction with them.

Subject to the Eſtate hereof are the Mordwit Tartars, lying on the South, betwixt the Volga, and the Don or Tanais, where it beginneth to return Weſtwards towards the Euxine. A people much of the ſame nature with the Czeremiſſes, but that they have ſome villages, & ſcattered houſes, which the other either either want, or else care not for. Idolaters for the most part (and the rest Mahometans) carrying their Idols in their Carts whersoever they goe: worshipping that beast all day, which they first see in the morning; and swearing by it for that day, as their chiefest deity. Worotine &c.

20 WOROTINE, 21 TUVER, 22 WOLODOMIR.

And now again we are in Europe, where the Great Duke hath almost as many Titles, as Towns with Territorie: four of them (besides some before) either situate in the Province of Moscovie, or else so intermingled with the Towns thereof, that they may easily be taken (or mistaken) for members of it. The principal are, 20 WOROTIN, seated on the West side of the River Ocque, a distinct Dukedom of it self; so called from Worotin the chief City of it, built upon that River, about 3 Dutch miles from Colluga in the Province of Rhezan, lying on the further bank thereof; beautified with a strong Castle, and a pleasant soil. The 2 Miscneck, the next Town of note, remarkable for the head of the Rider Ocque, which ariseth in the fields adjoyning.

21 TUVER or OTUVER, as some call it, is a large and goodly Country lying along the banks of the River Volga: so populous, that it is said to contain 40000 Boiares, or Gentlemen fit to serve on horseback; and double that number of the common or inferiour sort. It gives the title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and is so called from Twerde the chief Town thereof, and a Bishops See; affirmed to be a fairer and more stately City than Mosco it self, from which distant 36 Dutch miles.

22 WOLODOMIR is one of the most fruitfull Countries in all Russia, not paralleld by many Countries in the world; the soil here (if all be true, which is said of it) yielding such an increase, that many times the Husbandman hath twenty and sometimes twenty five for one. It gives the title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and hath precedency before Moscovie in the style Imperial. So called from Wolodomir the chief City of it, and a Bishops See, and that so named from the Founder, who probably was the same Valadomir (one of the first Kings of the Russes) who married Helena the Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, Emperour of Constantinople. The City situate 36 Polonian miles on the East of Mosco, antiently the chief seat and residence of the Great Duke; and so continued till the time of John, the son of Daniel, who first transl ated it to Mosco; that from thence he might more easily confront and oppose the Tartars, with whose irruptions and invasions, both he and his predecessours had long been troubled. Under the government hereof is the City of Susdali, of great esteem, and very well peopled as long as the Royal seat remained at Wolodomir, betwixt which and Rostow it is seated. After it fell into decay, and being once destroyed by the Tartars, could never since recover its antient lustre; having now little to uphold its reputation, but a Bishops See.

23 DWINA, so called from the chief Town, situate on the confluence of two Rivers Juch and Sachano, whence it hath the name: Dwine in the language of that Countrie signifying two, (as twain doth with us amongst Country people) A Country of great extent, but exceeding barren, which makes the Villages hereof to stand very thin; the Towns (considering the great compass of it) to be very few; and the Inhabitants for the most part to live upon dried fish, and the flesh of wild beasts, which they have no want of. The chief commoditie is in salt, with which they use to furnish the neighbouring Provinces, and provide such necessaries for themselves as they stand in need of. Chief Towns hereof are 1. Dwine, spoken of before, situate in the midst of the Province, on the meeting of the said two Rivers, which here united into one stream, take the name of Dwine, or Dwina, the greater; known by that name until its fall into the Northern Ocean, in the Bay of Grandvic. 2 Sagan, so called of the River (one of the two which makes the Dwine) upon which it is seated. 3. Colmagro, 4. Pinnegue, two strong Castles.

Unto this Province (because I know not else how to dispose of them) I must reduce these four Towns following; that is to say, 1. Usting, a Bishops See, situate on the western side of the River, over against the Town of Dwine, and in a Country so ill furnished with necessaries, that the people eat dryed fish instead of bread, but have salt enough to season it from those of Dwine. 2. Gargapol, a Bishops See also, on the same side of the River that Dwina is of. 3. S. Nicolas, a well-known Port, and a Bishops See; situate at the influx of Dwina, into the Gulph of Granvicus, or the Bay of S. Nicolas, from hence denominated. A Town much traded, since the discovery of the North-East passage by the English and the removal of theirs and the Dutch trafique from Novogrod hither: from hence dispersed with more ease and speed into all the parts of this vast Empire. 4. S. Michael, on the Sea side, commonly called Archangel, a Town of great trade, by the English specially; who have of late here fixed their Staple, to the great enriching of the place; by reason where of the English Merchants have not only great privileges and immunities (as the Authors of so great a benefit unto this Estate) not granted to others; but the whole Nation have found better and more noble entertainment from them, than any others have received. The cause of which, was primarily the great opinion which their Emperours had of Queen Elizabeth, who held very good correspondence with them, continued ever since by mutual Ambassies on both sides; and secondly the conformable behaviour of the English themselves, so acceptable to those Barbarians (both Prince and People) that when John Vasiliwich nailed the hat of another ther forein Embassador to his head for his too much perverseness, he used our Sir Thomas Smith with all kindness imaginable. Another time, when the Jesuite Possevine began to perswade with him, to approve of the Religion of the Church of Rome: upon the information of the English Embassadour, that the Pope was a proud Prelate, and would make Princes kiss his feet; he grew into such a rage, that the Jesuite was afraid he would have beat out his brains. But to return again to the Port of S. Nicolas, it is so called from an Abbie there built unto that Saint, the tutelary Saint, and local Patron of the Nation. Which said, I will set sail from this Port to the Russian Islands, and see what may be said of them to our present purpose.

The RVSSIAN Ilands.

The RUSSIAN ILANDS are but two; both of them in the Northern or Frozen Ocean, on the Coasts of this Country; that is to say, 1. Sir Hugh Willoughbies Iland, and Nova Zemla; both subject (if to any) to the Knez or great Duke of Moscovie.

1. WILLOUGHBIES ILAND was so called from Sir Hugh Willoughbie, because he first discovered it, Anno 1553. and was hereabouts found frozen to death, the next year following. For being employed by the Merchants of London in the time of King Edward the 6. to find out a new way to Moscovie, Cathaie, and China, he proceeded so far as to this Island (situate almost opposite to the Bay of S. Nicolas) where the weather proved so extreme, and the Frosts so vehement, that his Ship was set fast in the ice, and all his people, with himself, frozen to death; in which condition they were found the next year after, with an exact description of their voyage, and fortunes. Notwithstanding which disastrous beginning, the enterprize was pursued by some noble Adventurers, as Jenkinson, Burroughs, Pet. Jackman, and others of the English Nation, who opened the way as far as to the River Ob, (the East boundar of Russia) but by reason of the length of the way, the vast floting Ilands of Ice, and perpetual nights, for many months together in winter, could advance no further.

2 NOVA ZEMLA, situate on the East of Willoughbies Iland opposite to Pustozera in Condora before mentioned, was first discovered by such Adventurers, as followed Willoughbies design. Famous for nothing but a race of short-statured men, not above four foot high, a degree above the height of Pygmies: not yet so far discovered as to know any thing thereof, but by the relation of the Russes who affirm the Inhabitants to have neither Religion, nor Civility, nor the prescripts of any Law; but that they worshipped the Sun, Moon, and Northern Star, to which they offer an yearly Sacrifice of their Deer; that the Iland is woody, desert, and not easie for travel, having in it neither green bough nor grass; yet harbouring great store of Bears, and such ravenous and dangerous beasts. Found experimentally true by William Barrentson, and his Associates, employed by the Hollanders for this discovery, An. 1594. and 1596. in which last year, after many dreadfull combats with huge flakes of Ice, they were forced to winter in this Island, where they built an house, as well to preserve themselves from being buried in snow, as from being devoured by the Bears, (some of them 13 foot in length) which with the losse of two of their company devoured by those savage creatures, they at last effected; some of them coming home in safety the October following. And though they seemed to give some hope, that a way might be found unto Cathaie on the North of this Iland (themselves having gone as far North as the 81 degree of Latitude, within 9. of the Pole) yet it is generally conceived that the undertaking is unprofitable, the successe impossible.

And so I leave it to return to the story of Russia, called antiently by the name of Sarmatia Europæa, but known no further Northwards than the head of Tanais. And for Sarmatia Europæa, it was bounded in the time of Ptolemie, by the Baltick Sea, and some Terra Incognita, on the North; the Jazyges Metanastæ (now Transylvania, and the Upper Hungarie) upon the South; the River Vistula, or Wexel, (which divided it from Germany) upon the West; and the Tanais, upon the East. Beyond that all along the banks of the Euxine Sea, to the Mare Caspium, and as far North as any Conquerour had gone, it was called Sarmatia Asiatica: the Countries further Eastward being then called Scythia. By which accompt, as Russia containeth not all Sarmatia Europæa, of which Prussia, and the rest of the incorporate Provinces of Poland, passeth for a part: so neither is it totally comprehended in it, extending beyond Tanais into Asiatica. The antient Inhabitants called by a general name Sarmatæ, by the Greeks Sauromatæ, were subdivided (for so much of this part of it as was then made known) into the Agathyrsi, Rutheni, Pagiritæ, dwelling in the North; the Osyli, Alauni, Roxolani, &c. dwelling in the South. Amongst many other barbarous Nations, these were some of the principal. And from these Roxolani, as the principal of all the rest, Matthias à Michou, a learned Polander, doth derive the original of the Rosses, (which we now call the Russians) seconded herein by the more learned Bochartus, who proveth out of antient Authors, that the Inhabitants of Taurica Chersonesus (from which the passage into this Country is both short and easie) have been formerly called Rhos. Ταύρους τοὺς Ῥῶς καλεῖσθαι, Tauros vocari gentes Rhos, as he saith from Tsetzes. Which Rhos, or Rhosi, first mingling with the Alani, a Sarmatian people, might get the name of Roxolani: and afterwards possessing the more Northern Countries, or mingling with the Rosi of Mount Taurus (from whom those of Taurica descended) in their enterprizes on Constantinople and the parts adjoyning; return to their old name of Rosi. The Rhosi, or Russians, were then the first Lords of this Country generally, the Moscovites no other but of a Province only: so called from the Moschi, spoken of by Lucan in his Pharsalia; and placed by Plinie near the head of the River Phasis which rising from the Armenian Mountains, falls into the Euxine. Derived no doubt from Mesech (or Mosoch, as the Antients called him) the son of Japhet, planted originally nally in the North and North-East of Syria, on the Confines of Cholcis and Armenia; where Plinie, as before is said, hath fixed the Moschi, and where there is a long chain of hills, which most of the old writers call Montes Moschici. But to return unto the Rossi, we hear not of them by this name, till the time of Michael the third, Emperour of Constantinople, in whose reign they infested the Euxine Sea, and had the boldnesse to attempt the Imperial City, Anno 864. said by Cedrenus, and some others of the Eastern Writers, to be a people of Mount Taurus (next neighbours to Mesech or the Moschi.) Failing in their attempt upon Constantinople, and not willing to goe home again, they spread themselves, with their confederates and associates in this expedition, upon the North-west banks of the Euxine Seas; enlarging their bounds Norrhwards with less opposition than they were likely to have done on the Southern parts: Constantinople being once again in vain attempted, in the reigns of Constantine the 7. and Henricus Auceps. Converted to the Christian Faith, or growing into better terms with the Eastern Emperours, Helena daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, is maried to Valadomirus one of their Kings; from that time forwards turning their forces on the Polanders, and their weaker neighbours; save that, provoked by the death of one of their Country, slain accidentally at Constantinople in a private quarrel, they made another fruitless journey against that City, in the time of Michael Calaphates. Enlarging their estate to the West and South, they became masters of a great part of Sarmatia Europæa, Lituania, Podolia, Nigra Russia, and other Provinces, now subject to the Crown of Poland; being then parts of their Estate. Anno 1240. the Tartars, under the conduct of Bathu, or Baydo, son of Occata Chan, broke in upon them, and subdued them: the Country before this entire, under one sole King, being broken afterwards into divers petit and inferiour Governments, according to the will and pleasure of the insolent Victors. The principal of these (descended from the former Kings) were Lords of Volodomir, Mosco, and some other Cities; held by them with no other title than that of Lords of Moscovie, and for that Tributary to the Tartars, as were all the rest. Their seat originally at Walodomir, till the time of John the son of Daniel, the fifth Lord of the Russes, descended of the old Regal line, taking a good liking to the River and Town of Mosco, repaired the Town, being before but mean and ordinary, and made it the chief seat of his Principality. From whence the residue of the Russes, united in succeeding times unto this Estate, by mariages, fraud, and Conquest, had the name of Moscovites. But notwithstanding this increase of their Power and Empire, the Tartars held them for their Vassals, and tyrannized upon the Country with a barbarous insolency. Under which thraldom they long groaned, till the Tartarians being divided amongst themselves, and grown less terrible to their neighbours, were outed of their power and command here, by the valour of John, son of Basilius the second, who thereupon changed the Title of Lord, into that of Duke, and after into that of Great Duke, as his fortunes thrived. Yet not so great, but that he was contented to be an Homager of the Tartars: it being finally agreed on at the end of their wars, that the Tartars should relinquish all their Holds in the Country; and on the other side, that once every year, within the Castle of Mosco, the Great Duke standing on foot, should feed the Horse of the Crim Tartar with Oats, out of his own Cap. This Homage was by Basilius changed to a tribute of Furres; which being also denied by his successors (as they grew in power) occasioned the long wars betwixt the Nations: the Tartars alwayes pressing on them by sudden inroads, sometimes by Armies of no less than 200000 fighting men. But notwithanding all their power, and the friendship of the Turk to boot; the Moscovite is not only able to assert his Soveraignty, but hath also wrested from them many goodly Provinces.

As for the Princes of this Country, I shall not trouble my self (as I see some doe) in tracing a Succession of them, as far as from the times of Augustus Cæsar: when neither the Rossi, nor the Moschi had here any footing. We will therefore goe no higher than the time of George, whose daughter Anne I find to have been maried to Henry the first of France. From whom in a direct line descended another George, with whom we doe intend to begin our Catalogue, as being the last King of the Russes, before the coming of the Tartars. Who wisely yeelding to the storm, waved the title of king, contented only with the title of Lord, as more safe for him, and less invidious to the Tartars: the fifth from whom called John (as before is said) having removed his seat to Mosco, took to himself the title of Lord of Mosco, the chief seat of that power and Soveraignty, which he transmitted afterwards to his posterity: affecting for that cause the title of Dukes of Moscovie (though all the conquered Towns and Territories have their place also in his style) as much as that of Emperour of Russia; which some of them have assumed also; since the time of Basilius, who styled himself Basilius, by the Grace of God, Emperour and Lord of Russia, Great Guke of Volodomir, Moscovie, Novogrod the great, Plescow, Smoiensko, Tuver, Jugar, Wiathka, Bulgar, &c. Lord and great Prince of the Lower Novogrod, Czernigow, Rhozan, Wologda, Rsow, Biele, Rostow, Yaroslane, Poloskie, Biellozziere, Udore, Obdora, Condora, &c. King of Casan and Astrachan. But leaving them unto their swelling and voluminous Title (little inferiour unto that of the Kings of Spain) let us next look on the succession from the time aforesaid, of

9 Georgius II.
10 Basilius II.

The Great DUKES of MOSCOVIE.

1 John, the first great Duke, who strook off the Tartarian bondage.
2 Basilius Casan, won the Provinces of Severia, Roscovia, and Smolensko.
3 John Basilsus, conquered Livonia, and Lituania, both which his successor
1548 4 Johannes Basiliades, or Wasilwich, lost in his age: though in his youth he had subdued the Noyhacensian Tartars to his Empire; and vanquished Selim, Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1569. With this King the English first began to confederate.
1583 5 Theodorus Johannides, the last of the old Royal Line of Moscovie.
1595 6 Boris Theodorus, brother to the wife of the last Great Duke, partly by the last will of his Predecessor, partly by practising with the people, obtained the Empire; but being an unmercifull Tyrant, was dispossessed by the Polanders, coming in favour of one
1605 7 Demetrius, pretending himself to be the son of John Vasilwich, (and generally believed to be so) preserved in a Monastery from the Tyranny of Boris, in hatred of whom he was brought in by the Polander; by whose aid he overcame the Tyrant, and rooted out his Family, and was with great joy crowned Emperour in the City of Mosco. But the Russian Lords disdaining to have a Prince imposed on them from Poland, rose in Arms against him, and at last vanquished, and slew him in open field: his wife a noble Polonian Lady, sent poorly home; and the Polanders beaten out of the Country.
1606 8 Basil Juanniwich, surnamed Sniskins, the chief of the Conspiratours, was by the rest of his faction chosen Cnez, or Emperour; and held the State with great trouble, till the year 1610. when 1610 9 Demetrius II. another pretender to the State, as the son of John Vasilwich also, in opposition unto Sniskius, set up by a stronger faction; gave occasion to the Polander to work upon this distemper; by whom Sniskius was taken prisoner Demetrius slain, Smolensko, and other great Towns subdued; and Uladislaus, Prince of Poland, recommended to the Russians to be chosen Emperour. But the Russes loth to fall under the power of the Polander, and weary of their own confusions, made choice at last, of 1615 10 Michael Fredrovitz, son of Theodore the Patriarch of Mosco, who at last setled this vast Empire, and managed it in a more constant way of peace with the Turk, Tartar, Polonian, and Swethlander, than any of his Predecessors had done before him.
1646 11 Alexius Michoilywitz (or the son of Michael) succeeded his Father in the Empire, troubled at first with some distempers in the State (as in all other Countries about that time) but now quietly setled, Anno 1648.

The Formalities with which these great Emperours are invested, or setled in the Throne, are not many nor stately; such as they be, I here afford you out of the history of the life of Johannes Basiliades, written in Latine by Paulus Oderbornius. On the 2. of June, Anno 1583. Theodorus Johannides went towards the Temple of S. Michael, being the principal Church in all Mosco: the streets all covered with flowers, the doors of the Citizens crowned with Garlands, the air ecchoing with the noise of Flutes and Trumpets, and the people so crowding to behold their Prince, that had not the Guard with naked swords forced a passage through them, it had been impossible for him to have gone on. Being now come to the Church door, the Lords of the Country (Cneses they there call them) went out to meet him: and the Archbishop of Mosco, clad in his pontificalibus, when he was come into the Church, imbraced him. The pavement of the Church was hidden with Tapestry, and the stalls adorned with costly hangings. The Great Duke sate down in his Throne, being attired in a garment of silk, buttoned down with golden buttons: on his head he wore a purple cap, spangled with rich jewels, and on his fingers abundance of rings. Being thus seated, the Patriarch made a Prayer to God, to bless him, his people, and his government; which was seconded by the joyfull shouts and acclamations of his Subjects: amongst whom no small store of silver mony was flung by the Treasurer, and so they returned to the Palace.

The Government of this Country is meerly Tyrannical, the Emperour being absolute Lord of the lives, lands, and goods of all his Subjects: all of them, the noble as well as the base, subscribing themselves in their Petitions to him, by the name of Keloptery, that is, Sclaves. Whereupon Mahomet a Turkish Bashaw was used to say, that his Master and the Muscovite were the two most absolute Princes in all the world. First, for their goods, when any Embassadour returns home, the Great Duke takes from him all the presents which he hath received, giving him perhaps some small reward, perhaps none at all all: and as for lands, they passe not from father to son, but as he confirms it. But more particularly (besides the case of Permia spoken of before) John Vasiliwich sent a command to Mosco, to provide a Coal-pack of live Fleas for a medicine; and when the Citizens returned answer that it was impossible, he fined them at 700 Rubbles for their disobedience. Another time he laid a mulct of 300000 Rubbles upon his Nobility, because he had no good sport in his hunting; which they again extorted from the common people: and under colour of want, commanded from some Bishops, and Monasteries, the sum of 100000 Rubbles, from some 50000, more or less from others, according unto their revennes. And it is usual with the best of them, to cause the Boiars (or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back) to pretend themselves robbed, that he may send unto the Citie to find out the Felon; and on a non est inventus, fine them at discretion, sometimes 8000, sometimes 10000, and sometimes 20000 Rubbles. Then for their lives, there is a story, that Vasiliwich having found that one of his Secretaries had received a Goose, stuffed full silver for a Bribe; caused him to be brought into the Market-place of Mosco: where, without any legal trial, he commanded the Executioner, first to cut off his legs about the shins, and then his arms about the elbows (still asking the miserable man how he liked Goose-flesh) and in the end, to cut off his head; in similitude of a Goose ready for the spit. And that they may the better preserve this power, the Great Dukes seldom shew themselves unto the people, but in apparel of inestimable value, joyning the ornaments of a Bishop unto the Majestie of a King, by wearing a Mitre on their heads shining with Diamonds and rich stones: and when they wear it not on their heads, they place it before the chair of state (over which are the images of Christ and the blessed Virgin) holding in his hand a most rich Crozier staff, and all their fingers full of rings. And upon solemn festivals and entertainments, the Great Chamber is beset with Cubboards of plate, of infinite value; and filled with men cloathed with cloth of gold, to the very foot; all of them seeming to be men of the chief Nobility, but many times being no other than the gravest and portliest Citizens of Mosco, richly apparelled for the time out of the Emperours Wardrobe; which to such as do not understand the fraud, look like so many Princes, and causeth no small wonder at his magnificence. So that the people seeing him in such royal state, and knowing no more than what they are taught at home; reverence him as slaves, not subjects, and look upon him rather as a God, than a King.

Having so absolute a command on their lives and goods, it will be easily supposed that he may raise what forces, and amass what treasures he hath a mind to. First, for his Forces, it is said that he is able to raise 300000 Horse, if occasion be: and that he may come near that number it is more than probable, in that John Vasiliwich in his war against those of Astrachan, had actually 120000 Horse; and that a great part of the Country is in the hands of the Boiares, bound by their Tenure to serve with horse whensoever he pleaseth. And that there are 110 men chosen by the Emperour, and by him enfeoffed with lands, (during pleasure only) who for these lands are to find 65000 horse, with all things necessary for the wars; and those in a continual readinesse, fit for present action. Then for such horse as he himself doth keep in continual pay, there is not fewer than 25000 which attend him as a Guard to his person; all of them well-experienced men, and fit for service: which added to the 65000 spoken of before, makes up a standing body of 90000. Had he foot answerable unto this proportion of horse, there were no dealing with him; but therein his Militia is defective: Vasiliwich to his great Army of 120000 horse, having but 20000 foot; the foot-men which he hath in continual pay amounting to 12000 only, far short of such a standing body of horse, as before we spake of. And this defect hath been the reason why the Polanders, with far lesse armies have prevailed against them: the Great Duke not being able with all his power, to hinder King Stephen of Poland from taking Villocolne, or besiedging Plescow, (though his Army was not above 60000 both in horse and foot) for want of standing bands of foot to make good his ground. Generally both horse and foot are very obedient to their Captains and superiour Officers; patiently enduring all discommodities of cold, rain, and hunger; (in that regard fitter to keep a Fortresse, than serve in field) and so regardlesse of their lives in the day of battel, that they will rather lose them, than either yeeld themselves Prisoners, or demand Quarter.

For his Revennes, they may be what he will himself, considering (besides his extraordinary power of oppressing his subjects before mentioned) the many ordinary ways he hath of amassing treasure: as, viz. the forestalling of homebred commodities, and ingrossing the forein; selling them at what price he list, and hindering all men else from trade, till his own be sold; provision of rent-corn, and victual, raised in some years to 200000 Rubbles, rent-wood, and Hay to 30000; pol-mony to 400000, customs on Merchandise to 800000. By which and other means of collecting moneys, and the Domain of his Crown, though he raise vast sums; yet it is thought, that his household charges being deducted, there remaineth not towards all other expences, three millions of Rubbles, every Rubble being as much as an English Mark.

The Arms are Sable, a Portal open of two leaves, and as many Degrees, Or.

There are in RUSSIA

And so much for RUSSIA.

OF POLAND.

POLAND is bounded on the East, with Russia, and the Crim Tartar, from whom parted by the River Borysthenes; on the West, with Germany; on the North, with the Baltick Sea, and some part of Russia; on the South, with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungarie, and Walachia.

It is an Aggregate body, consisting of many distinct Provinces, united into one Estate; of which Poland being the predominant, hath given name to the rest, called all together the Realm of POLAND: and that so named from Pole, which in the Sclavonian language (the common language of the Countrey) signifieth plain; because but little swelled with hills. Of figure round, in compass 2600 miles; situate under the eighth and twelfth Climates: so that the longest day in the Southern parts is but 16 hours, and about 18 hours in the parts most North.

The Countrey plain, but full of woods, which serve to rectifie the Air, being naturally so cold that they have neither Wine nor Grapes: in stead whereof they use that kind of drink called Ale; in former times the usual Beverage of England, and this Countrey only. Barley they have, and Pulse in such aboundant measure, that no small quantities of each are transported yearly: nor yeeld they any thing at all to Denmark, or Hungarie, for their plenty of Cattel. But of this more in our description of the several Provinces.

The people are very industrious, and studious of all Languages, especially of the Latine; to which they are so devoted, that there is scarse a mean man, who is not able in some measure, to express himself in it. According to their abilities, rather prodigal than truly liberal; and good souldiers generally. The Peasants live in miserable servitude unto their Lords; the Lords in such equality of estate amongst themselves, that none of them (excepting the greater Princes) exceedeth 25000 Ducats of yearly rent. Proud in their garb, costly in their Apparel, impatient in their humours, and delicate in diet: these last conditions common to the women also, who are for the most part indifferently fair, and rather wittie than well spoken. But this being the peculiar Character of the Polander properly so called, is not perhaps communicable to the people of the rest of the Provinces, whom we shall speak of severally in their proper places.

The Christian faith was first planted in this Kingdom at several times, and by several persons, according to the different parts of which it consisteth: in Poland specially so called, in the time of their Prince Miecislaus, son of Nemomislus, An. 963. in Livonia, by the Preaching of one Meinardus, Anno 1200. or thereabouts; In Lituania, not until the year 1386. at the admission of Jagello to the Crown of Poland, and then done (as some say) by Thomas of Walden, (or Waldensis) an English Frier. In Samogitia, and Volhinia, at the same time with Lituania. In the rest at other times, and on other occasions: yet so that in many places of it, Idolatry was never totally rooted out, the seeds and practice whereof in many points still remain amongst them. Corrupted by the superstitions of the Church of Rome, a Reformation was endevoured, at such time as John Hus flourished in Bohemia, the next neighbouring kingdom: but by the rigour of Ladislaus the sixth, then King thereof, assisted by his Bishops and Noblemen, at that time hindred. Afterwards in the time of Luther, some who had studied at Lipsique, and Wittenberg, (Universities of Saxonie) brought his opinons home with them into the Province of Poland; as some Dutch Merchants (with the rest of their Commodities) did into Dantzick, the chief Town of Prussia, Anno 1525. from whence it spread it self over most part of that Country. According as it was favoured or disliked, by the Palatines, Chastellans, and other great men of the Realm; so was its entertainment either good or bad: the Grecians in the mean time taking opportunity, to win some parts of it to their side, and confirm others in it; who being originally members of the Church of Greece, because originally converted by the Bishops thereof, did still continue in conformity and obedience to it. In the end, by reason of the over-great liberty of the Nobility and people, and want of power in the King to controul their doings, every man took up what Religion he best liked, some following the Augustane Confession, others the Helvetian, others adhering as tenaciously to the Church of Rome: and some inclining to new Sects, or rather to old Heresies under new disguises, have brought in such a miscellanie or Babel of Religions into this estate, (Jesuites, Lutherans, Calvinists, Socinians, Arians, Anabaptists, and indeed what not, being here all tolerated) that at last it grew into a By-word, that if any man had lost his Religion, he might find it in Poland, or else believe it to be vanished. A By-word afterwards applyed unto Amsterdam; communicable since unto other places: Libertas Prophetandi, or the Liberty of Prophecying being now as much allowed of in some parts of Christendome, as Libertas opinandi, was in Rome under Nervas Government; ubi & sentire quæ velis, & quæ sentias loqui liceat, when as a man might think as he listed of the publick, and speak what he thought. But whether this be such a Rara temporum felicitas, such a felicity of these our times, as Tacitus conceived the other to be of those, future times will shew. Livonia.

But to return again to Poland, notwithstanding this mixture of Religions, yet that most publickly allowed and countenanced, is the Religion authorised by the Church of Rome; asserted here by the zeal of the Kings unto that cause, and the great power of the Bishops; who seeing how those of their Order have sped in Germany and other places, under colour of Reformation of some things amiss, have hitherto upheld the Ecclesiastical Estate, in the same form they found it. The Government of the Church as formerly, by 3 Archbishops, and 19 Bishops: who challenge a jurisdiction over all the Kingdome, but exercise it upon those only who submit unto them: those who embrace the Doctrines of Luther, or Calvin, following the forms of Government by them established; as others do some new ones of their own devising. And for those Provinces and people which lye towards Greece, or were parts heretofore of the Russian Empire, and still hold a Communion with those Churches; they have Archbishops and Bishops of their own Religion: that is to say, the Archbishops of Vilne, and Lemburg, the Bishops of Polozko, Luzko, Pinsko, Volodomire, Premisl, and Kiovia. Yet amongst all these different Churches and forms of Government, there is this conformity, that whensoever the Gospell is read openly in the Congregation, the Nobility and Gentry use to draw their swords (according to an antient custome which they had among them) signifying their readinesse to defend it against all opposers. Which reason doubtless gave beginning to the standing up at the Creed, and Gospell, in the primitive times; retained still in the Church of England: whereby we do declare, how prepared and resolute we are to defend the same; though some of late, holding it for a Relick of Popery, with greater nicety than wisedome, have refused to do it.

Principal Commanders of this Country in the Art of war, 1. Cassimir the third, the great establisher of this Kingdom after long dissentions. 2. Jagello, or Uladislaus the first, who first brought down the pride of the Dutch Knights in a famous victory. 3. Cassimir the 4th. the fortunate conqueror of the Knights of Prussia, brought by him under the command of the Kings of Poland. 4. Sigismund the first, by whose valour and good fortune the Dutch Knights were totally suppressed, and the greatest part of Prussia for ever added to that Crown. 5. Sigismund the second, surnamed Augustus, fortunate in his wars against most of them of Livonia, by him united to this Kingdom. Of most special note for learning, Hosius, a Divine of the Papal party, whose great abilities advanced him to the State of a Cardinal; 2. Crellius, and 3. Volchelius, of the contrary party in Religion, men of great parts, but Heterodox and unsound opinions; 4. Cromerus the Historian; 5 Barth: Keckerman the Professor at Dansk or Dantzick, a man of universal studies, but of greater industry than exactnesse.

Chief Rivers of this Kingdom are 1. Vistula or Wixel, the antient Boundary betwixt Germany, and Sarmatia Europæa, which rising in the Carpathian Mountains, passeth by Cracovia the chief City of Poland: and dividing Prussia from Pomerella, falleth into the Baltick Sea not far from Dantzick, and is navigable for the space of 400 miles: of old called Vandalis. 2 Warta, which runneth through the lesser Poland; 3. Duina the lesse, watering Livonia: and 4. Borysthenes or Nieper passing through Podolia, both spoken of before when we were in Russia, 5. Niester, by Ptolemy called Tyras, which falleth into the Euxine Sea, having first parted Podolia from Moldavia. 6. Jugra, by some called the lesser Tanais, arising in Lituania, and falling into the more noted Tanais, which is now called Don. Of less note note there are, 1. Reuben or Reuhon, 2. Cronus now called Pregel, 3. Bogh, said by some to be the Hipani of the Antiens. 4. Minnael, 5. Niemen, the Maander of these Northern parts. 6. Winde, a Livonian River falling into the Baltick. Mountains of note here are not many, the Countries for the most part being plain and Champain: and those which be are rather boundaries betwixt this and some other Kingdome, than proper unto this alone. The chief of which are those called Sarmatici, dividing Germany from Sarmatia Europæa; by Solinus named Sevo, by Ptolemy the Carpathian Mountains; the boundary at this time betwixt Poland and Hungary, of which more anon.

The common metes and Land-marks being thus laid down, we will next take a view of those several Provinces, of which this Kingdome doth consist; being ten in number: that is to say, 1. Livonia. 2. Samogitia, 3. Lituania, 4. Prussia, 5. Poland, specially called. 6. Massovia, 7. Podlassia, 8. Russia Nigra, 9. Volhinia, and 10. Podolia: all of them (except the proper Poland) within Sarmatia Europæa.

1. LIVONIA.

1. LIVONIA or LIEFLAND, is bounded on the East, with the Empire of Russia; on the West, with the Baltick Sea; on the North, with the Gulf or Bay of Finland; on the South, with Samogitia, and Lituania. Extended in length along the shore of the Baltick for the space of 125 Dutch, or 500 Italian miles, &c

Livonia. 40 Dutch or 160 Italian miles in breadth: and called thus perhaps from the Lenovi, a people of Germani, inhabiting not far from the River Viſtula.

The Country for the moſt part plain, without any mountains; furniſhed with corn and fruits in ſo great aboundance, that they ſend part thereof into other Countries: and yet there is much ground untilled in it, by reaſon of the bogs and mariſhes which are very frequent. Here is alſo ſtore of wax, hony, and pitch, but they have neither oyl nor wine; the want of which laſt is ſupplyed by Meth. Of tame Beaſts fit for mans ſervice they are well provided; as alſo of ſuch whoſe skins are of more value with the Merchant, than their fleſh at the Market, as Ermins, Sables, Caſtors, others of that kind; beſides good ſtore of game for hunting, the Country having in it many large woods, parts of the Hercynian. And as for Rivers, there are few Countries which have more; watered by the Winde, the Beck, the Dwine, the Ruho, all of them falling into the Baltick; many great Lakes, whereof the chief is that of Beybas, 45 miles long, and full of fiſh.

The people are much given to glattony and drunkenneſs, eſpecially in rich mens Houſes; where it is to be had: for the paiſant lives in want enough, meer ſlaves to their tyrannicall Landlords, who ſpend in riot and exceſſe, what theſe get by drudgery. And when at any time the poor wretch leaves his Landlord to mend his condition with ſome other; the Lord, if he can overtake him, will cut off his foot, to make him ſure for the future. They are a mixture of many Nations, as the Eſtones, which are the naturall Inhabitants, (derived from the Eſtii, a Dutch people, ſpoken of by Ptolemy) of which Nation are almoſt all the Paiſants: the Muſcovites, Swedes, Danes, Dutch, and Polanders, intermingled with them, comming in upon ſeverall conqueſts, and planting themſelves in the beſt parts of it, in which they ſtill Lord it over the Native, but the Dutch eſpecially for long time Maſters of the whole.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt there planted by Meinardus of Lubeck, imployed herein (in the time of Frederick the firſt) at the perſwaſion of ſome Dutch Merchants who traded hither, by the Archbiſhop of Breme; by whom made the firſt Biſhop of the Livonians. The Church hereof at this time governed by the Archbiſhop of Riga, the Biſhops of Derpt, Aſilia, Oſel, Curland, and Rivallia, in thoſe parts which remain ſubject to the Polander; where the Religion of the Church of Rome is only countenanced. Such parts of it that are under the Swedes, or Danes, are for the moſt part, of the Lutheran profeſſion; planted with Colonies of that people. But the Eſtones, or original Inhabitants, as they have a language, ſo they have a Religion by themſelves alſo; mixt of the Chriſtian and the Pagan: extremely well affected unto their Prieſts, to whom they preſent ſalt, candles, and fruits, when they come to them for their bleſſings; great lovers of Confeſſion, eſteemers of holy water, and diligent frequenters of their Churches; but ſo extremely ignorant in all points of Religion, that there is hardly one in a village that can ſay his Pater-noſter. When they bury any of their dead, every one drinketh an health to him, and powreth his part upon him when his turn comes to drink; putting into the grave with him an hatchet, wine, meat, and a little mony for his voyage. And in ſome places they are wholly Idolatrous (if not converted very lately by the care of the Jeſuites) ſome of them worſhipping the Sun, other ſtocks and ſtones, and ſome Serpents alſo. The Langnage of the Country is for the moſt part the High Dutch (being the Language of thoſe Nations who firſt Lorded over them;) the Eſtones having generally a peculiar Language, which none of the others underſtand.

It was divided formerly into the Provinces of Curland, Eſtland, Semigal, Virland, Harland, and Letteland; but theſe ſix, ſince the conqueſt of it by the Polanders, are reduced to three: Harland, and Virland, being united unto Eſtland; and Semigallia, unto Curland.

Chief places in Eſtland are 1. Rivalle, a Biſhops ſee, and a well-traded Port, ſituate on the Gulf of Finland; a Town belonging to the Swede; the keeping whereof and of Virburg, on the borders of Muſcovie, ſtand him yearly in 100000 Dollars. 2. Habſay, or Habſes, (Aſilia in Latine) a Biſhops See, and 3. Pernow, a well fortified place, belonging to the Swethlander alſo, ever ſince the conqueſt of theſe parts of the Country by John the ſecond. Places of great importance to the Crown of Sweden, as all other pieces of this nature are, which ſtanding in an Enemies Country, not only do defend our own, but offend our Adverſaries. For they are not only dores, to open a further paſſage into their Territories whenſoever we ſhall ſee occaſion: but whilſt the Enemy is beſieging thereof, or otherwiſe buſied in recovering them into his power, our own ſtate is preſerved in quiet; and time may yield fit opportunity to relieve them, if they be diſtreſſed, without waſting any part of our proper Countreys. Of which nature was Calais when it was in the hands of the Engliſh; the Garriſons which the Spaniards and Portugueze have in Afric, and India: the charge of keeping them being ſufficiently defrayed (if the charge prove greater than the income, as ſometimes it doth) by the advantages they give unto him which hath them. 4. Velin, a ſtrong Town, and fortified with an impregnable Caſtle; betrayed by the Dutch Garriſon, at that time in it, together with William of Furſtenberg the great Maſter, into the hands of John Baſilius the great Duke of Muſcovie; who ſtill holds it. 5. Derpt or Derbren, (in Latine Tupatum) a Biſhops See; ſituate on the Beck, or Einbeck, betwixt two Lakes, in the midſt of the Province; and taken at the ſame time by the Muſcovite; who tranſporting the Livonians into other places, planted theſe parts with Colonies of his own people. 6. Terneſt, a Caſtle of great ſtrength, taken then alſo by the Ruſſes: but being recovered by the Polander, was blown up with Gun-powder, that it might no more come into the hands of the Enemy. Hitherto nothing of this Country which belongs to the Polanders; theſe that follow do: that is to ſay, 7. Borchlom, the ſeat and reſidence of the Biſhop of Rivalle, ſince the taking of that Town by the Swedes. 8. Weiſenberg, incommodiouſly ſeated betwixt two ill neighbours, Narve, and Rivalle; but ſerving very well to prohibit the incurſions of thoſe Garriſons risons further into the Country. 9. Werneber, in that part of Eſtland, which is called Odinpen; and Wittenſtein, in that part thereof, which is named Jervia. Livonia.

In LETTENLAND, lying in the midſt betwixt Eſtland and Curland, the places of moſt note are 1. Rica, (the people call it Rig) ſeated on the mouth of the River Dwina, falling there into the Baltick: firſt built, and planted, at the charges of the Merchants of Breme; after that the Archbiſhops See, the ordinary reſidence of the great Maſter, and the chief City of the whole Province of Livonia. A Town well fortified according to the modern Rules of fortification, with a ſtrong wall, large Bulwarks, double ditches, Paliſadoes; and well provided of all manner of Ammunition: a famous Emporie, of great reſort by forein Merchants, who carry hence, Pitch, Wax, hemp, Flax, and ſuch other commodities. Governed (notwithſtanding their ſubjection to the King of Poland) by their own Laws; and ſuch ſtout defenders of their liberties, that they will by no means admit of any foreiner, to have command of the City; obedient in all other things to the will of that King. 2. Dunamund, an impregnable fortreſs, two Dutch miles from Riga, well garriſoned by the Polanders, who here take toll of all forein Merchants. 3. Blokaws, a Gariſon of the Kings betwixt Riga and Dunamund, where the Merchants are tolled over again. 4. Winden, more within the Land, on the River ſo called. 5. Wolmar, upon the River Treiden. 6. Kokenhan, a ſtrong Town on the banks of the Dwina. This Country belongs wholly to the King of Poland, and ſtood firm for him in the war made by Charles Duke of Suderman, againſt his Nephew Sigiſmund King of Poland and Sweden: when almoſt all Eſtland had ſubmitted to him.

CVRLAND, the third and laſt member of this diviſion, containing Semigallia alſo, lyeth South of Lettenland, and North of Samogitia, and Lituania: an entire Dukedome of it ſelf, but holden under the Soveraignty and homage of the Kings of Poland. Places of moſt importance in it, are 1. Canden, 2. Goldingen, 3. Kies, (the Dutch call it Wenden) the ſeat of the Great Maſter of the Teutonick order in times paſt; now moſt frequented as the place of Parliament or General Aſſembly, for affairs which concern the publick. 4. Dubin, 5. Grubin, on the Sea ſide, but of no trade at all. 6. Halenpar. And then in Semigall, 7. Mitow, the Court and reſidence of the Dukes of Curland. 8. Selborch, 9. Boſſembourg, 10. Dobelin. No town in all this Dukedome of any trading, though lying for a great ſpace all along the Baltick; becauſe none of them furniſhed with commodious Havens. A Dukedom firſt begun in the perſon of Gothardus Ketler, (of one of the Noble Families of Danemark) the laſt Great Maſter of the Dutch Knights, in this Country: who in the year 1562. ſurrendering his order, and the whole poſſeſſion of Livonia, to Sigiſmund Auguſtus King of Poland; received back again for him and his heirs for ever, the Dukedom of Curland and Semigall, to be held by them of that Crown: the Nobility of theſe Countries doing then preſently their homage and allegiance to him, as their Hereditary Prince. Since which time the Princes of this houſe have continued Feudataries unto Poland, but not reckoned as parts or members of the body thereof; not coming to the Diets, not liable to the publick charges, nor having any thing to do in the Kings Election: in a word, rather honourable Neighbours of the Kings of Poland, then ſubjects to them. The preſent Duke like to be much increaſed in Eſtate and power, if the now Marqueſs of Brandenbourg (whoſe ſiſter is his Mother) ſhould depart without iſſue. For by that means there will be added to this houſe the great Dukedome of Pruſſia, thoſe of Cleve and Gulick; together with ſuch other Countries poſſeſſed now by that Marqueſs, as he holds by deſcent from the Heirs General of thoſe Dukedomes: which makes him caſt an eye already upon thoſe Eſtates.

There belong alſo to Livonia, ſome few Ilands ſituate in the Baltick Sea, that is to ſay, 1. Oſilia, 2. Dogeden, 3. Mona, 4. Wormſe, 5. Wrangen, and 6. Kien. Of which the four laſt do belong to the King of Poland; Dacuden, Dogeden, to the King of Suethland; and Oſilia or Oeſel, to the Dane. This laſt the chief of all the ſix, diſtant from the main land of Livonia, 12 Dutch miles; 14 of the ſame miles in length, half as much in breadth: the chief Towns hereof being Oſel, a Biſhops See, which gives name to the Iland, 2. Sunberg. The Iland made ſubject to the Dane by Magnus, brother of Frederick the ſecond King of Denmark, who being choſen Adminiſtrator of the Biſhoprick of Derpt, in Eſtland, made himſelf Maſter of this Iland, and ſome other pieces; which, dying without iſſue, he bequeathed to the King his brother, Anno 1580.

As for Livonia it ſelf, it was firſt under the Levoni, and Eſtii, two German Nations; from whom the Country had the name of Livonia, the people, of Eſtlanders or Eſtones. Diſtracted into many petit principalities, it was made acquainted with the Chriſtian Faith by the care of the Merchants of Bremen, as before was ſaid. Meinard their firſt Biſhop being dead, and Bertold his Succeſſor ſlain by ſuch of the people, as had not yet received the Goſpel: the Knights of the Port-glaive, or the ſword, were ſent hither, to defend the Preachers and their Doctrine by the force of Arms. Finding themſelves too weak to effect the buſineſs, they united with the order of Dutch Knights in Pruſſia; to whom from that time forwards they became ſubordinate: the Great Maſter of Livonia, acknowledging him of Pruſſia for his Superiour. Theſe Knights continued Maſters of it without contradiction, till the year 1557. (embracing in the mean time the opinions of Luther, Anno 1528.) when quarrelling with the Archbiſhop of Riga, of the houſe of Brandenbourg, becauſe he would not adhere unto their opinions; who to ſecure his own eſtate, was forced to put Riga into the hands of the Polanders. Afterward being overlaid by the Moſcovite, who had taken from them almoſt all their Country; they were fain to put themſelves under the protection of Sigiſmund Auguſtus King of Poland, Anno 1559. But William of Furſtenburg the Great Maſter being betrayed by his own Mercenaries into the hands of the Moſcovite; Gothardus his ſucceſſor (following the example of Albert the Great Maſter of Pruſſia) tranſacted with the ſaid Sigiſmund for the whole Eſtate; which he ſurrendred to his uſe in the Caſtle of Riga, March 5. Anno 1562. together with his Croſſe, the ſeal of the Order, the Charters and Grants of many of the Popes and Emperors, which concerned the ſame; as alſo the Keies of the City and Caſtle of Riga, the Office of Great Maſter, the rights of coynage, and all the powers and privileges appertaining to it: receiving back again from Ruzevill the Kings Commiſſioner, the Dukedome of Curland, to him and his heirs for ever, as before is ſaid. By this tranſaction the Kings of Pole became Maſters of Liefland, more abſolutely ſetled in it after a long war, betwixt Stephen King of Poland, and John Vaſilwick the Great Duke of Muſcovie; who in the end ſurrendred all his claim therein to the ſaid Stephen and his Succeſſors, Anno 1582. reſerving only ſome few Towns on the Eaſtern borders: the Danes, and Swethlanders, taking occaſion by their troubles, to impatronize themſelves of Narve, Rivallia, Oſel, and ſome other pieces.

Samogitia, &c.

2. SAMOGITIA.

2. SAMOGITIA is a ſmall Province wedged in betwixt Livonia, and Lituania, having Livonia, on the North; Lituania on the Eaſt, and South; and the Baltick Sea upon the Weſt: in length extending 50 miles from Eaſt to Weſt, but not of anſwerable breadth. It is ſo called from the lowneſſe of the ſituation (the word Samogits in the language of the Inhabitants ſignifying terram inferiorem, or the Lowlands,) by the Moſcovite in the ſame ſenſe called Samotzkaſemla. This lowneſs of ſituation makes it very watery, and almoſt continually frozen: but withall it hath many foreſts, which yield unto the people aboundance of honey; better, more pleaſing to the taſt, and leſſe mixt with wax, than in other places.

The people are ſuppoſed to be of the Saxon race, of a good ſtature, well ſet, bold and apt for war, but withall, boyſterous, rude, and barbarous; Chriſtians in generall, but many who do ſtill retain their old Idolatries: nouriſhing amongſt them a kind of four-footed Serpents, about three handfulls in length, which they worſhip as their Houſhold Gods, attending them with fear and reverence when they call them out to their repaſt; and if any miſchance do happen to any of the family, it is imputed preſently to ſome want of due obſervation of theſe ugly Creatures. Naturally inclined to Divinations, Charmes, and Sorceries; and frequently abuſed (as for the moſt part ſuch people are) by diabolical illuſions. Nay they which profeſſe the name of CHRIST are ſo ill inſtructed, that they uſe to marry many wives, without conſideration of blood or parentage: it being ordinary for a man to marry with his brothers widow, and not unuſual to marry the Relict of their fathers, (a fornication not ſo much as heard of in St. Pauls time, amongſt the Gentiles.) They have ſome cuſtomes alſo, as unprofitable, as theſe are heatheniſh; breaking up their Land, as they do in Muſcovie, with ſpades or ſticks. And when one of their Governors obſerving the Husbandry of other Nations, had brought them to the uſe of the plough; it fortuned that for two or three years, either by the indiſpoſition of the weather, or ſome other accident, they had not ſo much corn as they uſed to have. Which want, the people attributing to the uſe of the plough, nec quicquam aliud in cauſa eſſe putantes, and not believing that there was any other cauſe of it, grew ſo much incenſed, that the Governor fearing ſome ſedition like to follow on it, was forced to leave them to the old way which before they went. An humour like that of the preſent Iriſh, in ploughing with their Horſes-tayles, ſpoken of before. So pertinacious for the moſt part, are ignorant and ſuperſtitious people, in ſtanding to their antient cuſtomes, though abſurd and hurtfull.

Towns they hath few, their houſes for the generality being poor and low, covered with ſtraw or durt, with an hole open in the roof to let in the light. The principal of thoſe they have, (but rather Villages than Towns) are 1. Bigla, near the head of the River Swiete, 2. Linkaw, of which nothing memorable.

This Province hath alwaies followed the fortunes of Lituania; ſubject, when that was ſo, to the Kings of Ruſſia; converted when that was, to the Chriſtian Faith; and finally united with it to the Crown of Poland.

3. LITVANIA.

LITVANIA hath on the Eaſt, the Empire of Ruſſia; on the Weſt, Pruſſia, Maſſovia, and Poland; on the North, Livonia, and Samogitia; and on the South, Volhinia, and Podalia. So called from Lituus the ceremanial ſtaff, uſed antiently by the Augures in their divinations: to which the Inhabitants hereof being very much addicted before their receiving of the Goſpel, were called Lituani. But this is but conjectural only. Yet rather thus, than that it ſhould be peopled by ſome baniſhed Italians, firſt named Italia, then Litalia; and after by a moſt unlikely corruption, come to Lituania, as Matthias a Michou would fain have it.

The Country for the moſt part full of Moores, Foreſts, ſome great Lakes, like a Sea for bigneſſe, and many navigable Rivers: which frozen over in the Winter, make the waies more travellable at that time of the year, than they are in ſummer. The air in moſt places exceeding cold, which makes their Wheat (whereof they have ſome aboundance) to be ſeldome ripe; and other fruits of the Earth to come ſlowly forward. Their foreſts yield them Bugles, Ermins, Sables, Deer, wild Horſes, plenty of Honey, Wax, and Pitch; but their breed of cattel is leſſe here, and of ſmaller ſtature, than it is in Germany. Theſe Foreſts alſo are the ſtorehouſe, out of which the Engliſh, and Hollanders, furniſh themſelves with timber, both for ſhips and building; returning to them in exchange ſalt, wine, and other neceſſaries, which are wanting here.

The

The people antiently had Fire, and Serpents, for their Gods; nouriſhing the laſt in their houſes, and keeping the other continually burning: the Prieſts and Miniſters of the Temples alwayes adding fewell, that it might not fail. The Veſtal fire not kept more carefully at Rome, nor with greater ceremonie. To this God whom they called Diſhpan, or the Lord of the Smoke, they uſed to ſacrifice young pullets; to the other, their Cocks: the ſeed of this Idolatry is ſo implanted in them, that it is ſaid, that in a Village of the Kings called Lovaniski, not four miles from Vilna, their chief City, they do to this day worſhip Serpents. Converted with their Prince Jagello to the Chriſtian Faith, An. 1386. they yet retained ſuch cuſtomes as are inconſiſtent with Chriſtianity: marying, and unmarying, when, and as often as they pleaſe; no bond being ſo ſoon cancelled as that of Matrimony. For a maried man to uſe the body of an harlot is accounted, (as indeed it is) an opprobrious crime; but for the wife to have her Stallions and Adulterers, is a thing ſo ordinary and unblameable, that the husbands call them their Co-adjutors; and prize them far above the reſt of their Acquaintance. The common people in a miſerable ſervitude unto their Lords, pillaged and beaten by them upon any occaſion; yet muſt not come before them with an empty hand. And if any of them have committed a crime deſerving death, he muſt hang himſelf as ſoon as the ſentence is ſignified to him; or elſe is beaten and tormented in ſo cruel a manner, that death at laſt is looked on as a better life. Lituania.

The countrey is divided into ten parts or Provinces, ſubject unto the juriſdiction of ſo many Palatines, that is to ſay, the Palatine of 1 Vilna, 2 Trock, 3 Minsko, 4 Novogrod, 5 Breſtia, 6 Volhinia, 7 Kiovia, 8 Mueſlaw, 9 Vitebſco, 10 Polotzkie. But Novogrod, and Polotzkie, being conquered by the Great Duke of Muſcovie, and added unto that eſtate; and Volhinia reckoned (of late times) for a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, not depending of it: the remaining number is but ſeven; moſt of them taking names from their principal Towns. The chief of thoſe, and others which deſerve place here, are 1 Vilna, a Biſhops See, equal in bigneſſe to Cracow, the chief City of Poland; ſo called of the River Vil, or Viln, upon which it is ſeated; built there in the year 1305. by one Godemin, a great Prince of theſe parts: well-walled, but the gates thereof open night and day large, rich, and well frequented by forein Merchants, eſpecially by thoſe that drive the trade of Mojcovie, who have here their Hall; one of the chief ornaments of the City. They have in it alſo ſome Churches built of ſtone (but the moſt of wood;), the principal whereof is the Monaſtery of S. Bernard, which is a very comely ſtructure. The Natives call this Town Vilenski; the Dutch, Die Wilde. Situate in the very heart of the countrey, the longeſt day in Summer being here 16 hours and half a quarter: whereas in the moſt ſouthern parts of the countrey, it is but 16; and in the moſt northern, not fully 18. 2 Kiovia, or Kiof, ſituate on the Nieper, or Boryſthenes, where the River Deſna falls into it: heretofore a beautifull and moſt ſtately City, having in it above 300 fair Churches, of which ſome remain unto this day; the ruines of the reſt to be traced out amongſt ſhrubs and buſhes, the receptacles of wild beaſts. The ſeat at that time of the Metropolitan of the Ruſſian Empire; containing alſo under his juriſdiction the countreys of Walachia, in Dacia; and Nigra Ruſſia, in Poland. But being deſtroyed by Bathu or Boydo the Tartarian, in the conqueſt of theſe parts by that people; it never could come neer its former luſtre: yet ſtill it holds the reputation of a Biſhops See, acknowledging the Patriarch of Moſco for his Metropolitan; and conſequently of the Communion of the Greek Churches, not of that of Rome. 3 Grodna, on the River Chronus, the chief Town of the Palatinate of Trock, memorable for the death of Stephen K. of Poland. 4 Grumwald, more memorable for the great defeat given near it, by Jagello the Duke of Lituania and King of Poland to the numerous Army of the Dutch knights invading this Province: ſo confident of their ſucceſſe in the undertaking, that they brought with them aboundance of chains and torches; with the one to lead captive the Nobles of Poland, and with the other to fire their Cities. But Jagello, then newly made a Chriſtian, putting his confidence in God, with an Army of untrained ſouldiers ſo tamed their pride, that he ſlew 40000 of them; never recovered of that blow whilſt their Order ſtood. 5 Ponsko, in the Palatinate of Breſt; 6 Klow, reckoned a countrey of it ſelf; and 7 Striſſin, fortified with a Caſtle, both under the Palatine of Mieſlaw. The reſt of the chief Towns may be known by the Palatinates, which they give their names to; but not elſe obſervable.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Aorſi, Pagarini, Savari, tribes of the Sarmatæ Europæi. United into this name of Lituanians, they became ſubject to the Kings of Ruſsia; till the breaking of that kingdom by the Tartars. At what time Erdizvill, then their Prince, (but an Homager and Tributary to the Ruſsians) withdrew himſelf from their command; as did alſo many others of the conquered Provinces. Afterwards Mindoch, one of the Dukes or Princes of it, being made a Chriſtian, was by Pope Innocent the third honoured with the title of a King; but returning again unto his vomit, he loſt that title. In the end, Anno 1386. Jagello Duke of Lituania, marying with Heduigis Queen of Poland, was upon three conditions choſen King of that Realm. 1 That he ſhould immediately receive the Chriſtian Faith; 2ly, That he ſhould draw all his ſubjects to the ſame belief; and 3ly, That he ſhould unite this Dukedom to the Crown of Poland. Of theſe the two firſt were performed without any delay; though the ſecond not without ſome difficulty; the people being obſtinate in their old Idolatry, eſpecially in the religious conceit they had of high trees; which to cut down was held both unſafe and impious. Not to be weaned from this conceit, till by the authority of the King their loftieſt trees were felled, and their Woods grubbed up: which when they ſaw done without any danger to the Prince; or any of thoſe whom he employed in that ſervice; Regis mandato & autoritate cedere caperunt, they then began to hearken unto his commands, and generally received the Goſpel, and were Baptized. In the laſt point there was a longer time of deliberation. For the Princes of the houſe of Jagello, loth to deprive themſelves of their Patrimonial eſtate, which was hereditary unto their posterity; and to subject it to the election of the Polanders, in which it was possible the Princes of their family might be pretermitted: deferred the accomplishment hereof from one day to another, under colour that the Lituanians would revolt, if they went about it. But Sigismund Augustus, in whose person the male issue of Jagello failed, foreseeing what divisions might ensue after his decease, and fearing that the Moscovites would renew their old pretensions, united it unto the Crown: ordaining that the Bishops, Palatines, and a certain number of the Chastellans by him established, should have their place and suffrage in the Great Council of Poland; power in the chusing of the King, and all other privileges which the natural Polonians have. Since that, accounted a chief Member of that Body Politick: subject to those corruptions, changes, and innovations in matters of Religion, which have been predominant in the other; excepting those parts only which relate to the Church of Greece or Mosco, adhering pertinaciously to the rites thereof.

VOLHINIA, by some accounted one of the Palatinates of Lituania, (as once it was) but by others, a distinct Province of it self; is bounded on the North and East, with Lituania; on the South, with Podolia; and on the West, with Russia Nigra, and Podlassia. So called, as Maginus is of opinion, from the Volgari, who dwelling on the banks of the River Volga, came afterwards into this countrey, calling it Volgaria; whence by degrees it came unto Volwonia, and at last to Volhinia. But this conjecture is improbable, and of no good grounds.

The countrey yeelds good plenty both of grain and fruits, Pools which abound with very good fish, Forests which do afford them store of game and honey; and much good pasturage for their cattel. The people of the same nature with the Lituanians, but more strong, and warlike; and better weaned from their old superstitions and heathenish customes, than the others are. Of the same language and Religion with those of Russia; to which, together with the rest of Lituania, it did once belong: It is divided commonly into three parts or Provinces, all taking name from the three principal Cities of it; that is to say, 1 Luzke, in Latine called Luceozia, a town of above 1000 families, where 127 onely, in the time of my Author, were of the Romish Religion; the residue being Russians, Grecians, and some Armenians: the seat and residence of two Bishops, of which one being of the Communion of the Church of Rome, is of the Province of the Archbishop of Lemburg, in Russia Nigra; but they which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, have also a Bishop of their own, who acknowledgeth the Patriarch of Mosco for his Metropolitan. 2 Valodomir, a Bishops See also, of the same condition. 3 Keromenze, which (as the rest) hath under it many fair Towns and Castles, besides large Villages. The whole once part of Lituania, as before was said; but of late dismembred from it, and united to the Crown of Poland, as a State distinct. But so, that the greatest part of it is immediately subject to the Duke of Ostrogoye, who is said to have 4000 Feudataries in this Countrey; the greatest Prince of those who hold Communion with the Church of Greece in the whole Realm of Poland.

PODOLIA hath on the North, Volhinia, part of Lituania, and the great Empire of Russia; on the South, Moldavia, from which parted by the River Tyras, now called Niester; on the West, Russia Nigra; extending Eastward through vast uninhabited countries, as far as to the Euxine Sea. The reason of the name I find no where guessed at; the people for the most part of the same nature and original with the Russians, to whose Empire it formerly belonged also, till gained (if such a subjection as they give the King, may be called a gaining) to the Crown of Poland, at such times as the Russes were in thralled to the power of the Tartars.

The Countrey generally so fertile, that the husbandman is accustomed to reap an hundred for one, in regard it bears at one ploughing for three years together: the countreyman being put to no further trouble, than at the end of the first and second years, to shake the Corn a little, as he reaps or loads it; that which so falls, serving as seed for the next year following. The meadow grounds so strangely rich, and luxuriant, and the grasse so high, that a man can hardly see the heads or horns of his Cattel: of so swift a growth, that in three days it will cover a rod which is thrown into it, and in few more so hide a plough, that it is not an easie work to find it. If these things seem beyond belief, let Maginus, who reporteth them, bear the blame thereof; though better take it on his word, than go so far to disprove him. And yet, which adds much unto the miracle, the ground in most places so hard and stony, that there need six yoke of Oxen to break it up: to the great toyl both of the Cattel and the men. It is also said, that in this countrey there are great flocks of sheep, many herds of Oxen, abundance of wild beasts, and great store of honey. And yet for all this plenty and abundance of all things necessary, the Country for the most part, especially towards the East, is but meanly inhabited; by reason of the frequent incursions of the Tartars bordering next unto it. Who have so wasted it in times past, and thereby so discouraged the people from building, planting, and all other works of peace and husbandry; that in so large and rich a Country, there is nothing to be seen but some scattered houses, few Villages, and not above five Towns of note, viz. 1 Orczakow, at the influx of the Borysthenes or Nieper into the Euxine sea. 2 Vaszow, at the fall of the River Bog into that of Nieper. 3 Braclaw, more high upon the Bog. 4 Camienecz, on the borders of Russia nigra, built by some divine hand, as it were, amongst the precipices of high and inaccessible Rocks; and so well fortified withall, that it is impregnable: as is apparent by the many and great repulses, which the Turks, Tartarians, and Valachians, have received before it, with much ſhame and loſſe. 5 Lemburg, remarkable for the ſawces or ſalt-meats, which they ſend thence into other Countries. Ruſſia Nigra, &c.

6. RVSSIA NIGRA.

RUSSIA NIGRA hath on the Eaſt, Volhinia, Podolia, and Molldavia; on the Weſt, Mazovia, and Poland, ſpecially ſo called; on the North, Lituania, and Podlaſsia; and on the South, the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains. It is called alſo Roxolania from the Roxolani, a chief people of Sarmatia Europæa, and by ſome Ruthenia: but generally Ruſſia, from the Roſsi ſpoken of before, in the Empire of Ruſsia, who ſpread themſelves over all theſe parts. Some hold that it was firſt called Roſſeia, which ſignifieth in the Sclavonian language, a ſcattered Nation, or a Nation diſſeminated, and diſperſed into many parts; and that this was the name generally of all that ſpake the Sclavonian tongue, and followed the religion and rites of the Church of Greece: extended from the frozen Seas to the Adriatique, and from the Euxine to the Baltick. This, and a greater tract of ground, I grant to have been heretofore poſſeſſed by divers Nations, under the name of Sclavonians; a very conſiderable part of Germany and Poland being conquered by them. But for the name of Ruſsia, given at firſt to all the Ruſsian Empire, diſtinguiſhed now into Ruſsia Alba, and Ruſsia Nigra, I adhere unto my former Vote; conceiving that it came from the Roſsi, an Armenian people, inhabiting about Mount Taurus, who in the year 864. or thereabouts, attempted the taking of Conſtantinople, and after placed themſelves on the Northern banks of the Euxine, getting ground of the Sclavonians to the North and Eaſt, till they had made themſelves maſters of all Ruſsia Alba, Lituania, Volhinia, Podolia, and this Ruſsia Nigra. Diſtinguiſhed from the former by the adjunct of Nigra, after the deſtruction of that great Empire, by the coming in of the Tartars; either from the colour of their garments, or their black and more ſouthernly complexion. In which regard called alſo Ruſsia Meridionalis, or the Southern Ruſsia.

The Country is generally fruitful, abounding in Horſes, Oxen, Sheep, Sables, and Foxes: ſuch ſtore of Bees, that they breed not only in Hives and hollow Trees, but in Rocks and Caves. Well watered both with Pools and Rivers, affording them great plenty of fiſh; more naturally ſpawning here than in other places; inſomuch, that if a Pond be digged, and ſpring accordingly, the fiſh will breed therein of their own accord, without being brought from other waters. The greateſt want hereof is wine, either ſupplyed with Mede, or from other places. And it is ſaid, that in the Territory of Chelme, the branches of the Pine trees left upon the ground for three years together, will be converted into ſtone.

The people are generally valiant, and ſo ſtrong of body, that they uſe Bows of 12 foot long. Being formerly governed by Dukes, they do but ill brook the name of King; which much induced the kings of Poland to ſend Colonies of natural Polonians, into moſt parts of the Country: inſomuch as moſt of the Knights and Gentry of it are of that extraction, and follow the religion of the Church of Rome; the Paiſants and original inhabitants of it, being more generally affected to the Rites and doctrines of the Church of Greece

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1. Chelme, in the Territory whereof it is affirmed, that the branches of Pine trees left upon the ground for three years together, are converted to ſtone. 2. Premiſten, 3. Halitz, 4. Belzo, 5. Grodeck, and 6. Leopolis, by the Natives called Lemburg, built by one Leo a Moſcovite; a Town of great traffique, and an Archbiſhops See, who is of the Religion of the Church of Rome. But the Patriarch of Moſco hath here alſo an Archbiſhop of his own ordaining, there being Churches both in the City it ſelf, and all Ruſsia generally (as before was ſaid) which are of the communion of the Church of Greece. There are alſo in this City ſome Armenian Merchants, who have a Church, a Biſhop, and ſome Prieſts of their own religion.

Of the affairs of this Province, and how it was a part once of the Ruſsian Empire, hath been ſaid already. Diſmembred from it by the Tartars, it had a while Dukes or Provincial Governours, ſubject and tributary unto thoſe Barbarians: as had alſo Podolia, its next neighbour. Both conquered by the Polander, were for a time kept under by ſtrong hand, and the power of Garriſons. But being upon all occaſions apt to revolt, by reaſon of the hard hand which the Kings held over them, (by whom treated rather like ſlaves than ſubjects:) they were aſſured unto the State, by giving them the ſame liberties and immunities, both for the Nobility and the Commons, which the natural Polonians had; and by that means made fellow-members of that Common-wealth. The Act of Ladiſlaus the 6th. the ſon of Jagello, imitating therein the antient Romans; who much augmented their forces, and aſſured their Eſtate, by communicating the freedom of Rome, and the privileges of Latium to many of the conquered Provinces: and was herein imitated by Sigiſmund the firſt, Sigiſmund Auguſtus, and Stephen, his ſucceſſours, in their incorporating of Pruſſia, Lituania, and Livonia, to the Crown of Poland.

MASSOVIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Lituania; on the Weſt, with Poland ſpecially ſo called; on the North, with Pruſſia, and Podlaſsia; on the South, with Ruſsia Nigra or Meridionalis. So called from Maſſo, one of the Dukes hereof; who in the year 1045. being vanquiſhed by Caſimire Duke of Poland, fled into Pruſsia, and there unfortunately dyed.

The Country large, and for the moſt part full of woods, where they find ſtore of Bugles, and wild Buls. The people ſtrong, valiant, and couragious in war; differing little from the Polonians in ſpeech, manners, or apparel, ſave that they uſe a kind of whiſtling, which the others do not. The prinprincipal Towns of it, are 1. Marſchow, the chief of the Province, and heretofore the reſidence of the Duke or Prince; remarkable for the beſt Mede, or Metheglin. 2. Egrod Czirko, 3. Poltowoskie, 4. Gadziek, 5. Lozara, 6. Droic, the ſeat of a Palatine, but not elſe obſervable.

This Province was once ſubject to Princes of its own, not ſubject or ſubordinate unto any Superior. Of which number that Maſſo was one, from whom named Maſſovia. In the years 1246. and 1260. being ſtrangely waſted and diſtreſſed by Mindey Duke of Lituania; they were fain to put themſelves under the power of the Polander: by whom made the portion of the ſecond ſon of that Kingdom. But John, and Staniſlaus, the two laſt Dukes hereof, dying without iſſue, it returned unto the Kings of Poland; by whom incorporate to that Crown, and privileged in the election of the King, and all matters which concern the publick, as all others of the Polonians are, Anno 1526.

8. PODLASSIA.

PODLASSIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Volhinia; on the Weſt, with Pruſsia; on the North, with Lituania; and on the South, with Maſſovia, and Ruſsia Nigra. The reaſon of the name I know not. The Country not much differing from thoſe before; the people a mixt generation of Ruſſes, Moſcovites, and Polonians, partake a little of the manners and garb of thoſe ſeveral Nations, from which they lineally are deſcended.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1 Bielsko, 2 Brunsko, 3 Suras, all of them having fair and ample Territories. 4 Tykdiskin, ſtrongly fortified and well garriſoned, as being the place where the Kings Treaſures are kept. 5. Knyſsin, beautified with a royal Palace and a pleaſant Park; wherein are ſtore of wild beaſts for hunting, and fiſh-ponds very well repleniſhed. 6 Narew, 7. Vaſilkow, and 8 Auguſtow, a very ſtrong Town, built and well fortified by Sigiſmund Auguſtus, and by him thus named, Anno 1569. at what time he diſmembred this Province from Lituania, to which before it appertained; uniting it for ever to the Crown of Poland.

PRUSSIA, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Lituania, and Podlaſsia; on the Weſt, with Pomerania; on the North, with the Baltick ſea; and on the South, with Poland, and Maſſovia. Called firſt Boruſsia from the Boruſsi, who ſubdued it (of whom more anon;) which by an eaſie alteration was changed into Pruſsia, by which name ſtill called.

The Country is extended all along the Baltick Sea, from the City of Dantzick in the Weſt, to Labian on the mouth of the Maillank, Eaſt; for the ſpace of 50 Poliſh miles: and from Torune bordering on Maſſovia, to Memel in the confines of Lituania, 58 miles of the ſame meaſure. The air thereof very mild and temperate, the ſoil both profitable and pleaſant; full of Lakes and Rivers ſtored with fiſh, plentiful of corn and other neceſſaries, and well clad with Foreſts, which yield them game for hunting, rich skins for profit, and abundance of honey. Of which laſt they make Mede for their own uſe, (their ordinary drink where there is no wine) and ſell the reſt unto the Merchant. But the commodity wherein they do excell their neighbours, is their plenty of Amber, which is the juice of a ſtone which groweth like a Coral in a Mountain of theſe Baltick Seas, covered quite with water; and ſhunned by Mariners three leagues off, for fear of Shipwrack: the Mountain reaſonable large, about 50 yards high of Engliſh meaſure. And when any tempeſt riſeth in theſe Northern Seas, eſpecially in September and December, the liquor by violence thereof is rent from the rock, and caſt into divers Havens, and on divers Coaſts of this Countrey, and ſometimes upon thoſe of Sweden, and Pomerania: the people leaping into the Sea when it rageth moſt, whence they take up firſt ſome ſtore of weeds, after that this Liquor; which being taken out of the water hardneth like to Coral. Beſides the beauty hereof, and the quality it hath of attracting ſtraws and iron, as the Adamant doth; burning like pitch, and others of this nature; it is excellent good for ſtopping bloud, all kind of Agues, falling-ſickneſſe, dropſies, ſtone, collick, weakneſſe of ſtomach, head-ach, and the yellow jaundiſe.

The people, eſpecially the Gentry, deſcend from the Germans, and retain much of their nature: having more art and induſtry than the other Polonians, and being more tenacious of their antient cuſtoms. Idolaters for long time together, converted firſt unto the Faith, in the time of the Emperor Frederick the 2d. by whoſe ſetting on they were ſubdued by the order of the Dutch Knights, An. 1215. and either won or forced to the Chriſtian Faith. As Chriſtians, governed ſince the plantation of the Goſpel, by the Biſhops of Culme, Warme, Sambia, and Pomeſan, ſuffragans to the Archbiſhop of Gueſna: under whom thoſe parts of it doe ſtill continue, which have not yet forſaken the Church of Rome: the Lutherans, Calvinians, and other ſeparate Congregations diſtinct from them, having their own forms both of doctrine and diſcipline.

Few Provinces of the North are better watered, than this is, both for Lakes and Rivers: ſome of the Lakes 7. Dutch miles in compaſſe, and well ſtored with fiſh. The Rivers 12. in number, that is to ſay, 1 The Viſtula, 2 Chronus, 3 Nogat, 4 Elbing, 5 Vaſera, 6 Paſſaria, 7 Alla, 8 Pregel, 9 Oſſa, 10 Drebnicz, 11 Lica, and 12 Lavia, all plentifully ſtoted with fiſh; beſides a large Sea-coaſt both for trade and fiſhing, no ſmall commodity to the Natives.

The Country formerly divided into twelve Dukedoms, (ſo they called the parts and fractions of it) was by the induſtry of the Dutch Knights ſo adorned and beautified (after they had once brought it under their obedience) that there were no fewer than 72 Caſtles, and 62 good Towns of their foundation. Which number being much increased in these later times, hath made it the most flourishing part of the whole Kingdom of Poland. But the Order of these Knights being suppressed in this Country, by an agreement betwixt Sigismund the first, King of Poland, and Albert of Brandenburg, the last great Master of the Order; both Town and Country are divided between the Successors of the said Albert, as Dukes of Prussia, and of the said Sigismund, as Kings of Pole: the Dukedoms or divisions of Hogerland, Warme, Galnidia, Micklow, Calmigeria, with the City of Mariemberg, the Soveraignty of Dantzick, and Melvin, with the whole Country of Pomerella, lying on the West-side of the Vistula, being allotted to the King; the residue containing the divisions of Schalavonia, Sambia, Natangia, Nadravia, Bartonia, Sudavia, and Pomesania (except the City and Territory of Mariemberg) to the Dukes of Prussia.

Chief Towns belonging to the Duke, are 1. Mimel, a well-frequented Port, the Mart Town for the commodities of Lituania, which are brought hither, and here bought by the forein Merchant: part of this Province interposing betwixt Lituania and the Baltick. 2. Coningsberg, as the Dutch; Regimont, as the French; and Mons Regius, as the Latines call it; situate in the Province of Sambia, at the bottom of a Gulph or Bay, where the Pregel falleth into the Baltick Sea: built by the Dutch Knights in the year 1260, and made an University by Albert, the first Duke hereof, 1525. the seat and principal residence of his successors; as also of the Bishops of Sambia, in Latine called Sambiensis, by the name of the Province. 3. Mulmeburg, founded by the Dutch Knights, Anno 1279. 4. Brandenburg, on the South side of that bay, but more near the Sea; built, as I guesse, by some of the great Masters of that family. 5. Ragnitz, the furthest Town of note towards Lituania. 6. Angersburg, in Sclavonia; as was also Ragnitz. 7. Nordenburg in Bartonia. 8. Ottelburg in Galnidia, of which little memorable. 9. Marienwerder, the furthest of the Dukes estate towards the Vistula, and the ordinary residence of the Bishop of Pomesan. Besides which, there are reckoned in this division, 80 good Towns more, and about 54 Castles, though not of much observation in the course of story.

Chief Towns pertaining to the King are 1. Braunsburg, upon a Bay of the Baltick Sea, which they call Frisch Haffe; a Town of good trade by reason of the commodious Haven; and the ordinary residence of the Bishop of Warmia. 2. Frawenburg, on the same Bay, not far from Braunsburg. 3. Elbinge, on the same Bay, not far from a fair and fishfull Lake; well-traded, rich, and full of very wealthy Merchants. 4. Resel, the chief Town of the Dioceese and Dukedom of Warmie. 5. Strasburg, in Micklow, confining on Poland, specially so called; at the siege whereof by Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, Anno 1628. Elias Tripe, one of the Engineers of that King, found out the use of Leather Ordnance, which afterwards did that King great service in the wars of Germany. 6. Culm, on the River Vistula, a Bishops See. 7. Mariemburg, on the Nogat, built by the Dutch Knights, Anno 1302. and made the seat of the Great Masters of their Order, translated first from Ptolemais, or Acon in Syria, to the City of Venice; from thence to Marpurg; and at last to this place by Sifride the twelfth Great Master of it: whose constant residence in this Town, occasioned the Bishop of Culm to remove thither also. A very fair and well-built city, the chief of those which do belong to the King of Poland: by whom so well garrisoned, and furnished with such store of victuals, ammunition, and other necessaries, that it was thought able to hold out for a six years siege. But it proved otherwise when besieged by the King of Sweden, who took it in lesse space than so many months; on the setling of a peace betwixt the Crowns, rendred again unto the King of Poland. Beneath this Town, down towards the Baltick, is a pleasant Iland, made by the Nagot and the Wixell; for the fertility of the soil, and the great number of houses, Villages, and people, not equalled (for the muchnesse of it) in all this Country. 8. Newburg, on the West side of the Vistula, or Wixel, in the Country called Pomerella; once part of Pomerania, but given by Suantibore Duke of Pomeren, Anno 1107. to Bugeslaus his second son: whose posterity enjoyed it till the year 1295. when Mestevin the 2d dying without issue male, gave it to Primislaus, D. of the Polonians, whose successors have ever since enjoyed it by that donation. 9. Dirschaw, or Darsaw, (in Latine Darsovia) a well-fortified Town, and of great importance, on the same side of the River, and the same Country of Pomerella. 10. Dantzick, in Latine called Dantiscum, and sometimes Gedanum, situate on the same side of the River also, a fair and well-built City, the houses for the most part of brick, and the rest of stone, raised with great beauty and magnificence six or seven floores high: beautified with a fair Council-house for affairs of State, and many publick gardens for disport and exercise. It consisteth of three Cities, governed by as many Senates; the one called Furstat, or the fore-City, the second Altstat, or the old City, and the third Reichstat, or the Emperours City; but all encompassed with one wall, and governed by one chief Senate, or Common-Council chosen out of all three. A Bishops See, and the second in esteem and rank, of all the Hanse-Towns; of so great trade, and such a noted Granary of all sorts of corn issued from hence to supply the wants of other Countries, that 1000 measures of wheat (besides other commodities in proportion) are here dayly sold. Heretofore it was reckoned as Imperial, but now esteemed a Free-Estate, acknowledging the Kings of Poland for their Protectors; to whom they allow many customs upon their merchandise, and permit his Officers to abide there for receiving of them. The first Town in the Kingdom of Poland, which gave entrance to the doctrines of Luther, Anno 1525. but in so tumultuous a manner, that they that favoured his opinions, deposed the old Common-Council-men and created new ones of their own; prophaned the Churches, robbed them of their ornaments, and shamefully abused the Priests, and Religious persons, abolished the Masse, and altered all things at their pleasure. But by the coming of the King they grew somewhat quieter; Having one Convent of Black Friers, and two of Nuns, who still enjoy the exercise of their Religion. 11. Melvin, a noted Port Town, and of great resort, especially by the English Merchants, who had here their Staple for the Baltick Pruſsia. tick. A ſmall, but fair, and well-built City, and fortified with a very good wall, governed like Dansk, after the manner of a free Eſtate or Commonwealth, under the Patronage and protection of the Kings of Poland.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Venedi, the moſt potent Nation of this tract, extended all along the coaſt of the Baltick; from them by Ptolemie called Sinus Venedicus: containing under them the Gythones, Phinni, Sulanes, Phrungud.ones, Avarini; and more within the land, the Sudini and Galindæ, whoſe name the Dukedom or Province of Galindia doth ſtill retain. But great and potent though they were, they were ſubdued by the Boruſſi, inhabiting at the foot of the Riphean Mountains: who weary of their own cold and barren dwellings, removed into the Weſtern parts; and vanquiſhing the Venedi, and thoſe other Nations, poſſeſſed themſelves of this Country, which they called Boruſsia, now by us named Pruſsia. By Venedus one of their Princes, having 12 ſons in all, it was divided into 12 Provinces or Dukedoms, one for every ſon: continuing by that means diſtracted into divers petit principalities, till the coming of the Marian or Dutch Knights, ſent hither by Frederick the ſecond, Anno 1215. by whom the Provinces or Dukedoms of Sudavia, Michlow, and the greateſt part of Nadravia, were laid waſt and deſolate; the reſt ſubmitted to their power, and received the Goſpel. After this it continued ſubject to this order of Knights, till the year 1419. when weary of their extortion, and the continual change of Maſters, they revolted to the King of Poland, to whom they offered their obedience: ſeconded by the yeelding up of Mariemberg, with many other Towns and Caſtles, ſold to King Caſimir by the Garriſon Souldiers, Anno 1457 for 476000 Florens. But the Knights diſdaining to be ſo dealt withall, and refuſing to ſwear allegiance to the Kings of Poland, they brake out into open war; managed with variable ſucceſſe on both ſides; Ludovicus the then Great Maſter, being ſo ſucceſſefull at the firſt, that he once beat the King out of the field, routed his whole Army, ſlew 30000 of his men upon the place, and took 136 of his chief Nobility: not vanquiſhed at laſt, but by the treachery and rebellion of his own people. In the end wearied and worn out on both ſides by continual wars, Albert of Brandenbourg, then Great Maſter, having for 14 years together courageouſly maintained the honour of his Order; and for the four laſt years importuned in vain the aſſiſtance of the Emperour and Princes of Germanie: began to think of ſome expedient to compound the buſineſs. Being inclined to Luthers doctrines, and willing to advance himſelf unto this Eſtate; he ſecretly practiſed with Sigiſmund the firſt of Poland, to end the war to the advantage of both parties. By whom at laſt it was agreed, that Albert ſhould relinquiſh his Order, and ſurrender all Pruſsia into the hands of the King; that the King poſſeſſing the Weſtern parts with the Town of Mariemberg, and the Soveraignty of Dansk, and Melvin, ſhould inveſt Albert, with the Title of Duke of Pruſsia, eſtating on him and the heirs of his body, the whole Eaſtern Moiety, containing the Provinces or Dukedomes before ſpecified; and finally, that Albert and his heirs ſhould hold the ſaid Eſtate, as Homagers to the Crown of Poland, taking place in all Aſſemblies at the Kings right hand. According to this agreement, Anno 1525. Albert, attired in the compleat Habit of Maſter of the Dutch Order, preſents himſelf humbly on his knees, before King Sigiſmund at Cracow, the King then ſitting on his Throne. The King raiſing him from the ground, cauſed him to put off thoſe robes, and attire himſelf in a Ducal Habit; which done, an inſtrument was read and publiſhed, whereby the King conferred upon him and the heirs of his body, the Dukedom of Pruſsia, to be held of him and his Succeſſors Kings of Poland. An act at which the whole Order were extremely incenſed; but they could not help it: and thereupon retired into Germanie, where there were ſome good lands left, to maintain ſuch of them as had no mind to quit that militarie honour: leaving their old Eſtates in Pruſsia to the King, and the Duke; whoſe ſucceſſors have hitherto enjoyed their part of it, with the Title of

DUKES of PRUSSIA.

1525 1 Albert of Brandenbourg, ſon of Frederick Marqueſſe of Onalsbach, or Ausbach, created Maſter of the Order by the Emperour Maximilian, Anno 1511. and the firſt Duke of Pruſsia, by Sigiſmund the firſt of Poland, Anno 1525. founded the Univerſity of Conings-berg, Anno 1544.

1568 2 Albert Frederick, ſon of Albert the firſt Duke, maried Mary Eleanor, daughter of William Duke of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c.

3 Anne, Eldeſt daughter of Duke Albert Frederick, Dutcheſſe of Pruſsia, brought the Eſtate in mariage to 4 John Sigiſmund, Marqueſſe and Elector of Brandenbourg, confirmed therein by Sigiſmund the 3d. of Poland, pretending an Eſcheat thereof for want of heirs males of the body of Albert the firſt Duke.

6 Frederick William, ſon of George William, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenbourg, Duke of Pruſsia, Cleve, Gulick, and Berg; of whole inveſtiture in the Dukedom of Pomeren, and other large and goodly Signeuries, we have ſpoke elſewhere.

As for the Government of this Province, ſtanding thus divided, that of the Duke is more Monarchical than that of King; the one being abſolute and uncontrollable in his Eſtates, the other ſubject to the great Council of Poland. If any difference grow between them, Delegates appointed by the King, but taking a new Oath to do equal justice, either at Mariemberg or Elbing, do compound the busines: who together with some other of the Dukes nomination, receive all Appeals, in which the Duke is interessed as one of the parties. Poland.

to

The Revenues of this Dukedom are thought to be 120000 Ducats yearly.

10 POLAND.

POLAND, properly and specially so called, is bounded on the East, with Massovia, Podlasia, and Lituania; on the West, with Silesia, and the Marquisate of Brandenbourg; on the North, with Prussia; and on the South, with the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary. It is in length 480 Italian miles, 300 of the same miles in breadth; and took this name (as afore is said) from the word Pole, signifying as much as plain; the Country being plain and level, little swelled with hils.

The Air hereof is pure and healthy, but sharp and cold; the Country plain, shaded with thick dark woods, parts of the Hercynian, full of wild beasts for hunting, and of Bees for honey, which they have here in great abundance: together with such plenty of grain, but of Rie especially, by reason of the continual breaking up of new grounds gained out of the Forests, that it may be called the Granary or Store-house of the Western parts of Europe; sent down the Wixel unto Dantzick, and thence transported by the Merchant into other Countries, according to their several wants.

The Character of the people we have had before; adding now only, that in matters of war they are stout and resolute: so forwards in giving the charge and pursute of the enemy, that John Vasilowich the Great Duke of Moscovie, comparing them with the Souldiers of his own Dominions, was wont to say, that the Moscovites wanted a spur to drive them forwards; and the Polanders had need of a bridle to hold them back: Their language is the Sclavonian tongue; most generally spoken also in the rest of the Provinces; but with some difference in the dialect or pronunciation.

It is divided commonly into two parts, the Greater and the Lesser Poland. The Greater lying wholly on the Western side of the Wixel, and so accounted antiently as a part of Germany, contains 9 divisions, under the jurisdiction of the 9 Palatines of 1. Posna, 2. Kalisch, 3. Siradia, 4. Lancitia, 5. Uladislaw, 6. Brestus, 7. Rava, 8. Ploczko, and 9 Dobrzin: each of them so called from some Town of note. The chief whereof, and of the rest contained in them, are 1 Posna, a Bishops See, and the principal of the Greater Poland, seated amongst hills on the River Warta; built of free-stone, with very large Suburbs beyond the River; but much subject unto inundations, which add much strength unto the place: of great resort by reason of the Marts or Fairs holden twice a year. 2. Koscien, situate amongst Marishes, and fortified with a double wall. 3. Ostresow, bordering on Silesia, begirt with woods. 4. Guesna, the antientest Town of Poland, founded by Lechus their first Prince, the seat of him and his successors, till removed to Cracow: situate in Kalisch, and by old prescription, the first place for the inauguration of the Kings of Pole; in regard that here Prince Boleslaus the King, received the Regal Diadem at the hands of Otho the third. The Town well-walled, and the See of the Archbishop; who is the Primate of the kingdom, by antient privilege the Popes Legat for all Sarmatia Europæa, and in the absence of the King or interregnums, the Vicar General of the kingdom, having power to summon the Diets, to conclude and publish their Decrees. 5. Petrocow, a walled Town, in the Palatinate or division of Siradia, situate on a moorish soil; the place in former times of the General Diets, since removed to Warsaw. 6. Uladislaw on the Wexel or Vistula, a Bishops See. 7. Bedgost, a walled Town on the Bard, a navigable River; conveying the Merchandise of these parts into the Vistula. 8. Kruswick, in Brestv, built of wood, standing on a great Lake named Gopla, in the Castle whereof Popiclus the second Duke of Poland, was after a strange manner devoured with Rats, swarming out of the Lake. 9. Ploczko, upon the Vistula, a walled Town, and a Bishops See, with a Castle to it. 10. Warsaw, upon the banks of the same River: of no great note in former times, but of late grown the best-frequented and most traded Town in all this Province: honoured for the most part with the Court of the King, the holding of all publique Diets (removed from Petrocow, to this place) and the Transaction of all businesses both of peace and war; which must needs draw to it great resort of all sorts of people; the fruitfullnesse of the soil, and commodiousnesse of the situation rendring it very capable of those publique meetings. 11. Mlawa, bordering on the Dukedom of Prussia.

The LESSER POLAND lying on the South of the Greater, and divided by the River Wixel, comprehendeth only three divisions, under the Government of the Palatines of Cracow, 2. Sendomir, and Lublin. Principal Cities of the which, are 1. Cracow, upon the Wixel, (called in Latine Cracovia) a Bishops See, the chief of all the Kingdom, the seat of the Prince, and the Sepulture of the former Kings. By Ptolemy called Carodunum; fortified with a double wall (of the old fashion) a deep ditch, the Castle of Vanel situate on the top of an high rock; and beautified with an University, or general study of good Arts and Sciences. The buildings are more fair than elsewhere in Poland, of free stone, and four stories high; but for the most part covered with Shingles, or tiles of wood: in the midst a large market-place, in form quadrangular; and in the middle of that the Common-Council house, about which are many shops of Merchants. On one side of it standeth the Cathedral Church; and on the East-side of the City, the Palace Royal, high seated on an hill overlooking both the Town and Countrey: fair and well built, of form somewhat near a Quadrangle, but lying open to the South without any buildings above the wall; affording thereby to the Gallery, being on the North side of the Castle, the more excellent prospect. 2 Lelow, a walled Town with a Castle, on the River Bialo. 3 Sendomir, a walled Town with a Castle also, seated on a hill, under which the Vistula or Wixel. 4. Wislicza, a walled town amongst Marishes, encompassed with the River Nid. 5 Lublin, a walled Town, but more strongly fortified by the marishes and waters, with which environed: remarkable for three yearly Marts, drawing hither Merchants from most parts adjoyning, as also Muscovites, Armenians, Turks, and Grecians: the Jews, inhabiting the greatest part of the suburbs, have here their Synagogue; making the Town, especially at time of those Marts, a medley of all Nations and Religions. 6 Casimir, on the Wixell, so named from the founder of it, a King of Poland.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, were the Arii, Helveronæ, Elysii, and the Naharvali, parts of the Suevi Lygii spoken of by Tacitus; all of them lying on the Dutch side of the Wixel, by consequence, within the bounds of the antient Germany: the people of all the rest of the Provinces before described, being of the Sarmatian race, next neighbours to the Germans, and not much unlike them in persons, customs, or conditions. But these dispersed and scattered Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, being united in the common name of Sclaves, part of them setled in that part which we now call Poland; at that time reckoned and accompted of as a part of Germany. The time of their first comming hither, and the manner of their government when first setled here, is not very well known. But for the first it is most certain, that it was some time, and that not long after the death of Mauritius the Eastern Emperour: and for the next it is as certain, that on the coming of Lechus, a Croatian, who fled his countrey for a murder, with his brother Zechius, they setled into a more constant form of Government, than before they did. For Lechus, seeing his brothers good successe in Bohemia, where the Sclaves received him for their Prince, passed into Poland, the next Province, and was as cheerfully received by the Sclaves thereof: who looked upon him as a Prince of their own extraction, and without quarrel or competition, submitted themselves to his commands, Anno 650. or thereabouts. Of this there is good constat amongst our Authors. But neither the names or number of his successors do occur in story, till the time of Crocus, the founder of Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and the Legislator of this people. After this, the succession of their Princes, and the successe of their affairs, becomes more certain: the Estate hereof being much improved, by the conquest of many Sarmatian countreys; all which together constitute and make up the kingdom of Poland; so called from this predominating and prevailing Province. The summ of their affairs is this. The posterity of Crocus failing in Popielus the second, Piastus is elected Duke, the Princes from that time forwards becoming Elective, but alwayes with respect to the next of bloud. In the time of Miecislaus, son of Nemomyslus, they received the Gospel, Anno 963. Boleslaus the son of Miecislaus, was the first who had the title of a King, conferred upon him by the Emperour Otho the third, about the year 1001. relinquished by Uladislaus the first, and not resumed again till the time of Primislaus, Duke of Posna, Anno 1300. after which perpetual. In the person of this Primislaus, Pomerella is united to the state of Poland, Anno 1295. In that of Jagello, or Uladislaus the fifth, the great Dukedom of Lituania; incorporated into this body as a Member of it, in the time of Sigismund Augustus. By Uladislaus the sixt, son of Jagello, Podolia and Russia Nigra, are also added; by Sigismund the first, Prussia and Massovia; Podlassia by Sigismund Augustus, who also took Volhinia out of Lituania: by Stephen, the actual possession of the greatest part of Livonia; by Sigismund the third, a title to the Crown of Sweden. The Princes follow in this Order.

DUKES and KINGS of POLAND.

A. Ch.

1178 24 Caſimir II. brother of the three laſt Princes.
1195 25 Leſcus V. ſon of Caſimir the ſecond, depoſed by Miecislaus the third.
1203 26 Uladislaus III. ſon of Miecislaus the third, depoſed by Leſcus the fift; who again ſeiſed on the Eſtate.
1243 27 Boleslaus V. ſurnamed Pudicus.
1280 28 Leſcus VI. ſurnamed Niger, the adopted ſon of Boleslaus, and his Couſin German once removed; after whoſe death, Anno 1289. the eſtate being diſtracted into many factions, was for ſome time without a Prince: ſetled at laſt on 1295 29 Primiſlaus, ſurnamed Poſthumus, Duke of Poſna, who again aſſumed the name of King; continued ever ſince by his ſucceſſors.
1296 30 Uladiſlaus, ſurnamed Loctticus, brother of Leſcus Niger, outed by Wenceſlans King of Bohemia, Anno 1300. after whoſe death, Anno 1306. he reſumed the eſtate.
1333 31 Caſimir III. ſurnamed the Great, ſon of Uladiſlaus the fourth, the firſt eſtabliſher of the kingdom, after all thoſe troubles dyed without iſſue.
1371 32 Lewis, king of Hungarie, ſon of Charls king of Hungary, by Elizabeth the ſiſter of Caſimir.
1383 33 Heduigis, the youngeſt daughter of Lewis, her elder ſiſter Mary ſucceeding in the Realm of Hungary, choſen Queen of Poland; maried to Jagello Duke of Lituania, Chriſtened and called Uladiſlaus the fift.
1386 34 Uladiſlaus V. Duke of Lituania, elected King upon his mariage with Queen Heduigis.
1435 35 Uladiſlaus VI. ſon of Jagello, or Uladiſlaus the fift, by Sophia daughter of the Duke of Kiovia. He was king of Hungarie alſo; ſlain at the battel of Varna by Amurath the ſecond, king of the Turks, without iſſue.
1447 36 Caſimir IV. brother of Uladiſlaus, firſt brought the knights of Pruſſia under his command; knight of the Order of the Garter.
1493 37 John Albert, the ſecond ſon of Caſimir; his elder brother Uladiſlaus being pretermitted, on his accepting of the Crowns of Hungarie, and Bohemia.
1502 38 Alexander, the third ſon of Caſimir.
1507 39 Sigiſmund, the fourth ſon of Caſimir, his elder brethren dying without iſſue; ſuppreſſed the Order of the Dutch Knights in Pruſſia, and added part thereof unto his eſtate.
1548 40 Sigiſmund II. ſurnamed Auguſtus, the laſt of the male iſſue of Jagello.
1574 41 Henry, Duke of Anjou, ſon of Henry the ſecond, French King, choſen on the death of Sigiſmund Auguſtus, the only Stranger to the bloud in all this Catalogue. On the death of his brother Charles the ninth, he departed ſecretly into France, where he ſucceeded by the name of Henry the third.
1579 42 Stephen Bathour, Vaivod of Tranſylvania, by the recommendation of Amurath the third, Emperour of the Turks, having firſt maryed Anne, ſiſter of Sigiſmund the ſecond, is elected King; he united Livonia to the Crown, and had a great hand upon the Moſcovite.
1587 43 Sigiſmund III. ſon of John king of Swethland, and of Catherine his wife, another of the ſiſters of Sigiſmund the ſecond, king of Poland and Sweden. He valiantly oppoſed Oſman the Great Turk, invading his Dominions, with an Army of 300000 fighting men.
1633 44 Uladiſlaus VII. eldeſt ſon of Sigiſmund the third; after whoſe death the kingdom was extremely embroyled by factions, eſpecially by the mutinous and ſeditious Coſaques; not fully ſetled by the election of 1648 45 Caſimir V. brother of Uladiſlaus the ſeventh, now king of Poland, Anno 1648.

The Government of this kingdom is nothing leſſe than Monarchical. For though the firſt Dukes hereof were abſolute Princes, and ruled after a Deſpotical manner; having power not only of the eſtates of their ſubjects, but of life and death, without formalities of Law: yet when they once became elective, they loſt much of that power; which decayed ſo by little and little, that at the laſt the King is counted little better than a Royal ſhadow; Stat magni nominis umbra, in the Poets language. A diminution which began firſt in the times of Lewis of Hungarie, and Jagello of Lituania: who to gain the ſucceſſion to the kingdom contrary to Law, the one for his daughter, the other for his ſon, departed with many of their Royalties and Prerogatives, to buy the voices of the Nobility. Since which time, the Nobility in all their elections have ſo limited and reſtrained the Kings authority, and enlarged their own, that without their conſent in Council, he may neither make warre, nor treat of peace, nor impoſe taxes, nor alienate any of his Demeans: nor do any thing of importance which concerns the Publick: in so much as Botterus a great Statesman doth expressely say, that the Government of Poland doth rather seem an Aristocracie than a Monarchie, a Commonwealth rather than a kingdom. Besides, the King not only takes a solemn Oath at his Coronation, to confirm all the rights and Privileges, which have been granted to the Subject by his Predecessours: but addes this clause, Quod si Sacramentum meum violavero, incolæ Regni nullam nobis obedientiam præstare tenebuntur, that if he violate this Oath, his Subjects shall not be obliged to yield him any obedience. Which as Bodinus well observeth, doth rather savour of the condition of a Prince of the Senate, than of the Majestie of a King; respected accordingly by the great ones: who look not on him as their King, but their elder Brother, (or perhaps not that) and reckon his Decrees but of three dayes lasting. Which notwithstanding, the King once chosen and inthroned, hath sole power in many things, without consulting with the Senate; as viz. in assembling Diets, choosing the secular Counsellers, disposing absolutely of his Vassals, and the Revenues of the Crown to what use he pleaseth; being sole Judge of the Nobility in Criminal causes, which is a strong bridle to reign them in with. By which, and either uniting himself unto the Clergy, or the well-forming of his party amongst the Nobility, he may doe many things not allowable in strictnesse of Law: the power and influence which he hath in the publick Government, being proportionable to the strength of his Wit and Brain.

And here it is to be observed, that none but the Clergy, and Nobility, have any suffrage in the election of the King: that is to say, the 26 Palatines, and 60 Chastellans, with the four Marshals, and some others of the principal Officers of State, in behalf of the Nobility; and the Archbishops and Bishops, in the name of the Clergy; but of the Commons none at all. Which is the reason, why there is so much care taken to preserve the privileges of the two first Orders; without obtaining any Immunities for relief of the third: most miserably oppressed on all sides, rather as Boudmen than Tenants in respect of their Lords, and not so much subjects, as plain Slaves, in regard of the King; whereof somewhat hath before been noted. Nor are the Common people excluded only out of these elections, but have no place nor vote in the Counsel of State, or in any of the General Diets: the first consisting onely of the Prelates, Palatines, Chastellans, and principal Officers, spoken of before, the nominating of which pertaineth to the King alone; the other aggregated of all persons of those several Orders, and the Delegates of each Province and principal City, sent thither for the rest of the Nobility, whom they represent. Yet notwithstanding this exclusion of the Commons from this Common-Council, they there conclude of all matters of publique interesse, not properly determinable by the great Council or Council of State: in which perhaps (especially in the case of taxes) the Commons may be more concerned than any other.

The Forces of this Kingdom or Common-wealth relate unto Land-service only. For though they have a large Sea-coast upon the Baltick; yet the Danes, Swedes, and Hanse-towns, having got the start of them, keep them from doing much at Sea. And for Land-forces, they consist of Horse especially, whereof they are able to raise eightscore thousand, (that is to say, 10000 out of Poland, and 60 or 70000 out of Lituania) of which one half at least are thought to be fit for action. And this seems probable enough, in regard of those great bodies of Horse, which Stephen and Sigismund the third, had against the Moscovite; whereof the one had 40000. and the other 30000. besides draught horses,) very well appointed. But for their Foot, they are not at so good a pass, their Infantery being for the most part Germans, or Hungarians, whom they hire for money; of which two Nations King Stephen, in his enterprise upon Livonia, had no lesse than 16000, to convey his Ordnance. Upon confidence of this great number of Horse, and their readinesse to serve upon all occasions, the Polanders bear themselves so high, that they neither fear the power of a forein Enemy, nor regard the fortifying of their Towns, or the building of Fortresses on their Frontires: boasting that they are able to defend their countrey, without such helps, against any Nation whatsoever; and trusting more to a Castle of bones, (as was couragiously said by Savage an English Gentleman) than to a Castle of stones. And for the raising of these Horse, the Gentlemen of the Countrey are bound by their tenure, (like the Turkes Timariots) not only to serve in person for defence of the Realm, but to maintain a certain number of Horse in continual readinesse: especially in those parts which lie next the Tartar, where their numbers are exceeding great; and with whom many times they joyn to afflict and harass their own countrey, though in pay against them. Of these, some serve in the manner of our men of Arms, some like unto our Light-horse, others like the Tartars. And these they call commonly by the name of Cosacques (or Adventurers:) a race of men trained up to steal, wast and depopulate, where-soever they come, having little but their swords to live by; a murderous and wicked people, chiefly in their drunkennesse, and that not only towards strangers, but their natural Countreymen. The cause of that sedition, which for some years past, hath more depopulated and distracted that flourishing kingdom, than all the Armies of the Turks.

As for the Revenues of this King, they are computed at 600000 Crowns per annum, drawn chiefly out of Salt, and some Mines of Silver: the profits arising from the Demeasns of the Crown, being for the most part, given away in pensions and gratuities, to the Palatines, Chastellans, and other great men of the Realm, to make them the more pliant to his desires. Most of which summ is put up yearly in his Coffers, or expended in the purchase of estates for his younger sons; his daughters being maryed at the publick charge, and the expences of his household defrayed by the Lituanians and most part of Poland, for the time that he remains amongst them. Nor do the wars at any time exhaust his Treasure, in which case by decree of the Diets, he is inabled to lay impositions and taxes upon the people, levied in the way of Excise, or upon their lands: which do amount to such a sum, that by means herehereof, King Stephen maintained war three years against the Moscovite, without expending any thing of his own Revenue.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this kingdom are,

1 The Marian or Dutch Knights, instituted under the wals of Acon, or Ptolemais, in the Holy land; in a Church whereof dedicated to the blessed Virgin, their Order was first allowed; from thence called Equites Mariani. The institution was in the year 1190. The first great Master, Henry Walpot. The Christians being beaten out of Syria, they first removed to Venice, and from thence to Marpurg in Hassia; where, and in some other parts of Germany, they were endowed with fair Revenues, from which named Equites Teutonici, or the Dutch Knights; sent into Prussia by the Emperor Frederick the second, Anno 1239. or called in, as some say, by the Muscovite against the Prussians; they fixed their seat at Maxiemberg, under Sigefride, the second Great Master, Anno 1340. or thereabouts. In the time of Ludovicus the 18th Great Master, they were forced to submit to Casimir the fourth of Poland, Anno 1450. the occasion of the long war betwixt them and the Polanders, continuing till the time Albert of Brandenbourg, the 24. and last Great Master in this Countrey; who surrendered his order (as before said) to Sigismund the first, by whom he was created the first Duke of Prussia. Such of the Knights as disrelished this action, retired into Germany, where they chose one Walter Croneberg master of the Order: the title afterwards conferred upon Maximilian, one of the younger sons of Maximilian the second; but the Order sensibly decaying, and at this time of little estimation in the world.

2 Of the Port-glaive, or Sword-bearers (Ensiferi in Latine) confirmed by Pope Innocent the third; by whom sent into Livonia to defend the Preachers of the Gospel against the Infidels, at the first conversion of that country. Being too weak to effect that businesse, they united themselves with the Dutch Knights by the Popes authority, and in stead of Knights of the sword, were called Knights of the Cross. Separated from it in the time of Ulnivus their Great Master, Anno 1541. the Dutch Knights being then dispossessed of Prussia, and these inclining wholly to the opinions of Luther, they a while subsisted of themselves: what became of them afterwards, and how the Order was extinguished, hath been shewen allready in Livonia.

The Arms of this kingdom are quarterly, 1 Gules, an Eagle Argent, crowned and Armed Or, for the Realm of Poland; and 2 Gules, a Chevalier armed Cap-a-pea, advancing his sword Argent, mounted on a barbed Courser of the second, for the Dukedom of Lituania.

There are in the whole Realm of Poland,

Of the Romish Church, Archbishops 3.	Bishops 19.
Of the Greek Church, Archbishops 2.	Bishops 6.

THE CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS.

IN our way from Poland unto Hungarie (whether now we goe) we muſt of neceſſity paſſe over the CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, the antient boundarie of Sarmatia Europæa, from the reſt of Europe. A long and craggie ledge of hils, which beginning near the City of Presburg, and the borders of Auſtria, paſſe on in a continual courſe till they come to the very Euxine Sea: and by that means not only divide Hungary from Poland, ſpecially ſo called; but parting Tranſylvania and Moldavia, two Dacian Regions, from Ruſſia Nigra and Podolia, Provinces of the Polonian Kingdom. By Ptolemie in his ſecond Book, they are called Montes Sarmatici (Sarmatica Rupes, by Solinus) becauſe diſterminating the Sarmatian Nations, (who poſſeſſed the moſt part of it) from Germanie, and the more Southern parts of Europe: and in his third book by one name Carpates, or Mons Carpatus, ſo called (as ſome think) from the Greek word Καρπὸς, ſignifying Fruit; from the fruitfullneſſe of it, compared with other Mountains in thoſe Northern Countries. At the preſent known by divers names, according to the Provinces and people which it paſſeth by. By the Dutch generally called Wurtzgarten, (or a Garden of Herbs) which alludeth to the name of Carpatus: by the Hungars, Tarchzal. Betwixt Moravia and Hungaria, where it is at the higheſt, it is called in the Sclavonian tongue, by the name of Tatri; in the German, Schneberg: where it parteth Tranſylvania from Ruſſia Nigra, the Roſſes call it Bieſcid; and the Dutch men, Crapack. A chain of hills, of more length than fame: not much obſervable in ſtory, but for the ſhutting up the Hungari, Sclaves, and others of thoſe Northern Nations, which afterward invaded the Roman Provinces: nor of much notice at the preſent, but for giving an Original to many of the principal Rivers, which water the Countries lying on both ſides of it. And therefore having nothing more to detain us here, we will paſſe them over, and deſcend unto the Plains of Hungary.

HUNGARIE is bounded on the East, with Transylvania, and Walachia; on the West, with Stiria, Austria, and Moravia; on the North, with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Poland; and on the South, with Sclavonia, and some part of Dacia. Extended in length from Presburg along the Danow, to the borders of Transylvania, for the space of 300 English miles; and 190 of the same miles in breadth. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

It lyeth in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the 7th and 9th Climates, so that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, is but 15 hours and a half, and not above 16 hours in the parts most North: taking up all that tract of ground on the North side of Danubius, possessed by the Jazyges Metanastæ, a Sarmatian people; and part also of Pannonia Superior, and Pannonia Inferior, both on the South of that River.

But being it passeth generally under the name of Pannonia, we are to know, that the Romans having made themselves Masters of all Pannonia, divided it into four Provinces, part of the Diocese of Illyricum Occidentale: that is to say, Pannonia Superior, bordering on Noricum, and containing part of the Higher Austria, and the most Western parts of the present Hungarie, on the South side of the Danow. 2 Pannonia Inferior, containing the Eastern parts of Hungarie, on the same side of the River. 3 Valeria, antiently part of Pannonia Superior, comprehending Stiria or Stiermark, in the Archdukedom of Austria. And 4 Savia, so called of the River Savus, antiently part of Pannonia Inferior, now called Windeschland, one of the Provinces or Subdivisions of Sclavonia. But the name of Pannonia falling with the Roman Empire, and this Country being fallen into the hands of other Masters; it took a new name from the Nations who possessed themselves of it; and was called Hungaria, quasi Hunni-Avaria, by a mixt name made of the Hunni and Avares, two Scythian Nations, who either successively or conjunctly were possessed thereof: or from the Hungari, another race of Scythians, mentioned by Jornandes in his Book De Rebus Geticis, drawn into this Country by the Emperour Arnulph to aid him in his war against Suantibogius, King of the Moravians. This last I look on as most probable; the first as more probable than that of Aventine and others of our later Writers: who finding a poor Province in the most North-east point of the Russian Empire called Jugra, (and by them Jugaria;) would have the name of Hungarie to be thence derived.

The people are strong of body, and rude of behaviour, respecting neither the liberal Arts, nor mechanick Trades. The greatest aspersion is the name of a coward, which cannot be wiped off without the killing of a Turk: after which they are privileged to wear a feather, and by the number of their feathers to shew how many Turks they have slain in battel. They desire wars, and like no trade better, being naturally slothful (like the Irish) and therefore best approve of that course of life, whereby they may rather live upon other mens labour, than take pains for their living. Extremely covetous; yet having rather desire than art to enrich themselves, permitting the Dutch to ingross all their trading, and manage such commodities as the Countrey yeeldeth: which is the cause (seconded by the oppressions of the Turk and the Austrian Princes under whom they are) that none of them rise to any considerable wealth. And for such as have estates in land they grow every day more poor than others. For though the Females be excluded from inheriting their fathers possessions (to whom they give no portion, but new Cloaths on the wedding day:) yet being the sons do equally inherit the Estate (as such who hold in Gavelkind do here in England) it must needs be that by so many divisions and subdivisions, the greatest patrimony that is, will be brought to nothing. Both Sexes in the way of their education are inured to hardness, not suffered to lie in beds till the night of their mariage.

The Christian faith was first planted here in the time of Stephen, surnamed the Saint, the first King of this Countrey; invited thereunto by the ſpecial means and procurement of the Emperour Henry the ſecond, giving him upon that condition his ſiſter Giſla in mariage: and through the preaching and induſtry of Albert Archbiſhop of Prague, Anno 1016. or thereabouts. Since which time Chriſtianity hath continued here without interruption, (defended gallantly and couragiouſly againſt the Turks) but broken into fractions and ſubdiviſions among themſelves: ſome pertinaciouſly adhering to the Church of Rome, ſome following the doctrine of Luther, others that of Calvin; and ſome, new fancies and opinions diſavowed by all the reſt: free exerciſe of Religion firſt granted by Maximilian the 2d. and re-obtained in the time of Rodolphus his ſon and ſucceſſor, by the Pacification at Vienna, Anno 1606. The violating of which Pacification by Ferdinand the II. in the beginning of his reign, occaſioned great wars and troubles betwixt him and this people, not quieted in a long time after: yet all theſe different parties do agree in this, to puniſh adultery and fornication with no leſs a puniſhment than death; the father forcing his daughter, the husband his wife, and the brother his ſiſters, to the place of their Execution.

The language generally here ſpoken, is a kind of Sclavonian, differing in dialect from the Poles: but in the parts adjoyning to Germanie, the Dutch is ſpoken; as the old Jazygian is betwixt Danubius and Tibiſcus, the antient ſeat of the Jazyges Metanaſtæ.

The ſoil is wonderfull fruitfull, yielding corn and fruits in great abundance; the graſs in ſome places (as in the Iſle of Comara) if it be ſuffered to grow to its full length, before the cutting of it down, being ſaid to exceed the height of a man: which doth breed ſuch a number of Cattel, that this Countrey alone, is thought to be able to feed all Europe with fleſh. They yearly ſend into Germany and Sclavonia, 80000 Oxen: they have Deer, Partridge, Pheaſant, in ſuch ſuperfluity, that any man that will may kill them; which in other places is utterly prohibited, theſe creatures being reſerved as game for Gentlemen. For at that great inſurrection of the Boors in Germanie (before the end of which, 50000 of them were ſlain in fight) their chief demands were, 1. That they might chuſe their own Miniſters; 2ly, That they might pay no tithes but of corn; 3ly, That they might be free from the power of Magiſtrates; 4ly, that wood, timber, and fewel might be common; 5. And eſpecially, That they might hunt and hauk in all times and places. The other commodities of the Countrey are Gold, Silver, whereof they have ſome very rich veins; as alſo of Tin, Lead, Iron; good ſtore of Fiſh, Copper, Wine; this laſt as good as that of Candie.

The worthieſt Scholar that ever this kingdom produced, was S. Hierome, a worthy Father of the Latine Church, born in Stridon. The moſt worthy of all their Souldiers, were Johannes Huniades, who ſo valiantly reſiſted the incurſions of the Turks, and ſlew of them 50000 at the battel at Maron. And 2ly, Matthias Corvinus, his ſon, afterward King of Hungary; of whom thus Adrian out of a Poet:

——— Patriæ decus, unica ſtirpis
Gloria, Pannonicæ cædis fortiſſimus ultor.

His Countries pride, the glory of his race,
Revenger of th' Hungarians late diſgrace.

The principal Rivers are, 1 Danubius, ſpoken of before, when we were in Germany. 2. Savus, which riſing in Carniola; 3. Dravus, which riſing in Carinthia; and 4. Tibiſcus, which riſing in the Carpathian Mountains, pay their tribute to Danubius: of which Tibiſcus the Hungarians uſe to ſay, that two parts are water, and the third fiſh. Beſides which, and ſome others of inferiour note, there is the famous Lake called Balaton (by the Dutch Platſe) 40 Italian miles in length, but of breadth unequal: in ſome places being ten miles broad, and in ſome but three. There be alſo many medicinal waters, and more hot Baths than any one Countrey hath in Europe: ſome waters alſo of a ſtrange Nature; whereof ſome falling on the ground is turned to ſtone; others (about the Town of Smolnice) which falling into Ditches make a kind of mud, out of which tried and melted they make very good Copper; and ſome again which flow in Winter, and freeze in Summer; and near unto Biſtrice or Menſol, a ſpring or fountain, out of which cometh a green water, whereof they make Solder for their Gold.

Principal Mountains of this Countrie are 1. Carpatus, the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains ſpoken of before. 2. Matzan, near the City Agria, covered with rich Vines. 3. Erdol, omnium ampliſſimus, the largeſt of the three, ſaith the Atlas minor. Which words if true, muſt needs be underſtood of the height of this Mountain, but neither of the length or breadth; in both which without queſtion it comes ſhort of Carpatus.

The Countrey is commonly divided into the Upper Hungarie, and the Lower: the Upper lying on the North of the River Danow, out of the bounds and territories of the Roman Empire; the Lower lying on the South of that River, and comprehending all Pannonia Inferior, and part of Superior, two Roman Provinces. The Upper again ſubdivided (before the coming in of the Turks) into 32 Counties or Juridical Reſorts, that is to ſay, 24 on the Weſt ſide of Tibiſcus (or the Tiſſe) and 8. on the Eaſt ſide of it: the Lower (at the ſame time) into 18 onely; Of which ten were betwixt the Danow and the River Dravus, and the other ſix betwixt the Dravus and the Savus. But this Diviſion and the Subdiviſions depending on it, being ſince the coming in of the Turks almoſt out of uſe; we will now look upon it as it ſtands divided at the preſent, betwixt the Emperor as King of Hungarie, by a mixt title of deſcent and election; and the Great Turk, as Lord of the moſt part of it, by Arms and conqueſt, two parts of three at leaſt being forced into his poſſeſſion. But here wee are to underſtand, that by reason of the great jealousies and distrusts betwix these great Princes, every ordinary Town is fortified and garrisoned like a Town of war, and so are almost all the houses of the Nobility and Gentry throughout this Countrey: so that it were an infinite labour to specifie in this place all those Towns and Fortresses, which do occur in reading the Hungarian Histories of these later times. Some of the principal for strength, antiquity, or other mark of estimation which is set upon them, we shall here subjoyn.

And first in the Emperours part of the Lower Hungarie, we have 1. Rab, on the meeting of the Danow with the River Rab, coming out of the Lower Hungarie, whence the modern Dutch name; by Antonine called Arabon, by the French, Javarine, by our present Latinists, Javo inum. Memorable heretofore for being the boundary of the two Pannoniaes, Inferiour and Superiour, hereabouts divided: of late most principally for a strong Fortress against the Turks, by whom once taken, Anno 1594. but within four years after again recovered, by the industry of Monsieur de Vaudre Court, a French Gentleman, as the Frenchmen say; but as the Germans write, of the Earl of Swartzenbourg, at that time Governor of Komora. 2 Altembourg, in the road leading towards Austria, a strong town, and the best Out-work of Vienna, for which cause much aimed at by the Turks, but without success. 3. Castle-Novo, a new-erected Fortress, as the name importeth, but of special strength, erected purposely in the time of the Emperor Rodolph, to confront the Turks. 4. Sabaria, antiently the Metropolis of Pannonia Superior; the birth-place of St. Martin Bishop of Tours; now of less accompt; by the Hungarians called Kimarorubath. Others conceive it to be that which the Dutch call Leibnits. 5. Stridon, the Sidron of Ptolemie, in the confines of Hungary and Dalmatia, by the common people called Strigman. A town of good repute, till destroyed by the Gothes; but after made of more esteem by the birth of St. Hierom, one of the four chief Fathers of the Latine Church; and for all parts of humane learning, nothing inferiour to the best of the Grecian Sages. 6. Sopran, (Sopronium in Latine) on the borders of Austria. 7. Komora, a strong piece in an Iland of the same name, made by the Circling of the Danow; oft-times attempted by the Turk, but in vain at all times. Then in the Upper Hungarie, we have 8. Presburg, on the edge of Austria also, but on the North side of the River, the Carnuntum of Antoninus; but by the modern Latines called Posonium: seated in a pleasant healthfull Countrey on the River Lyet, whose waters the Danow there receiveth; in the suburbs whereof, on the top of an high Mountain, standeth a goodly Castle, the ordinary residence of the Emperours, as Kings of Hungarie. For though it be a little City, and not very beautifull; yet, being safe by the neighbourhood of Austria, it hath been made the Metropolis of this kingdom, since the losse of Buda. Before the walls hereof dyed Count Dampierri, one of the chief Commanders of Ferdinand the second, in the wars of Hungarie and Bohemia. 9. Fileck, a place of great strength and consequence, taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his first attempts upon this kingdom, and lost by Amurath the 3d. the Turks in vain attempting the recovery of it. 10. Nitri, a Bishops See on the River Boch. 11. Vaceia, a Bishops See also on the River Danubius, once in possession of the Turks, but restored again unto the Christians at the making of the peace between the Emperour Rodolphus and Sultan Achmet. 12. Cassovia, a strong piece towards Transylvania. 13. Lippe, in the borders of that Country also, commanding the entrances thereof, and therfore much affected by the Princes or Vaivods of that Province; possessed by whom in the later times of the Emperor Rodolph, it was by them incorporated into Transylvania; but how long it continued so, I am not able to say. 14. Tokai, a place of great strength, and as great fidelity, the people and Garrison hereof holding out for the Emperor Rodolphus, Anno 1605. against some of his rebellious subjects, in the time of so extreme a Famine, that the souldiers did not only eat two boyes, but many times cast lots who should eat one another. 15. Eperia, a place of no lesse consequence, and exemplary loyalty. 16. Newsoll, or Newheusel, a strong Town, and as strongly fortified, not far from the spring head of the River Gran, which in the year 1621. proved fatal to that great Commander the Count of Bucquoy; who at the siege hereof (the Town being then in rebellion against Ferdinand the second, Emperor and King of Hungary) lost his life. For going privately to view some places of advantage for a general assault, he fell into an Ambush of Hungarians, who suddenly set upon him, discomfited his small party, killed first his horse under him, and at last himself, having in that skirmish received 16 wounds. Slain with him at the same time also, Torquato an Italian Prince, Count Verdugo a Spanish Earl, and one of the Gonzagues of the house of Mantua.

Places of most importance in the Turks possession, are 1. Buda, by the Dutch called Hoffen, supposed by some to be the Curta of Ptolemie; by others, the Abrincum of Antoninus: and to have took the name of Buda, either from Buda the brother of Attila, said to be the re-founder of it; or from the Budini, a Scythian people, mentioned in Herodotus. Unevenly seated amongst hills, on the Southern shore of the Danow, but in the most fruitfull part of all the Countrey; exceedingly well fortified, especially by a strong Castle, thought to be impregnable, and therefore very carefully guarded by the jealous Turk; adorned with many buildings both private and publick: and furnished with some medicinal Bathes, which owe much of their pomp and sumptuousnes to their new Masters the Turks; who took it from the Christians, August 20. 1591. Solyman the Magnificent then present at the taking of it. Before that time the Seat Royal of the Kings of Hungary, and the chief City of the Kingdom; as now the seat of the chief Bassa, or Lord Lieutenant for the Grand Signeur. 2. Alba Regalis, by the Dutch called Stul-Weisenburg, betwixt the Danow and the Drayus; strongly, but unwholesomly seated, in the midst of an inaccessible mariſh: joyned to the firm land by three broad Causeys, blocked up at the ends with three great Bulwarks; but for all the strong situation of it, taken by the Turks, Anno 1543. before that time the usual place both for the Coronation and interment of the Kings of Hungary, recovered from the Turks, Anno 1601. and lost again unto them in the next year after. 3. Walpo, or Val-

po, on the River Dravus, taken by Solyman marching towards Alba Regalis, to leave no enemies behind him at the siege of that City. 4. Gran, in Latine called Strigonium, seated up on the Danow, but opposite to the mouth of Gran, which arising in the upper Hungary doth there end its course, whence the name of Gran; honoured of a long time with the See of an Archbishop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, and of great power in all business which concerns the State, took by the Turks, Anno 1534; Solyman the Magnificent being in person at the siege, and lost An. 1595. at what time S. Tho. Arundel of Wardour Castle in Wiltshire, carried himself so gallantly, that forcing the Water-Tower, and taking thence with his own hands the Turkish Banner, that the Emperour Rodolphus created him a Count of the Empire; K. James afterwards made him Lord Arundel of the Wardour; but the Christians were not suffered to keep it long; for being many times after besieged by the Turks, who were resolved not to end the war without it, it was finally recovered by them, Anno 1605. 5. Fiefe-kirken, in Latine called Quinque Ecclesiæ, from 5 Churches in it, a Bishops See, conceived to be the Tentiburgium of Antoninus; took by the Turkes, Anno 1566. and giving them a great command on the River Dravus, upon which it is seated. 6. Sirmisch, betwixt the Danow and the Saw, or Savus, now noted for a vein of the best wines, but otherwise of no estimation at the present, though heretofore of most accompt in all this Province; the Metropolis (as I conceive) of Pannonia inferior; the seat of the Præfectus Prætorio Illyrici; before the division of the Empire, honoured with the personal residence of many of the Emperours, and made in those respects, the Stage of many great and memorable actions. For here Vetranio, or Bretanio as others call him, took on himself the Purple Robe, and was declared Emperour, by the Illyrian Souldiers, lying here in Garrison: here being deserted by his own Souldiers, he submitted himself unto Constantius, the son of Constantine the Great; here Gratian the Emperour, son of Valentinian the first, was born. And finally here was held a Council against Photinus, Bishop of this City, who held, that CHRIST had no existence of God the Father, till he was conceived and born of the Virgin, which Tenent being contrary as well to that of the Arian, as the Orthodox Prelates, was here condemned by both parties in the time of the said Constantius (who was there in person) Anno 356. 7. Zigoth, a strong Town, situate in a marish ground, on the North side of the Dra, taken by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1566. who there ended his days. 8. Mursa, upon the confluence of the Dra, and the Danow, once a Roman Colonie, and as remarkable in the stories of elder times; as 9. Belgrade, on the confluence of the Saw and the Danow, hath been in the later. This last a Town of divers names, first called Taururum, or Taurunum; after, Alba Græca; by the Dutch accordingly Greichs Wessenburg; by the French and modern Latinists, Belgrade, and Belgradum, from the beautifull situation of it, hemmed in upon the North, with the Danow, on the East, with the Saw; on the other sides defended with strong walls, deep ditches, and impregnable Ramparts. Belonging antiently to the Despots of Servia, by whom consigned over to Sigismund, King of Hungary, as best able to keep it; the Despots being satisfied with lands and territories of a better value. The Bulwark heretofore of Christendome against the Turkes, who received before it many great and notable repulses, (of which the most memorable were those of Amurath the second, and Mahomet surnamed the Great:) taken at last to the great losse and shame of the Christian world, not succouring the defendants in convenient time, by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1520. Then on the North side of the River, in the upper Hungary, there is 10 Pesth, over against Buda, on the River Danow. 11. Colocza, an Archbishops See, on the same River also. 12 Zegedin, on the West side of the River Tibiscus. 13. Agria, an old Bishops See, and strongly fortified, having a great command over all those parts of the Country; in vain besieged by Haly the Bassa of Buda, with an Army of 36000 Turks in the time of Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1552. But taken by Mahomet the 3d. himself lying at the siege in person, Anno 1578. not far from which, immediately after the taking of Agria, Mahomet gave the Christians so great an overthrow, that if he had pursued his victory, it is thought that he had finished the conquest of Hungary; as on the other side the Turks were so worsted, and disordered (Mahomet himself, and most of his Commanders flying out of the field) that had the Christians followed the chase, and not betook themselves to the spoil of the Camp, they had in probability for ever freed the kingdom from the Turkish Tyranny. This battel, from a Village near unto which it was fought, called the battel of *Kerestur*e, a battel of so strange a fortune, that the Conquerors were driven out of the field, and the vanquished Army ran away with the victory. 14. Hatroan, a very strong Town, and as strongly garrisoned, recovered by the Christians after two long sieges, and many sharp assaults, Anno 1558. and presently again abandoned, upon the noise of Mahomets comming into Hungary with a dreadfull Army. 15. Temeswar, on the East of that River towards Transilvania; the ordinary residence of a Turkish Bassa. 16. Gyula, a strong Town on the borders of Transilvania, betrayed by Nicholas Keresken Governour hereof, in the last year of Solyman, on a promise of some great reward. But Selimus the son of Solyman caused him to be put into a barrel stuck full of nails, with the points turned inwards; and so to be tumbled up and down, till he (most miserably) died: there being on the barrel this inscription written; viz, Here receive the reward of thy Avarice and treason; Gyula thou soldest for gold; if thou be not faithfull to Maximilian thy natural Lord, neither wilt thou be true to me. 17. Singidon, on the South of Gyula, betwixt which and Belgrade are the fields of Maron, memorable for the slaughter of 50000 Turks, slain here in battel, under the fortunate conduct of John Huniades.

The first Inhabitants of this Country on the North side of the Danow, and the West of the Tisse, or Tibiscus, where the Iazyges, Metanastæ; and on the East side of the Tisse, the Daci; known, but not conquered by the Romans: on the South of the Danow the Pannones (by some called the Peones) subdivided into the Azali, Latovici, Werciani, Jassii, Oseriates, and some others inhabiting the West

parts thereof, or Pannonia Superior, and the Ercuneales, Braci, Arcifci, and Scordisci, dwelling in the Eastern parts, or Pannonia Inferior. First conquered by the Romans, Anno V. C. 719. L. Cornificius, and Sext Pimpeius, being Consuls; but many times rebelling, and not fully subdued till 40 years after the insurrection of Bato, being then crushed by Augustus Cæsar, and thereby the whole Province setled in obedience. Divided first into two parts or Provinces, Superior and Inferior; out of which Savia and Valeria were after taken, as before is noted. Under the Romans it continued, till subdued by the Huns, a people not heard of in the time of the Roman greatnesse, unlesse we take them, as some doe, for the Chuni of Ptolemie. But being those Chuni are placed by him betwixt the Bastarnæ, and the Roxolani, on the South-west of Borysthenes, I see not how to fit that dwelling unto the Huns, who were shut up within the Fenns of Palus Mæotis; and by all the Writers of those times accompted for a Nation not so much as heard of, when they first set footing into Europe. Letting that therefore passe as an improbable and ill-grounded conjecture, certain it is, that from the Fenn-Countries of Asia, on the other side of the Tanais, they came first into Europe: living in their own Country a poor and miserable life, till God thought fit to make use of them as a scourge, to chastise the Christians of the West, then grown luxurious, and almost incorrigible by too much felicity; and to that end miraculously opened them a passage, never found before. For having neither mind nor meaning to invade the Roman Empire, which possibly they had not heard of; not knowing how to clear themselves of that uncomfortable Country, in which they dwelt; it pleased the great disposer of all things, by following an Hart or Stag which they had in chase, to shew them a safe passage into Europe, through the Fenns of Mœotis; which before they thought to be unpassable. The report made by those Hunters at their coming back, of the rich and pleasant Land which they had so fortunately discovered; invited the chief heads of their Clans, with all the several Rascalities depending on them, to flock into Europe: into which they fell so suddenly and unexpectedly, that they forced the Goths, then dwelling on the North side of the Ister, to fly over that River, and supplicate to the Emperour Valens for new habitations. This hapned in the year 373. Athanaricus the second, or Ermanaricus (as Jornandes calls him) being then King of the Goths, and Balamir, Captain of the Huns. Fleshed with this victory, Balamir or Balhember, (as Sigebert calls him) takes the name of King, Anno 386. or thereabout: and following the course of the Ister towards this Pannonia, which he had an aim at; found a great Army raised on the other side of the River, of purpose to encounter with him: commanded by Detricus General for the Roman Empire, and Macrinus (or Matrinus) commander in chief of the Pannonians. Both Generals presuming too much on the depth and wideness of the River, and knowing well that the Huns had neither boat nor ship to passe them over; betook themselves unto their rest, with too much security. But the Huns, to the number of 100000, having crossed the River upon bladders, fell on the quarters of the Romans, whom they slew like sheep. Macrinus after this fought two battels with them, in the first whereof he was victorious, there being lost on both sides about 30000 men: but in the second being slain, and his Army routed, the Huns possessed themselves of both Pannonias; buying this victory with the losse of 40000 men, in the year 401. Balamir being dead, Bleda and Attila his sons succeeded, Anno 436. and Bleda dying also in the year 450. left Attila sole King of the Huns, that great scourge of the Christian world; who having first wasted Illyricum and Thrace, compelled the Emperour Theodosius the second, to buy his peace of him at the price of 6000 pound weight of gold, and an yearly tribute. Invited afterwards by Gensericus King of the Vandals in Africk, to war upon the Goths of Spain, (out of which Country they had driven him) he forced his way through all the Nations betwixt him and Gaul; and beating down all the Towns and Fortresses on the River Rhene, on that side of the Roman Empire, entered that Province in the reign of the 3d. Valentian: divided at that time betwixt the Romans, French, Burgundians, and the Goths of Spain. Discomfited by Aetius, and the kings of those Nations then in league against him, in that famous battel near Tholouse spoken of before, (with the loss of 180000 of his men,) he went back by the way of Italy, where he sacked Aquileia, Millain, Vincentia, Pavie; and not without much difficulty was diverted from the spoil of Rome, by the intercession of Pope Leo: committing in all places such unspeakable cruelties, that he was always after called (as he styled himself) Malleus orbis, & Flagellum Dei. Returning home he picked a quarrel with Marcianus the Eastern Emperour, as if the tribute promised him by Theodosius, had not been well paid. But being pacified for the present, and mindfull of his former project upon the Goths; he resolved once again to try his fortune with that people; and was again defeated by them under the conduct of Thorismund, the third King of the Visigoths, or Goths of Spain, and so returned ingloriously to his Country. Choaked after with his own bloud, violently breaking out at his nose-thirls, on his wedding night; he left Pannonia to his sons named Hernac, Aladurius, and Chaba: who disagreeing amongst themselves about the Kingdom, gave an advantage to the Goths, then possessed of Dacia, to make themselves masters of this also; scarce thorough warm in their new estates, when sent by Zeno the Emperour into Italy against Odoacer, where they finally setled. After this time we hear no more of the Goths in Pannonia, or any where of the Huns at all; unless acting under the Avares, or joining with them in the name of Hun-Avaria, as some think they did.

The Country being thus left to the next Invader, was presently possessed by the Longobards, said to be originally of Scandia, and there called Winnili, (and of the Winniloth in Scandia, Jornandes speaketh) afterwards ob longas barbas Longobardi. But concerning this last name, take along with you this old wives tale, recited, but not approved of by Paulus Diaconus. The Vandals warring upon the Winnili, went unto Goddan (he should rather have said Woden) to sue for the victory: which the Winnili hearing, wrought by countermine, and sent Gambata the mother of their King Aiou, on the like business to Frea Goddans wife. So it was, that Goddan had promised the Vandals, that they should be victorious, whom he saw first in the morning: whereupon Frea willing to please Gambara, and not loving, as it seemeth, the sight of men, gave order, that all the women of the Winnili, parting their hair, bringing one half over one cheek, the other over the other, and tying both under their chin, should appear betimes before the window the next morning. This they did, and she shewing them to her husband, he demanded of her, Qui sunt isti Longobardi? Hence the occasion of the name. And like enough they might be called so from the length of their beards; though otherwise the whole tale be vain and foolish. Compelled by scarcity of victuals to seek new habitations, they seised first on the Iland Rugia, and the adjacent Countries; setled about the time of Cornelius Tacitus in those parts of Germany, which now make up the Bishopricks of Meydburg, and Halberstat. Afterwards finding that Country too narrow for them, they left their dwellings there, and fell next upon some parts of Poland; next on this Pannonia: and at last having tarried in Pannonia 42 years, or thereabouts, at the solicitation of Narses (provoked by many indignities from the Empress Sophia, the wife of Justinus the second) Anno 568. under the leading of their King Alboinus, they went into Italy, and there fixt their kingdom: at the end of 206 years overthrown by the power of Charls the Great, the most mighty Monarch of the West. Of their Kings before their coming into this country, I shall only make mention of Lamissus, their third King, and of him this story. Agilmund the second King of the Lombards, one morning went a hunting. As he was riding by a fish-pond, he spied seven children sprawling for life, which one, as saith Paulus Diaconus, (it may be many harlots) had been delivered of, and most barbarously thrown into the water. The King amazed at this spectacle, put his Bore-spear or hunting-pole among them. One of the children hand fasted the spear, and the King softly drawing back his hand, wasted the child to the shore. This boy he named Lamissus, from Lama, which in their language signifieth a fish pond. He was in the Kings Court carefully brought up; where there appeared in him such tokens of vertue and courage, that after the death of Agilmond, he was by the Lombards chosen to succeed him. This Lamissus, together with his predecessors, and successors, we find thus recorded.

The LONGOBARDIAN KINGS.

solicitation of Narses went into Italy, and erected there the Longobardian Kingdom; which 206 years after was destroyed by the puissance of Charls the Great.

The History of this people epitomized by Du Bartas, thus:

The Lombard strong who was in Scowland nurst,
On Rugeland and Livonia seised first.
Then having well reveng'd on the Bulgarian
The death of Agilmond; the bold Barbarian
Surprized Poland: thence anon he presses
In Danows streams to rinse his amber tresses.
When he straight after had surrendered
The double-named Isters flowry bed,
To scarre-fac'd Hunnes: he hunteth furiously
The rest of Galls from wealthy Insubrie.
There reigns 200 years, triumphing so,
That Royal Tesin might compare with Po.
Which after fell in Frenchmens hands again,
Won by the sword of worthy Charlemain.

The Longobards having thus left the Stage, the Avares entred. Some say the Avarini of Ptolemie, a Sarmatian people; but most probably, (as Nicetas) a people of Scythia, inhabiting about Palus Maeotis. They first began to stir in the reign of Tiberius the 2d. (driven by the Turks, their next neighbours, to passe further Westward) and gave that Emperours forces a great overthrow at the mouth of Danubius. Tiberius notwithstanding did somewhat quiet them; but he being dead, they took heart again, and with great courage warred upon Mauritius, his next successor. Their King at that time called Caganus, we may English it Chan; as not being the proper name of any one, but the common Attribute of all their Chiefs. This Caganus made his first wars upon the Turks, which people were about that time first made known to the Inhabitants of Europe; and with the help of the remainder of the Huns, invaded and possessed Pannonia; vanquishing both the Emperours Forces, and the Goths, and Gepidæ, who had still kept some footing in it, and on the departure of the Lombards, were of no small power; the name of Goths being swallowed up in that of the Gepidæ, though not quite extinct. After this blow, Mauritius raised a second war, but more with an intent to revenge himself on his own Souldiers, which had formerly offended him; than with hope of prevailing against the enemy. Comentiolus, according to the Emperours directions, betrayeth his Army, 12000 of them were slain, and the rest taken. Caganus an heroick and merciful Conquerour, offers to ransom them for 8 s. 6 d. a piece, (for so much was that nummus, or νόμισμα, which he demanded for them.) When the Emperour as much loving his gold as hating his souldiers, had denied that condition: he offered them all for one nummus, and after for half a one: but being also here unsatisfied, he put them all to the sword. For this cause, the rest of the Souldiers not long after made Phocas, one of the Centurions, Emperour; and he most barbarously stewed the Emperour in his own broath, putting him, his wife, friends, and children to the sword. After this we find mention of them in the time of Phocas and Heraclius, forraging Thrace to the very walls of Constantinople; afterwards setled in Pannonia, and part of Noricum, containing now the Upper Hungary, and some part of Austria; divided from the Boiarians by the River Ems. Possessed hereof till the time of Charles the Great, by whom after a war of eight years, they are utterly subdued, and driven out of these parts; their Country being peopled with new Dutch Colonies; the remainders of them forced to betake themselves into Transylvania, or that part of Hungaria which lyeth beyond the river Tibiscus, where subject for a time to Suantobogius King of the Moravians; in whose overthrow by the Hungarians, they were so broken, that their name was never after heard of.

And so we come to the Hungarians, the last and principal Actors on the Stage of this Kingdom, the givers of the present name: before whose coming into this Country, it had no other name than that of Pannonia, for ought I can find, in any Authors of those times. A Scythian people, as the Huns, and Avares were; by Jornandes called the Hunugari; first known in Europe by their acts in the time of the Emperour Arnulphus; when wandring in Sarmatia Europæa without any certain abode, they were by him called into this Country, against Suantabogius King of the Moravians before mentioned; from whom they took Transylvania, and so much of the modern Hungarie, as lyeth on both sides of Tibiscus; inhabited at that time, by the Sclaves, and some scattered remnants of the Avares, whom they killed up, or forced to seek new habitations, planting themselves in those places which they took from them; now the Upper Hungarie. In the right of Lewis the 4th. successor to Arnulphus, they passed over the Danow, and subdued Pannonia; dismembring it from the Empire and name of Germany: after that ranging with unmercifull cruelty over all Germany, Italie, Greece, Sclavonia, Dacia, till broken by the forces of the Dutch Emperours, and mollified by the softness of the Christian Religion, they became more quiet. Their Government at the first was under Dukes: Stephen the 4th. Duke, on his receiving of the Gospel, being honoured with the Title of King: enjoyed by his successors to this very day. In the time of Ladislaus, surnamed the Saint, Dalmatia and Croatia were added to the Crown of Hungary, bequeathed to him by his Sister Zelomira, the widow of the last King. In that of Bela the 4th. the Tartarians to the number of 500000 fighting men, brake into this Country, and like a violent whirlwind carried all before them, Anno 1248. tyrannizing here for 3 years space committing mercilesse massacres, and making horrible spoils whereloever they came. In that of Stephen the 4th. Mysia, and Bulgaria were made tributary. By the daughters of Bela and Stephen, both the 4th. of those names, the houses of Naples, and Bohemia, came to claim the Kingdom of Hungarie; as Lewis the first by Elizabeth his mother, sister of Casimir the 2d. did the kingdom of Poland. The rest of their affairs shall be briefly touched at in the following Catalogue of

The DUKES and KINGS of HUNGARIE.

A. Ch.

1 Cusala, the first Duke (or Captain) of the Hungary, subdued Transylvania, and the Upper Hungary, and passed over the Danow; slain in his wars against the Dutch, then possessed of Pannonia.
2 Toxus, subdued Pannonia, or the Lower Hungarie.
3 Geisa, son of Toxus.
1000 4 Stephen, the fourth Duke, and first King of Hungarie.
1039 5 Peter, surnamed the Alman, nephew of Stephen; deposed by Andrew and Bela, sons of Ladislaus, son of Geisa the first, and brother of Stephen the first King.
1047 6 Andrew, eldest son of that Ladislaus.
1059 7 Bela, the brother of Andrew.
1062 8 Solomon, the son of Andrew, expelled his kingdom by 1075 9 Geisa II. son of Bela.
1078 10 Ladislaus, surnamed the Saint, brother of Geisa the 2d.
1096 11 Coloman, son of Geisa the 2d.
1114 12 Stephen II. son of Coloman.
1132 13 Bela II. nephew of Geisa the 2d. by his son Almus.
1142 14 Geisa III. son of Bela the 2d.
1162 15 Stephen III. son of Geisa the 3d.
1172 16 Bela III. brother of Stephen the 3d.

1191 17 Emaricus, ſon of Bela the 3d.
1201 18 Ladiſlaus II. ſon of Emaricus, reigned but 6 months, being ſlain by treaſon, very young, and without iſſue.
1201 19 Andrew II. ſon of Bela the 3d. and brother of Emaricus.
1236 20 Bela IV. ſon of Andrew the 2d.
1271 21 Stephen IV. ſon of Bela the 4th.
1273 22 Ladiſlaus III. ſon of Stephen the 4th.
1290 23 Andrew III. nephew to Bela the 4th. by his brother Stephen.
1302 24 Charles, ſurnamed Martel, ſon of Charles King of Naples, by Marie, daughter to Stephen the 4th. againſt whom was choſen Wenceſlaus, King of Bohemia, ſon of Wenceſlaus the 2d. and of Anne his wife, daughter of Bela the 4th. and after three years Otho of Bavaria, deſcended from Elizabeth, another of the daughters of Bela the 4th. choſen alſo by a faction againſt Wenceſlaus. But Wenceſlaus ſurrendring his claim to Otho, and Otho not long after forced to renounce his title; Charles Martel remained King of the whole 1343 25 Ludovicus, nephew to Charles Martel by his ſon Carlobert, ſucceeded King of Poland alſo, in right of Elizabeth his mother, ſiſter of Caſimir the 2d.
1383 26 Charles II. King of Naples, deſcended from Charles of Naples, and Marie, daughter of Stephen the 4th. before mentioned, by their ſon John of Durazzo, one of the younger brothers of Charles Martel; poiſoned after a ſhort reign by the widow of the former King, to make a way for her daughter to the Crown.
1387 27 Sigiſmund, Emperour, King of Bohemia, and Duke of Luxembourg, ſucceeded in right of Marie his wife, eldeſt daughter of Lewis or Lodovicus; her younger ſiſter Edwigis being Queen of Poland.
1438 28 Albert of Auſtria, Emperour, and King of Hungarie, and Bohemia, in right of Elizabeth his wife, the daughter of Sigismund.
1440 29 Ladiſlaus, or Uladiſlaus, ſon of Jagello King of Poland, in the minority of Ladiſlaus the ſon of Albert, choſen King of Hungarie; unfortunately ſlain at the battel of Varna, with 30000 of his people: and perhaps his perjury might deſerve it. For having made and ſworn a Truce with the Turke; the Popes Legate upon a ſeeming advantage, abſolved him of his Oath, and drew him into the field. At the beginning the Chriſtians had the better; But at the laſt Amurath the 2d, againſt whom they fought, lifting up his eyes to heaven, and deſiring Chriſt to look upon the perfidious dealing wherewith his followers had diſhonored him; re-encouraged his men, and ſo got the victory.
1444 30 Ladiſlaus V. King of Bohemia, the ſon of Albert, by Elizabeth, daughter of Sigiſmund, and Mary.
1458 31 Matthias Corvinus, ſon of the famous Huniades, after the death of Ladiſlaus the 5th. King of Hungarie.
1491 33 Uladiſlaus II. or Ladiſlaus VI. ſon of Caſimir the 4. of Poland, and of Elizabeth the daughter of Albert, ſucceeded in the Kingdoms of Hungarie, and Bohemia; his three younger brothers ſucceſſively in that of Poland.
1517 33 Ludovicus II. King of Hungarie, and Bohemia, both born and dead before the ordinary courſe of nature: in the 21 year of his age, and the 10th. of his reign, unfortunately drawn into the field, to encounter Solyman the Magnificent, one of the hardieſt Captains in his time. the battel was fought at a Village called Mogachz, or Mugace, juſt betwixt Belgrade and Buda: in which 19000 of the Hungarians were ſlain, and the young King drowned in the flight. A moſt lamentable diſcomfiture. Lewis thus dead, John Sepuſio, Vaivod, or Governour of Tranſylvania, was by the States choſen King of Hungarie. But Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria, and brother unto Charles the 5th, challenged the kingdom in right of Anne his wife, daughter to Uladiſlaus, an diſter to Lewis, King of Hungary and Bohemia. On this pretence he invaded the kingdom, and drove out John his competitour, who to recover his right, called Solyman the Magnificent into the Country, who took ſo faſt footing in it, that his Succeſſors could never ſince be removed.
1527 34 John Sepuſio, Vaivod of Tranſylvania choſen King upon the death of Ludovicus the 2. outed by Ferdinand of Auſtria, reſtored by Solyman the great Turk, died An. 1540. after whoſe death the Hungarians cauſed his ſon Stephen an Infant, to be crowned King in his Cradel, of wch immediatly deprived by Solyman his pretended Patron, who under colour of preſerving that kingdom for him, ſeiſed Buda and other the chief Towns thereof, which he after kept unto himſelf.
1540 35 Ferdinand of Auſtria, elected King of Bohemia, in reſpect to the Lady Anne his wife, ſiſter of Ludovicus the 2. Anno 1527. did in the ſame right lay claim to the Crown of Hungarie, choſen to which by a party prepared for him; he was always in contention with John de Sepuſio; each of them acknowledged King by their ſeveral factions; but by both ſides received on the death of John.
1562 36 Maximilian, Emperour, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, Archduke of Auſtria, ſon of Ferdinand.
1572 37 Rodolphus, Emperour, &c. ſon of Maximilian.
1608 38 Matthias, brother of Rodolphus, afterwards Emperour.

1618 39 Fer-

1618 39 Ferdinand II. of Gratz, next heir unto Matthias of the houſe of Auſtria, afterwards Emperour, &c. againſt whom a party of Hungarians called in Bethlem Gabor, Prince of Tranſylvania, whom they elected for their King, intending (as they ſaid) to crown him alſo. But the affairs of Bohemia going on the Emperours ſide, Gabor relinquiſhed his pretenſions, and hearkned to a peace betwixt them.

1625 40 Ferdinand III. ſon of Ferdinand the 2d. choſen and crowned king in the life of his Father, and in the year 1627. King of Bohemia alſo, ſucceeding after him in the Empire, and now living Anno 1648.

This Kingdom doth pretend it ſelf to be Elective, and to have ſpecial Privileges indulged them by their former Princes; and antiently indeed it was ſo in both reſpects, the laſt eſpecially: King Andrew giving authority to his Prelates, Peers, and other people, Ut ſine nota alicujus infidelitatis, &c. that without any imputation of diſloyalty, they might contradict, oppoſe and reſiſt their King, if he did any thing in violation of their Laws and Sanctions. But both their liberty of Elections, and pretence of Privileges, had been ſo ſhaken and reſtrained by their Kings of the houſe of Auſtria, that the Elections are become a matter of formality only, their Privileges depending wholly on their Princes pleaſure: now grown too potent for them to contend withall, unleſſe they ſhould betray their Country into the hands of the Turk. To which ſome of them have expreſſed ſome ſtrong inclinations; the oppreſſions laid upon them by the Auſtrian family being deemed unſufferable.

The forces of this kingdom when it was entire, may beſt be ſeen by thoſe great Armies which they have brought into the field againſt the Turk. By whom 2 parts of three being ſince ſubdued, that which remains muſt not be thought able to anſwer the proportion of former times; though they have done more than could be reaſonably expected from it. For at the battel of Kereſture, Anno 1596. there were 6000 Hungarian horſe, and 10000 foot of this Nation only; beſides thoſe of Germany and Tranſylvania: and the next year, notwithſtanding the diſcomfiture of that Army, they raiſed no leſſe than 20000 horſe and foot, on the noiſe of ſome preparations among the Turks. 'Tis true, their foot are commonly but meanly armed; the defect wherein is rather to be imputed to the Prince, than unto the people: who can but bring their bodies (which is all they have) for defence of their Country. And for their Horſe (whom they call Heiducks) maintained in continual readineſs, at the charge of the Nobility and principal Gentry, they are next Couſins to the Coſacques, almoſt as miſchievous as they, and hold as ſtrict intelligence with the Turks, as thoſe doe with the Tartars.

The chief Revennes of this Kingdom come from the ſilver mines, out of which is yearly raiſed about a million and a half of Guldens. Maximilian the 2d. made it up two millions, by ſeizing on the lands of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches; and aſſigning annual penſions to the Biſhops, Canons, and other Religious perſons. Moſt of which ſum comes clearly to the Emperours Cofers, the Preſidiary Souldiers being paid with Contribution money, raiſed upon the Country; and the Lieutenant General, whoſe entertainment comes to 30000 Dollars yearly, defrayed upon their purſes alſo.

The chief Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom, was that of the Dragon, inſtituted by Sigiſmund Emperour and King hereof; at ſuch time as by the Council of Conſtance, againſt John Hus, and Hierom of Prague, and by the ſharpneſſe of his ſword proved upon their followers; he had caſt down (as he conceived) the Dragon of Hereſie and Schiſm. But the device proved of no long continuance, expiring almoſt with the Author.

The Arms of Attila the Hun, once the King of this Country by the name of Pannonia, are ſaid to have been Gules, a Falcon diſplayed Or, membred and crowned Argent. But the Arms of the Kingdon at this time, are Barre-wiſe of 8 peeces, Gules and Argent.

There are in HUNGARIE.

And ſo much for HUNGARIE.

SCLAVONIA.

SCLAVONIA is bounded on the East, with Servia, Macedonia, and Epirus; from which parted by the River Drinus, and a line drawn from thence unto the Adriatick: on the West, with Carniola in Germany, and Histria in the Signeury of Venice; from which last divided by the River Arsia; on the North, with Hungary; on the South, with the Adriatick Sea. So called from the Sclaves or Sclavi a Sarmatian people; of whom more anon.

It contains in length from Arsia, to the River Drinus, according to Plinies computation, 800 Italian miles; the greatest breadth being 325 of the same miles. But others reckon the length of it at no more than 480 miles; who may be reconciled with Plinie, by supposing this, that these last measure in a strait and direct line from River to River; and that Pliny coasted by the Creeks and reaches of the Adriatick. Situate in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and seventh Climates; so that the longest day in Summer is about 15 hours and an half.

The Country is generally fruitfull of all those commodities, which are found in Italy, to which little inferiour; yielding not only wine, and oyl, in very good plenty, but good store of Cattel, and of wild beasts of pleasure no want at all; some rich veins also of gold and silver. The Northern parts are mountainous, cold, for the most part lying under snows; not capable of wine, or any the like productions which require much heat. But even these mountainous parts afford very good pasturage, and breed a wealthy race of sheep, which bring forth young twice a year, and are shorn four times. Nor doth the Sea Coasts come behind in advancing the profit of the people, not only yielding store of fish, but the benefit of many excellent and convenient Havens.

The people are couragious, proud, stubborn and untractable, of strong bodies, and able constitutions, fit for works of drudgery; and so imployed by the Venetians, when first brought under their command: who using them in all servile offices both at home and abroad, occasioned the neighbouring Nations to call their Villains or Bond-servants, as they of Venice did, by the name of Sclaves; that being originally as to this people, the name, not of their condition, but of their Ancestors and Country.

The Christian faith was first here planted, I mean in reference to this people, who do now inhabit it, about the time of Charls the Bald, Emperor of the West, Anno 877. Sucropilus being the first of their Kings, who embraced the Gospell. But lying in the mid-way of Greece and Italy, the Religion of the Church of Rome, and that of the Greek Church, are both allowed of: that of the Greeks being as prevalent in the East parts hereof, as that of Rome is in the Western. But here it is to be observed, that though this people, according to their division into East and VVest, follow the Rites and Ceremonies of those severall Churches; yet on both sides, it is indulged them to celebrate Divine Offices in their natural Language, contrary to the usage of the Church of Rome in all places else. And yet the People are not all of the Christian faith, the Turkish and Mahometan, prevailing in those Towns, and Territories, under their obedience.

But though they be not of one religion, they are all of one Language; which is the old Sarmatian (or Sclavonian) Tongue, generally spoken in the Empire of Russia, Livonia, Poland, Silesia, Bohemia, Moravia, some part of Hungary, Histria, Sclavonia, where we now are, Dacia, Epirus, Georgia, Mengrelia, (both in Asia) and by all the Captains, Officers, and other souldiers of the Turkish Empire: the Language generally spreading over all those Countries, which either were Sarmatian in their first originall, or made theirs by conquest under the united name of Slaves; or otherwise intermixt with them by the necessity of commerce and trade, or dispatch of their common businesses. Insomuch as taking in the subdivisions of the Princes and Countries before specified; it is affirmed by Gesner a right learned man, that there there are no fewer than 60 Nations, which have the Sclavonian Tongue for their Vulgar Language. Windiſch-land.

Chief Mountains in this Country are thoſe called Scardonici (from Scardona, one of the beſt Towns of Illyris) dividing Dalmatia in the midſt, and extending along the Coaſts thereof; by Ptolemy called Ardium. Of Rivers thoſe of ſpecial note amongſt the Antients, were 1. Titius, now Varicchia, ſeparating Illyris from Dalmatia. 2. Arſia, now Arſa, the utmoſt bound upon the Weſt; as 3. Drinus is upon the Eaſt: of which the firſt falleth into the Bay of the Adriatick, which is called Golfo di Quevero, (Sinus Flanaticus by the Antients;) the other into the Saw or Savus, ſomewhat weſt of Belgrade. 4. Narſo, now Narento, running not far from Epidaurus.

The Boundaries and Landmarks being thus ſet out, I ſhould proceed to the diviſion of the Country as now it ſtandeth. But I muſt firſt look on it as it ſtood in the time of the Romans: in whoſe time that part of the whole Province which lay from the River Arſia to the Titius, was named Liburnia, and Illyris; that from the Titius to the Drinus, was called Dalmatia. But the Illyrians being the ſtouter and more warlike people, and ſuch as created greateſt troubles to the Romans, it pleaſed the Conquerors when they had fully ſubdued both Nations, to call the whole Country by the name of Illyricum: and not ſo only, but to extend this name over all their Provinces (the Dioceſe of Thrace excepted) which lay between the Alps and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Danow; for ſo far the Juriſdiction of the Præfectus Prætorio of Illyricum, did at firſt extend. Huic Præfecto (ſaith Zoſimus) Conſtantinus ejus inſtitutor, Macedones attribuit, Theſſalos, Cretenſes, Græciam, & circumjacentes inſulas, Epirum utranque, Illyricos, Dacos, Triballos, & Pannonios, Valeriam ſquè & Myſiam ſuperiorem. And that all theſe did then paſs by the name of Illyricum, appeareth as well by that of Pollio in the life of Claudius the ſecond, expreſly ſaying Illyricum, Thracas, Myſos, Dacos, Dalmatias & Pannonias continebat; as by that of Socrates the Hiſtorian, who lib. 32. cap. 10. calleth Sirmium, the chief town of Pannonia Inferior, & lib: 5. cap. 6. Theſſalonica, the chief City of Macedon, urbes Illyricas, or Illyrian Cities. By which accompt Illyricum in the largeſt extent of that name, contained no leſs than 18 Provinces of the Roman Empire; that is to ſay, 1. Norricum Mediterraneum, 2. Noricum Ripenſe, 3. Pannonia Superior, 4. Pannonia Inferior, 5. Valeria, 6. Savia, 7. Dalmatia, 8. Mœſia ſuperior, 9. Dardania, 10. Dacia Mediterranea, 11. Dacia Ripenſis, 12. Macedonia, 13. Theſſaly, 14. Achaia, 15. Crete, 16. Epirus vetus, 17. Epirus Nova, and 18. Prevelitana. Theſe 18 Provinces being caſt or made up into three Dioceſes, viz. the Dioceſe of Illyricum, ſpecially ſo called, containing the ſeaven firſt; 2ly. the Dioceſe of Macedon, containing the ſeaven laſt; and 3ly. the Dioceſe of Dacia, comprehending the other four: were governed by the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, who had firſt his chief ſeat and reſidence at Sirmium before mentioned. But in the diviſion of the Empire betwixt the ſons Theodoſius the Great, into the Eaſtern and Weſtern; the Dioceſe of Illyricum ſpecially ſo called (after that named Illyricum Occidentale) was laid unto the Weſtern Empire, under the Governance of the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy; and thereupon the ſeat or reſidence of the Prætorio Præfectus for Illyricum, removed, from Sirmium unto Theſſalonica. So that we are now to look upon Illyricum in a ſtricter notion, as a Dioceſe of the Weſtern Empire, containing the ſeaven Provinces before ſpecified, whereof both Noricums, both Pannonias, and Valeria (if at leaſt Stiermarch be that Valeria, as ſome ſay it is) have been deſcribed already in their proper places. There now remain only Savia and Dalmatia to be ſpoken of: the firſt containing all thoſe parts of this Country lying on both ſides of the Savus (whence it had the names;) the laſt, thoſe parts hereof which lye towards the Sea, known by the antient name of Dalmatia, the Region of Illyris properly ſo called, being added to it. But as new Lords give new Laws, ſo they give new names. The Country being divided by the Sclavi in two Kingdomes, viz. of Croatia, and Dalmatia; of which the firſt conteined the Province of Savia; the laſt took up the whole Province of Dalmatia, bounded as before, but keeping the name of Sclavonia to it ſelf alone; being indeed the only Province in which the name and memory of the Sclavi, is retained amongſt us. Afterwards as it came to be divided (as at laſt it was) betwixt the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice; we find it ſubdivided into theſe ſix parts; that is to ſay, 1. Windiſchland, 2. Croatia, 3. Boſnia, 4. Dalmatia, 5. Liburnia, or Contado di Zara, and 6. the Sclavonian Iſlands.

1. WINDISCHLAND.

WINDISCHLAND is bonnd on the Eaſt, with part of the Lower Hungary, from which ſeparated by a line drawn from St. Nicolas near the River Dravus, to the town of Polega, ſtanding on a little River which fals into the Savus: on the Weſt, with Carniola, or Krain, a Province of the Archdukedome of Auſtria; on the North, with the River Dravus; on the South, with Croatia. It is thus called by the Dutch as the Land or Country of the Winithi, or Vendi, the greateſt Nation of the Sclaves, whom generally they call by the name of Windeſch: and antiently for ſo much of it as lieth on the North of the Savus, accounted part of Pannonia Inferior, as afterwards of the Province of Savia; till conquered by the Sclaves, and laid unto their poſſeſſions; from whom named Windiſchland, as before.

Places of moſt importance in it are 1 Windiſch-greits, ſeated on the Dravus, the Vinundria and Vindomana of the Antients. 2. Sagona, near unto the Savus. 3. Gradiſka, on the South, and Zagabria, on the North of the ſame River: from which laſt a great part of this Country is called Comitatus Zagabrienſis. 5, Novigrod, on the Savus alſo, but more near to Germany. 6. Petrowya, ſituate at the foot of the mountains, which are between the Savus and the Dravus, and divide Hungary from Sclavonia. 7. Siſſeg, or Siſſakhen, (the Siſſia of Pliny and Antoninus) ſituate on the Saw, over againſt Zagabria, where it receiveth the River Zulp; famous for the notable reſiſtance which the Turks there found, Anno 1593. Who hoping by the conqueſt of this Province, to open a free paſſage into Germany, entred

it with a puiſſant army, (having in their way taken the Caſtle of Oſtrowits) and the ſtrong Town of Wihits in Croatia) and ſate down very ſtrongly intreched before this Town. But the Town held it out moſt gallantly againſt all their batteries and aſſaults, till relieved by a power of Germans who came to ſuccour them: by whom 8000 of the Turks were ſlain in the place, and moſt of the reſt drowned in the River Savus, as they fled haſtily, and (through that great haſt) blindly, from the ſword of the Conqueror.

This Province, for the moſt part, is under the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria, as Kings of Hungary, to which Crown it formerly belonged: thoſe parts of it which lye next to Hungary, on the North and Eaſt, groaning under the tyranny and bondage of the Turkiſh Gariſons.

2. CROATIA.

CROATIA is bounded on the North, with Windiſchland, from which parted by the River Vna, or Wana; on the Eaſt, with Boſnia; on the South, with Liburnia, or Contado di Zara; on the Weſt, with Carniola. The reaſon of the name I find not among my Authors; but only it was impoſed by the Sclaves at their firſt comming hither: who comprehended under this name all the Inland parts of Sclavonia, from the Mountain Ardium to Pannonia; including Boſnia and Windiſchland, though diſtinguiſhed afterwards.

The Country for the moſt part cold, mountainous and hilly, overſpread by the branches of the Mountains Babii, ſpoken of by Ptolemy; yet reaſonably fruitfull, ſtored with all neceſſarie proviſions for the life of man: and would yield more increaſe and profit both to Lord and Tenant, were it not for the ill neighbourhood of the Turk; to whoſe tyranny and oppreſſions it hath been, and is ſtill expoſed. The people for the generall are held to be good ſouldiers, mentioned in our modern ſtories by the name of Crabats.

Chief Towns in it are 1. Maſch or Moſth, bordering upon Germany, the Aleta of the Antients. 2. Oſtrowits, a ſtrong port Port of the ſame Frontire; 3. Wihits, by the Duch called Bihigen, by the Antients Funium, the Metropolis or chief place of the Country, encompaſſed like an Iland by the River Vna, and fortified with ſtrong works by the help of Art: but taken by the Turk, Anno 1592. and all the ſouldiers in it cruelly murdered, contrary to the Articles agreed on at the ſurrendry. 4. Zeng, 5. Wackat, 6. Tarnaw, 7. Modriſch, of which little memorable.

This Country with the reſt included antiently under this name, was one of the two Kingdomes of Sclavonia; the Princes whereof were uſually entituled Kings of Croatia, and Dalmatia. In the year 1007. the Venetians having before poſſeſſed themſelves of ſome Towns on the Sea ſide, firſt ſet footing there. How the whole Country of Sclavonia came to the Crown of Hungary, ſhall be ſhewn anon. Held, part of it in the right thereof, by the houſe of Auſtria; part of it by the Turks in the way of conqueſt: the Venetians having now no ſhare in it, for ought I can find.

3. BOSNIA.

BOSNIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Servia, a province of Dacia; on the Weſt, with Croatia; on the North, with the River Savus, and the Eaſt parts of the Lower Hungary; on the South with Dalmatia. So called as ſome think from the River Boſna, which runneth thr ough it; as others, from the Beſſi a people of Dacia, driven out of their Country by the Bulgari, and removing hither; by the change of a Vowel called Boſſi, whence the Country Boſnia.

Places of moſt importance in it are 1. Jaitza, by the Latines called Jazyga, ſituate on the top of an high Hill, at the bottome whereof almoſt encompaſſed with two rivers, which there uniting paſs from thence unto the Savus. The town by reaſon of the rocky præcipices, of the Hill, the unformableneſs of the River, and an inacceſſible Caſtle, held to be impregnable: the Metropolis in former times of this petit Kingdome, and the ordinarie Sepulture for the Kings thereof. 2. Warboſons, at this time the chief Town of the Country, but not walled about. 3. Cazach, the uſual reſidence or retiring place of the Boſnian Kings. 4. Schwanica, not much obſervable. 5. Dorobiza, the firſt Town taken by Mahomet the Great in his conqueſt of this Kingdom; as 6. Clyſſa was the laſt; the unfortunate King Stephen being taken it it.

This Country, antiently accounted of as a part of Croatia, together with it was united to the Crown of Hungary; under the Patronage and Homage whereof it was erected into a Kingdome: but the preciſe time when, I find not. Some ſay, about the year 1420. If ſo, a Kingdome of late date, and ſhort continuance. For in the year 1464. Mahomet the Great, firſt Emperor of the Turks, having taken Conſtantinople, and almoſt all the reſt of Greece, caſt his eye upon it, ſuddenly ſuppriſed it: and and having taken Stephen the laſt King hereof, moſt barbarouſly commanded him to be flead alive. After whoſe death this Kingdome was converted to a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, and governed by one of the Baſſas of it; as it ſtill continueth.

4. DALMATIA.

DALMATIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Albania, from which parted by the River Driſo; on the Eaſt, with the Titius (now Variecha) which divides it from Liburnia; on the North, with Boſnia; on the South, with the Adriatick Sea. This only of all the Provinces of Sclavonia, retaineth its antient name and bounds. So called from Dalminium the chief town hereof in the time of the Romans, from which the people were called Dalmatæ, and the Countrey Dalmatia. Dalmatia.

from

The Countrey in the time of the Romans was full of woods, and those woods of Robbers, who from thence issued out to make spoil and booty. Dalmatæ sub sylvis agunt, inde ad latrocinia promptissimi, saith the Historian. And by the advantage of these woods, they intercepted and discomfited Gabinius, one of Cæsars Captains, marching through their Country with 1000 horse, and 15 Companies of foot towards Macedonia, to the aid of his General against Pompey. But their woods being destroyed, they became more peaceable; and instead of Robberies by Land, began to exercise themselves at Sea in the way of Merchandizing, to which their large Sea-coasts and commodious Havens served exceeding fitly.

Places of most consideration in it, 1 Sebenic, on the Sea-side, not far from the influx of Titius or Variecha: by Ptolemie called Sicum, in whose time a Colonie of Roman Souldiers, sent hither by the Emperour Claudius. 2. Salona, a Roman Colonie also, one of the Juridical Resorts for these parts of the Province, and the ordinary Arsenal for their Navies. Renowned in antient stories for the retreat of Diocletian, a Native of this Country: who having governed the Roman Empire 20 years with much felicity, but a great deal of cruelty, deposed himself, and retired to this City; where he followed the trade of a Gardener, working with his own hands, and observing with great content the productions of nature. Insomnch that when Maximianus Herculius his associate (who at his perswasion had done the like) invited him to resume the Empire, he returned this answer. Utinam possitis visere olera nostris manibus plantata, &c. that if he would come unto Salona, and see how well the Worts which he had planted with his own hands, did thrive and prosper; he would never trouble his head with Crowns, nor his hands with Scepters: a rare expression of a setled and contented mind. The name, and some of the ruines doe still remain, to preserve the memory of so remarkable a place. 2. Spalato, East of Sebenic, a Sea town, and an Archbishops See, who writes himself Primate of Dalmatia; as antiently and of right he was, till the Bishop of Venice being made a Patriarch by Pope Eugenius the 4th, Anno 1450. assumed that title to himself, together with a superintendency over all the Churches of this Country, as subordinate to him. Of note for many learned Prelates, but for none more than for Marcus Antonius de Dominis, who seeming to loath the Romish superstition, came for refuge in England, Anno 1616. and having here both by preaching and writing laboured to overthrow the Church of Rome, upon I know not what projects, he declared himself to be of another mind, Anno 1622. and returned again to Rome, where he writ as reproachfully of the Church of England. So that we may say of him, as Socrates in his Ecclesiastical History saith of Ecebolius, who under Constantius, was a Christian; under Julian, a Pagan; and a Christian again under Jovinian; τοιοῦτος ὢν τὴν γνώμην καὶ ἐν ἀρχῇ καὶ ἐν τέλει Ἐκεβόλιος πρότερόν τι καὶ ὕστερον. So wavering and unconstant a turn-coat was Ecebolius, from his beginning to his end. But Ecebolius sped better than Antonius did, he being received into the Church upon his repentance; but this infatuated man imprisoned in the Castle of Angelo, and his dead body burnt to ashes. A just reward for so great levitie, and so grosse Apostacy, as he had shewed unto the world in his going hence. 4 Almissa, the Piguritium of Ptolemie, mounted on a high rock, and defended with an impregnable Castle. 5. Stagno, upon the point of a long and spatious Chersonese, not far from which the River Naron, (or Narento) falls into the Adriatick. 6. Castle Novo, a strong Fortress within the Gulf of Catharo, now in possession of the Turks. 7. Antibari, on the further or Eastern side of the Bay, an Archbishops See; but that and the Sees of his Suffragan Bishops, being seven in number, now in possession of the Turks. 8. Catharo, on the same side of the Bay, by Ptolemie called Ascravium, inhabited in his time by Roman Citizens; now a strong hold for the Venetians against the Turks, and giving name unto the Gulf: which, formerly called Sinus Rhizoniscus, from Rhizana (now Rhizins) situate at the bottom of it; is at this time called from this Town, Golfo de Catharo. 9. Dolcigno, by Ptolemie called Ulcinium, originally founded by the Colchians. 10. Scutari, more within the land, (the Scodra of Ptolemie and Antoninus) strongly seated on a steep Rock, memorable for the stout resistance which it made for a whole year, against the whole puissance of Mahomet the 2d. battered for the most part of that time, with 70 pieces of Ordnance of wondrous bigness, especially that called the Princes peece, which carried a stone or bullet of 1200 l. weight; but taken at the last, Anno 1578. Not far from this Town, is the great Lake, called by Strabo, Labeates, now the Lake of Scutari, 130 miles in compass, and environed on all sides with Mountains, except towards the North: out of which issueth the Drinus, now called Driana, which parting Sclavonia from Macedon and Servia, passeth into the Savus. 11. Alessio, the Lissus of Ptolemie, the furthest town of all Dalmatia, towards Greece; memorable for the Grave of Scanderbeg, who was buried here; whereof more hereafter. 12. Medon, raised out of the ruines of Diocles, an antient and famous City, the birth-place of the Great Emperour Diocletian, spoken of before. 13. Dalminium, once the Metropolis of this Province, situate on the River Drinus; first sacked by Marcius Figulus a Roman Consul, An. U. C. 689. and after, on a new revolt by one Nasica, spoken of by Strabo: not able after two such ruines to revive again; nothing being now left of it, but the name and memory.

Betwixt the Chersonese of Stagno, and the Gulf of Catharo, stands the town and territory of RAGUSI; not subject, as all the rest are, either to the Turk or to the Venetians, but governing themselves by their own Lawes and Magistrates, as a Free Common-wealth: paying only to the Turk 14000 Zechins yearly in way of tribute, and as much in Presents; discharged in that regard of Customs and Impositions, in all his Dominions. It was antiently called Epidaurus, (of which name there were two other Cities in Peloponnesus.) But that town being razed by the Gothes, the Inhabitants (after their departure) not knowing where to retire themselves, built this in the place of it, at the foot of a steep Mountain; enjoying a pleasant situation near the Sea, with a little, but commodious Port; forced

Liburnia. out of the water, by the art and industry of workmen. The town well built, fortified with walls, and a well-furnished Castle; now an Archbishops See, and a noted Emporie: rich, and strong in shipping, commanding over a small and barren territory within the land, and some pleasant Ilands in the Sea. So that the riches of it proceed not from their Rents and Revenues rising out of the Earth, but by the benefit of their traffique upon the Waters: secured therein by the protection of the Turk, without which they had fallen before this time into the hands of the Venetians; as on the other side preserved by the State of Venice from being a prey to their Protectors. Of more wealth heretofore, than they are at the present. At what time they traded to most parts of this Western world, in those great Vessels which from hence were called Raguses, but corruptly Argosies: the last of which (their number lessening with their trade) they lent unto the King of Spain for the war of England, An. 1588. in which action it was lost and wracked on the Coast of Ireland.

5. CONTADO DI ZARA.

CONTADO DI ZARA, or the Countrey of Zara, called antiently Liburnia, and Illyris specially so named, is bounded on the East, with Dalmatia; on the West, with Histria; on the North, with Croatia; and on the South, with the Adriatick Sea, or Gulf of Venice.

It took this latter name (the former being long discontinued) from Zara, the chief town thereof, the Jadera of Ptolemie and the antients; a Roman Colonie at that time, now an Archbishops See; enjoying a safe and large Port, and situate on a low Chersonese thrusting out like a Promontorie into the Adriatick; belonging to the State of Venice, by whom well fenced and fortified against forein invasions. For the possession and command of this Town, there have been great wars betwixt the Hungarians, and the Venetians: to whom it seemeth to be of such importance, that being once taken by the Hungarians, it was redeemed for 100000 Crowns, of Ladislaus King of Naples, pretending against Sigismund of Luxembourg to the Crown of Hungary. In this town is the Church of S. John de Malvatia, which was built by a company of Saylors; who being in a tempest, made a vow, that if they escaped, they would consecrate a Temple to S. John de Malvatia, whose morter should be tempered with Malmsey: and accordingly they paid their vows. Far lesse did another Master of a ship intend to perform his promise, though he spoke bigger; who in a like extremity of danger, promised our Lady to offer at her Altar a Candle as great as the main mast of his ship. For when one of his mates jogging him, told him he had promised an impossibility: Tush fool (replyed the Master) we must speak her fair in time of need; but if ever I come a shore, I will make her be content with a Candle of eight to the pound. And in a like fit of devotion was he, who on the same occasion plainly told God, That he was no common beggar, he never troubled him with prayers before; and if he would hear him that time, he would never trouble him again.

Other towns herein considerable, are 1 Albona, retaining still the old name (the Alvona of Ptolemie) situate near the River Arsia, the dividet of this Province from Histria. 2 Flavona, or Flanona, situate against the Gulf of Quernero, of old called Sinus Flanaticus, as before was noted: of ill report amongst Saylors for frequent tempests raised on every winde. 3. Zegna, by Ptolemie and Plinie called Senia, situate on a flat or level. 4. Nona, of old called Aenona, compassed with the Sea. 5. Scrifia, now a poor Village, in the place where stood the Argyrutum of Plinie. 6. Scardona, now a mean Village also, heretofore of great note, and the Juridical Resort for the whole Province; from whence the neighbouring mountains had the name of Scardonici; the bounds of this Country and Croatia.

The antient name of this Country was Liburnia, as before is said, but extending more Northwards beyond the Mountains of Ardium, or Scardonici; this and Dalmatia being then the Membra dividentia of the whole Illyricum. The people hereof called by one general name Liburni, were much given to Piracies; and for their better speed therein, the Authors and Inventors of those swift vessels which were called Liburnicæ, and Liburnæ. Of which thus Horace,

Ibis Liburnis inter alta navium
Amice propugnacula.

That is to say:

In a Liburnian shalt thou be Amongst the stoutest ships at Sea.

In imitation of which Vessels being swift and light, the Romans in the time of their wealth and pride, invented a kind of Chair or Litter, (such as those we call Sedans) wherein they were carried on mens shoulders with such ease and pleasure, that they could not only sleep or read, but write in them also: the Porters or Bearers of them of this Nation commonly; from whence, or from the fashion of the Vessel which they did resemble, they were called Liburni. Of these thus Juvenal in his third Satyre:

Si vocat officium, turba cedente vehetur
Dives, & ingenti curret super ora Liburno.
Atque obiter leget, aut scribet, vel dormiet intus,
Namque facit somnum clausa lectica fenestra.

Thus

Thus Engliſhed by my honoured friend Sir Robert Stapleton, in his excellent tranſlation of that harſh Satyriſt.

When buſineſs calls, a crowd the rich man ſhuns,
And o'r mens heads in's huge Sedan he runs,
Reads, writes, and ſleeps within it as he goes,
For ſleep will come if he the curtains cloſe.

Beſides which office of Chair-carriers or Sedan-men, as we call them now; this people being, when once conquered, a ſervile Nation, furniſhed the Romans with thoſe Beadles, whom they employed in calling the Citizens from the fields to their publick buſineſſes; to which the ſame Poet alludeth, in the next Satyre, ſaying, Clamante Liburno, Currite, jam ſedit, &c. But to proceed, the nearneſs of this Countrey to the Adriatick, occaſioned the Bay of Quernero, commonly called Sinus Flanaticus, to be ſometimes named Sinus Liburnicus; the parts of Italy on the other ſide of it, to be called Regna Liburnorum in the Poet Virgil; and gave the name of Liburnades to a ſhole of Ilands lying on the coaſt hereof, 60 at leaſt in number, as is ſaid by Strabo. To which and other Ilands of the Adriatick, we are now to haſten, leaving the ſtorie of Illyricum to the cloſe of all.

6. The SCLAVONIAN ILANDS.

Along the Coaſts of Sclavonia, lie a cluſter of ILANDS, to the number of a thouſand, as is ſaid by Plinie: moſt of which (if indeed ſo many) are but rocks, not Ilands, or not inhabited at all, or of any note. The principal whereof, and ſuch as deſerve place here, are 1. the Liburnades before mentioned. 2. The Abſyrtides. 3. The Iſles of Raguſi. 4. Arbe. 5. Curzola. 6. Zara. 7. Liſſa, and Brazzia; the reſt not worth the looking after, as to our deſign: the whole number of the Inhabitants reckoned in the total to no more than 40000 perſons.

1. The LIBURNADES ſaid by Strabo to be 60 in number, lie all along the Coaſt of Liburnia, or Contado di Zaro. The chief whereof are 1 ISSA, now called Pago, conteining 100 miles in compaſs, having a town of the ſame name; but in all that tract of ground not above 1500 inhabitants in the time of my Author, by reaſon of the ſharp air, and great want of fewell. The Salt-pits here yield great commodity, not only to the people themſelves, but alſo to the State of Venice, ſupreme Lord hereof. 2. Tragurium, now Tran and Trahu, ſo called from the chief Town hereof, built by thoſe of Iſſa: ſo near the Continent, that it ſeems to be a part thereof. By Mela it is named Tagurium, with ſome little difference. 3. Pharus, ſo called from the Pharii, or Parii, of whom once a Colonie, long ſince come to ruine. It is now called Lezina, the greateſt of all the Adriatick, as being 150 miles in compaſs, and very fruitfull for the bigneſs. It hath a town of the ſame name, which enjoys a ſafe and ſpacious Harbour; unwalled, and of no great beauty, but fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, which commandeth both the Harbour and the ſhipping in it. The birth-place of Demetrius Pharius, ſo often mentioned in the ſtories of Greece, and Rome.

2. The ABSYRTIDES are in number many, ſo called from the River Abſyrtus, which thereabout falls into the Adriatick; according unto that of Lucan, Et cadit Adriacas ſpumans Abſyrtus in undas.

Abſyrtus foaming with his haſt,
Into the Adria falls at laſt.

But whether that river were ſo called by the Colchians at their landing there, in memory of Abſyrtus the ſon of Aetas King of Colchis, whom they went to ſeek; or for ſome other reaſon, I determine not. Certain I am, it could not be ſo named from the ſcattering of his limbs hereabouts by Medea his unnatural ſiſter, as is ſaid by Plinie: that cruel fact being done on the ſhores of the Euxine; the place called Tomos afterwards upon that occaſion. But for theſe Ilands, being in number many, as before was ſaid, two only are of ſpecial note, that is to ſay, 1. Vegia, or Viglio, not far from Zegna on the firm land, containing in compaſs betwixt 80. and 100 miles, and about 10000 Inhabitants; the moſt populous of all theſe Seas. It hath a town of ſame name, with a very fair harbour: the Iland, by Plinie, called Curieta, the chief towns of it in his time being Pſulſinium, and Curicum. 2. Abſorus as Ptolemie, Abſyrtium as Plinie calls it; in whoſe time it was one Iland only, but now divided into two, by the Venetians, letting in the Sea betwixt them: the one of them is called Cherſo, the other Oſero: Both joyned together by a Bridge made by the Venetians, and both together making up 140 miles in compaſs; each of them having one town only, and that of the ſame name with the Iland; the Inhabitants in both not exceeding 5000 perſons. Stored with ſufficiency of corn, plenty of wine, and abundance of wood, great quantities whereof are ſent yearly to Venice. They have alſo goodly herds of Cattel, and great flocks of ſheep, affording by their fleſh, wool, cheeſe, and butter, a good increaſe of profit to the owners of them.

3. The

Illyricum

3. The Ilands of Raguſi, (for ſo I call them which belong to that Common-wealth) are but three in number. 1. Gravoſa, a very pleaſant place, full of Gardens of Orenges, Lemmons, and Pomegranates. 2. Languſte, environed about with very high Mountains, in which are the Raguſians Farms, made rich by the great charge and induſtry of the ſeveral Occupants, ſo as to yeeld them wine, oil, and moſt excellent fruits: which they receive more plentifully from a goodly plain, ſituate in the midſt hereof, and naturally more fruitfull than the other parts. Near to this laſt Iland is good fiſhing for Sprats: and in both an Art of making their trees to bring forth Oyſters, by bending down their boughs, and ſtaying them under the water with ſtones; ſo as in two years there are ſo many Oyſters faſtned unto them, as is ſtrange to ſee, and in the third year they are very good meat. 3. Melida, lying betwixt Raguſi and the Iſle of Curzola, by Pluie called Melita, and on that ground ſuppoſed by ſome to be that Iland on which S. Paul did ſuffer ſhipwrack, Acts 26. But the name of Barbarous, which the Text joyns to the Inhabitants of it, not proper to an Iland betwixt Greece and Italy, in the times of S. Paul; and his landing when he parted thence in Syracuſa, an Haven of Sicil, ſo far from this, ſo near unto the other Melita, which is now called Malta, ſufficiently refell this fancie, though otherwiſe not improbably grounded.

4. Of thoſe which are known only by one ſingle name, the chief are ARBE, ſo called in the time of Pliny, from the beſt Town of it; but by Ptolemy it is named Scardona. A pleaſant Iland, in compaſſe about 30 miles, and containing ſome 3000 Inhabitants, the only Haven-leſſe Iſle of all the Adriatick; but that defect abundantly recompenſed by the natural ſweetneſs of the place. Which ſo enticed certain diſſolute Rovers of Auſtria, that they ſeiſed upon it, Anno 1618. and had like to have occaſioned an heavy war betwixt Ferdinand, Archduke, of the Houſe of Graiz (not long after choſen King of the Romans) and the State of Venice; if Philip the 3d. of Spain had not made up the breach.

5. CURZOLA, by Ptolemy and Strabo called Corcyra, or Melana, more rightly Corcyra Melana, or Corcyra Nigra, to difference it from Corcyra, now Corfu, in the Sea Ionian: the chief Town of it being of the ſame name with the Iland, was founded by the Gnidians of the Iſle of Crete. Sufficiently fruitfull, but of wine eſpecially; 40 miles long, in compaſſe 90. and very populous, for the bigneſs; notwithſtanding that the people being Sea-faring men, doe much uſe the Seas, and build many ſhips. In the year 1571. a little after the taking of Cyprus, and before the battel of Lepanto, it was invaded by Uluz Aly, General of the Turkiſh Fleet, with a Navy of 60 Gallies: for fear of whom Contarenus the Venetian Governour, together with the Townſmen and Garriſon Souldiers, abandoned Curzola, the chief Town hereof. The ſilly women thus forſaken, and preferring death before diſhonour, defended the walls; and with fire, ſtones, and ſuch other weapons as they had, they beat off the enemy: till at the laſt a violent tempeſt forced the Turkiſh General to remove his Gallies further off, to a place of ſafety.

6. ZARA, LISSA, BRAZZIA, three ſmall Iſles, not otherwiſe memorable, but for their misfortunes; ſpoiled by the Turks at their departure from Curzola, who carried thence 1600 Chriſtians into cruel bondage. The reſt I purpoſely omit, rather Rocks than Ilands; barren and ſtonie for the moſt part, and not much inhabited.

§ The antient Inhabitants of Illyricum, in the full extent of it, comprehending Liburnia, and Dalmatia, were the Japodes bordering on Italy; the Scirtones, or Scirtari confining upon Macedon; the Mazæi, in the midſt about Salona; the Peiruſtæ, lying towards Pæmonia; the Derri, Ceraunii, Daurſii, Vardæi, Siculotæ, Sardiotæ, and others of inferiour note: all making up the great and potent Nations of the Liburni and the Dalmatæ; and comprehended generally in the name of Illyrians. Of theſe the Liburnian Illyrians, (Illyrici ſeu Liburni, as they are indifferently called by Florus) were the firſt who felt the Forces of Rome: which growing State they had provoked by their frequent Piracies; but more by murdering the Ambaſſadours which were ſent unto them to require ſatisfaction; Teuta their Queen, a proud and Imperious Dame, commanding execution to be done upon them. Warred upon by the Romans for ſo many injuries, under the conduct of Centimalus, one of their Conſuls, they were overthrown (as having more of the Pirate than the ſouldier in them) ſome of their chief Nobility executed, in revenge of the wrong done to the Ambaſſadours; an yearly tribute impoſed on them, and the Queen deprived of the greateſt part of her Kingdom, conferred by the Romans on Demetrius Pharius, one of their Confederates. But he proving unfaithfull to them in their war with Hannibal, and Gentius, their laſt King, who commanded over Illyricum, ſiding againſt them with Perſeus, King of Macedonia; Anicius the Prætor is ſent with a ſufficient Army, to make an end of that work. Who uſed ſuch diligence therein, that Scordra the chief town of the Kingdome, was taken; and the king himſelf, together with his wife and children made priſoners: by conſequence the whole war ended, antequam geri Romæ nunciaretur, before they knew at Rome that it was begun. The Liburnians after that became quiet ſubjects, the whole Country, on the taking of Gentius, being made a Province of the Romans, Anno V.C. 586. employed at Rome in many ſervil offices, as before was ſaid; and then the Dalmatians began to caſt off the yoke. But Dalminium their chief City being firſt ſacked by Marius Figulus, and after by Naſica before mentioned; they continued quiet and obedient till the time of Auguſtus Cæſar, when they again rebelled at the inſtigation of one Baato, a man very potent with the people, who

Who having ten years together maintained the liberty of his countrey, at last broken and wearied by the forces of Germanicus, and Tiberius, he submitted himself unto the two Generals: who asking the reason of his revolt, were answered, because the Romans sent not shepherds to keep, but wolves to devour their flocks. Thus finally conquered, it continued a Roman Province till the coming of Odoacer into Italy, who brought it under his command; as the Gothes also did having vanquished him, and thereby made themselves Masters of Italy, and the rest of his purchases. But the kingdom of the Goths being brought to an end, by the good fortune of Justinian, and the valour of Belisarius and Narses, two of his Commanders (but very ill requited by him) Illyricum became a part of the Eastern Empire: continuing under the power of the Grecian Emperors, till the time of Phocas that bloudy Tyrant; when made a prey to the Sclaves. Illyricum.

Of these though we have spoken before in several places, as their fortunes and affairs have led us: yet being this is the only countrey which preserves their name, we will here speak more exactly of them, than we have done hitherto; especially as to their manners, name, and first Original; and finally of their successes in this countrey. And first for their Original, I take it for a thing past question that they were no other than natural Sarmatians, inhabiting on the North of the River Ister; uniting themselves under this name, in their undertakings and attempts on the Eastern Empire: as the many Nations of Germany took the name of Franks, and Almans, in their actions and atchievements against the Western. But why they took this name rather than another, is not yet agreed on. Some fetch the original of it from Slowo, which in the Sclavonian tongue signifieth a Speech or word, because they were all of one common language: others from Slawa, signifying in that language Fame or Glory, in regard of that great fame and honour which they had atchieved, by their successes on the Empire. But when I find a potent Nation of the Winithi, Winuli, or Vendi, a Sarmatian people, called Sclavini by Jornandes, possessed in his time, of the further shores of the River Ister, opposite to Illyricum and Thrace; and by that name wasting and foraging these Provinces, and other parts of that Empire in the time of Justinian, as we read in Procopius that they did; I see no reason why we should look further for the name of Sclaves, than from these Sclavini. For having in the time of Phocas subdued this Countrey, and called it Sclavinia, or Sclavonia, after their own name: by that and other fortunate successes on the Eastern Empire, and the honour they had thereby gotten, they might very well induce the rest of the scattered tribes of the Sarmatians to unite together with them both in name and action; and try their fortunes in the conquest of the West of Europe, as these had done already on the East parts of it. In which design they sped so well, that they became Masters of almost all those countreys, which lie betwixt the River Vistula, and the Euxine Sea; the Adriatick, and the Baltick: communicating their language unto all the Provinces and Nations, conquered by them; and to most, their manners, rites, and customs. Their Government at first by Kings, but so that the succession seldom held in a Race or Family; and those that had the Throne did not long enjoy it. For having a Law amongst themselves, that he who killed a Tyrant should succeed in his place: they had few Kings whom some or other would not vote to be a Tyrant, and then dispatch him out of the way; that a greater Tyrant than himself (as it commonly happeneth in such cases) might possess the Power. Insomuch that they had a new king almost every year, none of them for the space of an hundred years dying natural deaths; and all that while the People (as it needs must be) most miserably torn in pieces by intestine wars. Not cured of this distemper, til the several Tribes and Nations of them, (as Poles, Moravians, Bohemians, these here, and those of other Countries) had their several Princes, succeeding one another in a Regular way. Their Religion Gentilism at the first. For being originally Heathens, they worshipped such Gods as others of the Gentiles did; Jessan for Jupiter, Ladon for Pluto, Marzim for Mars, Zievane for Venus, and Nian for Diana. They had also a Goddess called Pagode, to whom they prayed for fair weather, and a temperate Air. To their children they used to give no name, till they began to grow great, and then conducted them to the Temple of their Gods; where they cut off their first hair, and offered it as a pledge of their future service: at which solemnity they called together their friends and kinsfolk to make merry, with bankets, dancing, singing, and all kind of sports; offering in sacrifice an Hog, and wine mixed with honey, somewhat like Metheglin.

The Gospel was first generally received amongst them by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius, two right godly men, who had before converted the Georgians and Circassians, two great Asian Nations, employed therein by the Patriarch of Constantinople. With good success as to the work, and with no small honour and advantage to those Patriarchs also: the Eastern Sclaves inhabiting those parts of this Country which lye next to Greece, and all the Dacian Provinces, except Transylvania, being of the Communion of the Church of Greece, but privileged to officiate all Divine Services in their natural Language. The rest, as more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Hungarie, and the German Emperors, submitted by degrees to the Popes of Rome, who by this means did reap where they never sowed.

But to return unto the story, the Sclaves thus setled in this Countrey (since called Sclavonia) continued absolute Masters of it, under the Title of Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia, til the year 970. when growing unsufferable by their frequent Piracies, and having ravished or surprized a company of Venetian Ladies; they forced that State (as the Liburnians did the Romans) to make war upon them: which ended in the loss of Lezina and Curzola, two of their best Ilands, and almost all the Sea-towns on the Coast of the Adriatick, possessed for the most part, since that time, by the State of Venice: a tribute also of 100 barrels of Wine, and a present to the Duke of 3000 Coney-skins, being laid upon them; Petro Orseola being then Duke of Venice, and Marcomir, King of the Sclavoni- ans. Afterwards Zelamirus the laſt king, dying without iſſue, bequeathed the kingdom to his wife; and ſhe as freely to her brother Ladiſlaus, King of Hungary, ſurnamed the Saint: the right hereof accrewing by his means to the Kings of Hungary; but the poſſeſſion of a great part of it remaining to the State of Venice; the cauſe of much war and bloodſhed betwixt thoſe Princes, till the Turk came to part the fray, and got the greateſt part for himſelf, by their diſagreements. Betwixt theſe three, Sclavonia at this time doth ſtand thus divided: the Venetians poſſeſſing the greateſt part of the Ilands, and all the Sea-Coaſts from the River Arſia, to the Bay of Catharo, (the City and Common-wealth of Raguſi, excepted only) the houſe of Auſtria, in right of the Crown of Hungary, the Inland parts of Windſchland, and Croatia; and the Turks (who firſt ſet footing here in the reign of Mahomet the ſecond) the whole kingdom of Boſnia, the Patronage of Raguſi, ſome Towns in Windiſchland and Croatia, and all the reſidue of Dalmatia, from the Bay of Catharo to Albania.

The Arms of Sclavonia were Argent, a Cardinals Hat, the ſtrings pendant, and platted in a true Loves-knot, meeting in the Baſe, Gules.

There are in Sclavonia
Archbiſhops 4. Biſhops 26.

And thus much for SCLAVONIA.

DACIA.

DACIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Euxine Sea, and ſome part of Thrace; on the Weſt, with Hungarie, and Sclavonia; on the North, with Podolia, and ſome other Members of the Realm of Poland; on the South, with the reſt of Thrace, and Macedonia. So called from the Daci, who here firſt inhabited: in Strabo better known by the name of the Davi, who proving, when firſt known to the Romans, an officious people, willingly putting themſelves to ſervice in hope of gain; occaſioned the Romans in their Comœdies, and common Speech, to call a Sycophant or Servant, by the name of Davus.

It lyeth on both ſides of the Danow, frontiring all along the Upper and the Lower Hungary, and ſome part of Sclavonia: extended from the 7th. Climate to the 10th. ſo that the longeſt Summers day, in the moſt Northern parts thereof, is near 17 hours; and in the moſt Southern, 15 hours, 3 quarters.

By this accompt with reference to the other limits before laid down, it differeth much in ſituation and dimenſions, from the antient Dacia, deſcribed by Ptolomie; that lying wholly on the North ſide of the Danow, but taking in ſo much of the Upper Hungary, as lyeth on the Eaſt ſide of Tibiſcus: this comprehending all the reſt of the antient Dacia, with both the Myſias and Dardania, and in a word, the whole Dacian Diocele in the largeſt extent thereof, the Province of Prævalitana excepted only; which though a Member of this Dioceſe, was no part of Dacia, but rather of Macedon or Albania. For the clearer underſtanding whereof we may pleaſe to know, that Dacia properly ſo called, was ſituate on the North ſide of Danubius, as before was ſaid; extending as far Weſtward as the River Tibiſcus, where it frontired on the Jazyges Metanaſtæ: inhabited by a military and valiant people, who many times, eſpecially when the froſt did favour them, paſſed over the River, and infeſted the Roman Provinces. And though repreſſed and made tributary by Julius Cæſar, yet they brake out again in the time of Auguſtus; who ſending Lentulus againſt them with a puiſſant Army, compelled them to retire on the other ſide of the River, planting the Southern banks thereof with ſtrong Towns and Garriſons to reſtrain them from the like incurſions for the time to come. By means whereof, Si Dacia tunc non victa, ſummota atque dilata eſt, ſaith the Hiſtorian; though Dacia was not overcome, yet it was removed somewhat further off, and the Provinces thereby secured from the attempts of that people. After this, from the time of Cotiso, with whom Augustus had to deal, we find little of them till the reign of Decebalus their last King, a man both ready in advice, and quick in execution. Against him, Domitian made war by Julianus his Lieutenant; who gave Decebalus a great overthrow, and had then utterly vanquished him, if his wit had not better befriended him than his sword. For, fearing that the Romans making use of their victory, would enter and take possession of his Country; he pitched in the way a great number of stakes in battel aray, putting on them the old Corslets of his Souldiers; which looking like so many men of arms, frighted the enemy from approaching the Countrey. Trajan was the next that made war against him, and brought him to that exigent, that having with much loss endured some few skirmishes, he yeelded himself, and is acknowledged a friend to the Senate and people of Rome. But being one of a high spirit, and born in a free air, he once again fell off from the Romans; but to his own destruction: for seeing by the valour of Trajan, his kingdom conquered, and his Palace taken and destroyed; he fell upon his own Sword, and Dacia was made a Province of the Roman Empire. Lost in the time of Galienus, it was again recovered by Aurelianus. Who finding how difficult and chargeable the keeping of it was like to be, transplanted the Roman Colonies, and the more civil sort of the Natives, on the other side of the River; placing them betwixt the two Mysias, (in some part of each) and calling the Country given to them by the name of Dacia, or New Dacia: leaving the Old unto the Gothes, and others of the barbarous Nations, whose thorow-fare it was in all their enterprises and designs on the Roman Empire. Divided by Aurelianus into the two Provinces of Dacia Mediterranea, and Dacia Ripensis; this lying on the banks of the Danow, the other more within the land: which with the Provinces of Mœsia superior, Dardania, Prævalitana, and part of Macedonia salutaris, made up the whole Diocese of Dacia in the times succeeding. Subject with that of Macedon to the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, and consequently appertaining (after the division) to the Eastern Empire. And it continued in this state till the time of Justinian, who being a Native of this Country, subducted it from the command of that Præfect, & instituted both a Præfectus Prætorio for this Diocese only in Civil matters, and a Primate for the affairs of the Church; both setled in the City of Justiniana, of his own foundation: enlarging the jurisdiction of the first by the addition of some part of Macedonia Secunda, and Pannonia Secunda, and giving to the other all those preheminences, which had been antiently enjoyed by the greater Patriarchs. But this new Institution was of no continuance. For first the Sclaves, and afterwards the Russians, Hungars, and Bulgarians, breaking over the Danow, dismembred it peece-meal from the Empire, and divided it under new names amongst themselves. Of which, together with the nature of the soil and people, I shall speak anon, having first took a view of the Rivers, Hills, and other Land-marks, which are to be my chief guides in the Chorographie or description of them.

Transylvania.

The Rivers then of most note are, 1. The Danow, which here, at Axium, or Axiopelis a Town of Bulgaria, takes the name of Ister, continuing it from thence to its Æstuarium, where it falleth into the Euxine Sea, with 7 mouths or chanels: that is to say, 1. Pence, 2. Naracustoma, 3. Calostoma, 4. Plendostoma, 5. Spireostoma, 6. Boreostoma; the name of the last I find not amongst my Authors, quia languidissimum nec perpetuum, as it is in Ptolemie. 2. Marulius, now called Marisch, 3. Termes, 4. Alluta, keeping its old name, 5. Hierasus, all of old Dacia, and all falling into the Danow or Ister. As do also Ciabrus, now Ibar, a River of Servia; and 6. Sucoma of Bulgaria, or the Lower Mysia. Chief Mountains of it are 1. the Carpathian, 2. Scardus, 3. Ozbelus; whereof the first parteth it from Sarmatia Europæa, the second from Dalmatia, and the third from Macedon.

This said, we will proceed to the description of the several Provinces, which we have comprehended under this name of Dacia; that is to say, 1. Transylvania, 2. Moldavia, 3. Walachia, 4. Rascia, 5. Servia, 6. Bulgaria: the first four in Old Dacia, on the North side of the Danow; the two last in New Dacia, on the South thereof.

TRANSYLVANIA, is bounded on the East, with Moldavia; on the West, with the Upper Hungarie; on the North, with Russia Nigra, a Province of the Realm of Poland, from which parted by the Carpathian Mountains; on the South, with Rascia, and Walachia.

It took this name from the great Woods lying betwixt it and Hungarie, the name in Latine signifying the Country beyond the woods. By the Dutch it is called Seben Burgen, from seven Castles or strong holds antiently built in it, to defend the Frontiers: Septemcastrensis, in some Latine Authors, upon that occasion. But by the more elegant Latinists, it hath been named Pannodacia, as that part of Dacia, which either was inhabited by the Pannonians, or made subject to them.

The soil doth naturally abound with wine, corn, and fruit, of which it was so plentifull in the times of the Romans, that the Emperour Trajan caused a piece of money to be coined, having the figure of Ceres, holding in the one hand a Cornu-copia, and in the other a plain Tablet with this inscription, Abundantia Dacia. Particularly besides great plenty of wheat, and most excellent wines, it yeeldeth great store of Cherries, Damascens, Malacotoons, Musk-melons, not inferior to those of Italy; and also Centaurie good store, and many other Medicinal plants; some mines of gold and silver, many of Iron, Brasse, and Copper; and not a few veins of Salt and Sulphur. Of cattel such abundance, that many times large Oxen are sold for a Floren, or half a Crown a peece; and a most notable breed of Horses: not to say any thing of that variety of wild beasts, which they have in their Woods and Forests, and of all sorts of Fowl both for food and pleasure. So populous withall (for the moſt fruitfull Countries are commonly populous alſo) that Caſtaldo Governour hereof in the minority of Stephen, the 4th. ſon of John de Sepuſio, Anno 1551. advanced an Army of 70000 able men, conſiſting of the Natives of this Country only, for the ſiege of Lippe, a ſtrong Town of Hungarie, but on the borders of this Country.

The people are much of the ſame nature with the Hungarians, to whom they have been a long time ſubject; but ſomewhat more ſtubborn and untractable; ſpeak the ſame language that they do, with ſome difference in the Dialect only: converted at the ſame time to the Chriſtian Faith, and under the ſame forms of Eccleſiaſtical government. In former times they uſed to read, as the Jews do, from the right hand to the left; but of late herein conform to the Weſtern Nations, from whom they are generally deſcended.

For that the people of this Country are the progenie of the Saxons, is evident by the Saxon Language yet in part retained. 2ly. We find that Charls the Great, like a politique Conquerour, placed many of that Nation here, weakning ſo their ſtrength at home, and fortifying the bounds of his Empire. And 3ly. by a ſtory recited by Verſtegan, which we touched in our deſcription of Brunſwick; the whole narration is this. Halberſtade was beyond credit troubled with Rats, which a Muſician whom they called the Pied-piper, undertaking for a great maſſe of money to deſtroy; they agree: hereupon he tuned his pipes, and all the Rats in the Town dancing after them, are drowned in the next River. This done, he asketh his pay, but is denyed; whereupon he ſtriketh up a new fit of mirth: all the children male & female of the Town follow him into the hill Hamelen, which preſently cloſed again. The Parents miſs their children, and could never hear news of them; now of late ſome have found them in this Country, where I alſo leave them: only telling you this, that this marvellous accident is ſaid to happen the 22 of July 1376. ſince which time it is ſaid that the people of Halberſtade permit not any Drum, Pipe, or other inſtrument to be ſounded in that ſtreet: and eſtabliſhed a Decree, that in all writings of Contract or Bargain, after the date of our Saviours Nativity, the date alſo of this their childrens tranſmigration ſhould be added in rei memoriam. But though the Dutch or Saxons make up the main body of them, yet being conquered by the Hungars, they received many of their Colonies; and in the Northern parts there remain ſtill ſome of the old Scythians, planted there by Attila. Out of thoſe Members is the body of this State compoſed: ſo ſtrong and populous that it is conceived to be able to raiſe an Army of 90000 men; and actually did arm 6000 horſe and 12000 foot for the battel of Kereſture, Anno 1596. being more by 2000 than the whole Realm of Hungary ſent unto that ſervice.

Chief Towns herein of the foundation of the Dutch or Saxons, are 1. Hermanſted, in Latine, Hermanopolis, (of old called Cibinium, from the River Cibin, on which it was ſituate) ſo named of one Herman the Founder of it; little inferiour to Vienna for ſtrength or greatneſs, well-fortified both by Art and Nature. 2. Cronſtad, in Latine called Corona, by ſome Braſſovia, by others Stephanopolis, this laſt name given it by Stephen, King of Hungary, who repaired and beautified it. Situate on the borders of Walachia, amongſt fruitfull Mountains, remarkable for a fair Library, a kind of Academy, and the moſt noted Emporie or Mart-Town of all this Country: of great reſort, eſpecially in the time of their publick Fairs, by Turks, Arabians, Greeks, Armenians, Polanders, Walachians, and other Nations. 3. Biſtricium (by the Dutch called Noren) ſo called from the River Biſtrice, which runneth through it: ſo pleaſant and ſo ſweet a Town, that there is no durt or mire to be ſeen at any time; or if there be, the people preſently ſwel up the River, and ſo cleanſe the ſtreets. 4. Medieſus, (by the Dutch, Medniſh) ſo called quaſi medius Conſeſſus, becauſe ſituate in the midſt of the Country; a Town almoſt as neat as Biſtrice. 5. Segoſwaria, or Schesburg, on the declivity of an hill. 6. Zabeſus or Laiz, once the chief Town of the Saxons, but now much decayed; ſituate in a very deep Vally, well-fenced with waters, and thoſe waters well ſtored with fiſh. 7. Clauſenbourg, the Zeugma of Ptolemie, in Latine called Claudiopolis, from Claudius the ſecond, Emperour, by whom re-edified: at firſt a Colonie of the Saxons or Dutch only, but of late times the Hungarians coming in as ſtrangers, were at laſt privileged as Citizens, and inhabit it together with them. The Town well-ſeated in the middle of a pleaſant Plain, encompaſſed with an handſom wall, and beautified with elegant buildings. 8. Alba Julia, now Weiſſenberg, the Apulum of Ptolemie, ſituate on a ſmall brook then called Apnus, (but now Oratas) whence it had the name. Built on the ſide of an hill near the River Maruch, (or Moruſus) over-looking a large and fruitfull Plain: heretofore a Biſhops See, and the ordinary reſidence of the Prince or Vaivod of Tranſylvania; but now a garriſon of Hungarian Souldiers, holding it for the Emperour, as King of Hungarie.

Chief Towns belonging to the Hungarians, and by them inhabited, are 1. Varadin, much mentioned in the ſtories of theſe later times, ſince the invaſions of the Turks; ſituate on the borders of Hungarie. 2. Thorda, built in or near the place where ſtood the Salinæ of Ptolemie, ſo called from the abundance of Salt-pits which were then about it. 3. Enguedine, by the Romans called Annium, from a Cauſey leading to it, raiſed by one Annius, and from him ſo named; ſome fragments whereof are ſtill remaining. 4. Deva, remarkable for a vein of the beſt Wines. 5. Fennſchium, affording very pleaſant Wines alſo, not inferiour to thoſe of Vennſium in Italy. 6. Zilahi, 7. Gela, of which little memorable. 8. Millenback, not far from which, betwixt it and the Town of Bros, is a very ſtrong fortreſſe, commanding a ſtrait and narrow paſſage leading into this Country out of Hungarie.

In the North part hereof lyeth the Province called ZACULEIA, inhabited by the Scyculi, or old brood of Scythians; brought hither by Attila, on his firſt conqueſt of this Country; and here ſtill continuing. A people which have much in them of the antient Huns, and had heretofore a peculiar liar language to themselves; but now they speak the Hungarian generally, differing in the Dialect only. But though, by the necessity of commerce and co-habitation, they are brought into the same language; they still retain their antient customs, governed by their own Laws, and living after the same manner as the Switzers doe: each of their Cantons (seven in number) being absolute in and of it self, but all united with the Transylvanians, and with one another, for defence of the whole Country, against the several pretensions of the German and Turkish Emperors. And though they do acknowledge some subjection to the Emperor, as King of Hungarie; yet it is but what they list themselves: being antiently privileged from all taxes, more than the paying of a Bull for every houshold, in the way of an Herriot, at the Coronation of the new King, when and how oft soever it may chance to happen. Their Cantons (Seds they call them,) are 1 Sepsi, 2 Orbay, 3 Kisdy, 4 Czyk, 5 Gyrgio, or Udvarheli, 6 Marous Zeek, and 7 Aranias Zeek; so called from the chief town in each division. In former times no Nobleman, nor any one of better means and greater eminence than other, was known amongst them: but now of late, that parity (or confusion rather) is grown out of credit, and some begin to over-top the rest both in power and title, as in other places. Transylvania.

The first Inhabitants of the old Dacia, whereof this Province was a part, were the Anarti, Tauriſci, Rhatacenſii, Cancoenſii, the Burredenſii, and Biephi, &c. first conquered by Lysimachus, the great and mighty King of Thrace, one of the renowned Captains of Alexander the Great; in token whereof, innumerable medals, in the age of our Grandfathers, were found in this Country, having his Image on the one side, and this word Victoria on the other. How they were afterwards subdued by the Emperor Trajan, and quitted by Aurelianus, hath been shewn already. Being forsaken by the Romans, it was won by the Goths; their constant dwelling, till forced over the Danow by the Hunns, the next possessors of this Countrie; the road or thorow-fare from that time of those barbarous Nations, which out of Asia made their inroads on the Europeans. Having been successively subdued by the Sclaves and Rosses, this part hereof was conquered by Stephen the first King of Hungarie, surnamed the Saint; by whose perswasion and inducements, they received the Gospel. Governed after this time, as a member of that Kingdom, by a Deputy whom they called the Vaivod of Transylvania, (the word Vaivod signifying as much as Præfectus Militiæ, or a Lord Lieutenant;) a man by reason of the greatnesse of his place and power, of most authoritie in that Kingdom. The names and succession of these Vaivods, till the time of John Huniades, comes imperfectly to us; but after that more clear and constant in this order following.

The VAIVODS and PRINCES of TRANSYLVANIA.

1 John, surnamed Huniades, made Vaivod hereof by Uladislaus the 4th. A man of great valour and renown, the great Defender of his Countrie against the Turks; whom he overthrew in many battels, especially in that of Marous, where he slew 50000 of them. He died about the year 1458.

2 Stephen, of the noble family of Battori, Vaivod in the time of Matthias king of Hungarie, the son of Huniades.

3 Stephen II. surnamed de Sepusio, from the place of his Honour or Estate, not so much memorable for any thing, as for being Father of Barbara, the wife of Sigismund king of Poland, and of 4 John II. called also de Sepusio, after the death of Lewis the 2d. chosen king of Hungarie, of whom before, amongst the kings of that Realm.

1526 5 Americus, Bishop of Veradium, made Vaivod by John de Sepusio, on his taking of the Crown of Hungarie; treacherously murdered for not complying with the Turks, Anno 1534.

1540 6 Stephen III. surnamed Mailat, a noble Hungarian, but extremely ambitious, having not long after the death of Americus usurped the Vaivodship; was in the year 1540. confirmed in that dignity.

1541 7 Stephen IV. son of John de Sepusio the late king of Hungary, by Solyman the Magnificent made Vaivod of Transylvania, being then an Infant; (by whom he had been deprived of his Kingdom of Hungarie not long before) incroached upon not long after by the said Solyman, this Countrey was put into the hands of Ferdinand king of Hungarie, other lands being given to the young Prince in exchange hereof.

1551 8 Stephen V. surnamed Dobus, for his valour shewed against the Turks in defending Agria, made Vaivod of this Country by the said King Ferdinand. But Solyman not liking that this Countrey should be at the Devotion of the Kings of Hungary, conferred the same (under the Vassallage of his Empire) upon one

9 John III. whose Family and surname I have no where found; a professed Champion of the Turks, and as professed an Enemy to Ferdinand and his successors in the kingdom of Hungary.

10 Stephen VI. surnamed Battori, (of which house he was) made Vaivod by the Turk; and afwards on the commendation of Amurath the 3d. chosen king of Poland.

1575 11 Christopher Battori, brother of Stephen, on whose election unto Poland he succeeded here, and was the first who leaving the title of Vaivod, took that of Prince of Transylvania.

Moldavia.

12 Sigiſmund, ſon of Chriſtopher, ſhook off the Turkiſh bondage, defeated many of their Armies, and ſlew ſome of their Baſſas (the Scanderbeg of the times he lived in.) But not being able to hold out againſt ſo potent an adverſary, he reſigned his eſtate to Rodolphus the Emperour; having for it in exchange the Dukedoms of Oppelen and Ratibor in Sileſia, and an annual penſion of 50000 Joachims. But finding his penſion ill paid, he made a new reſignation of it to 1599 13 Andrew Battori, couſin of Sigiſmund, ſlain within the year by the Vaivod of Valachia. After whoſe death

1601 14 Rodolphus Emperor, and king of Hungarie, is admitted Prince of Tranſylvania, on the ſecond reſignation of Sigiſmund. But his Souldiers behaving themſelves with too great inſolence, Sigiſmund was called back again, but never well ſetled: ſo that at laſt he was fain to leave the Country in the power of the Emperor, and retire to Pragne, where, in the year 1613. he died unlamented. In the mean time

1604 15 Juſtine, or Iſtivan, ſurnamed Botſcay, a Nobleman of this Country, made Prince hereof by the Great Turk, and ſupported by him, cleared the Province of the Germans, and being followed by great Companies of thoſe of the Reformed Religion, he not only obtained of the Emperor Rodolphus a confirmation of this eſtate unto himſelf, but liberty of Conſcience, and the Free exerciſe of Religion for both the Nations, preſently after which he died, Decem. 30. 1606.

1607 16 Sigiſmund II. of the noble family of Ragotzie, elected in the February following by the Tranſylvanians; but finding himſelf not able to make his election good againſt the Emperour, and being unwilling to ſubject himſelf unto the Turks, after the end of one year he relinquiſhed the Government, and betook himſelf again to a private life.

1608 17 Gabriel Battori, of the familie of the former Princes, ſucceeded by the favour of Achmet the Great Turk: after whoſe death ſo welcom unto his Neighbours and ſubjects

1630 19 Stephen VII. ſurnamed Ragotzi, on the death of Bethlem Gabour, ſucceeded Prince by the power and favour of the Turk; under whoſe Clientele and protection he doth ſtill enjoy it, (as his predeceſſors did before him) againſt all pretenſions of the Empire and Realm of Hungarie; as on the other ſide, defended by the Emperour, and Crown of Poland, from being made thrall unto the Turks.

2. MOLDAVIA.

MOLDAVIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Sea; on the Weſt, with Tranſylvania; on the North, with the River Nieſter, the Tyras of Ptolemie and the Antients, by which parted from Podolia a Province of POLAND; and on the South, with Walachia.

It is ſo called, as ſome ſay, quaſi Mœtavia, from its nearneſs to the fens of Mœotis; or rather from the Hunnes and other people of thoſe fennes, who poſſeſſed the ſame. Others conceive that it was at firſt called Maurdavia, i.e. nigrorum Davorum Regio, the countrey of the black Davi, (for by the name of Davi were the Dacians called, as we find in Strabo and ſome others:) ſo named from their complexion, or the colour of their Caps and other garments; as Nigra Ruſsia, a near neighbouring Province of the Realm of Poland, on the like occaſion. But the more probable opinion (as I take it) is, that it took this name from the River Moldava, which runneth thorow it; as the Moravians had that name from the River Morava. The nature and Religion of the People we ſhall find in Valachia, whereof antiently reckoned for a part.

The country is very fruitful in corn, wine, graſs, and wood; but more uſed for paſturage than tillage, by reaſon of the great want of people to manure the land: by means wherof it affordeth great plenty of Beef and Mutton, whereby they ſupply ſome parts of Poland, and the populous City of Conſtantinople. And theſe they iſſue out in ſo great a number, that the tenth penny exacted by the Prince or Vaivod, in the way of Cuſtom, amounteth to 150000 Crowns per annum: and yet the Clergy and the Gentry are diſcharged of this impoſt. But the main trade of this Country is not driven by the Natives: the Port-towns being full of Armenians, Jews, Hungarians, and Raguzian Merchants, who foreſtall the Markets, and barter all their corn and wine into Ruſſia and Poland; their ſkins, wax, honey, powdered beef, Pulſe, and butter, into Conſtantinople: it being credibly reported, that from the Ports of this Country no fewer than 500 ſhips laden with corn, victuals, and other proviſions neceſſary to the life of man are yearly ſent unto that City.

The country is in a manner round, the Diameter each way being near upon 300 Engliſh miles: but ſo ill-inhabited by reaſon of the neighbourhood of the Turks, Tartars, and Polonian Coſacks, that certain Engliſh Gentlemen having in the year 1609. travelled at leaſt 240 miles in the country, could meet in all the way but nine towns and villages; and for an hundred miles together, the graſs ſo high that it rotted on the ground for want of Cattel to eat it, and of men to order it. So that we are not to expect in it many eminent Cities, or towns of note: though it afford two Archbiſhops, and two Biſhops Sees; followers (as all the reſt of the people are) of the traditions and doctrines of the Church of Greece.

The

The principal of those which be are 1. Occazoma, or Zucconia, the Vaivods seat. 2. Fucciania, 3. Fazeling, of which little memorable. 4. Kotjm, a place of great strength, on the borders of Poland; by some called Cochina; the ordinary magazeen of the Country. 5 Iassy, commonly called Yas, the chief Town for wealth and trade in all this Province. 6. Bender, a strong Town on the Euxine Sea. 7. Polada near the Danow. 8. Biaclograd, or Bologrove, situate on or near the River Tyras, now called Niester; a strong Town against the Tartars, and Polonians. 9. Kele, anciently called Achilleia, situate on the shores of the Euxine Sea, for the most part compassed round with the waters of it; and therefore said by Ptolemie to be an Iland. 10. Ac-Germen, of old called Asprocastron, and Moncastrum, a very strong Town in the same Coast also: both taken by Bajazet, the second Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1485. But these three Towns are not so properly in Moldavia, at least not in Moldavia properly so called, as in a little Province called Bessarabia, lying on the Euxine; formerly counted part thereof, till conquered by the Turks in the year aforesaid, it became a Member of that Empire. A tract inhabited by the Bessi, in the times of Ptolemie, who being driven out of their Country by the Bulgarians, setled themselves (as some say) in that part of Sclavonia, which is now called Bosnia. Valachia.

The whole Country following the fortune of Transylvania, and the rest of Dacia, till the coming of the Sclaves and Rosses, was for a while accompted part of the Russian Empire; till the dismembring of that Empire by the Tartars. After which it was sometimes Homager to the Polanders, sometimes to the Hungarians, according as the Vaivods or Princes of it could find best conditions. By Mahomet the Great it was made tributary to the Turks; but the tribute at the first very light and easie, not above 2000 Crowns per annum: that mighty Emperour, who aimed at more profitable conquests, being loth to spend his forces on so poor a purchase, as the addition of this Province would have been unto him. But Bajazet his son, finding how fit it lay for the more absolute command of the Euxine Sea, took in that part hereof which is called Bessarabia, reducing it into the form of a Turkish Province, Anno 1485. as before was said; imposing on the rest an increase of the former tribute, and so left it unto the disposal of its natural Princes. After which time the Vaivods fearing to be made Vassals to the Turks, did many times rise in Arms against them; aided therein sometimes by the Hungarians, and sometimes by the Polander; which last pretended to the Soveraignty and chiefage of it. Bogdanus, Vaivod hereof in the time of Selimus the second, uniting himself more closely with the Polonians; became thereby suspected by the Turkish Tyrant, who with a great power chased him out of his Country, and gave the same unto one John a Moldavian born, but bred up for the most part in the Turkish Court (where he renounced his faith, and was circumcised) under the yearly tribute of 60000 Crowns. But John the new made Vaivod, was no sooner setled, but he returned again to his first Religion, and for that cause grew lesse affected by the Turks. Which being observed by the then Vaivod of Valachia, he practised to obtain that dignity for his brother Peter; offering to double the said tribute, and to assist in subjugation of the Country. The Turk accepting of these offers, compounds an Army of 70000 Valachians, 30000 Turks, and 3000 Hungarians, with which they fall into Moldavia: and were so gallantly received by the noble Vaivod, that few of them escaped the slaughter. But being afterwards betrayed by his old friend Czarnieviche; and against faith given barbarously murdered by the Turkish Bassa; Moldavia fell into the hands of the Turks, and was united to that Empire, An. 1574. the Vaivods from that time forwards, being nominated by the Turkish Emperours, and governing as substitutes and Lieutenants for and under them. And though Aaron, one of the succeeding Vaivods, did shake off this yoke, and confederated himself with Sigismund Pr. of Transylvania, and Michael Vaivod of Valachia, for defence of themselves and their Estates, against that enemy: yet being afterwards supplanted by Roswan, one of his own ambitious subjects, and that confederacy disjoynted, it became subject first unto the Polonians, by the power and practice of Zamoyskie, Chancellour of Poland; and then unto Rodolphus, Emperour of Germany; and finally unto the Turk, as before it was. And though the Polanders have since made use of some opportunities, in imposing Vaivods on this Country, in despite of the Turks; yet was it commonly to their own loss, little or no benefit to the Moldavians, and in the end drew the whole power of the Turks upon themselves in the reign of Osman, never since intermedling in the affairs of this Province, but leaving them entirely to the Turks disposing; who receive hence some yearly tribute, but have not hitherto obtained the entire possession of it, so long since aimed at by those Tyrants.

3 VALACHIA.

VALACHIA is bounded on the East, with Moldavia, and a branch of the Ister, or Danubius, bending towards the North; on the West, with Rascia; on the North, with Transylvania, and some part of Moldavia; and on the South, with the Danubius wholly, by which parted from Servia and Bulgaria. First called Flaccia, from one Flaccus, a Noble Roman, who on the conquest hereof in the time of Trajan, brought hither an Italian Colonie; afterwards by corruption Ulachia, and at last Valachia.

But the name of Flaccia or Ulachia, was at first of a more large extent, than it is at present; comprehending all Moldavia also: divided in those times by a ridge of Mountains, into Cisalpina, and Transalpina; the name of Moldavia being afterwards appropriated to the one, and that of Valachia (properly and specially so called) unto the other. The people of both, in token of their first extraction, speak a corrupt Latine or Italian language: but in matters of Religion follow the dictates of the Greek Church, and obey the Patriarch of Constantinople; under whom all Ecclesiastical affairs are governed by one Archbishop, and two Bishops. In other things they partake generally of the rudeness

Valachia. and barbarity of thoſe Nations which have ſince ſubdued them; being a rough-hewn people, hardly civilized, ignorant for the moſt part of letters and all liberal ſciences; not weaned perfectly (in ſo long time of their profeſſion of Chriſtianity) from the ſuperſtitions of the Gentiles; ſwearing by Jupiter and Venus, marying and unmarying at their pleaſures: much given to magical charms, and incantations, and burying with their dead both clothes and victuals, for their relief in that long journey to the other world.

It is in length 500, in breadth 120 miles: the country for the moſt part plain, and very fertile; affording ſtore of Cattel, a breed of excellent horſes, iron-mines, ſalt-pits, and all proviſions neceſſary to the life of man. Some vines they alſo have, and not few mines of gold and ſilver, more than for fear of the Turks and other ill neigbours they dare diſcover: begirt about with woody mountains, which afford them fewel, and very well watered with the Rivers of Pruth, called antiently Hieraſus. 2. Stertius, 3. Fulmina, 4. Teln, 5. Alluta, all of them falling into 6. the Danow; which in this Province, at the influx of Fulmina, takes the name of Iſter. Yet is it not (at the preſent) very populous, the ſpaciouſneſſe and fertility hereof conſidered; by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Tartars, Turks, and Polonian Coſſacks: their late long wars againſt thoſe Nations and the Dutch, having much decreaſed their former numbers; with which they ſo abounded in the times foregoing, that the Vaivod of this Country in the year 1473. was able upon little warning to bring 70000 men into the field for a preſent ſervice.

Places of moſt note herein are 1. Galatz, on the influx of the River Pruth or Hieraſus, into the Danubius; the waters of which River are ſo unwholſome, that it cauſeth the body to ſwell. 2. Treſcortum, not far from which they dig a bituminous earth, ſo refined and pure, that uſually they make Candles of it inſtead of wax. 3. Prailaba, by ſome called Brailovia, the Town of moſt trade in all this Country: ſituate on the Danow, and defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle, fortified by Art, and Nature, and furniſhed with a ſtrong Garriſon of Turks, as the key of this Province, opening the door unto the reſt. The Town moſt cruelly deſtroyed, and razed to the ground, with an incredible ſlaughter of the Inhabitants of all ſexes, and ages, for the ſpace of four days together, by John the Vaivod of Moldavia, ſpoken of before, at his firſt revolting from the Turks: but the Caſtle, in regard of the great ſtrength of it, ſcarce attempted by him. 4. Teina, a Fortreſs of great ſtrength; but in the hands of the Turks alſo. 5. Zorza, corruptly for San-Georgio, ſeated on the Danow, with an arm whereof the Caſtle of it is encompaſſed; garriſoned by the Turks, and by them held to be ſo ſtrong, and ſo ſafe a place, that at the taking of it by Sigiſmund, the Prince of Tranſylvania, Anno 1595. there were found in it 39 great peeces of Ordinance; with ſuch ſtore of Armes and Ammunition as might well have ſerved for a whole kingdom. 6. Tergoviſta, ſometimes the chief City of the Province, and the ordinary reſidence of the Vaivod, till the taking of it by the Turks: once beautified with a fair and famous Monaſtery, by the Turks converted into a fortreſſe, environed with deep trenches, ſtrong Bulwarks upon every quarter, and great ſtore of Ordinance; but many times loſt and got again, acording to the changes and chance of war. 7. Bucareſta, about a days journey from Tergoviſta, ſeated on the Danow, remarkable for two bridges built near unto it: the one of Boats (the laying whereof took up no leſſe than an whole moneths time) for the tranſporting of the Army of Sinan Baſſa, againſt Sigiſmund Prince of Tranſylvania before mentioned; and broken down by the ſaid Baſſa in his flight, having been worſted in all places by the Tranſylvanian. The other was the work of the Emperour Trajan, in his war againſt Decebalus, King of Dacia, built all of ſtone, and laid on piles and Arches of a wonderfull greatneſſe; 24 piles or pillars whereof are yet remaining, to the great admiration of all beholders. 8. Cebum, of old called Lycoſtomos, in vain beſieged by the forces of Mahomet the Great, coming in perſon to ſubdue this petit Province. 9. Zarmizegethuſa, the ſeat Royal of Decebalus king of Dacia, taken and deſtroyed by Trajan in his war againſt him: who cauſing it to be repaired and more beautified than formerly, gave it the privileges of Rome, and the name of Ulpia Trajana; which it retained as long as Dacia was a Province of the Roman Empire. Now a ſmall Village called Vetzel. Some ſtones have been digged up hereabouts with this inſcription, COLONIA ULPIA TRAJANA, AUG. DACIE. ZARMIS: which clearly ſhew as well the dignity and eſteem, as the antiquity of the place, before Trajans times.

This Province, as the reſt of Dacia, on that ſide of the Danow, after the coming in of the Sclaves and Roſſes, was under Princes of their own; whom they called (as thoſe of Tranſylvania and Moldavia did) by the name of Vaivods. Protected by the Hungarian Kings they lived long in peace, till ſenſible of the approaching danger, which the conqueſt of moſt part of Servia, and Bulgaria, by the Turks, was like to bring them; the Vaivod of it, in the time of Bajazet the firſt, paſſed over the Danow with his forces, and having done great ſpoil on the Turkiſh Territories, returned again into his Country. Rather provoked than weakened with which invaſion, Bajazet comes into Valachia, overcomes the Vaivod in a pitched field, compelling him to ſue for peace, and to pay him tribure. But Bajazet being not long after taken Priſoner by Tamerlane, and the ſucceſſion controverted amongſt his ſons, the impoſed tribute was with-held, till Mahomet the fifth King of the Turks, having ſetled the affairs of that tottering State, An. 1417. enforced them to a new compoſition, and the payment of all former reckonings. The fortunate ſucceſſes of Huniades in ſeveral battels, induced them once more to change their Maſters, and to put themſelves under the protection of the Hungarians, as they had been formerly; but they paid dear for it: their Country being made the Thorow-fare of the Turkiſh forces, in their attempts upon that kingdom. But the Hungarians being vanquiſhed at the battel of Caſſova, by Amurath the ſecond; the accuſtomed tribute was brought in, and the Turks ſatisfied for the preſent, being then hardly put to it by the famous Scanderbeg. Not long after, in the year

1462. Mahomet the Great undertook the conquest of this Countrey, upon advertisement that Wladus the then Vaivod of it, intended to joyn with the Hungarians in some war against him: and finding how unprofitably he had spent his Forces, in fighting against woods, mountains, and a wasted Countrey, he set up Dracala the younger brother of Wladus to claim the Government; who making a party amongst the people, and having the Turk for his assistance and support, possessed himself of the estate, to be holden of him as a Vassal to the Turkish Empire. And it continued in this state, the Vaivods being after this at the Turks appointment, and paying all exactions imposed upon them, till the revolt of Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, An. 1595. at what time Michael the then Vaivod hereof, taking that opportunity to shake off this yoak, confederated with him and the Moldavian for their common safety. And though he held out longer against Turk and German, than either of the other did; discomfited the Turks by his own proper forces, at the battel of Nicopolis; vanquished the Transylvanians, and added that Province for a while unto this Estate: yet being at last outed of his countrey by the Polanders, and another put into his place; he was shamefully slain in his own Tent by the privity and consent of Basta, Lieutenant of Rodolphus, Emperour and King of Hungarie. After whose death the countrey miserably distracted betwixt two Vaivods, the one placed by the Emperor Rodolph, and the other by Mahomet the Grand Signieur; endured all the spoil and wrack which so calamitous a competition could bring upon it: till in the end the fortune of the Turks prevailing, the Valachians were constrained to submit unto their disposal, and receive their Vaivods from that Court, as they had done formerly; performing their accustomed duties, and paying such yearly tribute as is laid upon them. Which notwithstanding, partly by their own natural unquietnesse, and partly by the ambition of such persons as contend for that dignity, they have since been many times embroyled in wars; never so quietly composed, but that a new hope, or the artifices of the Turkish Ministers, starts them into action. By means whereof, when they have tired and spent themselves in their own combustions, they may in fine be fully conquered, and made the next addition to the Turkish Monarchy.

Rascia.

Of what revenue these Provinces severally were to their natural Lords, and of what severally to the Turk, I am not able to determine. But look upon them as conjunct, and as they stood at the time of the revolt so often mentioned, and they yeelded one way with another into the Treasury of the Grand Signieur, no less than a million of Ducats yearly. Knolles in his Turkish History doth report it so. And his Continuator doth affirm that Moldavia only, before the said Revolt, did yearly, yield unto the Turk a whole Tun of Gold, 2000 horses for service, 10000 great measures of wheat, with as much barley, and a wonderfull proportion of butter, honey, and other victuals. Adding withall, that the other two Provinces paid as much, or more, for their yearly tribute. After which rate, the Estimate made by Knolles may hold very good. But since the reduction of these Countries to their former obedience, the Turks have been more moderate in their exactions than they were before, for fear of startling them to some new engagement: whom they have brought to this obedience and conformity with such a vast expence both of bloud and treasure, as would have purchased the best Kingdom of Christendom in the open market. Insomuch that the ordinary tribute of Moldavia is now but 40000 Chequins, that of Valachia but 24000 of the same coin: Besides a 1000 horses yearly sent from both. Such bribes and presents as are given by the Vaivods hereof, either to get or hold their places, being merchantable ware, and wholly at the Turks disposing, not being part of this accompt.

4. RASCIA.

RASCIA is bounded on the East, with Valachia; on the West, with Hungarie; on the North, with Transylvania; and on the South, with the River Danow; encompassed on three sides with that River, and another now called Temes, by the Latines, Samus; and on the East divided from Valachia by the River Alluta. Called Rascia from the Rasciani, a Sclavonian people, whom Ortelius placeth in this tract, and from him Maginus. But here it is to be observed, that, besides this Country, the Rascians held some Towns and Territories on the other side of the Danow, and amongst others the strong Town of Chrysonicum, whereof more anon.

The Country poor enough, but the people poorer, oppressed in former times by the Servians, and of late by the Turks, which makes them valiant and adventurous upon all occasions, as commonly those people are, who give themselves the hope of bettering those fortunes which they cannot make worse. Places of most note here, 1. Bodon, a town of trade, on the Danow, memorable for the Marts or Fairs which are here held annually. 2. Zarnovia, 3. Covin, 4. Novebarde, 5. Severin, not far from which, betwixt it and Bucarest a town of Valachia, are the remainders of Trajans bridge before mentioned. 6. Colambes, and 7. Columbella, of which little memorable.

These Rascians, as before is said, were a tribe of Sclaves, setled in this country at the time of their first spreading in the East, and here continuing ever since in possession of it. Governed at first by their own Princes, whom by a name borrowed from the Grecians, they called their Despots: that being once the title of the heir apparent, or designed successor of the Eastern Empire; as Cæsar had been formerly in the Empire of Rome, and Monsieur in the same sense in the Realm of France, to signifie the eldest Brother, (if Heir apparent to the Crown) of the King in being. But as the following Emperours did affect new titles, so that of Despot fell from one step to another, till given at last unto the Governours of Provinces; as the Despot of Epirus, Peloponnesus, &c. and in the end assumed by the several Princes of Rascia, Servia, and Bulgaria. How this estate became united unto Servia, I am yet to seek: but sure I am it was united in the person of George, Despot of Servia, and as a part of his estate surprized by Amurath the second: who boasted his success therein (in a speech made unto his souldiers at the siege of Belgrade) notwithstanding that he had to strive with hunger, thirst, labour, and desperation. Nor have I found at what time, or under whose conduct they passed over Danubius, and there possessed themselves of Chrysonicum, and some other towns and territories on that side of the river, which they still retain; either surrounded by the Servians, or at least intermingled with them; which makes some writers of opinion that the Rascians and the Servians, are but one and the same People under divers names; to which conjecture they, being subject to the same Prince, gave some further ground. But whensoever they passed over, most probable it is, that proving either troublesom neighbours, or unwelcom Guests, they gave occasion to the Despots of Servia to make war upon them; and having vanquished them on that side of the River, to carry the war over unto this, till in the end the whole Country was made subject to them. Added to Servia, they fell together with it into the power of the Turks, as was said before. But being more impatient of the yoke than the Servians were, they did the Turks much mischief many times, as they came in their way; never so much nor so effectually, as when Mahomet the 3d. warred against the Hungarians; at what time they frequently distressed his Armies, by cutting off his men, and intercepting the provisions of arms and victuals intended for the great Army of Sinan Bassa. After which, at the time when Sigismund Pr. of Transylvania had won so many noble victories against the Turks, 10000 of these Rascians casting off that yoke offered themselves unto his service; the only memorable actions which are told us of them; though this last was only the attempt of some private Adventurers, the whole Nation still continuing in obedience, as before they did. But following (as they did) the fortunes of Servia, and having a concernment on that side of the water, we shall there say something further of them.

Thus have we seen when, and by what means the whole Province of Old Dacia became in part subject, and in part tributary to the Turks. It is now time to passe over the Danow, and look upon the other part of this Province, called Dacia nova, or New Dacia; containing after our accompt four Provinces of the Roman Empire, that is to say, both Mysias, Scythia, and Dardania, besides the two Dacias, Mediterranea and Ripensis, interjected betwixt the two Mysias, as before is said: all now reduced only unto two of the Turkish Provinces, namely the Countries of Servia and Bulgaria.

5. SERVIA.

SERVIA is bounded on the East, with Bulgaria; on the West, with Bosnia, and some part of the Lower Hungarie; on the North, with the Danubius, by which parted from Rascia, and some part of Valachia; on the South, with Albania, and part of Macedon. It containeth all Mysia superior, and a great part of Dardania; and took this new name from the Servii, or Sorabi, a Sclavonian people, of whom more hereafter.

This Country, with the neighbouring Rascia, and the modern Sclavonia, was first converted to the Faith by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius, formerly remembred, between the year 860. and 890. of both which there is reserved some especial Monuments. For Methodius having obtained both of the Patriarch of Constantinople, and the Pope of Rome, that the Nations by them converted might celebrate all divine Offices in their natural Language, translated the whole Bible into the Sclavonian tongue, which still they have amongst them in high esteem. And Cyril is said to have devised the Servian Character, not used in this Country only (though here originally) but also in Rascia, Bulgaria, Bosnia, Moldavia, and most parts of Russia: which Character from this Cyril (or Chiuril, as they prononnce it) is still called Chiurlizze.

The Country very rich and fruitfull, before the conquest of it by the Turks, well stored with mines of gold, and silver, especially about Zerbenic, a strong town hereof. The people rude and grosse, and much given to wine; false of their promises, and that upon slight occasions; so that there is but little trust to be laid upon them.

Chief Rivers of this Country are 1. Colubra, and 2. Lim, falling into the Savus; 3. Ibar, falling into the 4. Morava; as that into the Danow at Chrysonicum, or Crusoveccia, a strong town of the Rascians. Principal towns hereof 1. Nissa, the Nessum as I take it of Ptolemie; by whom said to be a City of the Dardanians; now the Metropolis of this Countrey, and the key thereof: besieged and taken by Amurath, the third King of the Turks, Anno 1367. 2. Vidina, by the Turks called Kiratow, taken by Feris Beg, in the beginning of Bajazet the first, and ever since the seat of a Turkish Sanziack under the Beglerbeg or Bassa of Temeswar. 3. Cratova, and 4. Zerbenic, rich in silver mines; a great temptation to the Turks to invade this Country. 5. Simandria, or Senderovia, by some called Spenderobe; by the Hungarians, Zendrem; by the Turks, Semunder; situate on the Danow not far from Belgrade, and taken by Amurath the second, An. 1438. since governed by a Turkish Sanziack under the Beglerbeg of Buda. 6. Novegrad, in the borders hereof, fortified with an impregnable Castle. 7. Stonibourg (in Latin, Stovibrigadun) the ordinary seat of the antient Despots. 8. Prisden, said by Mercator to be the birth-place of the Emperour Justinian; most like to be Taurestum, a City of the Dardanians, mentioned by Procopius, who maketh it the birth-place of that Emperour; by whom repaired and fortified with four great Turrets, thence called Tetrapyrgon. But others (more probably) make him to be born at Lochrida, a town of Bulgaria; of which more hereafter. 9. Scopi, by Ptolemie called Scupi, and 10. Ulpianum, first built by Trajan, whose fore-name was Ulpius; afterwards re-edified by the said Justinian, and called Secunda Justiniana, (Justiniana Prima being in Bulgaria:) now a poor Village called led Pirethy, as Lazius; or Czanadre, as Marius Niger is of opinion. 11. Rhætiaria, by Ptolemie for distinction sake, called Rhætiaria Mysorum, then the chief City of the Mœsians; of which now no ruins are remaining. 12. Raveniczen, the Vendenis of Ptolemie, but not else observable. Servia.

Besides these Towns, and many other of less note which properly belong to this Province of Servia, the Rascians also hold some towns on this side of Danubius, the chief whereof is Chrysonicum, or Crysovectia, an old Town, almost wholly ruinated, till repaired and fortified by the Turks, An. 1449. who marking the convenient situation of it on the Banks of Danubius, near to the fall or influx of the River Morava, and how commodiously it stood, both to command and to annoy the rest of this Country, and for transporting of their forces to the other side of that great River, made it their first work to possess themselves of it, and have held it ever since with a very strong Garrison: Such other Towns as the Rascians have on this side of the River, or of lesser note, are looked on by our Author but as Towns of Servia, (by the Despots whereof they were long since Conquered) where before we had them.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey, such as are most considerable in the story of it, were the Bastarnæ, the Dardani, and the Mœsi: the Tricorneſii, and Piceniſii, spoken of by Ptolemie, being either branches of the Mœsi, or else an obscure people not worth the looking after. Of these the Dardanians were most antient, inhabiting near Mount Hæmus, on the borders of Macedon; a barbarous people, and perpetual Enemies of that Crown; most mischievous in their attempts and designs against it, in the declining state thereof, making great and frequent inroads into that wealthy Country, with the spoils whereof they inriched themselves. Insomuch that Philip the Father of Perseus finding no other likely means to be rid of that trouble, negotiated with the Bastarnæ, a strong and hardy Nation that dwelt beyond the Danubius, to abandon their own dwellings, and come to him with their wives and children; promising to assist them in rooting out the Dardanians, and give them possession of their Country. But Philip dying as the Bastarnæ were in their march through Thrace, & no care taken by his son to pursue the business, they returned all home again, except 30000, which peirced into Dardania, and made their own fortunes as they could. This practice, as it gave matter of quarrel to the Romans, against the Macedonian; so it occasioned Perseus the son of Philip, to make use of these Bastarnæ against the Romans; at whose request 10000 horse, and as many foot passed over the Danow, under the conduct of Claudicus, a King amongst them. But finding that Perseus was too strait-laced to part with money for their pay, they returned again; forraging the Countrey as they passed: but whether they passed over that River, or mingled themselves with the rest of their Nation, who upon Philips invitation had before come over, that I do not find. Howsoever, coming by this means acquainted with the sweets of this Country, divers of them came over hither in the following times, incorporating with the Dardanians, or bordering near them; insomuch as Tacitus for the most part joyns them both together, either as the same, or a neighbouring Nation; first vanquished and added to the Roman Empire by C. Curio Scribonius, immediately upon the end of the civil wars, raised by Spartacus and the Fencers, or Gladiatores: the Mysians, or the Mœsi, being broken at the same time also, An. U. C. 681. As for the Mœsi, being the last and greatest of these Nations, they were most probably a Colonie of the Mysians of the lesser Asia, antiently called Mysi, and the Country Mysia, as those Asians were; and as those Europeans are by the Greek writers generally, and by Florus and some others amongst the Latines: though after, for distinction sake, Tacitus, Pliny, Virgil, and generally most Latine Authors give them the name of Mœsi. A fierce and savage people they were held to be, Barbari barbarorum, as my Author calleth them; more barbarous than commonly the Barbarians were: but for all that, subdued by M. Licinius Crassus in the time of Augustus Cæsar, who overcame them in two battels, and after vanquished the Bastarnæ, and their King Deldo, whom he killed in fight; the Countrey reckoned after that as a Roman Province. Continuing in this estate, till the fall of the Eastern Empire, when it was subjected by the Sclavi, or Sarmatians of Europe; and in the division of the spoil fell unto the Sorabi, a Sclavonian people; contractedly called Sorbi, and at last Serbi, Servi, and the Countrey Servia. Reduced again to the obedience of the Eastern Emperours by Basilius Porphyrogenitus, Anno Ch. 1000. or thereabouts; more absolutely conquered by John and Manuel Comnenus, two of his successors: but so as they were suffered to live under their own Princes, whom they called Despots; Homagers to the Empire, and depending on it. Inriched with the Conquest and addition of Rascia (the certain time whereof I have no where found) They were first set on by the Turks in the time of Lazarus the Despot, from whom Amurath the first took the town of Nissa, being the chief of all this Country: provoked thereto by the great forces which the Servian and Bulgarian Despots had raised against him, for the siege of Adrianople. And though Lazarus terrified with this loss, made his peace with Amurath: yet after he brake out again into open war, in which he was overcome and slain in the plains of Cassova, whereof more anon. To Lazarus succeeded Stephen, who quietly enjoyed his Dominions here; the Turks being in the mean time embroyled in war amongst themselves, by the sons of Bajazet. But that difference being once composed, and Mahomet absolutely setled in his Fathers throne; the Turks begun again to pursue this quarrel: which George the son of Stephen compounded with Amurath the second, son of Mahomet, paying the Turk an yearly tribute, and giving him his daughter Mary for a Wife or Concubine. But this alliance did not so well unite their affections, (though George did many ill offices in regard thereof to his Christian neighbours) nor so well settle his estate: but that Amurath in fine dispossessed him first of Rascia, and afterwards of Servia also, for letting Huniades escape; whom he had in his power. And though Amurath was necessitated to restore Servia again, upon the peace made with Uladislaus the King of Hungarie; yet Mahomet the Great, on the death death of George, soon possessed himself of it. For Lazarus the youngest of Georges sons, having deprived Stephen and George his elder Brethren (whose eyes Amurath had before put out, to make them uncapable of the Government) of the principality; compelled them to seek to Mahomet for aid. But dying whilest these matters were in agitation, his widow put her self and her three sons Peter, John, and Martin, under the protection of the Hungarians; and by that means, but with much trouble and many difficulties (the blind Brethren still soliciting the Turks against her) held the State a while: till the people finding no assurance in that kind of government, and weary of the daily harms they received from the Turks, yeelded themselves absolutely to the power of Mahomet, about the Year 1460, continuing ever since a Province of the Turkish Empire.

6. BULGARIA.

BULGARIA is bounded on the East, with the Euxine Sea; on the West, with Servia; on the North, with the River Danow, which is here called Ister; on the South, with Thrace. Called formerly by the name of Mysia inferior, as lying lower than the other on the course of that River; as Servia, lying up the water, was called Mysia superior. Afterwards it was reckoned of as a part of Dacia, and in that notion was the Birth-place of Galerius, one of the Cæsars in the Empire of Diocletian; born in this countrie near the borders of Thrace, not far from the Citie of Sardica: who therefore in the Martyrologies of the middle times, was called by the name of Dacianus. Finallie, it took this name from the Bulgars, a Scythian people, who in the Year 566. possessed themselves of it.

The Countrie for the most part full of sharp and rugged hills, branches of the great Mountain Hæmus, which divides it from Thrace, and spread themselves over all this Province, insomuch that even the midlands of it are rough and stonie: and though the lower parts have some plains and vallies, yet are they generally full of Woods and Deserts, the most unpleasant, and least peopled part of both the Dacias. The Inhabitants hereof in some conformity to the counrrie, are patient of all toil and labour, and not easily tired; but nothing is more troublesom than their conversation: more full of courage, than of valour; their courage not proceeding by the rules of reason, but issuing only out of brutishness, or a natural fierceness.

They first received the Christian Faith towards the later end of Justinian the 2d. who died in the year 713. Trebellius being then their Prince; afterwards by the perswasion of Leo the 4th. surnamed Porphyrogenitus, about the year 789. But those Conversions being but partial, and for private ends, they relapsed shortly after to their former Gentilism: not totally gained unto the Gospel, till the Empire of Michael and Theodora, in the year of Grace, 860. Subject since that unto the Jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople: but not without great opposition of the Popes of Rome, who laid claim unto them.

Places of most note in it, are 1. Axium, or Axiopolis, on the banks of Danubius, which from this town begins to take the name of Ister. It is now called Colonamich, of no great fame otherwise. 2. Dinogetia, by Antonine called Dinigutia, now Drimago, situate also on the Ister, opposite to the influx of of Hierasus, and the town of Galatz. 3. Mesembria, situate on the Euxine, and still retaining the old name; in Strabo, by some errour of the Transcribers, called Menebria. 4. Marcianopolis, on the Ister, or Danubius also, built by Trajan in honour of Marcia his sister, whence it had the name: in vain besieged by the Goths, at their first irruptions on this countrie; and afterwards much mentioned in the stories of that warlike people, for many bickerings, and some great battels they had near it with the Emperor Claudius; in one of which overthrown by him with a mighty slaughter. 5. Nicopolis, (by the Turks called Nigebol) built by the same Trajan on the Danow, at the fall of the River Jatre, at his return from the conquest of Dacia, whence the occasion of the name; the word Nicopolis signifying the City of Victory: sufficiently memorable for the founder of it, more for the many great battels fought near unto it; whereof two the principal. The first, that of Sigismund the Emperor and King of Hungary, besieging it with an Army of 130000 Christians, in the time of Bajazet the first (whose father Amurath had taken it from the K. of Bulgaria) the issue of which siege was this, that Bajazet coming to raise the siege, obtained the victorie with the loss of 60000 Turks: the army of the Christians being wholly routed, 20000 slain, all the rest almost taken prisoners, and the young Emp. forc'd to flie by Sea to Thrace, thence unto Constantinople, afterwards to Rhodes; and at last, after 18 months absence, to his Realm of Hungary. The other (as it were in revenge of this) was fought betwixt Michael Vaivod of Valachia, and the forces of Mahomet the third, over whom the Vaivod got a remarkable victorie: and as the fruits thereof, sacked the Citie it self, carrying thence great spoil and bootie, & infinite multitudes of people; with some whereof he made up his Army, sending the rest to inhabit and manure the void and desert places of his own Dominions. 6. Sophia, called Tibiscum in the time of Ptolemie, repaired by the Emperour Justinian, who gave it this name, from a famous and magnificent Temple, founded and dedicated by him unto St. Sophia. The ordinary Residence for these late times of a Turkish Beglerbeg, who hath the chief command of Europe under the grand Signieur: once taken by Huniades, and by him at the command of Uladislaus King of Hungary, burnt unto the ground; but afterwards repaired, and more strongly fortified, than it had been formerly. 7. Varna, antiently called Dionysiopolis, situate on the Euxine Sea, near the borders of Thrace: remarkable for the great defeat there given the Christians, the first flight of Huniades from the face of the Turks, and the death of Uladislaus King,

King of Hungary, ſpoken of before. 8. Sumium, 9. Pezechium, 10. Calacriam, 11. Galata, and 12 Macropolis; all taken by the Hungarians in their way to Varna, and loſt again upon the iſſue of that battel. 13. Silliſtria, at this time the chief City hereof, and the ordinary abode of a Turkiſh Baſſa: delivered to Amurath the firſt, by Saſmenos, Prince or King of Bulgaria, out of a vain hope to ſave thereby the reſt of his Country. 14 Paraſtlaba, or Perſtlaba, the antient ſeat of the Kings of Bulgaria; till the taking of it by John Zimiſces Emperour of Conſtantinople, by whom cauſed to be called Johannopolis: but it ſoon loſt that new name, and is now an ordinary Village called Peretalaw. 15. Ternova, the uſual ſeat or reſidence of the later Princes of this Country, at the conqueſt of it by the Turks. 16. Budina, once of great importance, and the chief of this Country; but being taken by Huniades in the courſe of his victories, it was by him burnt down to the ground, as having been the cauſe of much war to the Chriſtians there: ſuppoſed to be built in or near the place, where once ſtood the old City of Oeſcus, the principal Town of the Triballi, called therefore Oeſcus Triballorum; though ſome will have that City to be now called Blida. 17. Venuzina, a Town of great ſtrength, and one of the firſt peeces taken by the Turks. 18. Coſſova, fatal to the Chriſtians, who in the plains hereof had two main defeats. The firſt by Amurath the firſt, who here diſcomfited Lazarus the Deſpot of Servia, and the greateſt Army that the Chriſtians ever raiſed againſt the Turks: Lazarus himſelf being ſlain in the fight, and Amurath himſelf ſhortly after the battel ſtabbed in the belly by one Miles Cobelitz, a wounded and half dead ſouldier, as he was taking a view of the dead bodies which lay there in heaps. The laſt by Amurath the ſecond to the famous Huniades, whom he here diſcomfited after a cruel fight continuing three days together: in which were ſlain 17000 Chriſtians, and amongſt them the greateſt part of the Hungarian Nobility; Huniades put again to flight, and forced to ſome extremities to preſerve his life: the Turks buying this great victory with the loſs of 40000 men, as themſelves confeſſed. The place in which theſe fields were fought, called the Plains of Coſſova, extendeth 20 miles in length, and 5 miles in breadth, incompaſſed round with pleaſant Mountains, in the form of a Theater; as if it were deſigned by Nature for a ſtage of action. 19. Doroſtorum, by ſome of the Antients called Rhodoſtolon, the ſeat in Ptolemies time of the firſt Legion called Italica; afterwards one of the chief Town which the Roſſes and Ruſſians had in this Country: from whom taken by John Zimiſces the Eaſtern Emperour, decaying after that time by little and little, and now wholly ruinate. 20. Achrida, the birth-place of Juſtinian, by whom beautified and enlarged, and called Juſtiniana Prima: who raiſing the Dioceſſe of Dacia into a Præfecture, placed here a Primate for the affairs of the Church, (which honour it doth ſtill retain, the Biſhop hereof being the Primate of all Dacia) and a Præfectus Prætorio, for affairs of State. But he being dead, the Town returned to its old name, now called L' Ochrida, contracted by William of Tyre to Acre; by the Turks called Giuſtandil; a diſtinct Principate of it ſelf in the time of Amurath the firſt, and by him made tributary at his firſt war with this Country. Rulgaria.

And here it is to be obſerved, that thoſe parts of this Country which lie next to the Euxine Sea, had antiently the name of Pontus, as had ſome parts of Aſia Minor, which bordered on the ſame Sea alſo: and that the City of Tome, as Ptolemie, or Tomos, as Pliny calls it, to which Ovid was baniſhed by Auguſtus Cæſar, was a City of this Europæan Pontus, and not of the Aſian, as hath been commonly conceived. For Tomi is by Ptolemie placed amongſt the Cities of Mœſia inferior, and by Ovid on the Weſt or left ſide of the Euxine, and not upon the South thereof, as appeareth by theſe lines of his.

Cum maris Euxini poſitos ad læva Tomitas

that is to ſay,

My wronged Princes wrath commands me bide
At Tomos on the Euxines Weſtern ſide.

The place at this day called Tomiſwar, according to Cœlius Calcagnius; but others would have it to be the ſame which is now named Kiovia, in the ſame tract alſo; not far from which is ſaid to be a Lake called to this day Owidow Jezcocoor, the Lake of Ovid. For what cauſe hither baniſhed is not yet agreed on. Some ſay it was for the unlawfull pleaſures which he enjoyed with Julia the Emperours daughter, whom he celebrates in his Amorum under the borrowed name of Corinna. Others imagine that he had ſeen Auguſtus himſelf unnaturally uſing the company of the ſame Julia, his daughter; for which the offended Prince exiled him: and that he alludeth hereunto in his book de Triſtibus, ſaying, Cur aliquid vidi? cur noxia lumina feci, &c. A Crime, of which I dare not think that noble Emperour to be any way guilty. But certain it is, that whatſoever was the true reaſon of it, that which was openly pretended was the writing of thoſe laſcivious and inflammatory Books de Arte amandi, tending to the debauchment of youth, and corruption of manners, which he in divers places of his works acknowledgeth for the cauſe thereof.

But to return unto the buſineſſe of this Country, the antient Inhabitants hereof were towards the Eaſt the Troglodytæ dwelling near the mouth or fall of the River Peuce into the Euxine or Black Sea; the Peucini inhabiting on the very mouth of it, and in a little Iſland oppoſite thereunto called alſo Peuce, now Pizina, the Cribizi, Piarenſii, and Dimenſii: the Weſtern parts being wholly taken up by the Tri- balli, the moſt potent Nation of them all: who only had the happineſſe to vanquiſh Philip, King of the Macedonians. For Philip having, or pretending a quarrel againſt Mataas a King of the Sarmatians, entred his Country, overthrew him in a ſet fight, carried with him great booties, and among other things, 20000 Mares, for breed, which he took in the battel: it being the cuſtom of the Scythians and Sarmatians, to uſe Mares only in their wars; becauſe their not ſtopping in the midſt of a race to piſſe, could be no impediment to them in their flight. In his return homeward, theſe Triballi deny him paſſage through their country, unleſſe they might partake of the ſpoils. This being denyed, they fall from words to blowes, and next to a pitched field. In which fight Philip was wounded with an Arrow, which paſſing thorow his thigh nailed him to his ſaddle: his horſe being galled with the wound, falling down to the ground. Which the frighted Macedonians ſeeing, and ſuppoſing him dead, fled out of the field, leaving all their ſpoils to the Triballi, as if they had been ſent out only to be their Receivers. So true an obſervation is it, that the very life-blood of an Army runs chiefly in the veins of the General, or ſupreme Commander. Overtopped after this by the Mœſi, or mingled with them, they were firſt broken by the Romans under the conduct of C. Curio Scribonius, ſpoken of before, the abſolute conqueſt of them and the reſt of the Mœſians being reſerved for the times of Auguſtus Cæſar. By him or his ſucceſſors, the whole Country of the Mœſians being caſt into two Provinces, this part of it had the name of Mœſia inferior; that lying Weſtward up the Water being called Mœſia ſuperior, for diſtinctions ſake. By the Emperour Aurelianus, the Dacians being forced from the other ſide of the Danow, by the barbarous Nations, or by him prudently removed to avoid their fury, were planted here betwixt both the Myſias, divided afterwards into two Provinces, taken out of the other, Mediterranea, and Ripenſis: which with the help of the higher Myſia, Dardania, Prevalitana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Dioceſe of Dacia, as before was ſaid. The reſidue hereof now paſſing under the name of Bulgaria, was afterwards divided into two Provinces alſo: another Province being taken out of the Eaſt parts of the Lower Mœſia, lying betwixt the River Phaniſſus, and the moſt northern branch of the Iſter, which they called Scythia, becauſe the Aroteres a Scythian people did once poſſeſs it; the Romans ambitiouſly affecting to be thought the Conquerors of that unconquerable Nation. Succeſſively by the Goths and Huns was this Country taken from the Romans: recovered again in or before the time of Juſtinian, who had here his Officers; ſubordinate to the Vicar or Lieutenant of Thrace, to which Dioceſe they properly belonged.

But long they held not in that State; The Sclavonians firſt, and after the Bulgarians, being maſters of them. Of the firſt of theſe enough hath been ſaid elſewhere. Theſe later being a Scythian people inhabiting on the banks of the River Volga, were at firſt called Volgari, afterwards Bulgari: though ſome conceive they had the name of Bulgarians from Bulgar, the chief Town of their Nation; but both uncertain. In the time of the Emperour Anaſtaſius, they made their firſt ſally into the Provinces of the Empire, forraging Illyricum and Thrace: afterwards in the reign of Heraclius hired by Coſrhoes the Perſian (with many other barbarous Nations) to beſiege Conſtantinople. In the reign of Conſtantine, ſurnamed Pogonatus, conquering or caſting out the Sclaves, they planted themſelves in theſe Countries; compelling the Emperour to compound with them for a ſum of money, from making any further inroad into his Dominions. From this time forwards, we find their Princes called by the name of Kings of the Bulgarians; the firſt of which after their ſetling in theſe parts, was Trebellius, or Trebellis, as ſome call him, the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Bulgarians, by whom Juſtinian the ſecond was firſt reſtored unto the Empire, of which he had been outed by Abſimarus; and afterwards well beaten by them, and forced to flie unto Conſtantinople on ſome breach between them. Growing into good terms with the Eaſtern Emperours, they aided them againſt the Saracens then beſieging the Imperial City; of whom they ſlew 22000 as they were forraging the Country: and in the time of Leo the fourth, called Porphyrogenitus, they became Homagers to the Empire, by whoſe perſwaſion Telericus King of the Bulgarians received the Sacrament of Baptiſm; and thereupon was honoured by him with a wife of the Imperial family, and the honourable title of a Patrician. After this time the Kings hereof had many privileges indulged them by the Conſtantinopolitans, not uſually communicated unto other Princes, viz. their Crown of gold, their tiar or cap of ſilk, and their red ſhoes for their Regal; which were alſo the Imperial ornaments. To theſe Kings alſo, and to theſe only, did the Greek Emperours allow the title of Βασιλεὺς, as being meerly Imperial. Other Kings they called Ρηγὰς, from the Latine word Reges. Inſomuch that when Baſilius Macedo had received letters from Pope Adrian the ſecond, wherein Lewis the ſecond the Weſtern Emperour was called Baſileus; he raſed out that Imperial attribute, and diſpatched an Embaſſie to Lewis, wherein he challenged it as his own peculiar Epithete. Some quarrels after falling out, Crunus the Bulgarian King, in the time of Nicephorus ſucceſſor to the Empreſſe Irene, invadeth Thrace, taketh the City of Sardica, killeth that Emperour in his tent, and worſteth Michael (who ſucceeded) in the open field; Meſembria, a principal City of this Country being taken and ranſacked by him. But Bogor, of another temper, not only did receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm, which many of his Predeſſors had intermitted; but brought his ſubjects (who rebelled on the change of Religion, and thereupon were fought with, and vanquiſhed by him) to the ſame faith alſo: gratified for that cauſe by Theodora the Empreſſe, with ſome large acceſſion unto his eſtate. After long wars betwixt the Bulgarians and the following Emperours, the fortune of the Conſtantinopolitan did at laſt prevail: Samuel King of the Bulgarians being overthrown, 15000 of his ſouldiers taken and deprived of ſight; and the country conquered by Baſilius the ſecond, ſurnamed Porphyrogenitus. Anno 1015. from that time tributary to the Empire: to which they did good ſervice in the time of Conſtantinus Ducas, uſing their help againſt the Uzi, a new ſwarm of Scythians, thians, passing over the Ister with an Army of 60000 fighting men, and wasting Macedon and Greece. The like did John another of the King, thereof, aiding the Greeks against the Latines, whom they overthrew with a great slaughter, Baldwin the Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople being taken prisoner, sent in bonds to Termova, and there cruelly murdered, An. 1206. Nor were they wanting to assist them against the Turks, when they grew dangerous to that Empire, by the taking of Adrianople: for the recovery whereof, they raised a great and puissant Army, unfortunately discomfited by the Forces of Amurath the first, Anno 1369. Provoked with which invasion, Amurath having setled his affaires in Asia, with an Army of 30000 falleth into Bulgaria; takes divers places of importance, and prevailed so far, that Sasmenos the last Prince hereof, wrapping his winding sheet about him, to shew that he had deserved death, prostrates himself most abjectly at the Tyrants feet, offering to put Silliſtria (his strongest City) into his possession. For not performance of which offer, his Country is again invaded, most part of it taken from him; permitted to enjoy the rest upon hard conditions, as vassal and tributary to the Turk. But Bajazet, Amuraths successor, not content herewith picked a quarrel with him, and made an absolute conquest of Bulgaria; converting it unto a Province of the Turkish Empire, Anno 1396. In which State it hath ever since continued, governed by three Turkish Sanziacks under the Beglerbeg of Greece: the Sanziacks residing at Nicopolis, Silliſtria, and Sophia, in which last the Beglerbeg himself doth sometimes reside. Bulgaria.

There are in DACIA

Archbishops. Bishops.

And so much for DACIA.

MOVNT HÆMUS.

Before we enter into Greece, we muſt croſſe MOUNT HÆMUS, a ridge of hills, extending from the Euxine Sea to the Adriatick; and thereby ſeparating Greece both from Dacia and Sclavonia. So high and ſubject to the weather, that Stratonicus an old Grecian did uſe to ſay, that for eight moneths of the year it was alwayes cold; for the other four, winter. It was affirmed by ſome of the Ancient writers, that from one of the higheſt heads hereof, as well the Adriatick as the Euxine might have been diſcerned: the truth of which report, upon very good reaſon, hath been called in queſtion. But out of doubt, from ſome one top or Summit of it, there is ſo full a proſpect into Thrace and Macedon, that from hence Perſeus taking a ſurvey of the ſite of theſe Countries, poſitis per abruptis Caſtris, &c. as the ſtorie hath it, was able to make choice of the fitteſt places for Forts and Caſtles, whereby to lock up all the paſſages againſt his enemies the Romans. In the parts bordering upon Thrace ſo rough and craggie, that it is not to be paſſed but at two places only. Whereof one was made by the Emperour Trajan, where is yet to be ſeen a mighty ſtrong gate built of great ſquare ſtone: by which the paſſage that way was either opened or ſhut, at the pleaſure of them who had the keeping of the ſame; with a ſmall force exceeding eaſily defended againſt puiſſant Armies. The other being ſituate near a little River, by the Bulgarians called Saltiza, not altogether ſo ſtrait and narrow as the other, but riſing high, and full of broken Rocks and dangerous precipices, is alike impaſſable; defenſible at eaſe, and without any great danger: as was experimentally found by the famous Huniades, when he attempted (but in vain) to have led his forces this way, for the ſiege of Adrianople. Thoſe parts hereof which border upon Macedonia, though ſomewhat opener, are not much eaſier of aſcent; the paſſages through the broken rocks and precipices, being very difficult, and not eaſily mattered: inſomuch, that when Perſeus the laſt King of Macedon had fortified the ſtreights hereof againſt the Romans; non reliquiſſe aditum niſi è cœlo venientibus videbatur, it was conceived (ſaith Florus) that there was no paſſage left for any forces, unleſs they fell immediately from the heavens themſelves.

This great and rockie chain of hills, as they were vehemently expoſed to wind and weather, ſo were they deſtitute of thoſe commodities, which were either comfortable or indeed meerly neceſſarie to the life of man: which made the paſſage over them in a manner impoſſible unto any Armies, but what were very patient both of cold and hunger. Yet were they not left deſolate and void of people, eſpecially in thoſe ſides hereof which lay next to Greece; but moſt eſpecially in thoſe parts which bordered or confined on Thrace: where the ſpurres and branches of the hills ſpreading farre and wide, and taking up a great part of the Countrie; occaſioned the Romans in the diviſion of the Dioceſe of Thrace into ſeverall Provinces, to call that part or Province of it which lay next to Mœſia, by the name of Hæmimontum, or Hæmimontana. The principal Towns whereof were Adrianople, Uſcudoma, and Anchiala; the principall Governour hereof a Roman Preſident. Where, by the way, we may take notice of an Errour in the common impreſſions of the Code, Lib. VII. Tit. 62. Leg. 23. where we find Hæmi montem, for Hæmimontum: the firſt being the name only of the mountain; and the latter (which is there meant) of the Roman Province.

But

But to return unto the Mountain, there is another of this name in Theſſalie, mentioned (or miſtook for this) by Servius in his notes on the firſt book of the Georgicks; in the top whereof was ſaid to be the habitation of Mars, on the bottom, the moſt pleaſant valley of Tempe: ſo called from Hæmus, the ſon of Boreas and Oriſhya amongſt the Poets. And poſſibly to diſtinguiſh this from that of Theſſalie, Ptolemie, and others call it Æmus, without the Aſpirat: though it may well be, that there are others of this name, as that this is called in divers places, or in divers Authors, by other names: one part hereof being called Scombrus by Ariſtotle, an other Scombrus by Thucydides, and by Laonicus the whole called Traſobus. The like may be obſerved at the preſent alſo, Pinetus calling it by the name of Catena Mundi, a great part whereof it links together: Cuſpinianus, Caſtegnazzo; Lazius, Krivicznę; the Italians, Mont Argentorato; the French, Monte de Caſtegnao; the Sclavonians, Cumaniza; and the Turks, Balkan. Which I have therefore here obſerved for the Readers ſake, that meeting any of theſe names in the ſtories either of the antient or modern times, he may know what hils or mountains are intended by them. Which ſaid, I now paſs on to Greece, the way being thus prepared and laid open to me.

OF GREECE.

GREECE, in the preſent latitude and extent thereof, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Propontick, Helleſpont, and Ægean Seas; on the Weſt, with the Adriatick; on the North, with Mount Hæmus, which parteth it from Bulgaria, Servia, and ſome part of Illyricum; and on the South, with the Sea Ionian. So that it is in a manner a Peninſula, or Demy-Iland, environed on three ſides by the Sea; on the fourth only united to the reſt of Europe.

But this is only in relation to the preſent extent hereof, the name being antiently reſtrained within narrower bounds. Confined at firſt to Attica and the parts adjoyning; ab Iſthmi anguſtiis Hellas incipit, as it is in Plinie: and took he name of Hellas from Hellen, the ſon of Deucalion; as that of Greece or Græcia, from Græcus the ſon of Cecrops, the firſt King of Athens. Communicated afterwards to Peloponneſus, then to Theſſalie alſo: and finally when the Macedonian Empire had enlarged it ſelf over the petit Commonwealths, and Eſtates hereof; it came to be communicated to that Country alſo. The people for this cauſe known by divers names, by ſome Achivi, by others Myrmidones; ſometimes Pelaſgi, Danai, Argivi, &c. But the name whereby they are beſt known in ſacred Writers, is that of Ἕλληνες, ſo called from Hellas, the more proper and genuine name of Greece, in the ſtricteſt notion and acception. A name uſed frequently and familiarly in the Book of God, both abſolutely to denote this Nation, as where it is ſaid, σοφίαν Ἕλληνες ζητοῦσι, that the Greeks ſeek wiſdom, 1 Cor. 1.22. and relatively as in oppoſition to the Jews, the Barbarians, and the Helleniſts, or Græcizing Jews. Firſt with relation to the Jews, and then it ſignifieth the whole body of the Gentiles generally, of which the Grecians were the moſt eminent and famous people; as Ἰουδαίῳ τε πρῶτον καὶ Ἕλληνι, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile, Rom. 11.9, 10. Give none offence, καὶ Ἰουδαίοις καὶ Ἕλλησι, neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 10. 32. and elſewhere frequently. In, which and all other places of that kind, where the Antitheſis lieth between the Jews and other Nations, we are to underſtand the Gentiles, the whole body of them; though many times our Tranſlators, I know not why, render it literally the Greeks; as Rom. 1.16. 10. 12. &c. Secondly with reference to all other Nations, not ſo well verſed in the learning and civilities of that Age, as the Grecians were, whom by a common name of ſcorn they called Barbarians: according unto that of Strabo, Barbaræ ſunt omnes Nationes præter Græcos; the Romans themſelves, though then the great Lords of the world, being included in the reckoning. And ſo the word is taken, Rom. 1.14. I am a Debtor, ſaith S. Paul Ἕλλησι καὶ Βαρβάροις, both to the Greeks and the Barbarians, to the wiſe and unwiſe, in which as well the Romans as thoſe of other Nations, have the name of Barbarians. Laſt of all, for the Græcizing Jews, whom the Vulgar Latine calleth Græcos, and our Engliſh, Grecians; they were ſuch of the Jews, who living diſperſed among the Gentiles, uſed the tranſlation of the Septuagint, making that the Cannon both for life and doctrine. Which difference betwixt them and the Jews inhabiting in Judæa, who kept themſelves unto the Scriptures in their mother-tongue, and uſed the Hebrew only in all ſacred actions, occaſioned many jars amongſt them; which ſometimes brake out into to open violence; insomuch as R. Eliezer brake into the Synagogue of the Alexandrians at Hierusalem, and therin committed many outrages. Of this unfriendlines between them, mention is made, Act. 6. 1 where it is said, that there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, &c. In which place, though the English and Vulgar Latine use the name of Grecians, yet ought they more properly to be rendred Hellenists, or Gracizing Jews, as in all others places, viz. Acts 9. 29. 11. 20. &c. where they are called Ἑλληνισταὶ, and not Ἕλληνες, in the Greek Originals.

But to proceed to our description of the Country, we find it situate in the Northern temperate Zone, under the fift and sixt Climats; the longest day being 15 hours: inhabited by a people which were once brave men of war, sound Scholars, addicted to the love of vertue and civil behaviour. A Nation once so excellent, that their precepts and examples do still remain, as approved rules, and Tutors, to instruct and direct the man that endeavoureth to be vertuous; famous for government, affectors of freedom, every way noble. For which vertues in themselves, and want of them in other, all their neighbours and remote Nations were by them scornfully called Barbarians: a name now most fit for the Grecians themselves, being an unconstant people, destitute of all learning, and the means to obtain it, Universities; uncivil, riotous, and so lazie, that for the most part, they endeavour their profit no further than their belly compels them; and so perfidious withall in all their dealings, especially towards the Western Christians, that it is grown into a Proverb amongst the Italians, Chi fida in Grego, fara in trigo, i. e. He that trusts to a Greek is sure to be cousened. When they meet at feasts or banquets, they drink small draughts at the beginning; which by degrees they increase, till they come to the height of intemperancy: at which point when they are arived, they keep no rule or order; whereas before to drink out of ones turn is accounted a point of incivility. Hence, as I belive, sprung our by-word, As merry as a Greek; and the Latine word Græcari.

The women for the most part are brown-complexioned, exceedingly well-favoured, and excessively amorous. Painting they use very much, to keep themselves in grace with their husbands; for when they once grow wrinckled, they are put to all the drudgeries of the house. Both sexes generally in their habit and outward garb, apply themselves to the State under which they live: such as are subject to the Turk, conforming unto the dress and fashions of the Turks; as those who live under the Venetians, do to that of Venice.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by S. Paul, invited by the Spirit to come over into Macedonia, Acts 16. 12. passing from thence to Thessalonica, the chief Citie of Mygdonia, ch. 17. 1. from thence to Athens in Achaia, v. 16. then unto Corinth, the Metropolis of Peloponnesus, ch. 18. 1. watering the greatest part of Greece with the dew of heaven, and planting Bishops in most Churches where he preached the Gospel, as Dionysius (the Areopagite) at Athens, Aristarchus at Thessalonica, Epaphroditus at Philippi, Silas at Corinth, and Titus in the Isle of Crete. The like he did in many other Countries also, accounted members of the Greek Church, though not of Greece: the name of the Greek Church extending over all the Provinces of the Eastern Empire. Governed by the 4 Patriarchs, 1 Of Alexandria, who presided over Egypt and Arabia; 2ly, Of Hierusalem, whose Patriarchate (erected only in regard of our Saviours passion in that City, and the great opinion which by that means accrewed unto it) confined within the bounds of Palestine; 3ly, Of Antioch, whose jurisdiction contained all Syria, Armenia, Cilicia, and the Isle of Cyprus; and whatsoever else was within the diocese of the Orient; And 4ly, of Constantinople, to whose charge were committed all the other Provinces of the Greek Church, as Greece, Russia, Dacia, Sclavonia, part of Poland, and all the Ilands in the Adriatick, Ionian, and Ægean Seas; together with all Asia minor, and the Isles thereof, (except only the Provinces of Cilicia and Isauria) and the Countries lying on both sides of Pontus Euxinus, and Palus Mæotis. The reasons of the large increase of whose Jurisdiction, confined at first within the Diocese of Thrace, were 1 The reputation of being seated in the Imperial City, which drew after it (by a Decree of the Council of Chalcedon) all the Provinces of Asia minor, (Cilicia and Isauria excepted only.) 2ly, The voluntary submission of the Grecians upon their separation from the Church of Rome; by which all Greece, Macedon, Epirus, the Isle of Crete, and all the Ilands in the Ægean and Ionian Seas, which formerly had no superior but their own Primate, the Archbishop of Thessalonica, became subject unto them. 3ly, The diligence of the Patriarchs hereof, in converting by his Suffragan Bishops and other Ministers, the Russians, Bulgarians, and Sclavonians, to the faith of Christ; which made those people to look upon Constantinople as their Mother-Church. And 4ly, the pietie and care of the later Patriarchs, in supplying with new Pastors and Ministers those parts and Provinces of the West, which being conquered by the Turk, had been forsaken by their old Clergy, and left like sheep without a shepherd.

And yet this Church, though thus extended and enlarged in the outward members, is very much straitned and impaired at home: the Country being thinly peopled, and many of those people trained up from their infancie, in the Mahometan Law. So that it is a greater wonder, that there should be any remainders of Christianitie left amongst them, than that the open Professors of it should be so few: the tyrannie of the Turks on the one side, and the temptations of preferment upon the other, being rightly pondered. For who could look to find 20 Churches of Christians in Constantinople, the seat and ordinary residence of the Turkish Emperors; or that in Salonichi, or Thessalonica, there should be 30 Christian Churches, and but three Turkish Mosquits; that the Primate of this Salonichi should have under him 10 suffragan Bishops, whereof he of Philippi hath no fewer than 150 Churches under his Jurisdiction: or finally, that under the Metropolitans of Athens or Corinth, there should be as many? So mercifully hath God dealt with this luxurious and perfidious people, as not to take away their Candlestick, though he hath darkned and obscured the light hereof.

As

As for the Fathers of this Church, antiently and at this preſent held in moſt eſteem, they were no other than ſuch as had been Biſhops of the greater Sees; that is to ſay, 1 S. Chryſoſtome, firſt a Reader of Antioch, afterwards Patriarch of Conſtantinople: 2 Baſil, and the two Gregories, 3 Nyſſen, and 4 Nazianzen, all in Aſia Minor; this laſt of Conſtantinople alſo: 5, 6. The two Cyrils, the one Patriarch of Alexandria; the other, of Hieruſalem: 7 Epiphanius, Biſhop of Salamis in the Iſle of Cyprus; 8 Theodoret, Biſhop of Cyprus, &c. men of renown and precious memorie amongſt them, to this very day. From whoſe writings, if they deviate in any material point of doctrine, it is in that of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, which they grant to be per Filium, but not à Filio. And though Clichthoveus, Lombard, and other moderate men of the Church of Rome, do grant the difference to be rather, in modo explicandi, quam in ipſa re; and that the Clauſe à Filioque, was added by the Romaniſts to the antient Creeds, the Grecians not being privie nor conſenting to it: yet ſo uncharitable is that Church towards theſe poor men, languiſhing under the tyrannie of Turkiſh thraldom, as to perſecute them with reproach and ſcorn, brand them for Schiſmaticks and Apoſtates, and ſolemnly to anathematize them, in Bulla Cœnæ, every Maundie Thurſday. And it is a very hard meaſure to adde and anathematize too, as is right well obſerved by the late Lord Archbiſhop of Canterburie, in his notable Diſcourſe againſt the Jeſuite. Other particular Tenets in which the Greek Church differeth from the Romiſh and Reformed (as in ſome points it doth from both) have been already ſpecified in our Deſcription of Ruſſia: the Churches of the Greeks, and Moſcovites, differing in no material points, but 1. the manner of diſtributing the Sacrament; 2ly, the exacting of mariage by the Moſcovite, in the party admitted unto Orders; 3ly, the frequent admitting of divorces upon light occaſions; and 4ly, finally in being leſs ſtrict in obſerving the Lent before Eaſter than in any of the other three. For whereas the Grecians account it a damnable ſin to eat fleſh or fiſh which hath bloud in it, in any of their other Lents or times of abſtinence, (they have in both Churches four in all:) in that before Eaſter, which of all reaſon ought to be kept moſt punctually, the Laity eat all ſorts of fiſh without any exception; the bloud of ſome of which, as the Cuttle by name, is held to be a delicate food, and in great requeſt.

The Language they ſpake was of their own, of which there were four Dialects, viz. 1 the Attick, 2 the Dorick, 3 the Æolick, 4 the Ionick: beſides the common phraſe of ſpeech moſt in uſe among them. A language of great fame for the liberal Arts, but more for ſo great a part of the holy Scripture, firſt delivered in it: and for the lofty ſound, ſignificant expreſſions, genuine ſuavitie, and happy compoſition of words, ſo excelling all others, that even in the flouriſhing of the Roman Empire, it ſo much overtopped the Latine, that the Hiſtories of Rome it ſelf (as of Polybius, Appian, Dion Caſſius) were written in it. It was once alſo the general language of Anatolia, ſome parts of Italie, Provence in France, and almoſt all the Ilands of the Mediterranean. But now partly by the mutilation of ſome words, and contraction of others; partly by confuſion of the true ſound of Vowels, Diphthongs, and Conſonants, and the tranſlating of the Accents; and finally, by the admixture of forein Nations, it is not only fallen from its natural elegancy, but from its largeneſſe of extent. For it is now ſhut up within the limits of Greece, and the Sea-coaſt of the leſſer Aſia, oppoſite unto it; and there not only much corrupted, but almoſt quite devoured by the Turkiſh and Sclavonian tongues: but ſpecially by that which they call Franco, a Mungrel language, compoſed of Italian, French, and ſome Spaniſh words; uſed as the ordinary ſpeech for commerce and intercourſe betwixt Chriſtians, Jews, Turks, and the Greeks, themſelves, who do not underſtand, and much leſs ſpeak the true genuine Greek. So that although they ſtill retain for ordinary dayes, S. Chryſoſtoms Liturgie; and that of S. Baſil for the Feſtivals: yet being both written in the antient and learned Greek, they are no more underſtood by the Vulgar Grecian, than the Latine Service by the common and illiterate Papiſt.

The ſoil queſtionleſs is very fruitfull, and would yeeld great profit to the husbandman, if they would take pains in the tilling: but they, knowing nothing certainly to be their own, but all things ſubject to the Grand Signieur and his ſouldiers; neglect the tillage of their lands, on the ſame grounds with thoſe who ſaid in the Poets Eclogues:

Impius hæc tam culta novalia miles habebit?
Barbarus has ſegetes? en queis conſevimus arva!

Shall misbelieving Turks theſe acres ſpoil,
Which I manur'd with ſo much coſt and toil?
Shall they enjoy my care? See neighbours, ſee,
For whom theſe goodly corn-fields tilled be!

The more natural and certain commodities which they tranſport into other parts, are Wines, which in memory of the water which our Saviour turned into wine, and on the ſixt day of January being that day whereon this miracle was wrought, they uſe to baptize: for which cauſe the Jews will drink none of them. They ſend alſo into other parts of the world, Oil, Copper, Vitriol, ſome Gold and Silver, Velvet, Damasks, Turkie-Grograms, &c.

This Country hath formerly been famous for the brave Commanders, Miltiades, Ariſtides, and Themiſtocles of Athens; Liſander, and Ageſilaus, of Sparta; Pelopidas, and Epaminondas, of Thebes; Aratus, and Philopœmen, of Achaia; Pyrrhus, of Epirus; Philip of Macedon, the ſubverter of the Grecian liberty, and Alexander his ſon (to omit infinite others) the ſubverter of the Perſian Monarchy. For the divine Philoſophers, Plato, Socrates, Ariſtotle, and Theophraſtus; for the moſt eminent Lawgivers, Solon and Lycurgus; for the moſt exquiſite Poets, Heſiodus, Homer, Sophocles, and Ariſtophanes; for the famous Hiſtoriographers, Xenophon the condiſciple of Plato, Thucydides, Plutarch, and Herodotus; the eloquent Orators, Æſchines, Demoſthenes, and Iſocrates; and laſtly, for the authors and eſtabliſhers of all humane learning whatſoever, only the Mathematiques excepted. Peloponneſus.

The chief Rivers, are 1 Cephiſus, which ariſing in the Frontires of Epirus, disburtheneth it ſelf into the Ægean Sea. 2. Erigon, and 3 Alaicmon, which beginning their courſe in the more Northern parts of Macedon, end it in Thirmiacus Sinus. 4 Strymon in Mygdonia. 5 Athicus and Niſus in Thrace. 6 Stymphalus, where Hercules killed the Stymphalian birds; An 7 Ladon, in Arcadia. 8 Inachus, whoſe daughter Io turned into a Heifer, was worſhipped by the Egyptians under the name of Iſis. 9 Achelous in Epirus, much celebrated by the antient Poets, eſpecially by Ovid in his Metamorphoſis. As is alſo 10 Peneus, the chief River of Theſſalie, and there ariſing from Mount Pindus, and increaſed with the waters of many Rivers. Daphne the Nymph, whom Apollo is fabled to have loved, and turned into a Bay tree, lived near or on the banks of this River Peneus; and is therefore ſaid to be his daughter: as Io above-mentioned was the daughter of Inachus. Of leſs note,

Populifer 11 Sperchius, & irrequietus 12 Enipeus,
13 Apidanuſque ſenex, leniſque 14 Amphryſus, & 15 Æas.

That is to ſay:

Cool Sperchie, Enipeus that troubled ran,
Smooth Amphryſe, Æas, and old Apidan.

The reſt of leſſe note, and the moſt eminent Mountains in each part hereof, ſhall be remembred in their places, as we ſee occaſion.

Thus much of the whole Country in groſſe. And as for the diviſion of it with reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained in a manner two whole Dioceſes, viz. Thrace and Macedon: the firſt under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, the latter (together with that of Dacia) under the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum. Of theſe the Dioceſe of Macedon lying wholly within the bounds of the modern Greece, contained the Provinces of Macedonia Prima. 2 Macedonia Secunda, or Salutaris (now, as in former times, called Albania.) 3 Epirus Nova, taking up the Countries of Phocis, Locris, and ſo much of the Old Epirus as was on that ſide of the River Achelous. 4 Old Epirus, comprehending all the reſt of that Country, 5 Theſſalie. 6 Achaia, containing all Achaia, and Peloponneſus; the Countries of Locris and Phocis excepted only. And 7 Crete or Candie, with the Iſles adjoyning. And for the Dioceſe of Thrace, it was divided into the Provinces of 1 Thrace, ſpecially ſo called. 2 Europa, 3 Rhodope, 4 Hæmi-montum, 5 Mœſia Inferior, and 6 Scythia: of which the four firſt make up the body of Thrace, and ſhall there be ſpoken of; the two laſt being comprehended in the modern Dacia, have been deſcribed already in their proper places. But not to bind my ſelf preciſely unto this diviſion, (though I ſhall look on this as occaſion ſerveth) I ſhall conſider Greece in the ſeveral Provinces of 1 Peloponneſus, 2 Achaia, 3 Epirus, 4 Albania, 5 Macedon, 6 Thrace, 7 The Ilands of the Propontick, 8 Ægean, and 9 the Ionian Seas, and 10 finally the Iſle of Crete.

1 PELOPONNESUS.

PELOPONNESUS is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Cretan; on the Weſt, with the Adriatick or Ionian Seas; on the North-eaſt, with Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia; on the North-weſt, with Sinus Corinthiacus, now Golfo di Patras, or Lepanto; and on the South, with the Mediterranean. So that it is almoſt an Iſland, properly called a Peninſula, rounded with the Sea, except where it is tyed to the main land of Greece, by an Iſthmus ſix miles in breadth: which the Grecians, and Venetians, fortified with a great wall and five Caſtles. This was called antiently Hexamilium, and was overthrown by Amurath the 2d. who haraſſed and ſpoiled all the Country. It was afterwards in the year 1453. upon the rumor of a war, built up again by the Venetians (who then had the greateſt part of this Country) in 15 dayes; there being for that time 30000 men imployed in the work. This wall extended from one Sea unto the other, which had it been as gallantly guarded as it was haſtily made up; or as it was well fortified, had it been as well manned; might eaſily have reſiſted the Turks, untill more means had been thought on to defend it. Not leſs obſervable, but more fruitleſſe was the deſign of ſome in the elder times, to cut thorow this Iſthmus, and make a perfect Iland of it. Attempted by Demetrius King of Macedon, Julius Cæſar, and Caius Caligula; by none more eagerly purſued, than by the Emp. Nero: who to hearten on his ſouldiers, loath to attempt ſo fruitleſſe an enterpriſe, took a ſpade in hand, and buſily began the work. Yet at laſt the ſouldiers, being frighted with the bloud which abundantly broke forth; with the groans, and roarings, which they continually heard; and with the Hobgoblins and Furies, which were alway in their ſight; perſwaded the Emperor, now half out of the humour, to leave this, and enjoyn them ſome more profitable ſervice: given over by the former Princes on the like diſcouragements. But of this Iſthmus we ſhall adde no more, than theſe words of Ovid, and ſo paſſe forwards to the deſcription of the Countrey: That is to ſay,

Achaia propria.

Æquora bina ſuis oppugnant fluctibus Iſthmon,
Et tenuis tellus audet utrumque mare.

Which may thus be Engliſhed,

Two Seas aſſault the Iſthmus with their waves,
And that thin neck of Land both Seas outbraves.

As for this Country of Peloponneſus, it is in compaſs 600 miles, and was called at firſt Ægialia, from Ægialus the firſt King of Sicyon; next Apia, from Apis the 4th King; after that Sicyonia, from Sicyon the 19th King thereof; and finally Peloponneſus, from Pelops, the ſon of Tantalus King of Phrygia, and Νῆσος, Inſula; the word ſignifying as much as the Iſle of Pelops. But it is now of late called Morea; and that, à Maurorum incurſionibus, from the incurſions of the Mores, as Mercator thinketh: but by the Mores he means the Saracens, as ſome others do.

It is conceived to be the moſt pleaſant Country of all Greece, abounding in all things neceſſary for the life of man; and in ſuch alſo as do ſerve for delicacy and contentment only: adorned with many goodly Plains, ſwelled with fruitfull Hils, well ſtored with Ports and Havens on all ſides thereof. And though no Country in the world, for the bigneſſe of it, hath ſuffered in the ruine of ſo many brave and ſtately Cities; yet is it ſtill the moſt populous, and beſt inhabited of all the Continent of Greece. Near the middle of it, in Laconia, is the Mount Taygetus, from the top whereof there was no City of note in all this Peninſula, but what might eaſily be ſeen. A moſt gallant proſpect. The whole divided commonly into theſe 7 Provinces, 1 Achaia propria, 2 Elis, 3 Meſſene, 4 Arcadia, 5 Laconia, 6 Argolis, and 7 Corinthia.

1 ACHAIA PROPRIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Argolis, and Corinthia; on the Weſt, with the Ionian Sea; on the North, with Sinus Corinthiacus, or the Golf of Lepanto; on the South, with Elis. So called from the Achæi, the Inhabitants of it; the adjunct propria, being added to difference it from Achaia in the Continent or main land of Greece.

Places of moſt conſideration in it, are 1 Dyme, ſituate in the moſt Weſtern point of it, on or near the Promontory called Araxum; the town now called Chiarenza, and the Promontory Cabo di Chiarenza. Not far from which is another Promontory or head-land, of old called Rhium, oppoſite to another in Ætolia, that was called Antirrhium: divided by a very narrow ſtreight or fretum, which openeth into the Bay of Corinth; fortified on each ſide with a Caſtle for defence thereof, commonly called Caſtelli di Lepanto: both built and fortified by Bajazet the ſecond, when he had finiſhed the Conqueſt of Peloponneſus, to ſecure the entrance of this Bay; both taken and demoliſhed by Andrew Doria, Lord Admiral to Charles the 5th, to lay the Bay open to the Chriſtians; and finally, both within few years recovered and repaired by Solyman the Magnificent, as they ſtill continue. 2 Ægium, where Jupiter is ſaid to have been nurſed by a Goat, whence it had the name; Αἴξ in Greek ſignifying a ſhe Goat: once a ſtrong town, now ruined and deſtroyed by the Turks; called at this day Voſtiza, or Boſtizan. 3 Ægira, once the chief City of all this tract, ſituate on a ſteep and inacceſſible hill; now a ſmall Village, called Xilocaſtro. 4 Olenus, ſo named from Olenus the ſon of Jupiter and Anaxithea; now called Chaminiſa. 5 Patræ, ſituate at the very mouth of the Golf, oppoſite to Lepanto. Firſt called Aroe, but being by one Patreus enlarged and walled, took the name of Patræ, which name it holdeth to this day, being ſtill called Patras: the town of moſt note on the Bay of Corinth, called from hence Golfo di Patras. A town of good trade, and much frequented not long ſince by the Engliſh Merchants, who had here their Conſul, called the Conſul of Morea: but formerly more memorable for the death of S. Andrew the Apoſtle, who here ſuffered Martyrdome. 6 Pellene, diſtant from the Sea about 60 furlongs: the people whereof being conſtant to their old faſhions of apparel, occaſioned the Proverb of Pellenæa veſtis, applyed to old cloaths out of faſhion. Here were once alſo the two Cities of 7 Helice, and 8 Buris, ſunk by the violence of a tempeſt into the bottom of the Sea, about the time of the battel of Leuctres. Not to ſay any thing of 9 Tritæa, and 10 Phera, two other towns hereof, of note in the former times; ſo little now remaining of them, as if they had been ſunk at the ſame time alſo.

But the chief town of all this Province, (if not a Province of it ſelf) is that of Sicyon, ſitnate not far from the Iſthmus, in the moſt Eaſtern parts hereof, and giving to the territory or adjoyning Country (as once unto the whole Peninſula) the name of Sicyonia. The territory rich, eſpecially in Olives, and works of Iron; the City the moſt antient of all Greece, built within little time of the general floud, and reſtauration of mankind. Firſt called Ægialia, after Sicyonia, by the names of the firſt and nineteenth Kings hereof: by whom and their ſucceſſors much adorned and beautified with Temples, Altars, Statues, and Images of their ſeveral Gods: the antienteſt Kingdom in the world, the Aſſyrian, and Ægyptian excepted only, and perhaps not thoſe. It took beginning in the perſon of Ægialeus, within 150 years after the deluge, and 200 years before the death of Noah; continuing in a race of Princes who ſwayed the affairs of Peloponneſus, till overtopped by the growth and good fortune of the Kings of Argos. The names of whom, by reaſon of the undoubted antiquity of this Kingdom, I ſhall here ſubjoin, in the enſuing Catalogue of 2134	8 Leucidpus.	2526	17 Epopeus.	2791	26 Xeuxippus, the laſt King of Sicyon; After whoſe death, A. M. 2812. the eſtate hereof was governed by the Prieſts of Apollo, ſeven of them ſucceſſively one after another: the firſt five, only years a peece; Amphictyon, who was the ſixt, continuing 9 years in the Regence; and Charidemus the laſt of them ruling 18 years. After whoſe death, or departure, I know not which, A.M. 2844. the Heraclidæ, who about that time returned into Peloponneſus, made themſelves Maſters of this Country; there being no Kings of Sicyonia from this time forwards.

The Kings of SICYON.

Of theſe Kings the moſt memorable were Ægialeus and Apis, the firſt and fourth, from whom this Peninſula had the names of Apia and Ægialia; Ægirus the 6. giving name and being to the City Ægira ſpoken of before; Marathon the 13th. of whom perhaps the famous fields of Marathon (in the other Achaia) took denomination; Epopeus the 17th. who founded a Temple to Minerva, and therein placed his own Monument or Tropheys; Sicyon the 19th. the Founder of the City of Sicyon, or at leaſt the repairer and enlarger of it; Pelaſgus the 25th. from whom perhaps the Grecians might be called Pelaſgi, if not known formerly by that name. After this time I find no man of note who bare ſway in Sicycon, till the time of Aratus, the ſpecial ornament of this Town (of which a Native) and one of the principal eſtabliſhers of the Achæan Common-wealth againſt the Spartans, and Macedonians; of which more hereafter in the general Hiſtory of Peloponneſus.

2. The Country of ELIS hath on the Eaſt, Arcadia; on the Weſt, the Ionian Sea; on the North, Achaia propria; on the South, Meſſenia. The chief Cities are 1. Elis, which gives name to the whole Province. So called from Eliſha the ſon of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who fixt himſelf in theſe parts of this Country, where he built this City, calling it by his own name, as his poſterity in honour of him did the Iſles adjoyning; mentioned in the Prophet Ezekiel, by the name of the Iſles of Eliſha, Ch. 27. v. 7. Nigh to this City runneth the River Alpheus, of which we have ſpoken in Sicilia: and in this City reigned the King Augeas, the clenſing of whoſe Stable is accompted one of the wonders or twelve labours performed by Hercules. 2. Olympia, famous for the Statue of Jupiter Olympicus, one of the 7 wonders, being in height 60 cubits; compoſed by that excellent workman Phidias, of gold and Ivory. In honour of this Jupiter were the Olympick games inſtituted by Hercules, and celebrated on the Plains of this City, A.M. 2757. The exerciſes in them were for the moſt part bodily, as running in Chariots, running on foot, wraſtling, fighting with the Whorlbats, and the like. But ſo that there repaired thither alſo Orators, Poets, and Muſicians, and all that thought themſelves excellent in any laudable quality, to make trial of their ſeveral abilities: the very Cryers who proclamed the Victories, contending which ſhould cry loudeſt, and beſt play his part. The rewards given to the Victor were only Garlands of Palm, or ſuch ſlight remembrances; and yet the Greeks no leſſe eſteemed that ſmall ſign of conqueſt and honour, than the Romans did their moſt magnificent triumphs: thoſe which were Conquerors herein being met by all the principal men of the City, in which, or under which they lived, and a paſſage broken in the main walls thereof for their reception; as if the ordinary Gates were not capable of ſo high an honour, or able to afford them entrance. Inſomuch that when Diagoras had ſeen his three ſons crowned for their ſeveral victories, a friend of his came to him with this gratulation, Morere Diagoras, nunquam enim in Cœlum aſcenſurus es, that is to ſay, Die now Diagoras, for thou ſhalt never go to heaven: as if no greater happineſſe could befall the man either in this life, or that to come, than that which he enjoyed already. The Judges and Preſidents of theſe Games, were ſome of the Citizens of Elis, deputed to it; highly commended for their juſtice and integrity in pronouncing who beſt deſerved, without partiality. Of theſe thus Horace in his Odes.

Sunt quos Curriculo pulverem Olympicum
Collegiſſe juvat; metaque fervidis
Evitata rotis, Palmaque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos, Quos Elea domum reducit
Palma cœleſtes.

That

Messenia.

That is to say:

Some in Olympick dust take pride
Their Chariots and themselves to hide;
Whom the shunn'd mark, and Palm so priz'd,
Like to the Gods hath eterniz'd.
Such as like heavenly wights do come
With an Elean Garland home.

But to proceed, after the death of Hercules, these games were discontinued for 430 years: at which time one Iphitus, warned so to do by the Oracle of Apollo, renewed them; causing them to be solemnly exercised every fourth year: from which custom Olympias is sometimes taken for the space of 4 years; as quinque annorum Olympiades, for 20 years. Varro reckoneth the times before the floud to be obscure; those before the Olympiads, and after the floud, to be fabulous; but those that followed these Olympiads, to be Historical. These Olympiads were of long time, even from the restauration of them by Iphitus, until the reign of the Emperour Theodosius; the Grecian Epoche, by which they reckoned their accompt: the first of them being placed in the year of the world, 3174. before the building of Rome 24 years; the last in the 440 year after Christs nativity. According to which reckoning this accompt continued for the space of 1214 years; the memory of which remains, though the name of Olympia be not found in Peloponnesus: the town at this day called by the name of Sconri. 3. Pisa, whose people followed Nestor to the wars of Troy; and in their return were by tempest driven to the coasts of Italy, where they built the City Pisa in Tuscanie. 4. Torneſe, a new Town, or the new name of some antient City; from whence the adjoyning Promontorie, of old called Chilonites, is now called Cabo di Torneſe.

3. MESSENIA hath on the East, Arcadia; on the North, Elis; on the South, and West, the Sea. It takes its name from the Metropolis Messene, situate on Sinus Messenaicus, now called Golfo di Corone. 2. Pylos, where Nestor was King, now called Novarino; a desolate and poor village not worth the noting. Of which thus Ovid speaking in the name of Penelope.

Nos Pylon, antiqui Neleia Nestoris arva,
Misimus, incerta est reddita fama Pylo.

To Pylon, aged Nestors seat, we sent;
But could not hear from thence how matters went.

3. Methon, or Methone, seated in the most Southern part of this Peninsula, from whence unto the Isthmus, which joineth it to the rest of Greece, are reckoned 175 Italian miles; the Town commodiously seated in a Demie Island, washed on the one side with the Sea, and so well fortified toward the land, that in the opinion of most men it is thought impregnable; adorned on the South side with a large and capacious Bay, about 3 miles wide, secure from all winds except the North, and shut up with a little Iland called antiently Odusse, but now Sapientia, which makes it one of the safest harbours in all these Seas: possessed once by the State of Venice, but conquered by the Turk, after many sharp and fierce assaults, Anno 1500. both Pylus and Corone yeelding on the noise thereof; The best retreat since that time of the Turkish Navies, and the ordinary residence of the Turkish Zanziack, who hath the government of this whole Province of Morea, under the Beglerbeg of Greece. 4. Corone or Coron, the chief Town on the Bay of Messene, called from hence Golfo di Coron, and the last which held out against the Turks for the State of Venice, once Lords of all the Sea-coasts of Peloponnesus. 5. Cyparissi, now called Arcudia, from whence the Bay adjoyning hath the name of Golfo di Arcudia. Here is also the Promontory called of old Coryphusium, now Cabo Zanchio.

The people of this small Province had once a great sway in the whole Peninsula. At first confederate with the Spartans in so strict a league, that they mutually sent young Virgins to one another, for their publick sacrifices: but afterwards Corrivals with them for the Supreme power. The Spartans at the last getting the upper hand of them, oppressed them with a miserable servitude. The occasion this. In the confines of this Country stood a Temple of Diana, common alike to the Messenians, Spartans, and Dores. It happened that some Spartan Virgins were by the Messenians here ravished: which abuse the Spartans pretended to be the ground of their war; the true reason indeed being their covetousness of the sole Empire. This war broke out three several times. The first continued 20 years, in which space, the Lacedæmonians fearing their absence would hinder the supply of children in the City; sent a company of their ablest young men home to accompany their wives. Their off-spring were called Parthenii, who coming to full growth, abandoned Sparta, sailed into Italie, and there built Tarentum. The second being of 23 years continuance, was raised and maintained by Aristomenes, one of the chief men of the Messenians; in which they prospered till Aristocrates, King of Arcadia, one of their confederates, revolted to side with Lacedæmon. Then began they to decline, and Aristomines was thrice thrice taken prisoner, still miraculously escaping. His last imprisonment was in a Dungeon, where by chance espying a Fox devouring a dead body, he caught hold of her tail. The Fox running away, guided Aristomenes after; till the straitnesse of the hole by which he went out, made him leave his hold, and fall to scraping with his nails: which exercise he never left, till he had made the hole passable, and so escaped; and having a while upheld his falling Country, dyed in Rhodes. The third war was like drops after a tempest. In which the Messenians being finally subdued, were forced to abandon their Country, or become slaves unto the Spartans; who put them to all drudgeries and servile works, as they did the Helots, whom they counted as their bondmen: and to this life some of them did apply themselves with so much obsequiousness, that at last it grew into a Proverb, Messena servilior, that such a one was more servile, or more slavishly used, than these poor Messenians. But the greatest part of them not brooking that heavy yoke, passed into Sicil, and there built the City of Messana. Others were planted in Naupactum, by the State of Athens; the rest dispersed up and down in all parts of Greece: few of them left in their own Country, till Epaminondas having vanquished the Lacedæmonians at the battel of Leuctres, restored them to their antient possessions. Arcadia and Laconia.

4. ARCADIA, hath on the East, Laconia; on the West, Elis and Messene; on the North, Achaia propria; and on the South, the Sea. This Country took its name from Arcas, the son of Jupiter and Calisto; but was formerly called Pelasgia: the people whereof thought themselves more antient than the Moon.

Orta prius Luna, de se si creditur ipsi,
A magno tellus Arcade nomen habet.

The land which of great Arcas took its name,
Was ere the Moon, if we will credit Fame.

The chief Cities are 1. Mantinea, nigh unto which the Theban Army, consisting of 30000 foot, and 3000 horse; routed the Army of the Spartans, and Athenians, consisting of 25000 foot, and 2000 horse. In this battel Epaminondas that famous Leader, received his deaths wounds, and not long after dyed. At his last gasp one of his friends bemoaning his untimely death; Alas, said he, thou dieſt Epaminondas, and leaveſt behind thee no Children: Nay, replyed he, two daughters will I leave behind me; the victory of Leuctra, and this other at Mantinea. It was afterwards called Antigonia, in honour of Antigonus, Tutor or Protector of Philip the father of Perseus, King of Macedon; but by command of the Emperour Adrian, restored to its old name again; and is now called Mantegna. 2. Megalopolis, the birth-place of Polybius that excellent Historian. The one half of it had sometimes the name of Orestia, from the lodging of Orestes in it; the whole now called Leontari, on what cause I know not. 3. Phialia, towards the Sea. 4. Psophis, so called from Psophis, one of the sons of Lycaon, once King of this Country, slain by Jupiter. 5. Stymphalus, situate near a Lake and River of the same name, where Hercules slew the Stymphalian birds; so great in number and in body, that they darkned the sun-beams, and terribly infested this little Province; till driven thence by Hercules. Here was also in this Town a Temple dedicated to Minerva, from hence called Stymphalida. 6. Tegea, famous for the Temple of Pan, here worshipped, and from hence called Tegæus; more for the war made upon the Tegeates, or people hereof, by the Lacedæmonians: who thinking themselves assured of victory, brought with them store of chains and fetters, wherewith to lead captive their conquered Enemies; but being overcome in battel, were themselves bound with them, and forced as slaves, to till the grounds of these Tegeates. Here is also in this Country the River Styx, whose water for the poisonous taste was called the water of Hell: by which Poets feign, that the Gods used to swear, as may be every where observed; and that what God soever swore by Styx falsly, he was banished from heaven; and prohibited Nectar for 1000 years.

This Country for the fitness of it for pasturage and grazing, hath made it the subject of many worthy and witty discourses, especially that of Sir Philip Sidney, of whom I cannot but make honourable mention: a book, which besides its excellent language, rare contrivances, and delectable stories, hath in it all the strains of Poesie, comprehendeth the universal art of speaking; and to them which can discern and will observe, affordeth notable rules for demeanour, both private and publick. Which noble Gentleman, as he may worthily be called the English Heliodore, so the ingenious Author of the History of Melintus and Ariana, may deservedly be called the French Sidney.

5. LACONIA, is bounded on the West, with Arcadia; on the East, and South, with the Sea; on the North with Argolis. Called first Lelegia, from the Leleges, by Strabo said to be the first Inhabitants of it, afterwards Oebalia from Oebalus a King of Lacedæmon; and finally Laconia, of the Lacones, who succeeded the Leleges in the possession hereof, on their removal, into the Ilands of the lesser Asia. It is by some writers also called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities which it once had in it.

The soil hereof exceeding rich, and the fields very spacious; yet for the most part not well tilled, in regard of the many Hills and Mountainets which overthwart it. Well-watered with the River Eurotas, and memorable for many fair Bayes and Promontories: of which the principal are the Promontories of Malea and Tænaria, now called Cabo Malio, and Cabo Matapan: and of the Bayes, that called Golfo di Colochina, the Sinus Laconicus of the antients; into which the River Eurotas, (now better known by the name of Vasilo Potamo, or the Kingly River) pours his gentle streams. The nature of the people we shall find in Sparta.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Leuctres situate on the Sea-side, near the Bay of Messeni; of which name were two others in Greece; the one in Arcadia, the other in Achaia, but this last most memorable. 2. Amyclæ, so called from Amyclas the third King of Sparta, by whom first founded: renowned afterwards for the birth of Castor and Pollux, the sons of Tyndarus; and of good note for being the foundresse of the City of Amyclæ in Calabria Superior, at first a Colonie of this, distant from Lacedæmon about 20 furlongs. 3. Thalama, nigh to which is the Lake of Lerna, where Hercules slew the Monster Hydra: and not far off Mount Tænarus near the Promontorie Tænaria, in which the Natives shew a Cave, (beleeved in former times to be the descent into Hell) out of which the Poets feign that Cerberus was dragged by Hercules. 4. Salassia, where Antigonus vanquished Cleomenes, the last King of Sparta. 5. Epidaurus (seated on the Bay, named Golpho di Napoli) now called Malvasia; a Town well built, and very well peopled; remarkable for the sweet Wines called Malvesey, or Malmesey, sent from hence into all other parts in great abundance. 6. Sparta, so called from Sparta the son or brother of Phoroneus, the 2d. King of Argos, the Founder of it: but afterwards beautified and inlarged by Lacedæmon, the second King of this Country, it took that name also; promiscuously known by both in the best Authors. One of the Eyes of Greece, and a most famous Commonwealth; but at first governed by Kings, as most of the Greek Cities in antient times. Tyndarus the father of Castor and Pollux, was once King hereof, After whose death, and the death of the said famous brethren; Menalaus was admitted King of Sparta or Lacedemon, in right of Helena his wife, their sister. And though Nicostratus, and Magapenthes, sons of Menelaus by another venter, succeeded after his decease; yet the Spartans soon rejected them, and received Orestes the son of Agamemnon to be their King; marying him to Hermione the daughter of Menelaus and Helena, and consequently the Neece of Tyndarus. Tisamenes, the son of Orestes and Hermione, succeeded next; in whose time the Heraclidæ or posterity of Hercules returned into Greece, under the conduct of Temenus, Ctesiphon, and Aristodemus, sons of Aristomachus: whereof the first possessed himself by force of Arms, of the City of Argos; the second, of Messene; and the third conquered the City and State of Sparta: which dying very shortly after, he left unto his two sons Eurysthenes and Procles, the roots of the two Royal families, which joyntly and in common governed the affairs of Sparta: first absolutely as Soveraign Princes, without any controul; afterwards at the direction of the Senate, and finally under the command and check of those popular Officers whom they called the Ephori. But because these Spartan Kings in each several period, were for the most part men of action, and often mentioned in the Histories of the elder time: I will first make a Catalogue of them, and then subjoyn such observations and remembrances, as I think most pertinent.

The KINGS of SPARTA

Of the first Family.

A.M.

1 Eurotas, the first King of Sparta, who gave name to the River Eurotas.
2 Lacedæmon, brother of Eurotas, from whom the City of Sparta was called Lacedæmon.
3 Amyclas, son of Lacedæmon, the founder of Amiclæ, a Laconian City.
4 Argalus, son of Amyclas.
5 Cynorta, son of Argalus.
6 Oebalus son of Cynorta, from whom a part of this Country had the name of Oebalia.
7 Hippocoon son of Oebalus.
2700 8 Tyndarus brother of Hippocoon, in whose life he was king of Oebalia only.
9 Castor and Pollux, sons of Tyndarus, famous among the Argonautes.
2740 10 Menelaus, son of Atreus, and brother of Agamemnon, Kings of Mycene, together with Helena his wife, the daughter of Tyndarus, whose Rape occasioned the destruction of Troy.
2770 11 Nicostratus, and Megapenthes sons of Menalaus by a former wife.
12 Orestes, son of Agamemnon, and Hermione his wife, daughter of Helena, and Menelaus.
13 Tisamenes son of Orestes and Hermione, who being outed of Sparta by the Heraclidæ, reigned in Achaia; and left his kingdom there, unto his posterity.

The KINGS of SPARTA.

Of the race of the HERACLIDÆ.

1 Aristodemus, the first King of the race of Hercules, left the Kingdom joyntly to his two sons.

3700	25 Agis III.
	26 Eurydamidas, the last King of the line of the Eurypontidæ, slain by Cleomenes, the last of the other line also.

Under these Kings the Government at first was ἀγαν Μοναρχικὸν, as Plutarch termeth it, sufficiently Monarchical, if it were not more. Under Eunomus, the fourth king of the second house, the people finding the reins of Government let loose, began to mutiny and grow too head-strong. To bridle whom; and to restrain the Kings withall, (should they prove exorbitant) Lycurgus the Protector of Charilaus, the sixth King of that house, did ordain the Senate; committing to them the supreme power in maters civil, and leaving to the Kings the ordering all military and sacred businesse. To curb the insolencies of this Senate, who quickly found their own strength, Theopompus the eighth King of that house with the consent of Polydorus the tenth King of of the other; instituted a new Magistracy chosen out of the Common people, whom they called the Ephori, which grew in fine to such an height of pride and Tyranny; as not only to controll the Senators, but to censure, fine, imprison, depose, and mutually to kill their Kings, as the spirit of sedition moved them. So that the State of Lacedæmon, was at first a Monarchie under Kings; than an Aristocratie, under the command of the Senate; next a Democratie under the Ephori; and finally by those popular Officers made so plain a Tyranny, that Aristotle and Plato, two great Common-wealths men, who died before they had embrued their hands in the blood of their Kings, call it in plain terms τυραννίδα & τὸ τυραννικὸν, a most absolute tyranny. What think you would these men have called it, had they lived to see Leonidas the 3d. deposed; and Agis the third of that name also, most barbarously murdered by these popular Villains.

But being the foundation of this Commonwealth was first laid; and the good Laws and politique Constitutions by which it did so long subsist in great power and splendour; established by the wit and power of Lycurgus, as before was said: we are to know concerning him; that he was the son of Eunomus, the fourth King of the second house, slain in a popular tumult by the common people. Who finding by this Essay, that the people were become too head-strong for the Kings to govern, unlesse reduced to extreme bondage by their Kings, which he wished not neither; took the advantage of the minority of Charilaus to new mould the Government: and what he could not doe by fair means to effect by Arms; forcing this Charilaus, though his Nephew, when he came to age, to flie for sanctuary to the Temple of Juno. Having ordained what Laws he pleased, and setled such a form of government as himself best fancied, the better to decline the envy of so great a change, he got leave to travel, binding the people by an oath to observe all his laws until his return: and being gone, commanded at his death, that his ashes should be cast into the Sea, lest being carryed back to Sparta the people might conceive themselves released from their oath. By means whereof his laws continued in force near 700 years, during which time that Common-wealth did flourish in all prosperity: the particulars of which institutions he that lists to see, may find them specified at large, by Plutarch in the life of Lycurgus. Suffice it that the Discipline was so sharp and strict, that many went into the wars for no other reason, than on an hope to rid themselves from so hard a life: and that Diogenes returning hence to the City of Athens, gave out that that he returned from men to women, ἐκ τῶν ἀνδρῶν εἰς τὰς γυναῖκας. And being asked in what part of Greece he had met with the compleatest men; made answer, that he could no where meet with men, but that he had found some boyes amongst the Spartans. A Cynical and rugged answer, but such as carryed a great deal of judgement in it; the Spartans being more stout and resolute in all their actions, and less effeminate in their lives, than the rest of the Grecians. But besides the strictness of the discipline under which they lived, there was another thing which made them wish for wars abroad: namely the little or no power which either the Kings, or People, had in civil matters, or affairs of State; entirely left to the disposing of the Senate, and the power of the Ephori. So that the Kings having by the laws the command of their armies, were willing to engage in war upon all occasion; and the common people as desirous to attend them in such imployments, as the Kings could wish. Upon these grounds the war is made a trade amongst them; beginning with the Helots a neighbouring people; then with the rest of the Laconians; afterwards quarrelling the Messenians, their old Confederates: all which they severally subdued and made subject to them. In the war which Xerxes made against the City of Athens, their King Leonidas the first, of the elder house, went forth to aid them; slain at the straights of Thermopylæ, courageously fighting for the liberty of Greece: and when it was thought fit, to set upon the Persian Fleet, Eurybiades the Spartan Admiral did command in chief. In pursuit of this war against the Persians, Pausanias and Agesilaus were of most renown: the first in helping the Athenians to drive them out of Greece; the other in making war upon them in their own Dominions. Freed from the Persians, they grow jealous of the State of Athens, whom they looked on as their Rivals in point of Soveraignty and glory. Hence the long war betwixt these Cities, called Bellum Peloponnesiacum, managed for the most part in Peloponnesus, from thence transferred into Sicil, and at last ended in the taking of Athens: the Government whereof they changed into an Aristocratie under 30 Magistrates of their own appointment, commonly called the thirty tyrants. Proud of this fortunate successe, their next quarrel was with the Bœotians, the conquered Athenians covertly, and the Persians openly assisting the enemy. Here their prosperity began to leave them. For besides many small defeats, Epaminondas the Theban so discomfited them, at the overthrowes of Leuctres and Mantinea; that Sparta it self was in danger of utter ruine. Not long after happened the Holy war, chiefly undertook against the Phocians, wherein also they made a party: but this war being ended by King Philip, they scarce breathed more freedom than he gave air to. But when Alexanders Captains fought for the Empire of their Master, all these flourishing Republiques were either totally swallowed into, or much defaced by the Kingdom of Macedon. The Lacedemonians held the chief strength of a Town to consist in the valour of the people; and therefore would never suffer Sparta to be walled, till the times immediatly following the death of Alexander the Great: yet could not those fortifications then defend them from Antigonus Doson, King of Macedon; who having vanquished Cleomenes King of Sparta, entred the Town, and was the first man that ever was received into it as Conqueror. So much different were the present Spartans from the valour and courage of their ancestors. Cleomenes being forced to forsake his Country, and the race of the Heraclida failing in him, they became a prey to Machanidus and Nabis, two wicked Tyrants; from whom they were no sooner freed, but they were made subject (in a manner) to the power of Rome: and in the end the Town so weak and inconsiderable, that it was not able to resist the poorest enemy; now a small Burrough called Misithra. And so I leave them to the thoughts of their former glories, having now nothing else to boast of, but the fame and memory of their actions in former times.

ARGOLIS, so called from the chief City Argos, is bounded on the South, with Laconia; on the West, with Corinthia, and Achaia Propria; on the East, and North, with the Sea. A territory remarkable for a most excellent breed of Horses, and from thence called Hippium.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Argos, founded by Argus the fourth King of this Country, and the chief of this Kingdom. Memorable as for other things, so 1. for the death of Pyrrhus King of Epirus; who having forced his entry into it, was here ignobly slain, after all his victories, by the hands of an old woman, throwing a Tyle at him from the top of an house. 2ly. For the long race of the Kings hereof, from Inachus the cotemporary of our Father Abraham, An. 2003. unto Acrisius their last King. Whose daughter Danae being shut up in a Tower of Brass, was deflowred by Jupiter; to whom she bare the renowned Perseus, so memorised in antient Poets. But Perseus having by misfortune slain his Grandfather, the old King Acrisius; quitted the City of Argos as unlucky to him, and transferred the kingdom to Mycene, a City of his own foundation, and so better fancied, by means hereof, the second City of esteem in this little Province. Growing in small time unto so great riches, that it got the name of dites Mycenæ; as appeareth by Horace; in whom the horses of Argos, and the wealth of Mycene are placed in one verse together;

Apium

Argolis.

Aptum dicis equis Argos, ditesque Mycenas.

For horses Argos is of fame,
For wealth Mycenæ hath the name.

3. Trœzen, situate on the Sinus Argolicus, now called Golfo di Engia, the Royal seat of Pytheus, the Father of Theseus, who was born herein: from whence the Town in Ovid hath sometime the name of Pytheia Trœzen, and Theseus many times is called Trœzenius Heros, as Hercules had the name of Tyrinthius Heros, from 4 Tyrinthia, another City of this Province, in which he was nursed. 5. Nemea, where Hercules slew the dreadfull Lion which annoyed this Country. In honour of which noble Act, were instituted in time following the Nemean Games, which continued of great fame in Greece for many Ages. The Exercises were, running with swift horses, whorlbats, running on foot, quoiting, wrastling, darting, shooting. Some have referred the original of these Games to one Opheltes a Lacedæmonian; and in whose honour they conceive them instituted: and others fetch it higher from the war of Thebes. But this I take to be the more allowable opinion. 6. Epidaurus, on the Seaside, famous for the Temple of Æsculapius, and the cure of all sorts of diseases there; so called from Epidaurus, the son of Argus, the founder of it. Of the same name, but of a different situation from that before mentioned in Laconia; that being seated on the Bay called Golfo di Napoli, this on that of Engia. Once called Melissa, and Æmera, at that time an Island: but by a Earthquake laid unto the continent: now called Pigiada. 7. Nauplia, so called of Nauplius King of Eubœa, and father of Palamedes, to whom it antiently belonged. A station then, as now, for shipping; in that regard called Nauplia Navale, now Napoli, or Neapolis, the richest and best traded in all this tract; giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Napoli, of old Sinus Argolicus; into which the famous River Inachus, having passed through the City of Argos, doth disgorge it self; so called from Inachus the Father of Io, and the original and Progenitor of

The KINGS of ARGOS and MYCENÆ.

A. M.

2093 1 Inachus, the supposed father of Io, from whom the Grœcians are sometimes called by the name of Inachii.

2143 2 Phoroneus, the son of Inachus and Melissa, from whom the said Io hath the name of Phoronis in the Poet.

2223 3 Apis, the son of Jupiter, and Niobe the daughter of Phoroneus, who leaving Greece went into Ægypt, where he taught the people tillage, and was there worshipped afterwards in the form of an Oxe.

2308 5 Criasus, by some Peirasus, the son of Argus.

2363 6 Phorbas, the son of Criasus; in whose time Atlas, and Prometheus, are said to flourish.

2397 7 Triopas, the son of Phorbas, and the brother of another Phorbas, who planted himself in the Isle of Rhodes.

2442 8 Crotopus.

2464 9 Sthenelus, outed of the kingdom by

2475 10 Danaus, the brother of Ægyptus; by whom driven out of Ægypt, he was made King of Argos, by consent of the people: the Father of those many daughters got with child by Hercules. From him the Grœcians are called often by the name of Danai.

2525 11 Lynceus, son of Egyptus, the brother of Danaus.

2556 12 Abas, the son of Lynceus, and Hypermnestra the Daughter of Danaus.

2566 13 Pretus, the son of Abas.

2606 14 Acrisius, the brother of Pretus, and the father of Danae, foretold by the Oracle that he should be slain by a son of that daughter, shut her up in a brazen Tower. But Jupiter, having corrupted the Guards with Gold, got the Ladies consent, by whom he had Perseus, so renowned amongst the Poets and Historians of those elder times.

2637 15 Perseus, the son of Jupiter and Danae, exposed by his Grandfather to the Seas. Miraculously preserved, and grown into great fame by his brave exploits; he restored Acrisius to his throne, from which he had been deposed by his brother Pricus. But after having ignorantly and unfortunately slain the said Acrisius, he removed his seat unto Mycenæ; where he reigned together with his son Sthenelus.

2645 16 Eurystheus, the son of Sthenelus, much spoken of for the difficult tasks, which, at the instigation of Juno, he imposed on Hercules his foster-child, and the supposed son of Amphitryon his Cousen German.

Corinthia.

2753 18 Agamemnon, the ſon of Atreus, Commander of the Greeks at the war of Troy, in which action there ingaged 69 Kings of the Grecians, wafted over with a Navy of 1224 ſhips, killed at his coming home by Ægiſthus, his Couſen German.

2768 19 Ægiſthus, the ſon of Thyeſtes, having defiled Clitemneſtra the wife of Agamemnon in the time of his abſence; by her procurement murdered him at his coming home, and uſurped the Kingdom.

2775 20 Oreſtes, ſon of Agamemnon, revenged his fathers death on Ægiſthus, and Clitemneſtra his own Mother. After which falling mad, and reſtored again unto his wits, he maried Hermione, daughter of Menelaus and Helena, by whom he had the kingdom of Sparta alſo.

2803 21 Penthilus, the ſon of Oreſtes, and the laſt King of this line; outed of his eſtate by the Dores and Heraclidæ; who made themſelves Maſters of all Peloponneſus, which they poſſeſſed until the conqueſt of it by the Macedonians.

7. CORINTHIA is a little Region, lying towards the Iſthmus or neck of land, which joineth Peloponneſus to the reſt of Greece, betwixt Argolis, and Achaia Propria. It containeth only the territory of the City of Corinth, not large, nor very fruitfull of thoſe commodities which the reſt of this Peniuſula doth abound withall: as being mountainous and hilly, and by reaſon of the nearneſſe of the Sea, full of craggy rocks. The chief, and indeed the only Cities of note in it, 1. Cenchrea, the naval Road or ſtation of ſhips for Corinth, mentioned Act. 19. 18. and Rom. 16. 1. in both Texts reckoned a diſtinct Town from Corinth, as indeed it was. 2. Corinth it ſelf, commodiouſly ſituate for the command of all Greeee (had not the Inhabitants been more given to Merchandiſe than unto the wars) as being ſeated on the bottom of the neck or Iſthmus; the Ionian Sea upon the Weſt, and the Ægean on the Eaſt, waſhing the walls thereof, and giving it on each ſide a capacious Haven, in which regard called by Horace, bimaris Corinthus. In compaſſe about eleven miles, for ſtrength impregnable, for command as powerfull; maſtering both Seas on which it ſtood, and cutting off all paſſage from one half of Greece to the other: to which laſt end the Caſtle called Acrocorinthus, looking into both Seas, ſerved exceeding fitly; and was therefore called one of the Fetters of Greece. The City rich, well-traded, and neatly built, moſt houſes beautified with handſom pillars, from thence called Corinthian: more memorable for the wealth of the people, and the conveniency of the ſituation; than for any notable exploits performed by them, or any great influence which they had on the States of Greece. But in regard of the wealth, greatneſſe, and ſituation, accounted by the Romans one of the three Cities which they held capable of the Empire; Carthage, and Capua, being the other two. In this City lived the famous or infamous whore, Thais, who exacted 10000 Drachma's for a ſingle nights lodging: which made Demoſthenes cry out, Non emam tanti pœnitere, and occaſioned the old By-word, Non cuivis homini contingit adire Corinthum.

'Tis not for every mans avail,
Unto Corinth for to ſail.

Near hereunto ſtood the Acrocorinthian mountains, at the foot whereof the City, and on the top whereof the Caſtle called hence Acrocorinthus were ſeated: out of which flowed the famous fountain named Pyrene, of old conſecrated to the Muſes; by Perſius called Fons Caballinus, becauſe feigned by the antient Poets to have been made by the Horſe Pegaſus, daſhing his foot againſt the rock. And on the other ſide hereof in the Iſthmus, were celebrated yearly the Iſthmian games, ordained by Theſeus in the honour of Neptune; in imitation of the Olympick deviſed by Hercules in honour of Jupiter. The exerciſes much the ſame, and the reward no other than a Garland of Oaken boughs; yet drawing yearly a great reſort of people to them: partly to exerciſe themſelves, and behold the ſports, and partly to ſacrifice to Neptune, who had hard by a famous Temple.

As for the fortunes of this City; it was at firſt called Ephyra, at that time a ſmall and obſcure place; but beautified and repaired by Corinthus the ſon of Pelops, took the name of Corinth; Governed by him and his poſterity, till the comming of the Heraclidæ into Poloponneſus: at what time one Aletes of the race of Hercules, poſſeſſed himſelf hereof, with the name of King, A. M. 2849. Twelve Princes of his line enjoyed it for the ſpace of 220 years and upwards: when the houſe failing in the perſon of Automanes, they were governed by temporary officers, like the Archontes of Athens. Continuing under this government 124 years, the City was ſeiſed on by one Cypſelus, A. M. 3294 who left it to his ſon Periander, one of the ſeven wiſemen of Greece; counted a Tyrant in thoſe times, for no other reaſon, than that he had ſuppreſſed the popular government: after whoſe death, An. 3364. the City did recover its former liberty. In the buſtle betwixt Athens and Lacedæmon, and other the eſtates of Greece, for the ſuperiority, it did little meddle; the aim of this people being wealth, not honour: not intereſſed in any action of renown in all thoſe times; but in the ſending of Timoleon to the aid of the Syracuſans, againſt the Tyrant Dionyſius, who did lord it over them. Subdued together with the reſt, by the Kings of Macedon; and with the reſt reſtored to liberty by the power of Rome; under whom growing ſtill more rich, and withall more inſolent, they abuſed certain Roman Ambaſſadours. But iraſci populo Romano nemo ſapienter poteſt, as is ſaid in Livie, which the Corinthians found too true: the City being beſiedged, ſacked, and burnt unto the ground by Lucius Mum- Nummius a Roman Conſul, An. V. C. 607. In the burning whereof there were conſumed ſo many goodly Statuas of gold, ſilver, braſſe, and other metals; that being melted into a lump, they made up by that fatal chance, the ſo much eſtimated metal, called Æs Corinthium, more highly prized in Rome than Gold or Silver. Repaired again, it was of great eſteem in the time of the Emperours, converted by S. Paul to the Chriſtian Faith; and having flouriſhed a long time in pride and pleaſures, decayed by little and little, till it came to nothing, and is now a ſmall Burrough called Crato. Achaia.

Having thus ſpoken of the ſeveral eſtates of Peloponneſus, it reſteth that we ſpeak ſomewhat of the eſtate of the whole; varied according to the fortunes of thoſe particulars, which had moſt influence on the ſame. The affairs hereof a long while ſwayed by the Kings of Sicyon, whence it had the name of Sicyonia, reſtrained afterwards to the territories of that City only. But when the Kings of Argos came in place and power, it depended much upon their pleaſures; from Apis the third king whereof (if not rather from Apis, the fourth king of Sicyon) in the opinion of ſome writers, it was named Apia. But Pelops, the ſon of Tantalus King of Phrygia coming into Greece, and marying Hippodamia, daughter of Oenomaus King of Elis, became the moſt powerfull Prince of all this Peninſula, taking from him the name of Peloponneſus. The kingdom of Mycenæ growing into power and credit, had the next turn in ſwaying the affairs hereof for a certain ſeaſon; as after that the Dores and the Heraclidæ, poſſeſſed at once of Argos, Sparta, Corinth, and Meſſene. The Spartans getting the preheminence over all the reſt, were the next who governed the affairs of it, and they held it long; having firſt conquered Laconia, and ſubverted the eſtate of Meſſene; by means whereof, and by their fortunate ſucceſſe againſt the Perſians, they became almoſt abſolute in their commands, without any Competitor. But their power being broken by Pelopidas and Epaminondas, in the Theban war, the petit States hereof began to take heart again, and ſtand upon their own legs, as they did a while; till the Kings of Macedon ſucceeding Alexander the Great, brought them once more under, and made them fellow-ſervants with their Spartan Maſters. In the confuſions which enſued in Macedon, amongſt the Competitors for that kingdom, Patræ and Dime, two Cities of Achaia Propria, firſt united them in a ſtrong league of amity, at ſuch time as Pyrrhus firſt went into Italy: into which confederacy the Cities of Tritæa and Pheræ ſhortly after came, and not long after that, Ægira, and the reſt of Achaia Propria: their affairs firſt governed by two Prætors, with advice of the Senate, as afterwards by one alone with the like advice; of which Marcus Carinenſis was the firſt, and Aratus of Sicyonia the ſecond. The ground thus laid, and the reputation of this new Commonwealth increaſing by the virtue of Aratus, the Epidaurians, Trœzenians, Argives and Megarians became members of it: maintaining gallantly the liberties of Peloponneſus, till finally maſtered by the Romans. In the diviſion of whoſe Empire it fell, with all the reſt of Greece, to the Conſtantinopolitans: and in the declining of their fortunes, when the Latines got poſſeſſion of the Imperial City, moſt of the Sea-coaſts of it were allotted to the State of Venice: the inland parts formerly parcelled out amongſt many Princes, whom they called Deſpots, continuing as before they were. By Iſabel, a daughter of one of theſe Deſpots (and as it ſeems the chief among them) maried to Ferdinand, ſon of James the firſt, and father of James the 2d. King of Majorca, the title of Prince of Morea came into that houſe, uſed by them and the reſt of theſe petit Princes, till all together made a prey to the Turkiſh Tyrants, Mahomet the Great, and Bajazet the ſecond, by whom wholly conquered. For howſoever Thomas and Demetrius, Brethren of that unfortunate Prince Conſtantinus Palæologus, had fled hither at the taking of Conſtantinople; and were received and obeyed by thoſe Petit Princes; yet being unable to hold out againſt the Conquerour, they became his tributaries. But falling out amongſt themſelves, and neglecting then to ſend in the tribute agreed upon, gave Mahomet the Great occaſion to invade the Country; and under colour of aiding one brother againſt the other, to deſtroy them both, as he did accordingly: Demetrius being carried Priſoner to Conſtantinople; and Thomas forced to abandon Peloponneſus; and flee to Italie, Anno 1457. Such Towns hereof as belonged ro the State of Venice, followed the ſame fortune alſo in the time of Bajazet; by whom all taken at the laſt, and the whole Country brought under his obedience, Anno 1500 or thereabouts. Governed ever ſince that time by a Turkiſh Zanziack, under the Beglerbeg of Greece, who hath his reſidence at Modon, a Regiment of 1000 Horſe to ſecure the Country, and 700000 Aſpers, (that is to ſay, 14000 Crowns) a year, for his entertainment.

ACHAIA.

ACHAIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Ægean Sea; on the Weſt, with Epirus; on the North, with Theſſalie; and on the South, with Peloponneſus, and the Seas thereof. Called antiently Hellas, from Helles the ſon of Deucalion: but whence it had the name of Achaia is not yet agreed on; though ſure I am, that from hence the Inhabitants of it were called Achivi, (a name communicated afterwards to all the Græcians) to difference them from the Achæi of Achaia Propria.

The Country famous in the Authors of elder times, more for the gallantry of the men, than any great goodneſſe of the ſoil and place: yet that ſufficiently memorable for the hill Hymettus, ſwarming with Bees, plentifull of the ſweeteſt honey, and rich in mines of excellent Marble; as alſo for the River Cephiſus, which runneth almoſt through the whole length hereof; divided into two main ſtreams, of which the one is called Aſopus, the other retaineth its firſt name. Upon the banks hereof ſtood the Temple of Themis, to which Deucalion did repair to be directed in the reſtauration of mankind, as the Poets fable.

It

Achaia. It was divided antiently into theſe ſeven parts, viz. 1. Attica, 2. Megaris. 3. Bœotia, 4. Phocis, 5. Locris, 6. Doris, and 7. Ætolia. A diviſion now as much diſuſed as the name of Achaia, changed by the Turks into that of Levadia, of which more anon.

1. ATTICA hath on the Weſt, Megaris, and ſome part of Bœotia; on all other parts compaſſed with the Sea: So called from Athens the chief City. The ſoil for the moſt part very barren, and craggy, yet by the arms and induſtry of the people made both rich, and famous: inſomuch as the yeerly Revenues of the ſtate of Athens were 1200 Talents. The money current in this countrey was commonly ſtamped with an Oxe, whence came the By-word Bos in lingua, applyed to ſuch Lawyers as were bribed to ſay nothing in their Clients cauſe. Not much unlike to which was the Proverb riſing from the coin of Ægina (an Iſle adjoyning) ſtamped with the figure of a Snail, viz. Virtutem & ſapientiam vincunt Teſtudines.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Philæ, a ſtrong Fortreſſe on the borders of Bœotia, ſurprized by Thraſibulus, and others of the baniſhed Athenians, during the government of the 30 Tyrants: the taking whereof was the firſt ſtep towards their own and their countries liberty; which ſoon after followed. 2. Eleuſis, on the borders of Megaris, almoſt impregnably fortified by the 30 Tyrants when they had the command of Athens; by whom deſigned for their retreat in all times of danger. But having withdrawn hither on the taking of Philæ, and Piræus, by the Thraſybulians, they found ſtrong wals a weak defence for ſo much wickedneſſe; being trained out as to a parly, and ſo deprived of the place and their power together. It was firſt built by one Eleuſius, who entertained Ceres, as ſhe was in queſt of her daughter Proſerpine; who to reward him taught him the uſe of Agriculture; and he in honour of her built here a Temple. Hence Ceres in the Poets is called Eleuſina, and her ſacrifices ſacra Eleuſinia; and ſometimes the City alſo, Cerealis Eleuſis, ſo called by Ovid in the 7. book of the Metamorphoſis. 3. Rhamnus, upon the River Aſopus, famous for the Temple of Amphiaraus, and the Statua of the Goddeſſe Nemeſis, hence called Rhamnuſia in the Poets: this Nemeſis or Rhamnuſia, being the Goddeſs of indignation, puniſhing thoſe who made themſelves unworthy of their preſent fortunes. 4. Trichoritum, of more Antiquity than fame. 5. Marathon, on the ſouthſide of the river Aſopus, oppoſite to Rhamnus; of great note for the diſcomfiture given by Miltiades the Athenian, to the numerous Army of Darius, conſiſting of 200000 Foot, and 10000 Horſe: the Emulation of which noble victory ſtartled ſuch brave reſolves in the breſt of Themiſtocles. As memorable in the Poets of thoſe elder times for the Marathonian bull there ſlain by Theſeus. 6. Moſopia, the ordinary dwelling place of Theſeus, before he fixed his ſeat at Athens, it being at this Town that he reſtored Helena, (whom he had before ſtoln from her own Country) to her two Brethren Caſtor and Pollux; of which both Rape and Reſtitution we find mention in Ovid, the one in the Epiſtle of Oenone to Paris, the other in that of Hermione to Oreſtes; in which laſt it is ſaid expreſly, Reddita Moſopia Tyndaris urbe ſoror. That is to ſay, that ſhe was delivered to her two Brethren, (who had took much pains in ſeeking for her) in the Town of Moſopia. 7. Pyræus, the Port-Town to Athens, and the ordinary Station for their ſhipping; the Haven hereof being capable of 400 ſail: diſtant from the City about two miles, but joined unto it by two long walls reaching from the one to the other, for ſecuring the conveyance of their Merchandize to and from the ſea. The Port it ſelf impregnably fortified by the advice of Themiſtocles. But as theſe long walls were broken down by the command of the Spartans, when the City of Athens was taken by them: ſo were the fortifications of Pyræus it ſelf demoliſhed by the command of Sylla, in his war againſt Mithridates King of Pontus, the better to keep under the Athenians. 8. Panormus, a Sea-Town alſo, and of very good trade, but not of ſuch importance as the other was. 9. Athens, one of the eyes of Greece, and the chief of Attica, ſituate from the Sea two miles, as before was ſaid: the Haven of Pyræus ſerving it with all commodities, which came from other parts by ſhipping. Firſt built by Cecrops the firſt King of it, by whom called Cecropia, A. M. 2409. repaired afterwards by Theſeus, and furniſhed with good Laws by Solon; and finally thus named from Minerva (whom the Greeks called Athene) to whom they dedicated, and in whoſe honour there were yearly kept ſome ſolemn games called Panathenaia. A City heretofore adorned with all thoſe excellencies of ſtrength and beauty, which Art or coſt could adde unto it. Renowned, as for many things, ſo for three eſpecially. 1. For the inviolable faith of the Citizens in all their Leagues, and moſt firm affection to their friends: ſo that Fides Attica grew in the end unto an Adage. 2ly. For the famous ſcholars which here taught and flouriſhed: this being ſo happy a Nurſery of the choiceſt wits, and ſo fitly ſeated for the Muſes, that the very Natives being in other Countries, could ſenſibly perceive ſome want of that natural vigour, which at home was reſiant in their ſpirits. Ita ut corpora iſtius gentis ſeparata ſint in alias Regiones, ingenia vero ſolis Athenienſium muris clauſa eſſe exiſtimes, as Velleius hath it. Yea and to ſay the truth, it was a moſt famous Univerſity, from whoſe great Ciſtern, the Conduit-pipes of learning were diſperſed over all the world. Yet did not learning ſo effeminate or ſoften the hearts of the people, but that by this one City yeelded more famous Captains than any in the World beſides, not excepting Rome; Miltiades, Ariſtides, Themiſtocles, Cimon, Pericles, Alcibiades, Phocion, and divers others of great name. Who though they were the men that both defended and inlarged this Commonwealth: yet were the people ſo ungratefull to them, or they ſo unfortunate in the end, that they either dyed abroad in baniſhment, or by ſome violent death at home. Themiſtocles the Champion of Greece, died an exile in Perſia; Phocion was ſlain by the people; Demoſthenes made himſelf away by poiſon; Pericles many times indangered; Theſeus their Founder firſt depoſed, and then deſpitefully impriſoned: Ariſtides, Alcibiades, Nicias, &c. baniſhed for 10 years by the Oſtraciſm: A form of puniſhment ſo called, becauſe the name of the partie banished was writ on an Oyster-shell; and only used toward such, who either began to grow too popular, or potent among the men of service. Which device, allowable in a Democratie, where the overmuch powerableness of one might hazard the liberty of all; was exercised in spight oftner, than desert. A Countrey-fellow meeting by chance with Aristides, desired him to write Aristides in his shell: and being asked whether the man whose banishment he desired, had ever wronged him, replyed, No, he was only sorry to hear folk call him a good man. We find the like unfortunate end to most of the Romans, so re'oubted in war. Coriolanus was exiled, Camillus confined to Ardea, Scipio murdered, with divers others: only because their virtue had lifted them above the pitch of ordinary men. Ventidius was disgraced by Antony; Agricola poysoned, with the privity of Domitian; Corbulo murdered by the command of Nero: all able men, yet living in an age, wherein it was not lawful to be valiant. In later times it so hapned to Gonsalvo the Great Captain, who having conquered the kingdom of Naples, driven the French beyond the mountains, and brought all the Italian Potentates to stand at the Spaniards devotion; was by his Master called home, where he lived obscurely, though honoured after his decease with a solemn Funeral. Worse fared the Guise, and Biron in France; worse Essex, and Dudley of Northumberlund, with us in England. Neither will I omit William Duke of Suffolk, who having served 34 years in our wars with France, and for 17 years together never coming home; at his return was quarrelled and basely murdered. It were almost an impietie to be silent of Joab, the bravest souldier, and most fortunate Leader that ever fought the Lords battels; and yet he died at the horns of the Altar. Whether it be that such men be born under an unhappy Planet; or that Courtiers, and such as have best opportunity to indeer men of warre unto their Soveraignes, know not the way of commending their great deserts; or that Envy the common Foe to Vertue, be an hinderance to it; I am not able to determine. And yet it may be that Princes naturally are distrustful of men of Action; and are not willing to make them greater, whose name is great enough already. And it may be the fault is in the souldiers themselves, by an unseasonable over-valuing of their own performances, as if the Prince or State were not able to reward or prize them: which was the cause of the death of Silius, in the time of Tiberius. Concerning which Tacitus giveth us this good note, that over-merit in great Subjects is exceeding dangerous, and begets hate in stead of favours. Beneficia eo usque læta sunt dum videntur exolvi posse; Ubi multum anteverterunt, pro gratia odium redditur, saith that wise Historian. Athens.

But to look back again on Athens, it was first built by Cecrops, the first King thereof; governed by him and his posterity with no lower title, for 400 years, as is apparent by this following Catalogue of

The KINGS of ATHENS.

A.	M.
2394	1	Cecrops, who first made Jupiter a God, and ordained sacrifices to be offered to him, as Pausanias writeth.
2444	2	Cranaus, outed of his kingdom by
2453	3	Amphictyon, the son of Deucalion, and Uncle to that Amphictyon, who first instituted the supreme Court of the Amphictyones, or Common-Councel of all Greece.
2463	4	Erichthonius, the son of Vulcan.
2513	5	Pandion, the Father of Progne and Philomela, so famous in the old Poets, of whom more hereafter.
2553	6	Erichtheus, whose daughter Orithya was ravished by Boreas King of Thrace.
2603	7	Cecrops II. brother of Erichtheus.
2643	8	Pandion II. son of Erichtheus.
2668	9	Ægeus, son of Pandion the second, of whom the Ægean sea took name.
2706	10	Theseus, the son of Ægeus, and Companion of Hercules, vanquished the Minotaur in Crete, collected the people of Attica into a body, and incorporated them into the City of Athens, which he had beautified and enlarged.
2746	11	Menestheus, the son of Peteus, Grandchild of Erichtheus, served with the other Greek Princes at the war of Troy.
2769	12	Demophoon, the son of Theseus, restored unto his Fathers throne on the death of Menestheus.
2802	13	Oxyntes, son or brother of Demophoon.
2814	14	Aphydas, son of Oxyntes, slain by his brother.
2815	15	Thymades, the last of the line of Erichtheus.
2823	16	Melanthius of Messene, driven out of his own Kingdom by the Heraclidæ, obtained that of Athens.
2860	17	Codrus, the son of Melanthius, the last King of Athens; who in the wars against the Peloponnesians, having Intelligence by an Oracle, that his Enemies should have the victory, if they did not kill the Athenian King; attired himself like a common Begger, entred the Peloponnesian Camp, and there played such prancks, that at the last they were fain to kill him. Which when the Enemy understood, they thought themselves by this means deprived of all hopes of success, and so broke up their Army, and departed homewards. For this the people of Athens did so honour his memory, that thy thought no man worthy to succeed, as King; and therefore committed the managing of the Estate to Governours for term of life, whom they called Archontes: the first Archon being Medon,

Athens. don, the ſon of Codrus. Not differing from the former Kings in point of power, but only in the manner of their admiſſion: the former Kings claiming the government by ſucceſſion in right of bloud; and theſe Archontes holding by election only: whoſe names here follow in this liſt of

The perpetual ARCHONTES in the STATE of ATHENS.

A. M.
2882	1	Medon, the ſon of Codrus.
2902	2	Acaſtus, the ſon of Medon.
2938	3	Archippus, the ſon of Acaſtus.
2957	4	Therſippus, the ſon of Archippus.
2998	5	Phorbas, the ſon of Therſippus.
3029	6	Megacles, the ſon of Phorbas.
3059	7	Diogenetus, the ſon of Megacles.
3087	8	Phereclus, the ſon of Diogenetus.
3106	9	Aritthon, the ſon of Phereclus.
3126	10	Theſpieus, in whoſe time began the kingdom of Macedon.
3153	11	Agameſtor.
3173	12	Æſchilus, the ſon of Agameſtor.

After whoſe death, anno mun. 3195. the Athenians weary of theſe Governours for term of life, as being leſs obnoxious to the check and cenſure of the people, choſe themſelves Officers or Archontes for ten years only: at the end of which time they were to yeeld up their places, and make room for others. But being a people greedy of Novelties, and deſirous of change, they had onely ſeven of thoſe Decennial Archontes: their Officers from that time forwards being choſen annually: which Officers being nine in number, we may call moſt properly the Provoſt, the Chief Biſhop, the Marſhals, and the ſix Chief Juſtices, all choſen out of the Nobility. And ſo it held for the ſpace of 170 years, till the time of Solon; who was the firſt which put the Supreme authority into the hands of the People; and gave the firſt hint unto that Democratie, which afterwards prevailed in Athens, by the help of Pericles. Who being one of the great Councel of the Areopagites, took from them a great part of their power in deciding Controverſies, and ſutes in Law, putting them over to the judgement of the common People. A Government ſo dearly loved by the Athenians, that in all the Cities which they conquered or reſtored to liberty, or won to their party from the Spartans, they cauſed it to be admitted: as on the other ſide the Spartans introduced and confirmed the Ariſtocratie (their own loved Government) in all the places where they proſpered. As for the Court of the Areopagites of much fame in Athens, it conſiſted from the firſt beginning ἐκ τῶν κατ' ἐναυτὸν Ἀρχόντων, of ſuch as had born ſome of the nine chief Offices; who being once admitted, held for term of life. Firſt inſtituted in the time of Demophoon, the ſon of Theſeus, and called by the name of Areopagites, either for that they held their Court in the ſtreet of Mars, ἐν Ἀρείῳ πάγῳ, mentioned Act. 17.22. or becauſe Mars being accuſed for a Murder, did firſt plead before them. A Court which held in eſtimation under all theſe changes, and ſo continued till the time of the Roman Empire.

But to return again to the ſtory of Athens; in or about the later end of the life of Solon, Piſiſtratus altered the Free State, and made himſelf the abſolute Maſter of the City: but he once dead, the People regained their libertie, driving thence Hippias the ſon of Piſiſtratus; who hereupon fled for ſuccour to Darius the Perſian Monarch, occaſioning by that means the firſt coming of the Perſians into Greece. What ſucceſſe the Perſians had in Greece, the Hiſtories of thoſe times abundantly inform us: Darius being vanquiſhed by Miltiades, at Marathon; and Xerxes by Themiſtocles, at Salamis. Yet did not Athens ſcape ſo clear, but that it was taken by Xerxes, though indeed firſt abandoned, and voluntarily diſmantled by the Athenians. When the Perſians were retired homewards, the people of Athens re-edified their town, and ſtrongly fortified it with high and defenſible walls: which done, they put their Fleet to Sea, and ſpoiled the coaſts of Perſia in all quarters; inriching their Ciy with the ſpoils, and inlarging their power and Dominion by the addition of many Ilands and Sea-townes. Hereby they grew unto that wealth and potency, that they were ſuſpected by their weaker neighbours, and envied by their ſtronger, the Lacedemonians eſpecially: who fearing to loſe their antient priority over Greece, but pretending the ſurpriſal of Potidea a Citie of Thrace, from the Corinthians, and ſome hard meaſure, by them ſhewed upon the Megarenſes; made warre upon them. In the beginning of this warre, the Athenians not only reſiſted the whole power of all Greece, confederate againſt them; but ſo exceedingly proſpered, that the Spartans ſued for peace, and could not get it. But the ſcales of fortune turned. For after they had held out 28 years, they were compelled to pluck down the Walls of their City, and ſubmit themſelves to the will and pleaſure of the Spartans, now by the puiſſance and good fortune of Lyſander, become their Maſters: by whom the Government was changed, and an Ariſtocratie, (or rather Oligarchie) eſtabliſhed under 30 Magiſtrates, known commonly by the name of the 30 Tyrants; expelled not long after by the valour of Thraſibulus, and his aſſociates, as hath been touched upon before. Not long after the end of this warre, which the Hiſtorians call Bellum Peloponneſiacum, the Perſians ſeeing how the Spartans, not having now the State of Athens to oppoſe them, began to work upon their Empire: furniſhed Conon a Noble Athenian Gentleman with a Navy ſo well provided, that they overcame the Lacedemonians in a fight at Sea; and thereby put his Countrey-men into ſo good heart, that they made a partie in the warre called Bellum Sacrum: compoſed at the laſt by Philip of Macedon: who brought not only the Thebans whom he came to aid, but the Athenians, Spartans, and the reſt of the adverſe partie, under his command. A ſervitude from which they were never freed, till as well Macedon, as the reſt became fellow-ſervants unto Rome. But though this brave City had then loſt her power in point of Arms, yet ſhe ſtill kept her credit as an Univerſity in point of Arts; Origen, Chryſoſtom, Baſil, and Gregory Nyſſen, men of renown and eminence in the Primitive times, are ſaid to have ſtudied at Athens: the like affirmed of Pope Joane, if the Tale be true, for the middle ages. And so it held, as I conjecture, though not so eminently as before, till the year 1440. when taken by Mahomet the Great, who wondred much (as my Author telleth) at the extreme beauty of the Castle, and the strength of the walls, not having lost in so long time, their former excellencies. Since that it sensibly decayed, and is now an ordinary Burrough (by the Turks called Selines) but still preserved the Reputation of an Episcopal See, the Bishop of it holding up the title of Athenienſis. Bœotia.

Pope

2. MEGARIS is bounded on the East, with Attica; on the West, with the Bay of Corinth; on the North, with Bœotia; and on the South, with the Isthmus, and the Golf di Engia. So called from Megaris, the chief City.

This the least Province of all Greece, and not very fruitfull; the Countrey for the most part being hard and rocky. Not beautified with many Cities; the principal of those which were 1 Pegæ, or Pagæi, situate on the Bay of Corinth, and spoken of both by Plinie and Ptolemie; but not otherwise memorable. 2 Megaris, (now Megra) first built by Megareus, the son of Apollo; and from him thus named. Remarkable in former times for a Sect of Philosophers, called from hence Secta Megarica, founded by one Euclide a Disciple of Socrates; of whom see Laertius. More memorable in the Poets for Nisus, once the King of this little Territorie: on whose head there is said to have grown a Purple Hair, on which the preservation of his life and Kingdome did depend. Which Jewel his daughter Scylla is said to have delivered unto King Minos her Fathers Enemy; on whom then besieging this City, upon the sight of him from an high Turret, she became inamoured. But he rejecting her, and her Present both, after the taking of the City returned into Crete: which the unhappy woman seeing, threw her self after him into the Sea, and was turned into the Bird called Ciris. I leave the moralizing of the Fable unto the Mythologists: observing only by the way, the antiquitie of that politick practise, to love the treason and hate the Traytor. But the glories of this Citie did not end with Nisus. For shaking off the Cretan yoke, it became sui juris once again: and being conveniently seated on the very Isthmus, amounted to that height of prosperity, that they contended with the Athenians for the Iland of Salamis. And in this war they so crushed the power and spirit of Athens by one fatal overthrow; that the Athenians to prevent all the like disasters, did ordain by Law, that whosoever mentioned the recovery of Salamis, was to lose his life: so that Solon was compelled to feign himself frantick, the better to propound the enterprise. In which, although the State of Athens got the Isle of Salamis: yet did the Megarenſes continue a Free-people, till brought under (with the rest) by the Macedonians, and with them made subject unto Rome.

3 BOEOTIA is bounded on the South, with Megaris, and the Bay of Corinth; on the North, with the River Cephisus; on the East, with Attica, and a branch of the Ægean Sea; and on the West, with Phocis. Thus named from Βοῦς, which in Greek signifieth an Oxe: because when Cadmus weary of seeking his sister Europa (whom Jupiter had stollen out of Phœnicia) came to the Oracle at Delphos; he was commanded to follow the first Oxe he saw, and where the Oxe did rest it self; there to build a City.

In the Countrie nothing singular, but an antient custom of burning before the door of an house in which a new-married wife was designed to dwell; the Axle-tree of the Coach which brought her thither; giving her by that Cermonie to understand (as Plutarch telleth us in his Morals) that she must frame her self to live and abide with him, without hope of departure. In this Country also are the Streights of the Mountain Oeta, from the neighbouring Bathes, called Thermopylæ, not above 25 foot in bredth: which in the war that Xerxes made against the Greeks, were valiantly defended by Leonidas King of Sparta, with no more than 300 of his men, who having valiantly resisted that Armie which in its passage out of Persia had drank Rivers drie, and slain at least 30000 of them, dyed every man upon the place. To hide the greatness of which loss, lest it should terrifie the rest of his Army which were coming on; Xerxes commanded all the slain men to be buried in several pits, except a thousand; as if no more than they had been lost in that passage.

Places of most observation in it: 1 Thespias, on a River of the same name, at the fall whereof into the Bay it is pleasantly seated: shadowed on the North with a Branch of the Mountain Helicon; and consecrated as that was, unto the Muses, hence called Thespiades in the Poets. 2 Platea, nigh to which, Mardonius General to the Persians, was overcome by the Greeks, with the losse of Mardonius himself and 160000 men on the Persian side; and on the other no more than 31 Spartans, 16 Arcadians, 52 Athenians, and about 600 of the Megarenſes. In memorie of which brave exploit, and to preserve the names and honour of those Worthies, who there laid down their lives for the libertie of Greece: there was a festival kept annually by the Plateans in the month of September, with solemn Sacrifices, and a kind of divine acknowledgement unto the deceased; continued from the time of Aristides the Athenian who first ordained them, to the dayes of Plutarch, who records it; but how long after I am not able to say. In this great fight the Commander in chief was a noble Spartan, called Pausanias, who afterwards having a design to make himself Soveraign of all Greece, and being discovered in the practice; fled for sanctuarie to the Temple of Pallas. From whence because it was counted sacrilege to constrain him by violence, it was unanimously resolved to wall up the entrances; his own Mother laying the first stone. It is recorded, that before the fighting of this battel, the Athenians had been told by the Oracle that they should be Conquerours if they fought upon their own ground: whereupon the Plateans within whose territories the Persians had prepared to fight, bestowed that field on the State of Athens. In requital of which noble act, Alexander the Great re-edified and enlarged their Citie; having been first burnt, and sacked, by the Persians; and after levelled with the ground by the Lacedæmonians, because confederate with Athens in the war against them. 3 Leuctra, remarkable for the great overthrow, which the Thebans, under the conduct of Epaminondas, gave unto the Spartans, and their King Cleombrotus there slain: by which victory they did not only preserve their own libertie, but brought their enemies to that fall of courage and reputation, that they could never rise again: the divine vengeance overtaking them in that very place, where some of their Nation had deflowred the daughters of Schedasus, who had given them courteous entertainment. For which, when no reparation could be had from the State of Sparta, the unfortunate Damosels slew themselves, to avoid the infamie of consenting to their own dishonour, and were buried in those very fields where this battel was fought. 4 Ascra, the birth-place of Hesiod, a man (according to Paterculus) elegantis ingenii, & carminum dulcedine memorabilis: though it hath pleased that proud Critick Julius Scaliger, intending to deifie Virgil, to prefer the worst verse in the Georgicks of the one, before the whole works of the other. 5. Lebadia, near the River Cephisus, the Inhabitants whereof were counted the most superstitious of all the Grecians: memorable for the Den or Cave of Trophonia, and the Oracle there given by Jupiter, hence called Trophonius. Into which Cave none were permitted to enter and receive the Oracle, but after many ointings, washings, and the like superstitious preparations, too long and many to be specified in this place and time. A town which still preserves so much of its antient estimation, that from hence (as I conjecture) the whole Country of Achaia hath the name of Levadia; by which the Turks call it at this present. 6. Cherona, or Ceronea, the birth-place of Plutarch. Near unto which was fought that memorable battel, betwixt L. Sylla and the Romans, against Archelaus, one of the Lieutenants of Mithridates King of Pontus, leading an Armie of 120000 souldiers; of which 10000 only escaped with life, the Romans losing but 14. 7 Orchomenon, no lets memorable for another victorie, obtained by the same L. Sylla, against Dorilaus another of that Kings Commanders, having an army of 80000 men, of which 20000 lost their lives that day. After which victories, when Sylla might easily have destroyed that King, he suddenly patched a peace up with him, that he might hasten unto Rome, where Marius and Cinna had trodden his faction under foot; preferring by that act the pursute of his own private quarrels, before that of his Countrie; endangered more by Mithridates after his return, than it had been formerly. 8 Aulis, a Port town on the shores of the Ægean Sea, where the Grecians took shipping when they went to the war of Troy; here making Oath never to give over the enterprize, until they had destroyed that Citie. Concerning which, thus she in Virgil:

Non ego cum Danais Trojanam excindere Gentem
Aulide juravi.

That is say:

I took no oath at Aulis to destroy,
As did the Greeks, the Town and State of Troy.

But the chief City of this Countrie, and such as had a special influence over all the rest, was the City of Thebes, situate on the banks of the River Cephisus, where built by Cadmus the Phœnician after all his wandrings. Famous in old times for the wars between Eteocles and Polynices, the sons of the unfortunate Prince Oedipus, and of his Mother and wife Jocasta. The historie of which war is the most antient piece of storie, that we finde of all Greece; the former times and writings containing nothing but fables, little savouring of humanity, and lesse of truth; as of men changed into Monsters, the adulteries of the Gods, and the like. In this town lived Pelopidas and Epaminondas, who so crushed the Lacedæmonians at the battel of Leuctra and Mantinea, that they could never after re-obtain their former puissance. This Common-wealth long flourished, and at last being overburdened in the Phocian war, was glad to submit it self to the protection of the Macedonians, under the leading of King Philip: who by this means first got footing in Greece, into which afterwards he thrust his whole body. Upon the death of Philip, Thebes revolted from the Macedons; but Alexander his successor quickly recovered it: and to dishearten the Greeks in the like attempts, he razed the Citie, selling all the inhabitants of age and strength; only Pindarus house he commanded to be left standing, in honour of that learned Poet. At this sack of the town, one of the Macedon souldiers entred the house of a principal woman, named Timoclea, ravished her, and rifled her coffers; but still demanding more treasure, she shewed him a deep Well, saying, that there all her money was hidden. The credulous villain stooping down to behold his prey, she tumbled into the Well, and overwhelmed with stones; for which noble act, the generous Prince not only dismissed her unhurt, but most highly commended her. It was after re-edified by Cassander, and followed for the most part, as the rest of the Bœotians did, the fortunes of Macedon. Reduced at this time to the State of an ordinary Burrough, and called Scibes by the Turks.

4 PHOCIS is bounded on the East, with Bœotia; on the West, with Doris, and Locris; on the North, with the River Cephisus; and on the South, with the Bay of Corinth. A Countrey somewhat swelled with Mountains, but those of eminent note in the elder times. The chief whereof 1 Helicon, 2 Citheron; both consecrated to the Muses, and both contending with Parnassus for height and bigness. 3 Parnassus, of so great an height, that in that great deluge, in which most of these parts of Greece were over-over-whelmed with the waters, Deucalion and Pyrrha ſaved themſelves, and many others, on the top hereof: for which and for its two ſummits reaching to the clouds, of great renown amongſt the Poets; as in Ovid thus:

Mons ibi verticibus petit arduus aſtra duobus,
Nomine Parnaſſus; ſuperatque cacumine nubes.

Parnaſſus there with his two tops extends
To the toucht ſtars, and all the clouds tranſcends.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, are 1 Anticyra, ſituate near the Sea, and famous for the Helleborum there growing, an herb very medicinal for the Phrenzie; whence the Proverb, Naviget Anticyras, applyed to mad men. 2 Pytho, or Pythia, ſaid to be ſeated not only in the middle of Greece, but of all the world: Strabo relating how Jupiter deſirous to know the exact middle of the earth, let looſe two Eagles, one from the Eaſt, and the other from the Weſt, which flying with an equal wing (ſo we muſt conceive) and meeting at this very place, ſhewed it apparently to be the Navel of the World. By reaſon of which convenient ſituation in the heart of Greece, it was made a Seſſions town for all the Grecians, and honoured with the Court and general Aſſembly of the Amphictyones; men choſen out of the prime Cities of Greece who had power to decide all Controverſies, and to make Laws for the common good. A Court firſt inſtituted by Acriſius, as Strabo telleth us; or as Halicarnaſſeus more probably, by Amphictyon the ſon of Helles, from whom they ſeem to have their name. The Commiſſioners from the ſeveral Cities, with reference to the places for which they ſerved, had the name of Pylagoræ; when aſſembled, they were called the Amphictyones: their meetings at the beginning of the Spring, and Autumn. Some inſtances concerning their authoritie will not be amiſſe. In the time of Cimon, the Cyrrhenians having by Piracie wronged the Theſſalians, were fined by this Councel. And after that the Lacedæmonians for ſurprizing Cadmea; and the Phocians for ploughing up the Land of Cyrrha, which belonged to the Temple of Delphos, were by them amerced: and becauſe they continued obſtinate, and paid not their amercements, their Dominions were adjudged to be confiſcate unto that Temple. But they diſobeying this Decree alſo, ſpoiled the Temple it ſelf: for which, war being proclamed againſt them by the reſt of the Grecians, who by the aſſiſtance of Philip King of Macedon, brought them to obedience; the Councel was again aſſembled. In which it was decreed that the Phocians ſhould raze the wall of their Cities; that they ſhould pay the yearly tribute of 60 Talents; that they ſhould no more keep Horſe and Arms, til they had ſatisfied the Treaſurie of the Temple; nor any longer have a voice in thoſe Conventions. It was alſo then enacted, that the loſt ſuffrages of the Phocians ſhould be veſted in King Philip, and his ſucceſſors, Kings of Macedon; on whom they alſo did confer the perpetual Preſidentſhip, and made them Princes of that Senate. A Court to which the Sanhedrin of the 70 Elders, among the Jews; and in our times, the Diets of the Empire, and the Aſſemblies of the Switzers, carry moſt reſemblance. 3. Cyrrha, on the Sea-ſide, the Port town to Delphos. 4 Criſſa, ſo called from Criſſeus the ſon of Phocus, and grandchild of Æacus, ſituate on the edge of the Bay of Corinth; called ſometimes from hence Criſſeus Sinus. 5 Scarphia, memorable for the defeat of Critolaus Captain of the Achæan Armie, by Metellus one of the Roman Prætors: the loſſe of which battel drew after it the deſtruction of Corinth. It was obſerved in the ſucceſs of this great fight, that a band of Arcadians eſcaping out of the battel came unto 6 Elatea, another City of this Province, and were there kindly entertained, on memory of ſome former alliances; til news came of the overthrow of Critolaus: when ordered by the State of Phocis to relinquiſh the town, (for adverſity ſeldom meeteth with returns of friendſhip) they were ſet upon, and all ſlain by the Romans, in the ſelf-ſame place, in which their Anceſtors had unworthily forſaken the reſt of the Grecians in their warre againſt Philip King of Macedon, for the publick Libertie. 7. Daulis, a City appertaining to Tereus King of Thrace, who having maried Progne the daughter of Pandion King of Athens, raviſhed her ſiſter Philomela, and cut out her tongue the better to keep his villany undiſcovered. But Progne being made acquainted with the double injury, firſt made him ignorantly eat his own ſon Itys, whom ſhe had baked in a Pye; and after killed him, with the help of her raviſhed ſiſter. 8 Delphos, renowned in old times for the famous Temple of Apollo, in which with that of Jupiter Hammon in Marmarica, (now reckoned as a part of Egypt) were the moſt famous Oracles of the antient Gentiles: dark Riddles of the Devil, couched and contrived with ſo much cunning, that the meaning of them was moſt hidden, when it was thought moſt eaſie to be diſcerned. Inſtance of which that given to Cræſus, in the war by him projected againſt the Perſian, which was thus delivered;

Cræſus Halyn penetraus magnam ſubvertet opum vim.

When Cræſus over Halys goes
A mighty Nation he o'rethrows.

Which he interpreting according to his own hopes, croſſed the River; was vanquiſhed by Cyrus King of Perſia, and his Kingdom conquered. The like we find of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who before he made war againſt the Romans, conſulted with the Oracle, and received this anſwer.

Aio te Æacide Romanos vincere poſſe.

Locris. Which doubtful prediction he thus construed; Te posse vincere Romanos, that he should overcome the Romans; but found it unto his cost that the meaning was, Romanos posse vincere te, that the Romans should overcome him; as indeed it happened. By another kinde of the same fallacie which the Logicians call Amphibolia, did this great enemy of mankind overthrow another: who demanding of the Oracle what successe he should have in an expedition which he was in hand with, received his answer in these words:

Ibis redibis nunquam per bella peribis.

Which he thus pointing, Ibis, redibis, nunquam per &c. engaged himself in the war, and was therein slain. Whereupon his followers canvasing the Oracle, found the meaning of it to be this, Ibis, redibis nunquam, per &c. The like jugling he also used in those supernatural Dreams, which Philosophers call Φαντάσματα. For Cæsar dreaming that he carnally knew his own mother, the night before he passed over the Rubicon, became Lord of Rome, the common mother of the Romans: and Hippias the son of Pisistratus the Tyrant of Athens, having upon the same projects the same dream, was killed and buried in the bowels of his mother the earth: so that had Cæsar miscarried in his action, and Hippias thrived; yet still had the Devil been reputed his crafts-master, and the father of truths. But as the Ecclesiastical history telleth us, that Julian the Apostata consulting with the Devil, was told that he could receive no answer, because that the body of Babylas the Martyr, was entombed nigh his Altar: so neither could the Devils deceive the world as formerly they had done, after Christ the truth it self was manifested in the flesh, and tormented these unclean spirits, though as they alleged, before their time. Augustus, as Suidas telleth us, in whose time our Saviour was born, consulting with the Oracle about his successor, received this not satisfying answer:

Παῖς ἑβραῖς κέλεταί με θεοῖς μακάρεσσιν ἀνάσσων
Τόν δε δόμον τοῦτον λιπεῖν καὶ αἶψα λυθῆς ἰκέσθαι, Λοιπὸν ἀπ' ἐμεῖο σιγῶν ἐν βωμῶν ἡμεσιδέων.

An Hebrew child, whom the blest Gods adore,
Hath bid me leave these shrines and pack to hell,
So that of Oracle I can no more:
In silence leave our Altar, and farewell.

Whereupon Augustus coming home, in the Capitol erected an Altar, and thereon in Capital Letters caused this inscription to be ingraven, HÆC EST ARA PRIMOGENITI DEI. Now as the Devils had by Christs birth lost much of their wonted vertue, so after his passion they lost it almost altogether. Concerning which Plutarch in a tract of his Morals, called Περὶ τῶν ἐκλελοιπότων χρηστηρίων why Oracles cease to give answers, telleth us a notable story, which was this. Some company going out of Greece into Italie, were about the Echinades becalmed; when on a suddain there was heard a voice, loudly calling on one Thamus an Egyptian, then in the ship. At the two first calls he made no answer, but to the third he replyed, saying, Here I am: and the voice again spake unto him, bidding him when he came to the Palodes, to make it known, that the great God Pan was dead. When they came unto the Palodes, which are certain shelves and rocks in the Ionian Sea, Thamus standing on the poop of the ship, did as the voice directed him: whereupon was heard a mighty noise of many together, who all seemed to groan and lament with terrible and hideous shreekings. News hereof coming to Tiberius, he caused the learned men in his Empire, to enquire out of their Books who that Pan should be; by whom it was answered, that he was the son of Mercury and Penelope; with ignorance enough, and little satisfaction to the business propounded to them. Such therefore as more narrowly observed the circumstances of this accident, found it to happen at the time when our Saviour suffered on the Crosse; who was indeed the true God Pan, the chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, as the Scripture calleth him: and that upon this divulging of his death and passion, the Devils who used to speak in Oracles, did with great grief and lamentation forsake that Office, which had been so gainful to them in seducing mankind. That all Oracles at that instant ceased, I dare not say; though it be certain that about that time they began to fail: it being said by Juvenal, who lived in the reign of Domitian, Delphis Oracula cessant, that the Oracle of Delphos was then silent; the rest decaying sensibly in a short time after.

But to proceed, the Temple of Apollo being spoiled by the Phocians, as before was noted, caused the war betwixt them and the Thebans, called the Holy War: in which the Thebans being likely to have the worst, sent for Philip of Macedon, who made an end of the quarrel by subduing both. The treasure which the Phocians found in the Temple, was reckoned at 60 talents of Gold; but it proved Aurum Tolosanum, and brought a sudden ruine on their State and Nation: Sacrilege being so impardonable a crime, even amongst the Heathen, that the fault of some few, countenanced by the rest of a people, hath brought destruction on them all. It was afterwards with the like ill fortune ransacked by Brennus and his Gaules, in the main of the Macedonian Empire; all of them miserably perishing who had any hand in it.

5 LOCRIS is bounded on the East, with Phocis, and a branch of the Ægean Sea; on the West, with Ætolia; on the North, with a long ridge of hils which part it from Thessalie; and on the South, with parts of Achaia, Bœotia, Phocis, the Bay of Corinth, the Straits of Antirrhium, and a part of the Ionian Ionian Sea. So that for largeneſs of extent, and the commodiouſneſſe of the Seas, it yeeldeth to no Province in Achaia, though not ſo fruitfull as ſome others. Divided into the three Nations of the Locri. Ozolæ, lying towards the South, on both ſides of the Straits; ſo called from ſome ill ſmels of the Country, or people; 2ly. the Epicnemidii, inhabiting the middle parts, ſo named from Mount Cnemis, not far from Parnaſſus; and 3. the Opuntii, ſo called from Opus their chief City; lying on the North ſide of the River Cephiſus, on the Coaſts of the Ægean, or Eubœan Seas. Doris and Ætolia.

Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Opus, the head City of the Opuntians, ſituate on the River Aſopus, being one of the main branches of Cephiſus. 2. Cynus, the Port Town to Opus. 3. Thronium, the prime town of the Epicnemidii, mentioned by Polybius, Livie, Ptolemie. 4. Cnemides, at the foot of Mount Cnemis, whence they had their name. 5. Amphiſſa, the chief City of the Ozolæ, ſituate in the inland parts of it: the people whereof refuſing to yeeld to the ſentence of the Amphictyones, againſt their confederates the Phocians, were the cauſe that Philip of Macedon returned into Greece. Againſt whom grievouſly infeſting the Bœotian, and manifeſtly aſpiring to the command of Greece, the Athenians deſperatly oppoſed; not ſo much with poſſibility of prevailing, as by the ſharp and biting Orations of Demoſthenes, made againſt his proceedings: which being by him called Philippicks, occaſioned Tully to call his bitter invectives againſt M. Antonius, by the ſame name alſo. But the ſucceſſe hereof was ſuch, as commonly attendeth a broken fortune: The Athenians being vanquiſhed at Charonea, and Philip declared Captain of Greece againſt the Perſians, obtaining under that title the command he ſought. 6. Evantia, as Ptolemy; Oeantia, as Plinie and Pauſanias call it; oppoſite to Ægira in Achaia propria. 7. Molychria, by Ptolemie placed here; and by others reckoned in Ætolia; Not far from whence is the Promontory of Antirrhium, ſo called becauſe juſt oppoſite to that of Rhium in Achaia propria: between which runneth a narrow ſtreight (not ſo wide as the Helleſpont) which openeth into the Bay of Corinth; each Promontory for that cauſe fortified by Bajazet the 2d. with a very ſtrong Caſtle, that on this ſide being gallantly defended by the Turks, when beſiedged by Doria, Anno 1532. For being forced with great ſlaughter into a ſtrong Tower, which commanded the Caſtle, they rather choſe to blow it up, together with the ammunition, victuals, and themſelves to boot, than that the Fort ſhould come intire into the hands of the Enemie. Some place this Promontory in Ætolia alſo; but following the authority of Ptolemie, I have placed it here. 8 Naupactus, ſo called from the building of ſhips there by the Heraclidæ; ſituate on the Corinthian Bay near the mouth thereof. Given by the Citizens of Athens to the poor Meſſenians, when after the end of the third war, the Lacedæmonians unwilling to have them troubleſome neighbours (and they ſcorning to be quiet ſlaves) compelled them to ſeek new habitations. It hath of late been called Lepanto, giving the name of the Golfe of Lepanto to the Bay of Corinth; by that name ſubject for a while to the Venetians, and from them taken by the Turks, Anno 1499. Of theſe Locrians, thoſe of Italy were a branch or Colonie, whoſe Law-giver was Zaleucus, ſpoken of elſewhere.

6. DORIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Phocis; on the Weſt, with Ætolia; on the North, with the hill Oeta, and other Mountains which divide it from Theſſalie; and on the South, with Ætolia, and part of Locris. The air hereof is very healthy, and the ſoil ſufficiently fruitfull if well manured, but now the greateſt part lyeth waſt for want of tillage. Firſt peopled by the Dores or Dorienſes, deſcended from Dorus, the ſon of Hellen, and grandchild of Deucalion; by whom placed in Theſſalie; afterwards ſpreading into this Country, which they left their name to, as their proper dwelling: though many of them following the Heraclidæ into Peloponneſus, poſſeſſed themſelves of the greateſt part of Laconia alſo: imprinting on the ſame their Dialect or form of ſpeech, from them called the Dorick.

Chief Cities hereof are 1. Doris, ſo called in memory of Dorus, the firſt Progenitour of this people. 2. Erineus, ſeated at the foot of Parnaſſus, mentioned by Thucydides, Strabo, Mela, Ptolemie, and the reſt of the antients. 3. Bium, as Ptolemie; or Boion, as Strabo and Plinie call it. 4. Cytinum, near Parnaſſus alſo, in the common impreſſions of Diodorus Siculus the Hiſtorian, falſly called Cynthinium. 5. Lilæa, ſituate not far from the ſpring or fountain of the River Cephiſus; which riſing hereabouts paſſeth thorow the whole length of Achaia, and falls into the Ægean or Eubœan Sea.

7. ÆTOLIA hath on the Eaſt, Locris; on the Weſt, Epirus; on the North, Doris; on the South, the Ionian Sea. Said to be ſo called from Ætolus, the ſon of Mars, who being by Salomoneus caſt out of Elis, fixed himſelf in this Country.

Here is the Forreſt of Calydon, where Meleager and the flower of the Greek Nobility, ſlew the wild Bore. Here is the River Evenus, over which the Centaure Neſſus having carried Dejanira wife of Hercules; and intending to have raviſhed her, was ſlain by an Arrow which Hercules on the other ſide of the River ſhot at him. Here alſo is the River of Achelous, of whom the Poets fable many things, as that being rival with Hercules in the love of Dejanira, he encountred him in the ſhape of a Bull; and that when Hercules had pluck'd off one of his horns, the Nymphs made of it their ſo much celebrated cornucopia.

The people of this Country were the moſt turbulent, and unruly people of all Greece, never at peace with their neighbours, and ſeldom with themſelves. The Macedonians could never tame them, by reaſon of the cragginеſſe of the Country: yet they brought them to ſuch terms, that they were compelled to let the Romans into Greece, who quickly made an end of all.

Principal Towns hereof were 1. Chalcis, ſituate near the ſpring-head of Achelous before mentioned.

Achaia.

ned. 2. Arachthus, near the river ſo called; which ariſing hereabouts paſſeth into Epirus, and falleth into the Bay of Ambracia, not far from Nicopolis. 3. Olenus, not far from the Foreſt of Calydon. 4. Pleurona, giving name to the adjoyning Country, called hence Pleuronia, the people whereof had the name of Curetes, ἀπὸ τῆς κουρᾶς, from their ſhaving; it being their cuſtom to ſhave the fore-parts of their heads, and let the hair grow on the hinder parts only; ne hoſtes eos cæſarie apprehenderent; becauſe their enemies ſhould not lay hold on them by the fore-tops, and ſo pull them down. 5. Thermus, the Parliament City, or place of general Aſſembly, for all the States of Ætolia, which meeting was called Panætolium; choſen for thoſe meetings, in regard of the ſituation and ſtrength thereof; as ſituate well-near in the midſt of the Country, environed with rockie Mountains, of ſteep and difficult aſcent. For that cauſe made alſo the receptacle of their wealth, and treaſure, in all times of danger; but taken by the laſt Philip of Macedon, with all the ſpoil in it, in his war againſt them. 6. Calydon, near the Foreſt ſo called, giving name unto it: the royal ſeat of Oeneus, father of Meleager; divided into two parts by the River Evenus, which runneth through it, according unto that of Ovid,

Et Meleagream, maculatus ſanguine Neſſi
Evenus, Calydona ſecat.

That is to ſay:

Calydon, Meleagers Town, the flood
Even divides, defil'd with Neſſus blood.

Adjoyning hereunto were the Athamanes, whom Plinie makes a people of it, who gave name unto a little Province called Athemania; but ſuch (as little as it was) as gave it the title of a Kingdom to Animander: a Prince whom the Ætolians made ſpecial uſe of in their wars againſt Philip King of Macedon, the father of Perſeus, ſuggeſting to him and his children, that they were deſcended of the houſe of Alexander the great, and ſo ingaging them in a hope of that Kingdom, to hazard the quiet of their own. The places of moſt note is 1. Dium, 2. Athanæum, both took by Philip in that war.

Theſe, as they were the laſt Actors on the ſtage of Achaia; ſo had they the moſt deſperate part in all the tragœdie of that Country. The affairs whereof, governed ſucceſſively by that State which was moſt powerfull, were for a long time managed by the Athenians: whoſe Counſels and concluſions went for law amongſt them. But that Eſtate being broken, if not ſubverted by the power of Sparta, the Thebans and Bœotians, who came next in play, had the chief command; uniting almoſt all the reſt in deſign with them againſt the Spartans, who now grow terrible to all. Becoming inſolent by the courſe of too much proſperity, and the many great victories which they had againſt the Spartans; and thereupon quarelling with the Phocians, they were the cauſe of Philips coming into Greece; who as he had learned amongſt them the uſe of arms, ſo made he uſe thereof at laſt, and of their diſſentions, to unite all the States of Greece under his command: Thebes it ſelf being took and ſacked by Alexander, the ſon of Philip, as before is ſaid. The Macedonians thus prevailing, partly by force, but ſpecially by art and practice, there was no people in Achaia that durſt oppoſe them; till theſe Ætolians, a reſtleſs, and impatient people took the cauſe in hand. Who thrived ſo well under Antigonus, and Philip, two of the laſt Kings of Macedon, that they took from them many Towns, invaded Theſſalie, attempted Macedon it ſelf: and when they could not otherwiſe obtain their purpoſe, in the deſtruction of that kingdom; opened a paſſage for the Romans to effect it for them. But finding no ſuch favour at the Romans hands as they did expect, they began to murmur, and afterwards to excite Antiochus and the Greeks againſt them, drawing thereby thoſe forces againſt themſelves, which they had invited into Greece: and were the firſt people of all the Grecians that were conquered by them; though by the mediation of the Rhodians and ſome other friends, their Country was reſtored unto them, with the loſe only of Cephalenia, Zant, and ſome other Ilands, which the Romans were reſolved to keep as the fruits of the war. This was about the 564 year of the building of Rome, Fulvius Nobilior being then Conſul, and chief Commander in this war. After which time the ſeveral Eſtates hereof enjoyed ſo much liberty, as the Romans their new Maſters thought fit to give them: till finally made abſolutely ſubject in the time of Veſpaſian, by whom Achaia was reduced into the form of a Province, Peloponneſus being reckoned as a part thereof. In the diviſion of the Empire by Conſtantine the Great, the Weſt parts hereof being divided from the reſt, was called New Epirus; but both of them made Provinces of the Dioceſe of Macedon, under the Prafectus Prætorio for Illyricum; The principal Officer of this part being called the Proconſul of Achaia: continuing under him and his ſucceſſors, Emperors of Conſtantinople, till the deſtruction of that Empire by the power of the Turks. But ſo that it remained not always under the command of one ſole Officer, the politie of that State being altered, and this Country parcelled out into many Governments: eſpecially after the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines, or Weſtern Chriſtians. At what time Theodorus Angelus, a noble Grecian, and one of the (then) imperial family, ſeiſed on Ætolia, and Epirus, part of which laſt, and all the firſt he left to Michael his ſon: who held them, though with ſome diſpute betwixt him and Michael Palæologus, the firſt Emperour of Conſtantinople, after the expulſion of the Latines. Charles the laſt Prince of that family dying without iſſue, about the year 1430. bequeathed Ætolia to another Charles, the ſon of his brother; and Acarnania (being that part of Epirus, which the Princes of Ætolia held) to his baſe ſons, Memnon, Turnus, and Hercules. But many quarrels happening upon this diviſion sion Amurath, the 2d. having then newly conquered Thessalonica, composed the differences, by taking all unto himself, Anno 1432. There were at that time other Princes of like authority, as of Athens, Phocis, and Bœotia, but the first the chiefest: as honoured not only with the title of Dukes of Athens, but the Princes of Achaia also; such being the fortune of that City, as to have the first and last great sway in the affairs of Achaia. For at the translation of the Empire upon the Latines, Godfrey of Troyes, a Frenchman, was made Duke of Athens, and Prince of Achaia, of whom Paulus Æmilius speaketh, Anno 1220. which honour afterwards was conferred on Walter di Brenne, a kinsman of John di Brenne, the last King of Jerusalem, Protector of Baldwin the 2d. the last Emperour of the Latines, mentioned by the said Æmilius, Anno 1288. And though on the defeat and death of this Walter by the Catalonians then ransacking those parts of Greece; the Title of Duke of Athens was assumed by Frederick Alphonso, the son of Frederick King of Sicil, and by other Princes of that house: yet upon better grounds by the heir general of this Walter it was conveyed in mariage to Izaulus di Accio, a Noble man of the Realm of Naples; whose son Walter for a time obtained the soveraignty of the State of Florence, Anno 1342. but lost it suddenly again by his too much cruelty. Francis de Acciavol, the last Prince of this house, having been brought up in the Court of Mahomet the Great, as one of his Favourites; surrendred his estate herein, at the perswasion of that Tyrant, in change for the Country of Bœotia, and the Dukedom of Thebes: which he no sooner had received, but he was sent by Mahomet to Zoganus his Lieutenant in Morea, by whom at first courteously received, at last cruelly murdered. And so the whole Country of Achaia fell into the hands of the Turks, Anno 1454. or thereabouts.

Epirus.

EPIRUS.

EPIRUS is bounded on the East, with Ætolia; on the West, with the Adriatick; on the North, with Thessaly, Macedon, and some part of Albania; and on the South, with the Ionian Seas. So called from the solidity and firmnesse of it; the word Epeiros in the Greek tongue, signifying as much as terra firma, or the firm land. But by the Turks at this day it is called Albania, which name they give to all the lands and Countries in their possession, lying upon the Adriatick and Ionian Seas.

In this Country was born Olympias, mother of Alexander the Great; and Pyrrhus, who conquered the Realm of Macedon, and was the first foreiner, who made tryal (though to his own losse) of the power and puissance of Rome; accounted by Hannibal, next to Alexander, the second great souldier of the world. Here is also Mount Pindus, sacred to Apollo and the Muses, dividing this country from Thessaly, and therefore common unto both: as also the Acroceraunian hils, so called, because they are so much subject unto thunder and lightning; eminent for their height, and much feared by Mariners: who when they see a little cloud rising on the top hereof, are sure of a tempest. Finally, here are the famous Rivers Acheron, and Cocytus, which for their black waters, and unsavoury tast, are said to be the Rivers of Hell: from which last the sacrifices and solemnities made in honour of Proserpine, whom Pluto ravished and brought hither, had the name of Cocytia. Whence by a Metonymie, these Rivers are taken sometimes, for hell it self, as in that of the Poet;

Flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta movebo.

Since those in Heaven I cannot move,
The powers of Hell I mean to prove.

The soil hereof is very barren, and in many places full of Forests, and thin of people; but towards the Sea side reasonably fruitfull: plentifull of Oxen, Dogs, and Sheep, of more than ordinary bigness, and yeelding the best breed of Horses. The people use a distinct language from the Grecians, though of the Greek tongue not utterly ignorant: and by reason of the barrenesse of their own Country, become great wanderers, especially in summer time, when they travell into Thrace, Macedon, and Asia minor, hiring themselves to work in harvest under the Turks, as also to thresh, winnow and make clean their corn; and in the Winter time return to their wives and children. Able of body, swift of foot, apt to undergoe any toyl and labour; having withall good courages, and high projections: which makes such of them as delight not in works of drudgerie, to look for action in the wars; and otherwise to rob and spoil in the neighbouring mountains of Albania. Till their subjection to the Turks, much used both by the Kings of Hungary, and the State of Venice, in their several wars; serving on Horse, or Foot, as occasion was: as Mercenary as the Switzers in the Western parts, but not so faithless to the party by whom entertained.

Anciently it was divided into Chaonia, (which was the proper Epirus) lying on the West; and Acarnania, bordering on Ætolia, from which parted by the River Achelous; the middle parts hereof being Amphilochia, Thesprotia, and Almene: all very populous in old times, and so continued till Paulus Æmilius, on the conquest of Macedon, overthrew 70 of their Cities. Few of which being since re-edified, and the Country for a long time languishing under the Turks, here are not any fair Towns, or well-peopled Cities, at the present to be spoken of; and therefore we must look on such as flourished in the times foregoing. The principal whereof, 1. Dodona, one of the Cities of Chaonia, memorable for the Temple and Oracle of Jupiter, hence called Dodonæus; situate in a fair grove, the trees whereof were said to be Vocal, and to give the Oracle; though others say, it was de-delivered first by a pair of Pigeons; whereof the one afterwards fled to Delphos, the other to the Temple of Jupiter Hammon in Ægypt. It was the antientest Oracle of all Greece; and so perhaps was the Town also. Said to be first built by Dodone, the son of Jupiter and Europa: more probably so called from Dodonim, the son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who first inhabited this Region; the whole Country (Greece I mean) being called Javan from the Father (by which name commonly it occurreth in the Hebrew text,) this Town Dodona from the Son. 2. Cassiope, a Port Town, with a fair Promontory of the same name adjoyning to it. 3. Oncheſimus, by Strabo called Orchimus, and by Pliny Echinus, a Port Town also, now called Santi Quaranta. 4. Panormus, on the Sea side also, retaining still the old name, and but little else. 5. Antigonia, more within the land, founded or repaired by Antigonus a King of Macedon, now called Argiro Castro, as Niger thinketh. 6. Phœnice, once the chief Town hereof; which being sacked by the Illyrians under Teuta their Queen, gave the Romans an occasion of quarrel with them, upon complaint made to them by the Epirots. 7. Pelodes, a Port Town, the principal in that part which was called Thesprotia; as 8. Torona, on the River Thyamis, and 9 Sybota, an antient Haven Town (now called Syoita) was in that part hereof which was called Almene. 10. Argos, the chief City of the Amphilochians. This part hereof was first named Molossia, from Molossus, the son of Pyrrhus and Andromache, remarkable for the best breed of Mastives, hence called Molossi: and afterward Chaonia, by Helenus the son of Priamus, whom Pyrrhus the son of Achilles setled in this Country; who having unfortunately slain his brother Chaon, caused it in memory of him to be called Chaonia; Chaoniamq; omnem Trojano à Chaone dixit, as it is in Virgil. Of these Molossians, Pluto the third son of Saturn was sometimes King, called from the flat and hollow situation of this Country, consisting much of deep valleys, the King of Hell.

Towns of especial note in Acarnania, 1. Anactorium, on the bay of Ambracia, now called Vanizza. 2. Ambracia, the Regal Seat or Court of Pyrrhus, giving name unto a fair and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Larta, from Larta an adjoyning Town, situate in or near the place where Ambracia stood. Once subject unto Periander, King or Tyrant of Corinth, who being slain by a woman named Lionna, whom he kept as his Concubine; occasioned the Inhabitants from that time forwards, in memory of their deliverance, to worship a Lion. Afterwards being taken from the children of Pyrrhus by the Macedonians, and from them won by the Ætolians in the time of their greatness; it was besieged by Fulvius, a Roman Consul, spoken of before. Who seeing that he could not force it, was willing, at the mediation of the Athenians, Rhodians, and other friends of both parties, to conclude a peace; but so that he despoiled this City at his going hence, of much excellent Imagery; carrying away with him unto Rome, the Pictures of the nine Muses, most admirably well done by the hand of Zeuxis, the rarest Painter of his times. 3. Buthrotum, a Roman Colonie, by Plinie called Colonia simply; now a small Village called Butrinte. 4. Leucas, situate on the point of a Promontorie of the same name also, antiently memorable for the Temple of Apollo: from the top of which Promontorie, by leaping into the Sea, such as unfortunately loved were cured of that malady; the first trial of that kind being made by Sappho that famous Poetesse. At that time joyned unto the sand, but since by the violence of the Sea, or the hand of man, made into an Iland; according unto that of Ovid,

Leucada continuam veteres habuere Coloni,
Nunc Freta circumeunt; ——

That is to say:

Leucas in former times joyn'd to the land,
Environ'd round with waters now doth stand.

It was called Leucas, from the whiteness of the Rock or Promontorie, having before the separation or disjunction of it been called Neritos; the chief Town of it varying with the name of the Isle and Promontory: both Town and Iland at this time called S. Maure, taken by Bajazet the second, from the State of Venice, and by him given unto the Jews, (who do still inhabit it) at their expulsion out of Spain. 5. Nicopolis, a Colonie of the Romans, of great both wealth and beauty in the time of S. Paul, who from hence dated his Epistle to Titus: called in that Postscript, Nicopolis of Macedonia, because Epirus at that time was part of the Province of Macedon, though afterwards a distinct Province of it self. It was first built by Augustus Cæsar, on a Promontory opposite unto Actium, on the other side of the Bay: that being the place, where his Land-souldiers were incamped before the Naval battel betwixt him and Mark Anthony: and was thus called, either in memory of his victory; or from a poor man and his Asse, whom he met there the day before. For asking the mans name, he told him that his name was Eutyches, i, e. Fortunate; and that the name of his Asse was Nicon, i. e. Conquerour; which happy Omen made his souldiers couragious, and hopefull of victory: and he in memory thereof erected here two brazen Images, the one of the Asse, the other of his Master. It is now a small village called Prevesa.

6. Actium, on the Sea shore, nigh unto which Augustus and Antony fought for the Empire of the world. The Navy of the later consisted of 500 Galleys; the former had 250 only, but those crowned with victory: Antonius shamefully deserting his souldiers to follow after Cleopatra, who on the very first charge fled away for Ægypt. The Town now ruined, the Promontory upon which it stood called Cabbo di Figula.

The

The Country was first peopled by Dodonim the son of Javan, or at least by some of his posterity, coming hither from the Isle of Rhodes, whose memorie was preserved a long time in the Town of Dodona, by him, or from him so denominated. Afterwards being parted into several Nations, and those Nations united in the common name of Epirots; it became a great and powerfull Kingdom: governed by a race of Kings descending from Pyrrhus the son of Achilles, and continuing till the time of Pyrrhus the son of Æacides. A man of such courage and magnanimitie, that he did not only recover his own Kingdom, of which Cassander had deprived his Father; but got the Kingdom of Macedon from Cassanders Children: outed of which, he tried his fortunes with the Romans, Anno Mundi 3683. U. C. 471. After his death this Kingdom was shrewdly shaken by the Macedonians, and shortly after subdued by Paulus Æmilius, who as we now said, destroyed 70 Cities hereof in one day. For, desirous to satisfie his souldiers after his victory in Macedon, he sent unto the Epirots for ten of the principal men of every City. These he commanded to deliver up all the gold and silver which they had; and to that end, as he gave out, he sent certain companies of souldiers along with them; unto whom he gave secret instructions, that on a day by him appointed, they should fall to sack every one the town, whereunto they were sent. A barbarous and bloudy decree, 70 Cities confederate with the Romans ruined in one day, and no fewer than 150000 Epirots made and sold for slaves. But the chief motive which induced him to so great a cruelty, was by dispeopling this countrey, lying with a long and fair Sea-coast over against Italy; to give the Romans opportunity to land their Armies without any resistance, for the further progress of their Forces into Macedon, Thrace, Mœsia, or where else they pleased. Which ungodly policie was afterwards imitated by William the Conquerour, who laid wast all that part of Hampshire, since called New Forest, and therein 36 Parish Churches: that he might have a safe landing place for his Norman Forces, if the English should at any time endeavor to make head against him. Being made subject to the Romans, it was a while part of the Province of Macedonia; but afterwards when Macedonia was made a Diocese, it became a distinct Province of it self, called by the name of Old Epirus, to difference it from the Province of New Epirus, which lay Eastward of it. At the division of the Empire it belonged to the Constantinopolitans; and so continued till the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians: at what time Theodorus Angelus, a Prince of the Imperial family, seised on Ætolia and Epirus, as before is said; and sped so well in his designs that he took the strong City of Durazzo from the State of Venice (to whom it fell in the division of that spoil) and cunningly (if not treacherously) intercepted Peter the third Emperor of the Latins, whom, as some say, he caused to be murdered at a banquet. After his death, his whole Estate being divided into two parts, Ætolia, with that part hereof which is called Chaonia, continued in his house till the time of Charles Prince of Ætolia and Epirus spoken of before, after whose death it was subdued by Amurath the second, as before was said. The residue hereof, together with that part of Macedon which is called Albania, fell to the family of the Castriots: the last of which named John (the Father of Scanderbeg) seeing himself unable to resist that Tyrant, who had already swallowed up all his neighbour Princes; submitted his estate unto him, and gave unto him all his sons for hostages. No sooner was the old Prince dead, but Amurath seised on his Estate, murdered his three eldest sons; and caused George the youngest, to be train'd up in the Law of Mahomet: who afterwards escaping out of his power, and recovering all his Fathers countries, assumed also the style or title of Prince of Epirus. After whose death his children not being able to make good their game, lost it to Mahomet the Great; as shall be shewn more fully in the storie and description of Albania, which is next to follow.

Albania.

ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the East, with Macedonia; on the West, with the Adriatick; on the North, with Sclavonia; on the South, with Epirus. The Country mountainous and barren; watred with few Rivers, and those of no great note amongst the Antients, as 1 Laus, 2 Apsus, 3 Paniasus, 4 Celidnus; all of them falling into the Adriatick.

It took this name from the Albani, once the Inhabitants of this tract; from whom the chief City hereof was called Albanopolis. Other Towns of most consideration, are 1 Stetigrade, or Vestigard (called by some the Holy City) situate in the borders of Epirus, on the top of an hill; where it is fenced about like an Eagles nest: one of the last Towns in all this Countrey which was taken by Scanderbeg, at his recovery of his birthright and estate herein; but being once taken by him held good courageously against the Turk, the souldiers neither fainting in their oppositions, nor corrupted by mony. There was in the town one only Well, into which a treacherous Christian cast a dead dog; at the sight of which, being the next day drawn up, the souldiers gave up the town: being so unseasonably superstitious; that no perswasion, nor the example of the Captain, or the Burgo-masters, could make them drink those (as they thought) defiled waters. 3 Durazzo, a town of great strength, first called Epidamnum, and afterwards Dyrrhachium. Under the wals of which town, was the first bickering between the souldiers of Cæsar, and Pompey, not only to the present losse, but also the utter discomfiture of Cæsar, as he himself confessed, if the enemies Captain had known how to have overcome. I must not omit the valour of Scæva at this siege, who alone so long resisted Pompeys Army, that he had 220 darts sticking in his shield, and lost one of his eyes, and yet gave not over til Cæsar came to his rescue.

An Army and a man together fight,
Whoſe breſt a wood of Arrows covered quite.

In the diviſion of the Eaſtern Empire amongſt the Latins, it fell into the power of Venice; taken at laſt after a long and tedious ſiege, by Amurath the ſecond, An. 1474. 4 Dibra, in the hill countries, near Epirus: the firſt town which ſubmitted to the valiant Scanderbeg, at his revolting from the Turks; ſuppoſed to be the Deborus of Ptolemie. 5 Croia, conceived to be the Epicaria of Ptolemie, the chief Town of all this countrey, ſeated amongſt inacceſſible mountains, and made impregnable by Art: not got by Scanderbeg, but by wile: who having got into his power the Secretary of the principal Baſſa, forced him to write letters in his Maſters name unto the Governour hereof to deliver it unto him; which was done accordingly. Afterwards in vain beſieged by Amurath the ſecond, who under the wals hereof gave up his wretched ſoul to the Devil; and thrice beſieged by Mahomet his ſon and ſucceſſor, before he could again poſſeſs it: but taken at the laſt after Scanderbegs death, as if the Genius or tutelar Deity of the place had departed with him. 6 Petrella, a town of great ſtrength, ſeated on the top of an hill (as almoſt all the Towns of Albania are) about 25 miles from Croia; delivered unto Scanderbeg at his firſt ſitting down before it: as alſo was 7 Petra Alba, three miles from Petrella, near the borders of Macedon, and ſituate like the other on the top of a mountain; the River Emathus running under the bottom of it. 8 Stelluſa, fifty miles from Croia, built on the top of an high hill in the middle of a pleaſant and fruitful valley, with great and ſpacious plains about it. 9. Dagna or Dayna, a place of great importance in the hill country towards Sclavonia; for the poſſeſſion whereof aroſe a war betwixt Scanderbeg, and the State of Venice: but the Venetians being worſted at the battel of Drino, relinquiſhed their pretenſions to it. 10 Aulon, a Port-town, now called Vallona, ſituate over againſt Hydruntum or Otranto in Italy, from which diſtant about 60 miles. The Town unwalled, but fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle. A town unfortunately fit for the invaſion of Italy, and was accordingly made uſe of by Achmetes the chief Baſſa under Mahomet the Great, who from hence paſſed his Army over into Apulia, took the Town of Otranto, and had not the death of Mahomet, and the combuſtions thereon following amongſt the Turks, altered the deſign, might have opened them a very fair way for the adding of Rome unto Conſtantinople. 11 Apollonia, a town of great note in the time of the Romans. A Sea-town furniſhed with a commodious Haven, which they held as their entrance into Greece; to that purpoſe ſerving them as commodiouſly, as Calice did the Engliſh in their wars with France.

This countrey antiently was a part of Macedon, inhabited by the Talauſii, Æſtræi, and Albani, from which laſt (but not till theſe latter times) it had the name of Albania: but whether theſe Albani, were a Colonie of the Albanians of Aſia, (though it be very probable) I determine not. When made a Province of the Empire, it contained all Prevalitana, and ſome part of Macedonia Salutaris; under the Dioceſe of Dacia, in the time of Juſtinian, but at firſt of Macedon. Diſmembred from the main bodie of it, when the Latines had ſubdued Conſtantinople; it fell unto the Noble family of the Caſtriotes: who though they took unto themſelves the title of Kings or Princes of Epirus, (moſt of which they held) as the countrey of more note and eminence; yet was Albania the greateſt ſtrength, and Croia the chief City thereof, the ſeat of their reſidence: called in that reſpect by ſome writers, the Kings of Albania. John Caſtriot, the Father of Scanderbeg, ſeeing himſelf unable to reſiſt the Turks, became their Homager, and delivered four ſons for Hoſtages; whom Amurath the ſecond, in their Fathers life-time, cauſed to be circumciſed, and turn Mahometans: and after his deceaſe murdered the three eldeſt, and ſeized upon Croia the chief City, with the reſt of the countrey. But George, the youngeſt of thoſe ſons, being reſerved for better fortunes, was carefully brought up by Amurath, (who ſomewhat paſſionately loved him) in the arts of war; though ſome of his Courtiers then told him, that he nouriſhed a Serpent in his boſom, which would one day ſting him. Amurath, to make trial of his diſpoſition, offered him on a time the Crown of Albania: to which he prudently replied, that he preferred the honour of his ſervice before all the Kingdoms of the World; and that he held his hand fitter for a ſword, than his head for a Crown. Satisfied with which anſwer, the Tyrant preferred him to the place of a Sanziack or Provincial Governor: and gave him ſome Office of Command in all thoſe Armies, which he ſet out againſt the Chriſtians. Eſcaping out of the battel, wherein Caramben the great Baſſa was overthrown and taken Priſoner by Huniades; he got the Town of Croia by a piece of wit, as before was ſaid: and in a very ſhort time after, made himſelf Maſter of Petrella, Petra Alba, Stelluſa, and all the reſt of the countrey, by the reputation and terrour of his firſt ſucceſſe. Having recovered his inheritance out of the hands of the Turks, he reconciled himſelf to the Church of Chriſt: ſtyling himſelf the Souldier of CHRIST JESUS, from that time forwards. Invaded by a vaſt Army of Turks, he overcometh Alis Baſſa, and kils 20000 of his men. With no more than 20 horſe and 50 foot, he aſſaulteth Muſtapha in his Camp; in which 5000 Turks were ſlain, and 300 taken: with whom encountring not long after in the open field, he ſlew 10000 of his men, took many priſoners, and Muſtapha himſelf for one, whom he ranſomed for 25000 Ducats. Falling upon the Hoſt of Amurath, then beſieging Croia, he killed Feriſſes Baſſa, hand to hand in a ſingle combat: and in the time of Mahomet who ſucceeded Amurath, vanquiſhed Iſaac the great Baſſa, routed his whole army, had

the ſpoil of his Camp, took 20 of his faireſt Enſigns, and ſlew 30000 of his ſouldiers. Not to inſtance in the reſt of his noble Actions, it is reported, that in the courſe of his war againſt the Turks, he killed no fewer than 3000 of them with his own hands: uſing a Turkiſh Scymitar in all his fights, of great weight and bigneſs. Which when Mahomet on a peace between them had deſired to ſee, and afterwards returned again with this cenſure of it, that he ſaw nothing in it more than ordinary: the gallant Prince ſent back this anſwer, that the vertue of the weapon depended on the ſtrength of his Arm, which he could not ſend him, for that he did reſerve it for the death of his Enemies. Finally, having held his Cards againſt Amurath and Mahomet, two moſt fortunate Gameſters, for the ſpace of 24 years; he ſet up his reſt at laſt a winner: dying in peace at Lyſſa, then belonging to the State of Venice, Jan. 17. An. 1466. and was there honourably interred. At the taking of which Town by the Turks about nine years after, his body was digged up by them, not in ſpight, but honor: that man accompting himſelf happy who could get any of his bones, to preſerve as a relick; ſuppoſing that as long as he had it about him, he ſhould be invincible. But with him died the liberty of his Country alſo, not long after ſubdued by the Turks, and made a Province of that Empire, as it ſtill continueth: the name of Albania being by them extended over all Epirus, and ſo much of Dalmatia alſo as is under their power. Theſſalie

The Arms of this Kingdome (or rather of the Kings thereof) were Gules, an Eagle Sable.

5. MACEDONIA.

MACEDONIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Ægean Sea; on the Weſt, with Albania; on the North, with Mœſia Superior, and a part of Thrace; and on the South, with Epirus, and Achaia.

It was firſt called Æmonia from Mount Hæmus, which ſhutteth up that ſide hereof which is towards Mœſia; after Æmathia, from a King of it called Æmathus; Macedonia, from Macedo, the Son of Deucalion, and the Father of Caranaus, the firſt King of the line of Alexander: and finally Kittim or the Land of Kethim, whereof ſee Maccab. c. 1. v. 1. & cap. 8. v. 5. from Kittim the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who was planted here. Antiently of more large extent than it is at the preſent; extending from the Ægean Sea unto the Adriatick, till the taking of Albania out of it, which hath ſtreightned it upon that ſide, but the reſt as formerly.

The Country, taking it together, is very fruitfull and pleaſant, though on the outward parts thereof begirt with rough mountains and thick foreſts: in former times much celebrated for its mines of Gold and Silver, but long ſince exhauſted. It contained formerly the Provinces of Æmathia, Pieria, Pelaſgia, Eſtiotis, Phimotis, Theſſalie, Mygdonia, Amphaxitis, Paraxia, Edonis, and many others of leſs note; inhabited by 152 ſeveral Nations: now principally divided (beſides Albania) into 1. Theſſalie. 2. Macedon ſpecially ſo called, and 3. Mygdonia, which the Turks call Jamboli.

1. THESSALIE hath on the Eaſt, the Ægean Sea; on the Weſt, Albania; on the North, Macedon, and Mygdonia; on the South, Achaia. A ſweet and delectable Country, the pleaſures and delights whereof inclined the people to be very effeminate, and diſſolute in their courſe of life: in love with luxury and eaſe, and much like the Perſians in behaviour; whoſe entrance into Greece they did therefore favour. Yet notwithſtanding this debauchedneſs, they were eſteemed the beſt Horſemen of all the Grecians: by their excellent managing of which creature (as if they had been one piece with it, and either lent the Horſe their minds, or borrowed his body) they gave occaſion unto the fiction of the Centaures; half men, half beaſts.

It is now called Comenolitati, and of old was very famous for many things, eſpecially for the Hill Olympus; of ſo great height, that it ſeemeth to tranſcend the clouds: and therefore frequently by the Poets took for Heaven it ſelf. 2ly. For the Hill Othrys, inhabited by the Lapithæ, over whom Pirithous was King. 3ly. For the Mountains of Pelion and Oſſa, the dwelling places of the Centaures; who intending to raviſh Hippodame the Bride of Pirithous, on her wedding day, were ſlain by Hercules and the Lapithæ. 4ly. For the delectable Valley of Tempe, ſituate betwixt Oſſa and Olympus; extending in length ſix miles, and five in breadth: ſo beautified with Natures gifts, that it was ſuppoſed to be the Garden of the Muſes. 5ly. And laſtly, for the Dolopes, and Myrmidones, (who did here inhabit) over whom Achilles had command at the ſiege of Troy: theſe laſt, by reaſon that they were a laborious and thrifty people, being fabled by the Poets to have firſt been Emmets; transformed unto men at the prayers of Æacus, when he wanted ſouldiers.

——Mores quos ante tenebant,
Nunc quoq́; habent, parcum genus eſt, patienſq; laborum,
Quæſitiq́; tenax, et quod quæſita reſervet.

The cuſtome they of Emmets ſtill retain,
A ſparing Folk, and unto Labour ſet;
Strangely addicted to all kind of gain,
And wary Keepers of what ere they get.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Tricca, the Epiſcopal See of Heliodorus, the Author of that ingenious piece, called the Æthiopick Hiſtory: which he ſo prized, that he choſe rather to loſe his Biſhoprick, than conſent to the burning of his Book; which a Provincial Synod had adjudged to the Fire. A piece indeed of rare contexture, and neat contrivances, without any touch of

of looſe or laſcivious language: honeſt and chaſt affection being the ſubject of it, not ſuch as old or modern Poets ſhew us in their Comedies, or other Poems. For here we have no inceſtuous mixture of Fathers, and daughters; no Pandariſm of old Nurſes; no unſeemly action ſpecified, where heat of blood and opportunity do meet; nor indeed any one paſſage unworthy of the chaſteſt Ear. 2. Lamia, where the Athenians after the death of Alexander, hoping to recover their freedoms, beſieged Antipater, which was the laſt honourable enterpriſe, undertaken by that great and renowned City; known in old Hiſtories by the name of Bellum Lamiacum. 3. Lariſſa, ſituate on the South of Demetrias but on the ſame Bay; memorable for the birth of Achilles, from hence called frequently in the Poets Lariſſæus Achilles, his birth aſcribed by others to the Town of Phthia (from whence the Region called Phthiatis takes the nomination) frequently mentioned in the Poets upon that account, and poſſibly being neighbouring Cities, the one might be the place of his birth, and the other of his Habitation. 4. Demetrias, ſituate on the Bay, called Sinus Pelaſgicus, (now the Golf of Armenia) of very great ſtrength by Art and Nature. Which being held by the Macedonians, together with Chalcis in the Iſle of Eubœa, and the City of Corinth; kept all Greece in awe, and were therefore commonly called the Fetters of Greece: the Grecians never thinking themſelves at liberty, till thoſe Towns were diſmantled by the Romans. 5. Pharſalis, nigh to which was fought the great battel betwixt Cæſar and Pompey, for the Soveraignty of the Roman Empire: a battel more famous than bloody; 6000 only of 300000, which were in the field on both ſides, being therein ſlain. A battel before which the Pompeians were in ſuch a miſerable ſecurity, that ſome of them contended for the Prieſthood, which was Cæſars Office; others diſpoſed of the Conſulſhip, and preferments in the City of Rome: Pompey himſelf being ſo rechleſſe, that he neither conſidered into what place it were beſt to flie, if he loſt the day; or by what means he might provide for his own ſafety, and end the war. As if the war had been made againſt ſome ignoble Enemy, and not againſt that Cæſar; who had taken 1000 Towns, conquered 300 Nations, took priſoners one million of men, and ſlain as many. 6. Philippi, ſo named from Philip the Macedonian, the firſt founder of it; ſituate in the further part of the ſame plains of Pharſalia, and famous for as memorable a battel as that before, and of no leſs conſequence: that namely, betwixt Auguſtus, and M. Antonius on the one ſide, againſt Brutus and Caſſius on the other; theſe later being rather overcome by chance, than valour. For either of them thinking the other vanquiſhed, ſlew himſelf in the field: being the two laſt that ever openly ſtood out for the common Liberty, and therefore called by Cremutius Cordus, Ultimi Romanorum, or the laſt of the true Roman Spirits. 7. Gomphy, an antient City bordering on Epirus. 8. Pheræ, in which City Alexander the Tyrant reigned, againſt whom that noble Captain Pelopidas the Theban fighting, was ſlain in battel: the Tyrant being not long after murdered by his wives brother, and by that means all Theſſalie recovering liberty. 9. Pegaſa, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Pelaſgicus, which from hence is ſometimes named Pegaſicus; in which the ſhip called Argo, was ſaid to be built, ſo famous for the renowned voyage of the Argonautes. The hill Pelion ſpoken of before, is not far from hence. 10 Pythion, or Pythæum, of great note for the Pythian games, there celebrated in the honour of Apollo, who hereabouts killed the Serpent Python: the Conquerour in which games were crowned at the firſt only with an Oaken Garland, but afterwards with one of Lawrel. Of which thus the Poet:

Neve operis famam poſſet abolere vetuſtas
Inſtituit ſacros celebri certamine ludos, Pythia de domiti Serpentis nomine dictos, &c.

Thus made to ſpeak Engliſh by G. Sandys:

Then leſt the well-deſerved memory
Of ſuch an act in future times ſhould die,
He inſtituted the ſo famous Games
Of free contention, which he Pythia names.
Who ran, who wreſtled beſt, or rak'd the ground
With ſwifteſt wheels, the Oaken Garland crown'd.

Theſe games, together with the Olympick, Iſthmean and Nemæan ſpoken of before, made the four annual meetings amongſt the Grecians; renowned for the univerſal concourſe of the nobleſt ſpirits. 11. Doliche, which together with Pythium, and 12 Azorium, another City of this tract, ſtanding near together; are called in Livius the Hiſtorian by the name of Tripolis. 13. Hypata, the Metropolis of Theſſalie, ſo called by Heliodorus in his Æthiopick Hiſtory before mentioned, who placeth it near the Bay called Sinus Maliacus, now Golfo di Ziton, and not far from Mount Oeta, bordering on the Province of Doris, upon which Mountain, Hercules being tortured with a poiſoned ſhirt, ſent by his innocent wife Dejanira, is ſaid to have burned himſelf; thence called Hercules Oetus. Of all which Towns, Lamia, Pegaſa, and Demetrias, are in the Region called Phthiotis; Lariſſa, Doliche, Phthium, and Azorium, in that called Pelaſgia; Gomphi, and Tricca in Eſtiotis; the reſt in Theſſalie properly and ſpecially ſo named.

This Country at firſt called Æmonia, afterwards Pelaſgia, then Pyrrhæa from Pyrrha the wife of Deucalion, & finally Theſſalia, from Theſſalus one of the Companions of Hercules; by Plinie is called Driopis; Eſtiotis, by Strabo; Pelaſgia, by Diodorus; and by Homer, Argos: the name of ſome chief City or particular Province vince, being figuratively used for the whole. Divided commonly into four parts, 1. Thessaliotis, 2. Estiotis, 3. Pelasgiotis, and 4 Phthiotis, the name of Thessalie or Thessaliotis in the end prevailing; accordingly distributed into several governments, united finally in the person of Philip the Father of Alexander; who partly by force, but specially by art and practice, made himself Master of the whole. Continuing in a mixt condition betwixt free and subject, under the Macedonian Kings of the second Race; it became subject with that Kingdome to the State of Rome: first reckoned as a part of the Province of Macedon, after, a Province of it self, when Macedon was made a Dioceſe, part of which it was. But from a Province of that Dioceſe, and a member of the Eſtern Empire, it was made a Kingdome: given with that title to Boniface Marqueſſe of Mont-ferrat in exchange for Candie, together with the City of Theſſalonica, and ſome part of Peloponeſus, at the diviſion of that Empire amongſt the Latines. Which title he affected, in regard that Reiner, the Brother of Boniface his Grandfather, had formerly been created Prince of Theſſalie, by the Emperor Emanuel; whoſe Daughter Cyri-Maria (or the Lady Mary) he had took to wife. In him as it began, ſo this title ended; Theſſalonica falling to the State of Venice, Theſſalie reverting to the Empire when the Greeks recovered it: from whom ſubdued, and added to the Turkiſh Empire in the reign of Amurath the 2d. Anno 1432. Macedon.

2. MACEDON ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Mygdonia; on the Weſt, with Albania; on the North, with Mount Hæmus; on the South, with Theſſalie. The Country, for the moſt part fruitfull, as before was ſaid; but not ſo ſurfeiting with delights as to make the people wanton or effeminate in their courſe of life: as being naturally good ſouldiers, exact obſervers of military diſcipline, and inured to hardneſſe: which their many ſignal victories do moſt clearly evidence, both in Greece and Aſia.

The Greeks in the pride of their own wits, reckoned them amongſt the barbarous Nations; and yet by a ſtrange kind of contradiction, aſcribe unto their country the ſeats of the Muſes. For in this Country was Mount Pimple, with a Fountain of the ſame name at the Foot thereof; both conſecrated to the Muſes, from hence called Pimpleides. Here alſo was the Hill Libethris, and the Province of Pieria, from hence the Muſes had the names of Libethrides, and Pierides: by this laſt called more frequently than by any other name what ever, eſpecially by the Greeks themſelves. But the birth of Ariſtotle in this Country doth more convince the Grecians of this fooliſh arrogance, than all the Muſes in the world. A man ſo admirable in the generall courſe of learning, ſo univerſally comprehenſive of all Arts and Sciences, that the beſt-witted Grecian might have been his Scholar, and thought it a great happineſs, as King Philip did, that they had any Children but to be tutored by him.

The principal Rivers hereof, beſides Erigon and Alaicmon, ſpoken of before; are 1. Axius, now called Vardari, riſing out of the hill Scardius, a branch of Mount Æmus; and paſſing through the whole extent of this Country into Sinus Thermaicus, or the Golf of Theſſalonica, as it is now named: the faireſt River of thoſe parts, and of ſweeteſt waters; but ſuch as maketh all the cattel black which drink of it. 2. Chabris, 3. Echedorus, both riſing out of the mid-land Countries, and both falling into the ſame Bay alſo. Beſides which there are three other fair and capacious Bayes, aſcribed to Macedon, though two of them belonging properly to Mygdonia; that is to ſay, Singeticus, now Golfo di monte Sacro; and Toronicus, now the Golf or Bay of Aiomama; and the third common unto Thrace alſo, which is Sinus Strimonicus, now the Bay of Conteſſo.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, according to the ſeveral Regions and parts hereof, were for the Almopes, 1. Hormia, called afterward Seleucia. 2. Europus, of which name there were four in Macedon. 3. Apſalus. Of Syntice, 4. Triſtolus, 5. Parocacopolis, 6. Gariſcus, 7. Heraclea, for diſtinction called Heraclea Syntica; there being many others of that name in Greece. In Edonis bordering towards Thrace, 8. Scotuſa, 9. Berga, 10. Amphipolis, on the River Strymon, with which encompaſſed, whence it had the name; ſeated ſo cloſe on the edge of Thrace, that it is queſtionable to which of them it belongs of right; once garriſoned by the Athenians, and from them took by Philip the Macedonian, in the firſt riſe of his fortunes. 11. Crenides, bordering on Thrace alſo, and by ſome Writers laid unto it, but I think erroniouſly: repaired and beautified by Philip before mentioned, by whom called Philippi; and ſituate in a Country ſo rich in mines of gold, that the ſaid Philip drew thence yearly 1000 talents, which make 600000 French Crowns, or 140000 l. of our Engliſh mony. Afterwards made a Roman Colony, and accounted the chief City of Macedonia, as appeareth Acts 16. 12. to the people of which S. Paul writ one of his Epiſtles. Next in Emathia, we have 12. Tyriſſa in the mid-lands, bordering upon Theſſalie, now called Ceresi. 13. Ædeſſa, called afterwards Ægeas, and now Vodena; the firſt town of all this Country taken by Caranaus, the founder of the firſt race of the Kings of Macedon. 14. Berœa on Sinus Thermaicus, honored with the preaching of Paul and Silas; the Citizens whereof are by S. Luke commended for their readineſs in receiving the Goſpel. 15. Pella, on the ſame Bay alſo, the birth-place of Alexander the Great, from hence called Juvenis Pellæus. 16. Pydna, upon the ſame Bay, at the influx of the River Alaicmon, in which Caſſander beſiged and took Olympias the Mother, Roxane the wife, and Hercules the heir apparent of Alexander: all whom he barbarouſly murdered. This cruelty he committed, partly to revenge himſelf of Alexander, who had once knocked his head and the wall together: and partly to cry quit with Olympias, who had before as cruelly murdered Aridæus the baſe Son of Philip, and Euridice his wife; with whom Caſſander was ſuppoſed to be over-familiar. Memorable alſo is this Town for the great battel fought near it, betwixt Perſeus the laſt King of Macedon, and P. Æmilius the Conſul, in which Perſeus having ſhamefully deſerted his Army, loſt both the battel and his Kingdom, with no leſs than 20000 of his foot which were therin ſlain; the Romans having ſo cheap a victory, that it coſt them not above an hundred or ſixſcore men. 17. Dium

not far from the hill Olympus, and about a mile from the Sea; of which mile the River Helicon becoming there a Lake, and called Baphirus, taketh up one half. Situate in the borders towards Theſſalie, the way unto it out of the Tempe being ſtrait and narrow, and almoſt impaſſable, by reaſon of the ſpurs of the mountains running overthwart it: which had it been well defended by the Macedonians would have kept their Country from the Romans, who that way attempted it. But Perſeus hearing that the Enemy had got into Tempe, only took care to get his treaſure out of Dium, and ſo abandoned both the paſſage, and the Town together. 18. Phylace, more within the land; as is 19. Eribœa. But theſe four laſt are in that part hereof which is called Pieria.

3. MYGDONIA hath on the Eaſt, the Ægean Sea; on the Weſt, Macedon, properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the North, Edonis and Sinus Strimonicus; on the South, Sinus Thermaicus, or the Golf of Theſſalonica. So that it is almoſt a Peninſula, environed on three ſides with water.

Here is in this Country the hill Athos, ſtanding in a Peninſula (the Iſthmus being once cut thorow by Xerxes, but ſince cloſed again) ſaid to be 70 miles in circuit, 3 days journey long, half a days in breadth, reſembling the ſhape of a man lying with his face upwards: the higheſt point whereof covered perpetually with ſnow, is ſaid to caſt a ſhadow as far as Lemnos. Exceeding fruitfull in graſſe, fruit, oil, and wine; and wondrous plentifull in hares; according to that of Ovid.

Quot Lepores in Atho, quot Apes paſcuntur in Hybla.

How many Hares in Athos feed,
What ſwarms of Bees on Hybla breed.

Inhabited only by Greek Monks, whom they call Caloires, of the order of St. Baſil, to whom the hill commonly called the Holy Mountain, hath been long ſince dedicated: the place being ſo privileged by the Grand Signeur, that neither Turk nor Grecian may inhabit in it, except ſuch Grecians only as profeſs this life. Of theſe there are about 6000, diſperſed in 42 Monaſteries, built after a military manner, for fear of Theeves and Pyrats, wherewith much infeſted in times paſt: frequented with great concourſe of people coming thither to behold and adore ſome Reliques (for which they are of much eſteem;) the free oblations of thoſe Pilgrims, and ſome benevolence from the Turks, which do much reſpect them, being the chief means of their ſubſiſtence. The manner of their life is like that of the antient Hermits; poorly clad, their ſhirts of Woollen, which they both ſpin and weave themſelves: none of them idle at any time, doing ſtill ſomewhat for their lively-hood, and the advancement of the houſe of which they are, as dreſſing vines, felling timber, yea and building ſhips. Few of them giving themſelves to ſtudy, and ſome of them of ſo groſs an ignorance, that they can neither write nor read: bound by their Order to lodge and entertain ſuch ſtrangers as have occaſion to paſſe that way, according to their rank and calling, and that of free coſt too, if it be deſired.

Towns of moſt note, according to the ſeveral Regions and parts hereof, are for Mygdonia, ſpecially and properly ſo called, 1. Antigonia, ſo called from Antigonus a King of Macedon, the firſt founder of it. 2. Xilopolis, 3. Terpillus, 4. Phyſco, 5. Aſſorus, all mentioned by Ptolemie, but not elſe obſervable. 6. Apollonia, for diſtinction ſake called Apollonia Mygdoniæ, to difference it from Apollonia in Albania, then a part of Macedon: famous for the ſtudies of Auguſtus Cæſar, who here learnt the Greek tongue. For Amphaxitis, there was 7. Arethuſa, 8. Stagira, now called Nicalidi, renowned for the birth of Ariſtotle, hence named Stagirites. 9. Theſſalonica, ſituate on the bottom of Sinus Thermaicus, now called the Bay of Salonichi, by the name of the Town. Antiently the Metropolis, or head City of Macedon, the ſeat of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, after the removal thereof from Sirmium; as alſo of the Primate of the Greek Church, who reſided here. To the people of this City did St. Paul write two of his Epiſtles, continuing in great power and credit till the fall of the Conſtantinopolitan Empire into the hands of the Latines: at which time it was beſtowed firſt on Boniface, Marqueſs of Montferrat, the new King of Theſſalie; after whoſe death it fell unto the State of Venice, who held it till the year 1432. when forced by Amurath the 2d. to become Turkiſh. Which notwithſtanding it ſtill preſerves the reputation of a beautifull and wealthy City, inhabited by rich Merchants, who drive here a great trade, eſpecially for the commodities of the Indies; for beauty, riches, and magnificence, little inferiour unto Naples: and though the Turks and Jews make the greateſt number of Inhabitants, yet here are reckoned 30 Churches for the uſe of Chriſtians. As for the Jews, they ſwarm here in ſuch great abundance, that in this City and that of Conſtantinople only, there are reckoned 160000 of them; but generally hated and contemned by all ſorts of people. 10. Syderocaſtra, of old called Chryſites, remarkable for its mines of gold and ſilver; ſo beneficial to the Turk, that he received hence monthly 18000. and ſometimes 30000 crowns de claro. Next for Chalcidice, there was 11. Panormus, a Port Town, 12. Stratonice, in the Peninſula of Mount Athos. 13. Athos, or Athoſa, in the ſame Peninſula, with a Promontory of the ſame name, nigh which it ſtood. 14. Acanthus, now called Eryſſa, on the Bay of the Holy Mountain. And finally in Paraxia, we have 15. Ampelus, 16. Torone, giving name to the Bay adjoyning, called antiently Sinus Toronicus, now Golfo di Aiomama. 17. Caſſandria, on the Sea ſide, ſo called from Caſſander King of Macedon, who repaired and beautified it; being before named Potidea. 18. Derris, 19. Merillus, 20. Pallene, ſituate in the Cherſoneſe, or Demy-Iſland, called Petalene, and by ſome Petalia: formerly conſecrated to the Muſes, but before that infamous for the war which the Giants are fabled to have made here againſt the Gods; at what time it was called Phlegra, the fields adjoyning Campi Phlegræi, in which this great battel is ſuppoſed to be fought. The occaſion of the Fable was

(as both Theagenes and Eudoxes do expound the same) that the Inhabitants hereof in those elder times being men of a most impious and insolent life, got the name of Giants, whom when Hercules endeavoured to subdue, and reduce to reason, it happened that there fell a great tempest of thunder and lightning, by which they were constrained to flee and submit themselves. Hence the report that those Giants made war against the Gods. Others have placed these Phlegræan fields in Thessaly, and perhaps more probably. Certain I am that some place nearer to the hills of Pelion, Ossa, and Olympus, doth agree best with it: if at least Ovid were not out in his narration, who makes those Mountains to be heaped upon one another, for their better reaching to the skies, and fighting upon even ground, as the saying is. For thus that Poet: Macedon.

Affectasse ferunt regnum cœleste Gigantes,
Altaque congestos struxisse ad sydera Montes.
At pater omnipotens misso perfregit Olympum
Fulmine, & excussit subjectum Pelion Ossæ.

Which may be Englished in these words:

The Giants once the Throne of heaven affected,
And hils on hils unto the Stars erected:
Till Jove with thunder high Olympus brake,
And Pelion did from under Ossa take.

☞ But from those Fables to proceed to more real stories: this Country was first peopled by Citim, the son of Javan, passing over out of Asia Minor; in memory whereof here was not only a Town called Citium, spoken of by Livie, l. 42. but the whole land of Macedon is in the book of Maccabees called the land of Keitim, Maccab. 1. v. 1. and the inhabitants hereof called Citims, in the 8 chapter of the same book, v. 5. spreading in tract of time from one Sea to the other, from the Ægean to the Adriatick, some Colonies of them passed from hence to Italy, and first inhabited that Country, as hath there been said. Such as continued in these parts, divided into several tribes, as in all parts else, became in time to be united in the name of Macedons: a people not much taken notice of in the former times, living a poor and painfull life, Goatherds and Shepherds for the most part, scarce able to defend their own Mountains from the next invader; much less to dream of conquering either Greece or Persia. And therefore Alexander told them, and not much unfitly, (though by him spoke in passion, and to their disgrace) that his father Philip had first made them Gentlemen. For Philip having learned the Rudiments of war under Epaminondas, (being then an Hostage with the Thebans) and by that means acquainted with the temper and state of Greece: not only freed his own kingdom from the Illyrians, Thracians, and other barbarous Nations, who had gained upon it; but taking advantage of the factions raised amongst the Grecians, (which he knew how to feed and cherish for his own improvement) brought them at first wholly to rely upon him, and after to be subject to him. Insomuch that never any Monarchy had a swifter growth, nor a more speedy dissolution: there passing not full 40 years from the first of Philip to the last of Alexander; in which space it was both begun, perfected, and broke to pieces. For the foundation being laid in murder, perjury, and treason, as at first it was; was never likely to be blessed with a long continuance.

The KINGS of MACEDON.

3386	8 Alcetas, 29	3568	16 Amintas II. 6.		24 Aridæus, 6.

Of these 24 Kings, only 6 are famous, viz. Caranaus, the first king, originally of Argos, of the race of Hercules; and by an Oracle commanded to lead a Colony into this Country, and to follow the first flock of Cattel he saw before him. Being here arrived in a tempestuous stormy day, he espyed a herd of Goats flying the fury of the weather. These Goats he followed unto Ædessa, into which by reason of the darkness of the air he entred undiscovered, won the Town, and in short space became Lord of all the Country. 2. Perdiccas the fourth King, who at Æga, built a burial place for all his successors; assuring the people that as long as their Kings were there buried, his race should never fail; and so it happened. For the Kingdom of Macedon, after the death of Alexander the great, who was buried at Babylon, was translated to the sons of Demetrius. 3. Europus, who in his infancy was carryed in a cradle against the Illyrians his Enemies, and returned victorious. This the Macedons did, either because they thought they could not be beaten, their King being present: or perswaded themselves that there was none so void of honour and compassion, as to abandon an infant, no way able to save himself from destruction, but by the valour and fidelity of his servants. 4. Alexander, the son

Macedon. of Amintas, famous for a notable exploit on the Persian Embassadours; who being sent from Megabizus, requested a view of the Macedonian Ladies. No sooner were they entred, but petulantius eas Persis contrectantibus, as Justine relateth the story, they were called back by this Alexander, sending in their steads young springals maidenly attired; who upon the like indignities offered, slew these effeminate Asians. After which he behaved himself so discreetly, that the Persian Monarch gave him all Greece, between Hæmus and Olympus. Philip father to Alexander, who governed first as a Guardian to Amyntas, the son of Perdiccas his elder brother; but afterwards took unto himself both the kingdom and title of King: which he continued in the deposition of his Nephew and natural Soveraign, the murder of the rest of his brethren, and the destruction of all such as opposed his practice. But being otherwise a man of approved abilities, he cleared his own Country of the Illyrians; subdued Achaia, Thrace, and a great part of Peloponnesus, and was chosen General of the Greeks against the Persians. But as soon as he had made all things ready for this expedition, he was slain by one Pausanias a young Gentleman, whom he had formerly abused in the heat of his unnatural lusts. 6. Alexander, the son of Philip, who recovered such parts of Greece, as on the death of his father had befooled themselves with a hope of liberty. He subdued Darius the great King of Persia, Taxiles and Porus Kings of India; founded the Monarchy of the Grecians, and in the height of his successes was poisoned at Babylon (as it is conceived) by Cassander, one of his great Captains: his revenue at the time of his death, amounting to 300000 talents yearly. After his death his new got Empire was much controverted in the point of succession; he himself dying without lawfull issue, and having at his death bequeathed it to him, who was thought most worthy by his Army: and the souldiers according to their several affections and relations, thought their own Leaders most deserving. At last the title of King (and in effect nothing but the title) was by consent of the Commanders cast on Aridæus, a bastard of Philip, to whom Perdiccas was appointed to be Protector (for Aridæus was a little crazed in his brain) and to be general of the Army, by whose design he was also married to Eurydice daughter to Amyntas, whom Philip had before dispossessed of that Kingdom. As for the Provinces, they were assigned unto the government of the chief Commanders, viz. Ægypt to Ptolemie, Syria to Laomedon, Cilicia to Philotus, Media to Pytho, Cappadocia to Eumenes, Pamphylia, Lycia, and Phrigia major to Antigonus, Caria to Cassander, Lidia to Minander, Pontus and Phrygia minor to Leonatus, Assyria to Seleucus, Persis to Peucestes, Thrace to Lysimachus, and Macedon it self unto Antipater: the others parts of the Persian Empire being left to them, unto whose hands they were committed in the time of Alexander. But this division held not long, for Perdiccas being once slain by Ptolemie, and Eumenes made away by Antigonus; these two became quickly too great for the rest: Ptolemie adding Syria; and Cyprus, to the Kingdom of Ægypt, and Antigonus bringing under his command not only all Asia minor, but Assyria, Media, and almost all the Eastern parts of the Persian Empire. Antipater in mean time succeeding in the Protectorship, banished Olympias the mother of Alexander, out of Macedonia, as bearing but a step-dames love unto Aridæus. But he being dead, she returned out of Epirus (the place of her banishment) into Macedonia, where raising a strong party amongst the people, she put Aridæus and his wife Eurydice to death, proclaiming Alexander, the son of Alexander by Roxane, both slain not long after by Cassander the son of Antipater, who to make sure work, murdered also with the like cruelty Hercules, the son of Alexander on Barsina (another Persian Lady, as Roxane was) the last survivor of that house. And so the royal family being rooted out, Antigonus took unto himself the Title of King: as did Seleucus, who had now recovered all the Persian Provinces, beyond Euphrates. The like did Ptolemie in Ægypt, and Cassander in Macedon.

The second Race of the MACEDON KINGS.

A.M.
3648	1	Cassander, sonne of Antipater, supposed to have been the poisoner of Alexander, rooted out the blood-roya of Macedon, his reign full of troubles and difficulties, 19.
3667	2	Alexander and Antipater, sons to Cassander, but not well agreeing, called unto their aid Lysimachus and Demetrius, by whom they were both in short time murdered, 4.
3671	3	Demetrius, son to Antigonus, the powerfull King of Asia, after he had in one battel against Seleucus, lost both his father, and all his Asian Dominions; settled himself in Macedon: but being there outed by Pyrrhus, he fled to Seleucus, and with him dyed, 6.
3677	4	Pyrrhus King of Epirus, was by the souldiers, voluntarily forsaking Demetrius, made King of Macedon; but after 7 moneths, the souldiers revolted to Lysimachus, as being a Macedonian born.
3678	5	Lysimachus, King of Thrace, being thus made King of Macedon, was in the end vanquished and slain by Seleucus, the last survivor of Alexanders Captains, 7.
3685	6	Ceraunus, or Ptolemie Ceraunus, son of Ptolemie to Ægypt, having traiterously slain his friend and Patron Seleucus, seised on Macedon; but lost it, together with his life, unto the Gauls, who then plagued these Countries. After whose death, this Kingdom being distracted amongst many Competitours, setled at last upon
3687	7	Antigonus Gonatas, the son of Demetrius, who for his valour shewn in expulsing the Gauls, was made King of Macedon. And though for a while he gave way to Pyrrhus, then returning from Italy; yet after the death of Pyrrhus he again recovered his estate; but outed once again by Alexander the son of Pyrrhus, 36. Thrace.

3723 8 Demetrius II. son of Antigonus, recovered Macedon from the power of Alexander, the son of Pyrrhus, 10.

3733 9 Antigonus II. surnamed Doson, left by Demetrius as Protector to his young son Philip, usurped the Kingdom. He divers times vanquished and crushed the Grecians, beginning then to cast off the yoke of Macedon, 12.

3745 10 Philip, the son of Demetrius, 42.

3787 11 Perseus, the son of Philip, the last King of Macedon, the subversion of which estate was first begun in the time of his Father, who had not only warred upon the Ætolians, and others of the Greeks, whom the Romans had taken into their protection; but sided with Hannibal against them. Upon which grounds they sent first Titus Qu. Flaminius, one of their Consuls, by whom Philip was vanquished at the battel of Cunos-cephalos, and his Kingdom made tributary unto Rome. After which picking a quarrel against Perseus also, managed with variable success by Licinius, Martius, and others of their Commanders; they dispatched Paulus Æmilius with an Army into Macedon, to bring him to absolute subjection. Who sped so well, that Macedon was made a Province of the Roman Empire, and Perseus led captive unto Rome, Anno 3789. In which triumph, besides the pomp of leading a Captive King in bonds, Æmilius caused the ready money which he brought out of Greece, to be carryed in 750 Vessels, every Vessel containing 3 Talents: which made so infinite a sum, that the Roman people were free for many years after, from all taxes and impositions. A. M. 3798.

Macedon thus made a Province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards divided into three parts or Provinces, that is to say, Macedonia Prima, Macedonia Secunda, or Salutaris, and Prevalitana; in the new model of Constantine became a Dioceſe, the Dioceſe hereof containing the Provinces of Crete, Achaia, old and new Epirus, Macedonia Prima, and the greatest part of Salutaris, the residue of Salutaris and Prevalitana, (which makes up the Country now called Albania) being laid to the Dioceſe of Dacia. It continued part of the Eastern Empire, till towards the last fatal dissolution of it; though many times harassed and depopulated by the Sclavonians, Bulgarians, Rosses, and others of the barbarous people at their several invasions of it: finally conquered by the Turks, first under the conduct of Bajazet, their fourth King, taking Nicopolis, a Town hereof bordering on Thrace, and lying North of Sinus Strimonius, now the Bay of Contesso; and after unto Amurath the second, their sixt King, making themselves masters of Thessalonica, the chief City of it, and therewith of all the Country. By reason of which many invasions and last desolation by the Turks, there is scarce one of all those many Cities before mentioned, now of any eminence; except Thessalonica only: the rest being miserably destroyed. And for the Country it self it is governed by a Turkish Sanziack, under the Beglerbeg of Greece, his annual Revenue being but 8000 Crowns, nor any thing else required of him than to maintain 100 horse in ordinary pay, for defence of his Province; and to find 400 horse on extraordinary occasions, as the Grand-Signeur shall command him.

THRACE hath on the East, Pontus Euxinus, Propontis, and Hellespont; on the West, Macedon; on the North, the Hill Hæmus; on the South the Ægean Sea, and part of Macedon. A very large and goodly Province, extending 20 days journey in length, and 7 days journey in breadth: and in relation to the heavens, reaching unto the 44 degree of the Northern latitude; so that the longest day in summer is about 15 hours, three quarters.

By several men, according to the times they lived in, it hath been called by divers names: by Stephanus, Aria; by Suidas, Odrysa; by Lycophron, Crestona; by some writers, Scythia; by Josephus the Hebrew, Thyras. But generally it is called Thrace, or Thracia, and that as some say from Thrax, the son of Mars, as others from Thraca, an Inchantress: more probably from the ferity and barbarous condition of the first Inhabitants; the name in the Original Greek bearing that construction: Most likely from Thyras, the son of Japhet, who first planted here, in memory of whom it did retain the name of Thyras in the time of Josephus, besides many other footsteps and remembrances of him, in the name of many of their Towns, and some of their Princes: of which we have already spoken in our general Preface. Finally, by the Turks it is called Romania, either from the many Roman Colonies which were planted here; or because Constantinople, the chief City of it, was antiently called Nova Roma: and by that name it is now called in most modern Writers.

The Country generally is neither of a rich soil, nor a pleasant air, the corn and other fruits by reason of the coldness of the Climate, leisurely ripening, the Vines yeelding more shade than juyce, and the trees for the most part more leaves than fruit: yet in some parts there be many large and goodly plains, where they reap good store of corn, but of Pulse especially; and towards the Sea-side they have plenty of wine, which Plinie much commended both for strength and goodness.

The people antiently were very bold and valiant, and called by some Αυτόνομοι because every man was a law to himself. So that it was truly said by Herodotus, that if they had either been all of one mind, or under one King, they had been invincible. Of manners they were rude and savage, somewhat near to brutishness; buying their Wives, and selling both their sons and daughters, as in open market: in which, since imitated by the Turks, who possess their Coun-

Thrace. Country. The men were more couragious than comely, wearing Cloaths according to their conditions, ragged and unseemly. The maryed women were in love to their Husbands so constant, that they willingly sacrificed themselves at their Funerals. The Virgins were bestowed, not by their own Parents, but the common Fathers of their Cities. Such as brought neither beauty nor vertue for their dowry, were put off according to their monie; most times sold as other Cattel, in the Markets. In matters of Religion, they worshipped Mars, Bacchus, Diana, Mercury, as did other Gentiles: swearing especiallie by the first, from whom they bragged themselves to have been descended. But their chief national deity, was one Zamolxis, sometimes a native of this Country, who having been brought up under Pythagoras, and returning home, prescribed them good and wholesome Laws; assuring them that if they did observe the same, they should go unto a place when they left this World, in which they should enjoy all manner of pleasure and contentment. By this means having gotten some opinion of a divinity amongst them, he absented himself; after was worshipped as their God. Upon these principles, when any one was born amongst them, his Parents and other friends sitting round about him, lamented bitterly his comming into the World; ripping up all the miseries and afflictions whereto he was to be exposed in this present life, and so deplored his condition as absolutely miserable and unhaphy. But on the contrary, when any one chanced to dye, they buryed him with all joy and alacrity; highly rejoicing that by this means he was freed from the crosses and disasters of this wretched World. Expressed thus briefly, after his wonted manner, by my Author. Lugentur Puerperia, natiq; deflentur; funera contra festa sunt, & veluti sacra cantu lusuq; celebrantur. A piece of such sound and Orthodox Divinity, that I wonder how they hit upon it in these times of darkness; and savouring very much of the Primitive piety: by which the Obits of the Saints were kept as Festivals, no notice being taken of the day of their births. According to that of the good old Writer, Non navitatem sed mortem Sanctorum Ecclesia pretiosam & festam judicat.

Here lived the Tyrant Polymnestor, who villanously murdered Polydorus, a younger son of Priamus; for which fact, Hecuba the young Princes Mother, scratched him to death. Here also lived the Tyrant Tereus, of whom before in Phocis: and Diomedes, who using to feed his Horses with mans flesh, was slain by Hercules, and cast unto his Horses. And finally, here reigned King Cotys, whom I mention not as a Tyrant, but propose as a pattern of rare temper, both in mastering and preventing passion. For when a neighbour Prince had sent him a present of Glasses, of the purest metall, and no lesse accurate in the workmanship or fashion of them: (having dispatched the Messenger with all the due complements of Majesty and gratitude) he broke them all to pieces; lest if by mishap any of his servants should do the like, he might be stirred to an intemperate choler.

Chief mountains in this Country, besides Hæmus spoken of already, are 1. Rhodope, the highest next Mount Hæmus in those parts of the World; craggy and rough, the top whereof continually white with snow: memorable for the fate and fable of Orpheus, who in a melancholy humour (having lost his Wife) betook himself to these Mountains; where with his Musick he affected both Woods and Beasts, who are said to have danced unto his Musick: from this place of his abode called Rhodopeius, from his Country Thracius; Non me carminibus vincet nec Thracius Orpheus, &c. as the Shepheard boasteth in the Poet. The truth is, that he was a man of an heavenly Muse, and by his dictates and good counsell laid down in verse, first of all civilized this people, and weaned them by degrees from their bestiality. Hence the occasion of the Fable. But for Mount Rhodope it self, it is in the midst of this Country, thwarting it from Mount Hæmus towards the West: which with the spurs and branches of it, and the plains adjoining, lying betwixt the River Nessus on the West, and Melas or Niger on the East, made up the Province of the Empire called Rhodope, by the name of the Mountain. 2. Pangæus, rich in mines of Silver; 3. Melapus, shooting towards the Sea, full of rocks and cliffs; and 4. Orbelus, lying towards Macedon, where there is a little Region from hence called Orbelia.

Principal Rivers hereof, besides Strymon spoken of before, the boundary in some places betwixt this and Macedon, are 1. Nessus, by the Grecians, now called Mestro, by the Turks, Charason, which rising out of Mount Hæmus falleth into the Sea, near the Isle of Thassus. 2. Athyras, in which name, the memory of Thyras the son of Japhet, seems to be preserved: which rising in Mount Hæmus also, loseth it self in the Propontick; as doth 3. Bathynias, another River rising from the same Mount Hæmus. 4. Hebrus, the most noted River of all this country, rising out of Rhodope, and falling into the Ægean near the Isle of Samothrace; a River of so slow a course, that it is not easie to discern which way it goeth: but memorable in the Poets for the fate of Orpheus, who being torn in pieces by the Thracian women, had his limbs thrown into it by those Furies. 5. Thearus, good against the scab both in Man and Beast, issuing out of 30 Fountains, some hot, some cold; with the pleasantnesse of whose waters Darius the King of Persia, was so delighted, that he erected a Pilar in honor of it.

The chief Towns 1. Abdera, now called Polystilo, situate not far from the fall of the River Nessus into the Ægean, the birth-place of Democritus, who spent his whole life in laughing at the follies of others. 2. Potidea, of old a Colonie of Athens, from whom it revolted, and submitted to the State of Corinth. But the Athenians not enduring the affront, beleaguered it, and after two years siege, and the expence of 2000 Talents, could not recover it again but on composition. 3. Anus, on the Ægean Sea, a Town of great strength and safety, and therefore used by the later Constantinopolitan Emperors for the securing of great persons. For hither Michael Palæologus sent Jathatines the Turkish Sultan, flying to him for aid; and hither Mahomet the Great sent Demetrius, Prince of Peloponnesus, when he yielded up his Country to him: both under colour of providing for their eaſe and ſafety, but in plain terms to keep them in honorable Priſons. 4. Lyſimachia, on the Sea-ſhore, once of great importance, built by Lyſimachus, who after Alexanders death laid hands on this Country: afterwards garriſoned by Philip the Father of Perſeus, on the withdrawing of whoſe Forces for ſome other ſervice, it was taken and razed to the ground by the barbarous Thracians, and all the people of it carried into captivity; but by Antiochus the Great re-edified, and new peopled again, moved thereunto by the convenient ſituation and former glories of the place. 5. Philipolopolis ſo called from Philip King of Macedon, the father of Alexander, who built and fortified it as a bridle to hold in the Thracians; called alſo Trimontium, from three hills on which it was ſituate: beautified in the time of the Romans, with a goodly Amphitheatre, continuing entire and whole till theſe latter days, and might have laſted longer by many ages, did not the Turks dayly take away the ſtones thereof, which are all of Marble, to make money of them. Here are alſo many other antient Monuments, though the Town be much waſted and deſtroyed, the Scythians at one time killing in it above 100000 perſons: which notwithſtanding it is populous, and well-frequented, by reaſon of the convenient ſituation of it on the River Hebrus, which they now call Mariza. 6. Trajanopolis, ſo called from the Emperour Trajan, by whom either founded or repaired; indifferently well peopled, and ſtill preſerving its old name. 7. Selimbria, on the coaſt of the Propontick Sea; beautified with a commodious port for receipt of ſmall veſſels, and many Bayes adjoyning capable of greater: by Ptolemie called Selibria, and Olibria by Suidas. 8. Apollonia, upon Pontus Euxinus, or the Black Sea, now Siſopoli. 9. Phinopolis, on the ſame Sea alſo. 10. Nicopolis, at the foot of the Mount Hæmus, there being another of that name near the River Neſſus. 11. Perinthus, on the Propontick ſea, near the influx of the River Arſus. A Town of great note in the antient buſineſſes of Greece; of great ſtrength, and peopled formerly with men of ſuch reſolutions, that they maintained their liberty againſt Philip of Macedon, after almoſt all the reſt of Thrace had ſubmitted to him. 12. Heraclea, at firſt a Colony of the Thebans, and afterwards of much reqneſt in the time of the Romans, as being beautified with the Palaces of Veſpatian, Domitian, and Antoninus, Emperours of Rome; as alſo with an Amphitheatre, cut out of one entire Marble, and accounted one of the worlds ſeven Wonders: and finally, made the Metropolitan City of the Province of Europe, one of the Provinces of the Dioceſe of Thrace, whereof more anon. 13. Olynthus, called by Xenophon, the greateſt City of Thrace, as poſſibly enough it was in power and riches, though not in greatneſs of extent. A Colony of the Athenians, rich in trade, and miſtreſs of a fair and goodly territory adjoyning to it: the people whereof had been malicious enemies to the Kings of Macedon, which principally induced Philip, ſpoken of before, to ſet upon them. In which attempt he ſped ſo well, that what he could not get by force, he obtained by money; bribing ſome of the principal Officers to betray it to him: for the recovery whereof, Demoſthenes oft moved the people of Athens, in thoſe elaborate Orations called the Olynthiacks. 14. Seſtos, in the Thracian Cherſoneſe: which being a Peninſula abutting over againſt Troas, on the Aſian ſide, is now called Saint Georges Arm. Oppoſite whereunto, on the other ſide of the Water, is the Town of Abydus; remarkable for the Tragical Loves of Hero, and Leander, celebrated by Muſæus, an old Greek Poet. 15. Callipolis, on the Northern Promontory of this Cherſoneſe, the firſt City of note that ever the Turks poſſeſſed in Europe; taken by Solyman, the ſon of Orchanes, the ſecond King of the Ottoman race, Anno 1358. from whence they eaſily, and in little time, ſpred themſelves all over the reſt of Thrace: the ordinary paſſage of late times betwixt Europe and Aſia, by reaſon of the convenient Harbour, and ſafe Anchorage. 16. Cardia, ſeated on the Weſtern ſide of it, oppoſite to the Iſle of Lemnos, and the birth-place of Eumenes, who being a poor Carriers ſon, attained to ſuch an ability in the art of War; that after the death of Alexander the Great, under whom he ſerved, he ſeiſed on the Provinces of Cappadocia, and Paphlagonia, and ſiding (though a ſtranger to Macedon) with Olympias, and the Blood-royal, againſt the Greek Captains; vanquiſhed and ſlew Craterus, and divers times drave Antigonus (afterward Lord of Aſia) out of the field. But being by his own Souldiers betrayed, he was by them delivered to Antigonus, and by him ſlain. 17. Sardica, ſituate towards Mount Æmus, memorable for the Council there held againſt the Arians, An. 351. 18. Adrianople, ſeated near the midſt of Thrace, called antiently Uſcudama, but got this name from Adrian the Emp. who repaired and beautified it, made ſubject to the Turks by Bajazet, An. 1362. from the firſt taking of it made the Seat of the Turkiſh Kings, till the taking of Conſtantinople, by Mahomet the Great; by whom removed unto that City. 19. Pera, oppoſite to Conſtantinople, on the further ſide of the water (as the word doth ſignifie in the Greek) by ſome called Galata, once peopled by a Colony of Genoeſe, as the Mart and Factory of that State, taken by Mahomet the Great, An. 1453. but ſtill repleniſhed, for the moſt part, with Chriſtian Merchants & Artificers.

But the chief glory of this Country, and of all the Eaſt, is the renowned City of 20. Conſtantinople, ſeated in ſo commodious a place for Empire, that it over-looks both Europe, and Aſia; and commands not only the Propontis and Boſphorus, but the Euxine Sea. Firſt founded by one Byza, from whom named Byzantium: but being taken by the Perſians, and from them recovered by the Spartans (unwilling that the Perſians ſhould grow ſtrong in Europe) it was repaired and fortified by Pauſanias, one of their Commanders, 663 years before the birth of our Saviour. In vain beſieged by Philip of Macedon, and of great ſtrength in the flouriſh of the Roman Empire. The Walls of a juſt height, every ſtone whereof was ſo joyned with Couplets of Braſs, that the whole ſeemed but one intire piece; adorned beſides with Turrets, Bulwarks, and other Arts of Fortification. Siding with Niger, in his war againſt Severus the Emperour, it indured a ſiege of three years againſt all the forces of the Romans: during which time the people were ſo diſtreſſed by Famine, that men meeting in the ſtrees, would draw and fight; the Conqueror feeding on the Vanquiſhed. For want of Artillery to diſcharge on the Aſſailants, they caſt down upon them whole Statuas made of Braſs, and the like curious imagery. Houſes they pulled down to get timber for Shipping; the women

Thrace. cutting off their hair to inch out their tackle: and having thus patched up a Navy of 500 Sail, loſt it all by one Tempeſt. Compelled to yield by this miſfortune, the principall of the Nobility were put to the ſword, the wealth of the Inhabitants given for a prey to the Souldiers; the walls thereof diſmantled, the Town left in rubbiſh. Yet there appeared ſo much of Majeſty and beauty in the very ruines: Ut mireris utrum eorum qui primi extruxerunt, vel eorum qui deinceps ſunt demoliti, vires ſint potiores, as Herodian hath it. Re-edified afterwards by the Emperor Conſtantine, he honored it with his own Name, and made it the chief Seat of the Roman Empire. The City finiſhed May 11 Anno 331. And being ſo finiſhed, was endowed with all the privileges of Rome, an equall number of Senators, one of the Annual Conſuls, and all other Officers of State choſen out of both; the Citizens of the one being Free of the other, and capable of all places of moſt truſt and power. For that cauſe called NOVA ROMA, in ſome following times. This City he adorned alſo with magnificent Buildings, curious Statues, and ſuch like Ornaments, tranſported hither from Old Rome: which City he ſpoiled of more coſtly pieces, than any twenty of his Predeceſſours had brought unto it. At this day the chief buildings are the Turks Seraglio, and the Temple of Saint Sophia; which as they differ not much in place and ſituation, ſo as little in magnificence and State. The Temple of Saint Sophia, was, if not built, yet re-edified by the Emperor Juſtinian. It is built of an ovall form, ſurrounded with Pillars of admirable workmanſhip, adorned with ſpacious and beautifull Galleries; roofed all over with Moſaique work, and vaulted underneath, very ſtrongly for the Fabrick, and pleaſing for the eye. The Doors are very curiouſly wrought and plated; one of which, by the ſuperſtitious people is thought to have been made of the planks of Noahs Ark. And yet this Temple is little more than the Chancel of the antient Church, which contained in length 260 foot, and 180 in breadth: and yet to our Saint Pauls in London, may ſeem for the bigneſſe, to have been but a Chapel of eaſe. But what it wants in Greatneſſe, it hath gained in Beauty, and in the elegancy of the building, wherein it is thought to exceed all the fabricks in the whole World: the ſides and floor, all flagged with excellent Marble, and before the entrance a goodly Portico, or Porch, in which, as well the Chriſtians, who viſit it out of curioſity; as the Turks, who repair thither for Devotion, are to leave their ſhoos. By Mahomet the Great, after the taking of the City, converted to a Turkiſh Moſque, as it ſtill continueth; frequented by the Signeur almoſt every Friday, which is the Sabbath of that people. Near hereunto ſtandeth the Palace, or Seraglio of the Ottoman Emperors, on the North-eaſt Angle of the City, where formerly ſtood the antient Byzantium: divided from the reſt of the City by a wall, containing three miles in Circuit; and comprehending goodly groves of Cypreſſes intermixed with Plains, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, and all variety of pleaſures which luxury can affect, or treaſure compaſſe. The Palace it ſelf injoying a goodly proſpect into the Sea, was firſt built by Juſtinus the Emperor, afterwards much inlarged by the Ottoman race; containing three great Courts one within another: the buildings yielding unto thoſe of Franee, and Italy for the neat contrivances; but far ſurpaſſing them for coſt, and curiouſneſſe.

As for the City it ſelf, it is ſaid to be 18 miles in compaſs, and to contain 700000 living ſouls; yet would be more populous than it is, if the Plague, like a cruel Tertian Ague, did not every third year ſo rage amongſt them. Fortified towards the Land with three ſtrong, and high Walls, the one higher than the other, the outermoſt higheſt of them all: towards the Sea with one wall only, built after the old faſhion with many Turrets, which very ſtrongly flanker, and defend the ſame. But formerly both the Town and Cherſoneſe in which it ſtanderh, was defended from the incurſions of the barbarous people, by a ſtrong Wall built on the very Iſthmus of it, ſome ten miles from the City, reaching from one ſide to the other. The work of Anaſtaſius, who ſucceeded Zeno, Anno 494. A City which a farre off gives to the eye a moſt pleaſing object; ſo intermixt with Gardens, and beſet with Trees, that it ſeems a City in a Wood: but being entred, much deceiveth the expectation which it promiſed, the buildings of it being mean if not contemptible. The ſtreets for the moſt part exceeding narrow, but raiſed on each ſide for the greater cleanlineſſe: the houſes but of two ſtories high, ſome of rough Stone, and ſome of Timber; without any outward grace, or exterior garniſhing: in many places nothing but low Sheds, or rowes of ſhops; and in ſome places long dead walls belonging unto great mens houſes. The principal beauty of the whole, next to ſome Monuments of Antiquity, which are ſtill preſerved, and the Tombs, or Sepulchres of ſome of the Ottoman Kings, which are very ſumptuous; are the Moſques or Temples of the Turks, about eight thouſand in number: And the Port or Haven, ſo conveniently profound, that Ships of greateſt burden may ſafely lay their ſides to the ſides thereof, for the receit or diſcharge of their lading; and ſo commodiouſly ſeated on the Thracian Boſphorus, that there is no wind, whatſoever it be, which brings not in ſome ſhipping to it. But that which gives the greateſt pleaſure to the ſight, from the Hills adjoining, is the ſituation of it on ſeven Mountenets, moſt of them crowned with magnificent Moſques, built all of white Marble, round in form, and finiſhed on the top with gilded Spires, reflecting the ſun beams with a marvellous ſplendour. On the firſt whereof, ſtandeth the ruines of Conſtantines Palace, exceeding ſtately to behold; On the ſecond, a fair Turkiſh Moſque, built on the Palace antiently belonging to the Greek Patriarch; On the third, ſtands a ſtately Moſque, the Sepulchre of Mahomet the ſecond; and a very large Hoſpital, for entertainment of Pilgrims, and relief of the poor: the Annual rents wherof are valued at 200000 Checquines. On the fourth and fift, the Sepulture of Selimus the firſt, and Bajazet the ſecond. On the ſixt, the Moſque and Sepulchre of Solyman the magnificent, numbred amongſt the preſent wonders of the World; and on the ſeventh, the Temple of Saint Sophia, and the Turks Seraglio, ſpoken of already. In which reſpect it is called Πόλις ἐπτάλοφος, by Nicetis; Urbs ſepticollis, by Paulus Diaconus; and ſo acknowledged to be by Janus Douza, Phines Moriſon, G. Sandys, and other of our modern travellers, the eye-witneſſes of it. So that if there be any Myſtery in the number of Seven, or that the ſiting of the Great Whore on a ſeaven-headed Beaſt; be an aſſured direction to find out the Antichriſt: we may as well look for him in Conſtantinople, or Nova Roma, where the Great Turk, the profeſſed enemy of Chriſt, and the Chriſtian Faith, hath his ſeat and reſidence; as amongſt the ſeven hils of Old Rome, where the Pope reſideth. Or if his ſitting in the Temple of God, ſhew us where to find him; we may as well look for him in the Temple of Saint Sophia, now a Turkiſh Moſque, as in Saint Peters Church at Rome, ſtill a Chriſtian Temple. Thrace.

But to return again unto Conſtantinople, as it was made by Conſtantine the Imperial City, and conſequently the chief City of the Eaſt, in all Civil matters: ſo it became in little time to have a great way alſo in affairs of Religion. The Chriſtian Faith ſaid to be firſt preached in Byzantium, by Saint Andrew the Apoſtle, the firſt Biſhop thereof. Afterwards ſpreading over Thrace, and the Churches of it regulated by many Biſhops; the chief preheminence in matters which concerned thoſe Churches, was given unto the Biſhops of Heraclea, Heraclea being at that time the Metropolis, or principal City of the Province. But after that Conſtantinople was built by Conſtantine, and made the Imperial City, as before was ſaid; it did not only over-top Heraclea, and draw unto it ſelf the Metropolitan dignity, but ſtood in competition with the other Patriarchal Churches, for the Supreme Power; inſomuch as at the ſecond General Council, holden in this City, it was unanimouſly decreed, that the Patriarch hereof ſhould in degree of honour be next unto the Biſhop of Rome, and above thoſe of Antioch, and Alexandria; the ſame Decree confirmed in the Council of Chalcedon alſo. By which, not only all the Churches in the Dioceſe of Thrace, but alſo of Natolia, or Aſia Minor, (except Cilicia and Iſauria, which remained to the Patriarch of Antioch) containing no leſſe than 28 of the Roman Provinces, were made ſubject to him. And though Pope Leo the firſt, pretending only the preſervation of the Privileges of thoſe two great Churches; but indeed fearing leſt New Rome might in the end get the precedency of the Old, did oppoſe this Act; and ſome of his Succeſſors perſiſted in the ſame reſiſtance: yet they were forced in the end to give way unto it, eſpecially after the Emperour Juſtinian had by his Imperial Edict confirmed the ſame. By whom it was finally ordained, Senioris Romæ Papam primum eſſe omnium Sacerdotum, beatiſſimum autem Archiepiſcopum Conſtantinopoleos, Novæ Romæ, ſecundum habere locum: that is to ſay, that the Pope of Rome ſhould have the firſt place, in all General Counſels, and the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, or New Rome, ſhould have the ſecond. Encouraged wherewith, and with the countenance and favour of the Emperour Mauritius, John Patriarch of Conſtantinople, in the time of Gregory the Great, took to himſelf the title of Univerſal or Oecumenical Biſhop, the Paſtor General (as it were) of the Church of CHRIST. And though Pope Boniface, by the grant of that bloody Tyrant PHOCAS, got that title from him: yet the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople made good their ground, never ſubmitting either themſelves, or their Churches to the Popes Authority; for that cauſe ſpecially accounted by the Church of Rome for Schiſmaticks, accordingly reviled, and perſecuted with all kind of indignities. How it ſucceeded with theſe Patriarchs in the times enſuing, and by what means their juriſdiction was extended over all Greece, Muſcovie, part of Poland, and many other Churches in the North and Eaſt, hath been ſaid already. Certain it is, the conſtant reſidence of the Emperours, from the time of Conſtantine, gave great ground unto it: of whom I ſhould here adde the names, but that I muſt firſt ſum up the affairs of Thrace, before the building of this mighty and predominant City; and take a brief view of the reſt of thoſe Provinces, which we have comprehended under the name of Greece.

Concerning which we are to know, that the antient Inhabitants of it had the names of Strimonii; Bardi, Dolongi, Sapæi, Saii, and ſome others; united by moſt writers in the name of Thracians. Governed at firſt by the Kings or Princes of their ſeveral Tribes, as moſt Nations elſe: diſtinguiſhed from the common people as in other pomps, ſo moſt eſpecially by their Gods, which their Kings had to themſelves apart, and were not to be worſhipped by the beſt of their Subjects. Theſe not agreeing well together for the common good, gave the Athenians, Spartans, Thebans, and other Nations of the Greeks, a good opportunity to invade their Country, to ſeize on the Sea-Towns thereof, and plant Colonies in them: the Country in thoſe times being meanly peopled, and conſequently giving that advantage unto the Grecians; as the Indies in theſe later times have to the Spaniards, Portugueze, Engliſh, Hollanders, and all other Adventurers. Such of them as lay next to Macedon proving bad neighbours hereunto upon all occaſions, at laſt provoked Philip, the Father of Alexander, to put in for a ſhare; who being choſen Arbitrator betwixt two Competitors for that Kingdom (drawn at laſt into fewer hands) came not unto the Council with ſuch poor attendants as Juſtice and Piety, but with a great and puiſſant Army: wherewith having vanquiſhed and ſlain the two Pretenders, he pronounced ſentence for himſelf, and made Thrace his own; compelling the Inhabitants to pay him the tenth part of their Revenue for his yearly Tribute. After the death of Alexander, this Country was ſeiſed on by Lyſimachus, as his part of the ſpoil, who here built the City Lyſimachia; from hence invading Dacia, Macedon, and the neighbouring Regions: and he being dead, the Thracians now accuſtomed to a forein yoak, were either Subjects, or at leaſt Tributaries to the Macedonians. Aiding them in their wars againſt the Romans, they incurred the diſpleaſure of that people; who having ſetled their affairs in other place, and repulſed the Cimbri; thought it fit time to call the Thracians to accompt for their former Actions: but ſped ſo ill in the attempt, that Porcius Cato loſt his whole Army in the on-ſet, cunningly intercepted in their woods and faſtneſſes. Didius the Prætor coming in, whilſt the Thracians were buſie in the chaſe, gave them ſuch a ſtop, that he deſerved a Triumph for it: and made the Victory more eaſie to Metellus, who ſuc-

Thrace. ceeded Cato in that charge, and triumphed alſo over them; as alſo did Lucullus on another Victory. A. U. C. 680. Broken with ſo many ill ſucceſſes, that they were finally ſubdued by Piſo in the time of Auguſtus: becoming ſo obſequious to that fortunate Prince, that Rhitemalces, a great and puiſſant King hereof, aided him with a ſtrength of Horſe againſt the Pannonians and Illyrians, who had then rebelled. Afterwards made a Province of the Roman Empire, in Conſtantines new Model it became a Dioceſe, under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis: Thrace it ſelf being caſt into four Provinces, that is to ſay, Thrace ſpecially ſo called, Hæmimontum, Rhodope, and Europa; Scythia, and the Lower Mœſia, ſpoken of before, being added to it: of which the Preſidents of Rhodope and Hæmimontum, were not to be appealed from to the Præfectus Prætorio, as the others were; but only to the Præfect of Conſtantinople, the Imperial City. But as Alfonſus, King of Caſtile, ſurnamed the Wiſe, was once heard to ſay (never the Wiſer for ſo ſaying) That had he ſtood at the elbow of Almighty God, when he made the World, he would have ſhewed him how ſome things might be better ordered: ſo give me leave to play the fool, and to ſay this here, that had I ſtood at Conſtantines elbow, I would have counſelled him to lay the Dioceſe of Thrace to the Præfecture of Illyricum, who had originally only the Dioceſes of Macedon, and Illyricum under his command; and not have placed it under the Præfect of the Eaſt, who had both Aſias, and all Ægypt, under his Authority. For being that there lay Appeals from the Vicars of Lieutenants of the ſeveral Dioceſes to their ſeveral and reſpective Præfects, how great a trouble muſt it be to the ſubjects of Thrace, on every occaſion of Appeal, to poſt to Antioch, there to complain unto the Præfect of the Orient, when Sirmium and Theſſalonica, the ordinary reſidences of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, were ſo hard at hand. But Conſtantine was an abſolute Prince, and might doe what he liſted. He had not elſe removed his ſeat ſo far towards the Eaſt, and left the weſtern parts of the Empire open to the barbarous people, out of a fancy only to preſerve the Eaſtern. For that it was a fancy only the event did ſhew, the Perſians for all this, prevailing more than ever formerly; and Thrace it ſelf, though honoured with the Imperial City, and planted with ſo many Roman Colonies, ſo ill inhabited, that a great part thereof lay waſt and deſert many ages after. Inſomuch as the Goths being by the Huns driven over the Danow, were by the Emperour Valens planted in this Country, (the Emperour having a deſign to uſe them in his following wars) where not contented with the portion allotted to them, they bid fair for all, waſting the whole Province, taking divers towns, and endangering Conſtantinople it ſelf, from whence not driven (Valens himſelf being killed in the war againſt them) but by the coming of ſome Saracens to the aid of the Citizens. Nor could the reſidence of the Emperours ſo protect this Country, but that it was continually haraſſed and depopulated by the Sclaves, Bulgarians, Roſſes, Saracens, and other barbarous people falling in upon it: nor hinder one Bryonnius in the time of Michael Ducas, and Nicephorus Botoniates from aſſuming to himſelf the title of King of Thrace; nor finally prevent the Turks of the Ottoman race from getting ground every day on the leſſer Aſia, incroaching upon Thrace it ſelf, and in the end obtaining the Imperial City.

And here perhaps it is expected, conſidering the Turks are now poſſeſſed of Thrace, and the reſt of Greece, that we ſhould make relation of the nature of that People, their cuſtoms, forces, policies, original, and proceedings. But the diſcourſe thereof we will deferre till we come to Turcomania; a Province of Aſia, from whence they made their firſt inundations, like to ſome unreſiſtable torrent into Perſia; and after into the other parts of the world now ſubject to them. And therefore letting that alone till another time, we will proceed to our deſcription of the reſt of Greece, conſiſting of the Ilands ſcattered in the Pontick, Propontick, Ægean, Cretan, and Ionian Seas: leaving out ſuch as properly belong to Aſia, to our deſcription of that Country, though otherwiſe Greek Ilands, and ſo accompted both for their Language and Original.

The ILANDS of the PONTICK and PROPONTICK SEAS.

Before we come to the deſcriptions of theſe Ilands, we muſt firſt look upon the Seas in which they lie: beginning with the PONTICK firſt, becauſe the Greateſt, and that which doth communicate and convey its waters unto all the reſt. A Sea made up Originally of the confluence of thoſe mighty Rivers (the greateſt in thoſe parts of the world) which do fall into it: that is to ſay, the Danow, Boryſthenes, and Tanais falling out of Europe, beſides many other fair and large Rivers (though of leſſer note) to the number of at leaſt an hundred, which pay tribute to it: the whole compaſſe of it being 2700 miles; in form, by ſome reſembled to a Scythian Bow when it is bended. A Sea not ſo ſalt as many others, and therefore much annoyed with ice in winter; ſeldom remitted in the ſpring on the Northern ſhore: the Traffick of it wholly in a manner engroſſed by the Turks, who is maſter of all the Sea coaſt of it, ſave what belongs to the Polonian and Crimi-Tartar. At firſt called Ἄξενος from the inhoſpitableneſs of the neighbouring people; which being brought to ſome conformity, cauſed the Sea to be called Εὔξενος. By Florus it is called Mare Siniſtrum, becauſe in the way from Rome to Aſia Minor, it lay upon the left hand, as the Mediterranean did upon the right. It is commonly called at this time Mare Maggiore, for its greatneſſe; and the Black Sea, becauſe of the great miſts thence ariſing. Others not unprobably affirm that it is called the Black Sea, from the dangerous and black ſhipwracks here happening. For it is a very dangerous ſhore full of Rocks and Sands: and for this cauſe there is on the top of an high Tower, a Lanthorn, in which there is a great pan full of pitch, rozen, tozen, tallow, and the like, in dark nights continually burning, to give warning to Mariners how near they approach unto the ſhore. This Sea being the biggeſt of all thoſe parts, gave occaſion to them which knew no bigger, to call all Seas by the name of Pontus, as Ovid, Omnia pontus erant, deerant quoque littora ponto; and in another place of the ſame Poet,— nil niſi pontus & aer; a better reaſon doubtleſs of the name, than that of the Etymologiſts : Pontus, quia ponte caret. Of this Sea the chief Iſles are Thinnius, and Erithinnus, little famous. Propontis.

From hence the Sea bending Southward, is brought into narrow bounds, not being fully a mile broad; and called Thracius Boſphorus; Thracius, for its ſite nigh Thrace; and Boſphorus, for that Oxen have ſwom over it, and hath no Iland worth naming. Fortified on each ſide with a very ſtrong Caſtle, that on the Aſian ſide being the elder and the leſſer, is by the Greeks called Aſio Caſtron; by the Turks named Acce-chiſar : The other juſt oppoſite to it, by the Turks called Genichiſar; by the Greeks named Neo Caſtron, or New Caſtle. This laſt the work of Mahomet ſurnamed the Great, in the beginning of his reign : in bigneſs not inferiour to a little City; built by him in or near the place of the antient Damalis, environed with a wall 22 foot broad, and containing three great Towers; their wall exceeding 10 yards in thickneſs, exceedingly well ſtored with all ſorts of Ordinance and Ammunition. By the Engliſh commonly called the Black Towers, partly becauſe ſeated at the entrance of the Euxine or Black Sea, and partly becauſe they ſerve as a Priſon for Malefactors of principal note, who ſeldom are diſcharged thence, til releaſed by death.

This Streight having continued 26 miles in length, openeth it ſelf into the Propontis, 30 miles in compaſs; confined with Thrace on the one ſide, and with Bythinia on the other : ſo as they which ſail in the middle, may deſcry the land on all parts. Now called Mare di Marmora, from the Iland Marmora, which formerly called Proconneſus, hath for its abundance of Marble purchaſed this new name. The ſoil apt for Vines, and not deſtitute of Corn, yielding alſo good paſturage for Goats, wherof here is plenty, with an incredible number of Partriges amongſt the Rocks : the Country of Ariſtæus, a famous Poet, who flouriſhed in the times of Cræſus. Antiently it had in it two Cities of the ſame name with the Iland, called the Old and New Proconneſus; the former firſt built by the Mileſians, an Aſian people; the latter by the natives of this Iland. But both theſe being long ſince decayed, it hath now only a ſmall Village towards the North, with an Haven to it; inhabited by Greeks, as is all the reſt of the Iland : ſuch Chriſtian Slaves as are in great numbers employed here by the Turks in digging Marble for their Moſques, and other buildings, being only ſojourners, not houſe-keepers, and therefore not accompted amongſt the Inhabitants. Here is alſo in this Propontick Sea, the Iſle of Cyzicus, but being it is on Aſia ſide, we ſhall there ſpeak of it.

The Sea having gathered her waters into a leſſer Chanel, is called Helleſpont, from Helle, daughter to Athamas, King of Thebes, who was here drowned. Over this famous ſtreight did Xerxes, according to Herodotus, make a bridge of boats to paſs into Greece : which when a ſuddain tempeſt had ſhrewdly battered, he cauſed the Sea to be beaten with 300 ſtripes; and caſt a pair of Fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was ſubject. Xerxes in this expedition waſted over an Army conſiſting of two millions, and 154710 fighting men, in no leſs than 2208 bottoms of all ſorts. When all the Perſians ſoothed the King in the unconquerablenes of his forces; Artabanus told him that he feared no enemies but the Sea and the Earth; the one yielding no ſafe harbour for ſuch a Navy; the other, not yielding ſufficient ſubſiſtence for ſo multitudinous an army. His return over this Helleſpont was as dejected, as his paſſage magnificent; his Fleet being ſo broken by the valour of the Greeks, and the fury of the ſea : that for his more ſpeedy flight, he was compelled to make uſe of a poor fiſher-boat. Neither yet was his paſſage ſecure; For the boat being overburdened, had ſunk all, if the Perſians by caſting away themſelves, had not ſaved the life of their King. The loſſe of which noble ſpirits ſo vexed him, that having given the Steerſman a golden Coronet, for preſerving his own life : he commanded him to execution, as a Co-author of the death of his ſervants. It is now called the Caſtles, or the ſea of the two Caſtles; which two Caſtles ſtand one on Europe, the other on Aſia ſide; in the Towns of Seſtos, and Abydos. Theſe Caſtles commonly by the Turks called Dardanelli, are exceeding well built, and abundantly furniſhed with munition. They ſearch and examine all Ships that paſs that way : they receive the Grand Signeurs cuſtoms, and are in effect the principal ſtrength of Conſtantinople. At theſe Caſtles, all Ships muſt ſtay three days; to the end, that if any Slave be run away from his maſter, or thieves have ſtolen any thing, they may be in that place purſued and apprehended. So that theſe Caſtles are as it were the out-works of Conſtantinople to defend it from all invaſions, and from any forces which may come unto it by Sea, out of the Mediterranean; As for the ſafety thereof, from ſuch as may find paſſage out of the Euxine, there are ſituate at the very entrance of the Thracian Boſphorus the two ſtrong Caſtles, the one above Conſtantinople on Europe ſide : the other on the Aſian ſhore, which before we ſpake of. No Europæan Iſle of note in either Streight. And therefore on unto

The ILANDS of the ÆGEAN SEA.

Helleſpont, after a forty miles courſe, expatiateth its waters in the Ægean Seas; ſo called either from Ægeus, the father of Theſeus, who miſdoubting his ſons ſafe return from the Minotaure of Crete, here drowned himſelf : or ſecondly, from Ægæ, once a principal City, in the prime Iland Eubœa : or thirdly, becauſe that the Ilands lie ſcattered up and down like the leaps of a wanton Goat, from the Greek αἴγες.

The chief Ilands of it are, 1 Samothrace, 2 Thaſſus, 3 Imbrus, 4 Lemnos, 5 Eubœa, 6 Salamis, 7 Ægina, Lemnos. 7 Ægina, 8 the Cyclades, 9 the Sporades, and 10 Cythera: all which, especially from Eubœa Southwards, are called the Ilands of the Arches; the Sea being by the Mariners called the Archipelago, in regard of its greatness, compared unto the narrow Seas which lie about it.

I. SAMOTHRACE is a small Iland opposite to the Coast of Thrace, where the Hebrus falls into the Sea; so called quasi Samos Thraciæ, to difference it from the Asian Samos, bordering on Ionia. Formerly it was called Dardania, from Dardanus the Trojan, who fled hither when he carried the Palladium thence. But Aristotle writing of the Common-weal of these Samo-Thracians, telleth us that it was first called Leucosia, and afterwards Samus, from Saus, the son of Mercury and Rhene, the letter M. being interposed. It is now called Samandrachi, plentiful in Honey, and Wild Deer, and better stored with commodious harbours, than other in these Seas. It hath a town of the same name with the Iland, situate on an high hill on the North part hereof, over-looking a capacious Haven; of late, by the Pirates frequent infesting of these Seas, in a manner desolate.

II. THASSUS, another little Iland on the same Coast, opposite to the influx of the River Nessus, lying betwixt that and Athos in Macedonia, at the mouth of the Strymonian Bay: by Pliny called Æria, and Æthria; by Ptolemy, Thalassia; at the present, Thasse. In compass betwixt forty and fifty miles, sufficiently fruitfull, well repleniſhed with woods, and yielding good store of the best Wines. Mountainous in some places, but those mountains fraught with Quarries of excellent Marble, which the Romans called Thassian, from the Iland: and in the times of Philip, and Alexander the Great, so rich in Mines of useful metals, that those Kings received yearly 80 talents for their Customs of them. It hath one town of the same name with the Iland, situate on a large plain in the north part of it; bordering on a goodly Bay, which serves for an Haven to the Town: and on the South parts where the Country is more mountainous and hilly, there are two towns more, each of them situate on an hill; but the names thereof occur not amongst my Authors.

III. IMBRUS, another small Iland, now named Lembro, is situate betwixt Samothrace and the Thracian Chersonese: in compass about thirty miles, but more long then broad, stretching north and south; and distant from Samothrace about ten miles. The Iland mountainous for the most part, except towards the West; where it hath some pleasant and well-watered plains: in which a town of the same name situate at the foot of the mountain, once sacred unto Mercury, but not else observable.

IV. LEMNOS, an Iland of more note, lyeth betwixt Thrace and Macedon, not far from Imbrus; memorable amongst the Poets for the fabulous fall of Vulcan; who being but an homely brat, hardly worth the owning, was by Juno in great passion thrown out of Heaven, and falling on this Iland, came to get his halting. Howsoever, he was antiently worshipped by the people hereof, and from hence called Lemnius. In compass about an hundred miles, but more long than broad, extended from the East to the West: on every side well furnished with convenient Creeks, and some pretty Havens; by which the want of Rivers is in some sort recompensed.

The Country for the most part plain, if compared unto the adjacent Ilands, but otherwise swelled with rising mountainets; the enterposed valleys being very fruitful of wheat, pulse, wine, flesh, cheese, wool, flax, linnen, and all other necessaries, only wood is wanting. And though here be no Rivers, as before was said, yet have they good fishing on the Sea-coast, for their use and sustenance; and in some parts Hot-baths for health and medicine. But the chief riches of this Iland is in a Mineral Earth here digged, of excellent Vertue for curing wounds, stopping of fluxes, expulsing poisons, preservative against infections, and the like: called Terra Lemnia, from the place; and Terra Sigillata, from the seal or Character imprinted on it. For being made up into small pellets, and sealed with the Turks Character or Signet, it is then, (not before) sold unto the Merchants; by whom dispersed over most parts of the Christian world. Upon the sixt of August yearly they goe to gather it; but not without much Ceremony, and many religious preparations: brought in by the Venetians, when they were Lords of this Iland; and still continued by the Greek Monks or Caloires, who are the principal in the work. There is one hill only where it groweth, the top whereof being opened, they discover the vein, resembling the casting up of worms; and having gathered as much of it that day, as the Priests think fit, it is closed again; certain bags of it being sent to the Grand Signeur yearly, the residue sealed up, and sold to the forein Merchant.

But to return to the Topographie of the place, the eastern parts hereof are said to be fat and fruitful, the western very dry and barren: in both containing 57 Towns and Villages, all of them inhabited by the Greeks, except only three, and those three garrisoned by the Turks; who being Lords of the whole Iland, have new named it Stalimene. In former times, from two prime Cities in it, it was called Diospolis. Of which the first was called Lemnos, by the name of the Iland, as large and well-peopled now, as ever formerly, but of no great estimation, when it was at the best: seated upon an high hill looking over the Sea; with a handsom market-place, on which mount Athos casts a shadow, though distant 87 miles from it. It was formerly by another name, called Myrina; but that held not long, the name of Lemnos still remaining. 2 The second of the two Cities was then called Hephæstias, memorable for the temple of Vulcan, hence called Hephæstiades; since desolate and destroyed, and a new town built in the place of it, being called Chochino. This town not great, but of a reasonable strength, ſtrength, memorable for the ſtout reſiſtance, which a notable Virago named Marulla, made againſt the Turks, in the time of Mahomet the Great; the Venetians then being Lords of the Iland. For ſuddenly landing, when they were not looked for, with a purpoſe to ſurpriſe this town, they found more reſiſtance at the gates than they did expect: none more commended than this Maiden, who ſeeing her Father ſlain, took up ſuch weapons as lay by him, and manfully made good the place, untill the reſt of the Citizens wakened with the Alarum, came unto her reſcue and forced the enemy to retire. Near hereunto is the hil on which Vulcan is fabled to have fell; more eminent for the mineral earth here only gathered. And not far hence Pliny reports a Labyrinth to have ſtood in the dayes of old, little inferiour unto thoſe of Crete or Egypt; the ruines of it ſo decayed, that Bellonius, who took great pains in it, was not able to trace them. 3 The third place of note is Setira, though an ordinary Village, yet memorable for the Chappel in which the Greek Caloires begin their Oriſons on the ſixt day of Auguſt, before their gathering of the Earth, ſo often mentioned. In this Country anciently reigned Thoas, the ſon of Bacchus and Ariadne, during whoſe time the women of the Iland upon ſome diſpleaſure murdered all the men, the King only excepted, preſerved by Hypſiſſe his daughter, whom they made their Queen, and by whom Jaſon with the Argonautes were ſo kindly entertained for two years together, that they had almoſt forgot their intended expedition for the Golden Fleece; ſhe her ſelf being gat with Child by Jaſon at his being there, the other women probably following her example. Following the fortune of the other parts of Greece, it came at laſt under the power of the Conſtantinopolitan or Eaſtern Emperors; In the ſubverſion of that Empire by the Latines or Weſtern Chriſtians (of which more hereafter) it fell to the ſhare of the Venetians, who held it till the year 1463. or thereabouts. Eubœa.

Beſides theſe on the Coaſt of Thrace, there are alſo ſome of leſs note on the ſhores of Macedon. The principal whereof are 1 Peparinthus, as Ptolemy; Euonus, as Pliny calls it; containing about 40 miles in compaſſe: now, called Sarquius, as Caſtaldus, or Limene, as Niger hath it; fortified on the Eaſtern part with a Caſtle built upon a Rock. Others of leſſe note are, 2 Scyathos, now Scyati; 3 Scopelos, 4 Alloneſus, 5 Cicynethus, now Pontico, and 6 Dromus, of which little memorable. All which, together with thoſe formerly deſcribed on the Coaſt of Thrace, being but the Acceſſories of the ſeveral Continents, upon which they border; followed the fortune of the Principall, and were conquered in them.

V. EUBOEA known to the antients by the names of Macris, and Abantis; to the moderns, by that of Necropont; frontireth all along the Coaſt of Achaia, parallel to which it is in fertility: one part hereof, torn away from it by an Earth-quake, and lying ſtill ſo near unto it; that between the Iland and the Continent is only a little Euripus, which ebbeth and floweth ſeven times in one day. The reaſon of which, when Ariſtotle could not find, it is ſaid, that he threw himſelf in the Sea, with theſe words, Quia ego non capio te, tu capies me. In this Iland is the Promontory Capareus, where Nauplius, the father of Palamedes, placed his falſe fires, to the deſtruction of ſo many Greeks. For underſtanding how his ſon Palamedes, whom he deemed to have been ſlain by the hand of Paris, was treacherouſly circumvented by the policy of Ulyſſes, and Diomedes: he conceived ſuch a diſpleaſure againſt the whole hoſt of the Grecians, that he intended their general deſtruction. To this end he cauſed fires to be made on the tops of the moſt dangerous and unacceſſible rocks, in this whole Iland: which the Greeks taking (according to the cuſtom of the time) to have been the marks of ſome ſafe Haven, made thitherward; and were there miſerably caſt away, there periſhing 200 Ships, and many thouſand men. But when Nauplius underſtood how Diomedes and Ulyſſes, whoſe ruine he principally intended, were eſcaped; he drowned himſelf for very vexation, in this very ſame place. Palamedes, this Nauplius ſon, is ſaid to have invented four of the Greek Letters, viz. θ, χ, ξ, φ; to have firſt inſtituted Sentinels in an Army, and to be the firſt inventer of the Watch-word.

It is in length 150 miles, ſtretched out from the North-weſt, to the South-eaſt, in bredth, not above twenty, where it is broadeſt; the whole compaſs 365 Italian miles. The Queen of the Ægean Sea, not only for greatneſs, but for fertility and ſtrength; plentiful in Corn, Wine, Oyl, Fruit, and wood fit for Shipping; enriched with many fair Harbours, and capacious Bayes, and thoſe well fortified: watred alſo with the Rivers of Cireus and Neleus; two Rivers of ſo ſtrange a nature, that if a ſheep drink of the former, his wool turneth white, but coal-black, if he drink of the latter. For the credit whereof I refer the Reader unto Strabo. Here is alſo ſaid to be a ſtone called Amianthus, which is drawn into threed like hemp, and good cloth made of it: which, when it is ſtained, in ſtead of being ſent unto the Fullers; is thrown into the fire, and ſo cleanſed. But whether this be ſo, or not (for I put it only upon hear-ſay) certain it is, that it was once enriched with Mines both of Braſſe, and Iron, though thoſe now decayed; and Quarries of pure Marble; which continue ſtill.

The Iland, before it was conquered by the Turks, was very populous: but the people moſt delighted to live in Villages; the Cities or walled towns being only three. 1. Cariſto, anciently Caryſtus, with little or no variation, but by Plinie called Ægea, and Chironia; memorable for its marble quarries, of which were made the Pillars called Columnæ Caryſtiæ. 2 Chalcis, now Negropont, by the Turks, Eribos, ſeated on a plain near the waters ſide, there growing into a fair and goodly Bay, called the Golf of Negropont; a populous, ſtrong, and wealthy City, ſo fortified with Walls and Bulwarks, that in the judgement of moſt men, it was held invincible, when the Turks firſt ſate down before it. Nor was it purchaſed by the Turk (though Mahomet, who had took Conſtantinople undertook the buſineſs) at a lower price, than the loſſe of forty thouſand men, who were ſpent upon it; but taken at the Salamis. the laſt, and the people put unto the ſword, without conſideration of Sex, or Age. A town in former times of ſo great wealth and power, that it ſent Colonies abroad into Macedonia (a principal Region of the which was hence called Chalcidice) as alſo into Sicil, and ſome parts of Italy: and had a ſtrong influence on the affairs of Achaia alſo, as being ſituate near the Continent, that it was joyned to it by a bridge. When it was in the hands of the K. of Macedon, this town, together with Demetrias in Theſſaly, and the Caſtle of Acrocorinth, were called the fetters of Greece: inſomuch, that when the Roman Senate commanded Philip, the father of Perſeus, to ſet the Grecians at liberty; the Grecians made anſwer, that in vain was their liberty reſtored them, unleſs theſe three towns were firſt diſmantled. Permitted by the Romans to live according to their own Lawes, in memory of that benefit, they refuſed to declare againſt them in behalf of Antiochus; who thereupon made himſelf maſter of the town, and conſequently of the Iland. But forced to leave the place upon the loſs of the battel at Thermopylæ, it became free again; til finally made ſubject unto Rome, with the reſt of Greece, and with it made a part of the Eaſtern Empire. In the diviſion whereof amongſt the Latines, it fell to the ſhare of the Venetians; who from hence uſed with their Gallies to infeſt the ſhores of Turkie, and diſturb their trade. Provoked wherewith, eſpecially with their taking of Ænus a City of Thrace, under the conduct of Nicolas Canalis, the Venetian Admiral, who in that enterpriſe had took 2000 Turks, which he carried with him into this Iland: Mahomet the Great reſolves upon the conqueſt of it; and with a puiſſant Army ſets before the Town. And though it coſt him dear, yet at laſt he got it, and therewith all the Iſland alſo, which depended on the fortunes of it, An. 1471.

VI. SALAMIS is nigh unto Megaris, one of the Provinces of Achaia; famous for the overthow of the populous Navy of Xerxes, by the Athenians, and their confederates. What was the number of the ſouldiers and gallies of the Perſian ſide hath been already declared. The Grecian fleet conſiſted of no more than 270 veſſels, whereof 127 were rigged and ſet forth at the charge of the Athenians only; the reſt by the aſſociates. Yet was the admiralty committed to Eurybiades a Lacedæmonian; the Athenians preferring the main care of the common ſafety, before an unſeaſonable contention for priority. The Spartans ſeeing the inequality of forces, intended not to have hazarded the battel, but with full ſail to have retired to Peloponneſus, into which country the Perſians had made incurſions; reſpecting more the welfare of their own country yet defenſible, than the deſperate eſtate of Attica. This deſign was by Themiſtocles (as careful for the eſtate of Athens, as they for Sparta) ſignified to Xerxes: who getting between them and home, compelled them to a neceſſity of fighting; but to his own ruine. For in the conflict more than 200 of his ſhips were ſunk, and moſt of the reſt taken; the confederates having loſt of their Navy, forty onely. Between the Athenians and the Megarenſes were many contentions for this Iland; the fortune of the Athenians in the end prevailing. It hath in it a City of the ſame name, the royal ſeat of Telamon the father of Ajax, ſo famous in the warre of Troy: more memorable for giving birth to Solon the Legiſlator of Athens, one of the ſeven wiſe men of Greece.

VII. ÆGINA, now called Engie, an Iland ſituate over againſt Sinus Saronicus, being that Bay of Corinth which openeth into the Ægean: hence called Golfo di Engia, the Realm of Æacus, made for his juſtice and integrity one of the three Judges of Hell: the other two being his brother Rhadamanthus, and Minos the King of Crete. It had formerly been called Oenone, and Oenope; but took this name from Ægina the daughter of Aſopus a King of Bœotia, on whom Jupiter is ſaid to have begot both Æacus and Rhadamanthus. The people hereof are properly called Æginenſes, and Æginetæ, much ſpoken of in the wars of Athens, from which diſtant about 12 miles. The ground hereof is very ſtony, but good for barley, of which very plentiful: inhabited in former times by a laborious and thriving people, to whom they gave in thoſe days the name of Myrmidons, (the Iland being alſo called Myrmydonia) quod formicarum more terram foderent, becauſe Emmet-like, they digged up and under the earth, to make it the more fit for tillage; and dwelt at firſt in Caves without any houſes. Hence the occaſion of the fable of turning Emmets into men at the prayers of Æacus; both tale and people, after (I know not how) carryed into Theſſaly, where before we found them.

VIII. The CYCLADES, ſo called becauſe they lie in a circle round about Delos, are in number 53. They are alſo called the Ilands of the Arches, becauſe they are in the ſea called Archipelago. They ſtand ſo cloſe together, that in a clear day a man may ſee 20 of them at a time; for which cauſe it is with good reaſon accounted to be a dangerous place for ſaylers in a ſtorm. The chief of theſe Cyclades, are 1 DELOS, quaſi Δῆλος, ſignifying apparent, becauſe when all the earth had abjured the receipt of Latona, at the requeſt of Juno; this Iland then under water, was by Jupiter erected aloft, and fixt to receive her; and in it was ſhe delivered of Apollo and Diana: of which thus Ovid,

——— Erratica Delos
Errantem accepit, tunc cum levis inſula nabat,
Illic incumbens, ſub Palladas arbore, palma;
Edidit, invita, Geminos Latona, noverca.

Unſetled Delos floating on the wave,
A little Iland entertainment gave
To wandring Laton, ſpight of Juno's head,
Under Minerva's Palm-tree brought to bed.

Nota-

Notable also is this Iland for the Temple of Apollo, and a custom, neither permitting men to die, or children to be born in it; but sending sick men, and great-bellied women to Rhene, a small Iland, and not much distant. By a more antient name it is called Ortygia; and by that name mentioned in many of the Poets both Greek and Latines. The chief town of it called also Delos, is situate on a plain environed with rocks, near the hill called Cynthus: whence Apollo had the name of Cynthius, and Diana of Cynthia; as of Delius, and Delia, from the Iland. In this town had Apollo both his Temple, and Oracle, delivered here more plainly than in other places, and for that reason (as some say) called Delos; the word in Greek signifying manifest or apparent: made famous by the resort of people from all places hither, especially from the neighbouring Ilands; who sent yearly multitudes of men, and troops of Virgins, to celebrate his solemnities with herds of Sacrifices. More wealthy afterwards by the removing of the trade of Corinth hither; that town being utterly destroyed by the Romans, and this made choice of by the Merchant; partly by reason of the immunities of the place, but principally in regard of the convenient situation betwixt Europe and Asia. Continuing in great wealth and power, til Mithridates laid it waste; and at last on the ceasing of Oracles, utterly forsaken. Both Town and Iland now called Diles. By which name also Rhene an adjoyning Iland (before mentioned) is at this day known; chained to the other by Polycrates the Tyrant of Samos, and now united to it, at the least in name. Cyclades.

2. TENOS, by Aristotle called Hydrusa, by some Ophiussa, by the Moderns, Tyna. The chief Town of it of the same name; so called from one Tenes the builder of it, and giving name unto the Iland. Memorable for a fountain called Dipnosus, of which Aristotle and Athenæus do both affirm, that the waters will not mix with wine. The only Iland of this sea, which remaineth under the power of the State of Venice; the rest being subject to the Turk; deserving therefore the first place in our description of those Ilands that incompass Delos; though antiently

3. ANDROS, (prima inter Cyclades) was reckoned chief amongst the Cyclades, or first at least in order, because next to Delos: originally called Cauron, afterwards Antandros, and at last Andros; from Andrus the son of Eurymachus, who founded the chief town in it, of the same name also. Memorable for a pleasant fountain mentioned by Pliny, the waters whereof, on the nones of January yearly, had the tast of wine. It still retains the name of Andros.

4. NAXOS, now Nicsia, one of the biggest of the pack, as being about 80 miles in compass. In antient times called Veneris insula, or the Iland of Venus; afterwards Dionysia, by reason of its abundance of Wine, and the goodness of those Wines together, consecrated to Bacchus, whom the Greeks call Dionysius: From its wonderful plenty of Wheat, called by some Sicilia minor, or the lesser Sicil; but at last Naxos from one Naxos, who had the conduct of a Colony of Carians hither. But notwithstanding this new name, Bacchus did still retain the honour to be worshipped in it, in regard of his love unto the place; marying here Ariadne, (as the Poets fable) whom Theseus had left upon the Rocks: whose Coronet or Chaplet being by his means made one of the heavenly Constellations, is by Columella called Ardor Naxius, by the name of the Iland; though commonly by Astronomers, Corona Ariadnes, from the name of the Lady. The women of this Iland are said by Pliny to be delivered generally in the eighth moneth; as Bacchus was; more certainly famous in true storie for the beauty and fertility of it, and for a kind of excellent Marble called Ophitis, or Serpentinus; the ground whereof is green, diapred with blew or purple spots, in much esteem amongst the Romans. When these Ilands fell to the Venetians, they conferred this on one John Quirino, a Patritian, or Gentleman of that City, (as they did divers of the rest on other Undertakers) from whom it came to the Noble family of the Crispos, who held it til the year 1572. when James the last of that house lost it to Selymus the second.

5. GYAROS, a little Iland into which the Romans used to banish delinquents: hence that of Juvenal, cited by G. Sandys, > Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris, vel carcere dignum,

> Si vis esse aliquid; probitas laudatur, & alget.
>
> If thou intend'st to thrive, do what deserves
> Short Gyaros, or Gives: prais'd vertue sterves.

6. PAROS, now Paria, by some of the Antients called Pactia; by others, Minois; but obtained this new name from Parus, a son of Jason: memorable for quarries of the whitest Marble, of which commonly the Statuas of the Gods were made, called from hence Marmor Parium by the Latines. In compass about 50 miles, running in a long Plain from East to West, having once a Town of the same name seated in the North; once famous, but now utterly ruined. The Inhabitants hereof were noted to be very careless of keeping their promises and contracts: whence παροιμιάζειν, grew into a by-word, applyed to those who made no reckoning of their promises. There is now a town in it called Cephalo, but of no great note.

7. SCYROS, opposite to Magnesia in Asia Minor, famous for the birth of Neoptolemus or Pyrrhus, Cyclades. and that it was the lurking place of Achilles. For his mother Thetis being forewarned by an Oracle, that he ſhould be ſlain in the Trojan war, ſent him to Lycomedes King of this Iland; where he was brought up in womans attire among the Kings daughters, and deemed a Virgin; till by getting Pyrrhus on Deidamia the Kings daughter, it was proved to be otherwiſe. Others relate that Ulyſſes diſcovered him by a wile, who coming thither like a Pedler or Petit-Merchant, with armes, and other ware to avoid diſtruſt; expoſed his Merchandiſe to the view of the Damoſels: and that the other Ladies falling on the tires and Laces, Achilles took into his hand the Spear and Shield. Which when Ulyſſes had obſerved, he made him leave that Company, and away for Troy. The handſomneſs of the fraud take from Ovid, thus,

Conſcia venturi genitrix Nereia fati
Diſſimulat cultu na: um; & deceperat omnes;
In quibus Ajacem, ſumptæ fallacia veſtis.
Arma ego fœmineis animum motura virilem
Mercibus inſerui, &c.

Thus Engliſhed by G. Sandys in his Tranſlation of the Metamorphoſis:

The whole deſign in Order to relate,
Thetis fore-knowing great Achilles fate,
Diſguiz'd her ſon, ſo like a Virgin dreſt,
That all miſtook, and Ajax with the reſt.
When Arms, with womens trifles, which might blind
Suſpect, I brought to tempt a manly mind.
Yet was the Heros Virgin-like araid;
Who taking up the Shield and Spear, I ſaid,
O Goddeſſe-born, for thee the fate of Troy
Her fall reſerves; why doubtſt thou to deſtroy
Great Pergamus! then made him d'off thoſe weeeds,
And ſent the mighty unto mighty deeds.

There is another of this name, betwixt Negropont and Lesbos, which Ortelius conceives to be the Scene of this action: but the general opinion is for this, (though that the greater:) to which the ſituation of it amongſt the reſt of thoſe Ilands, where reigned ſo many of the Greek Kings intereſſed in the war of Troy, ſeems to give good countenance; the name and power of Greece not reaching in thoſe dayes, ſo much towards the North.

8. MELOS, ſituate betwixt Crete, and Peloponneſus, and equally diſtant from them both: the Promontories of Scylleum in the one, and that of Dyctymeum in the other, ſhooting out againſt it. Inhabited in former times by a Colony of Phœnicians, who coming out of Biblus, a town of that country, gave that name unto it: called Melos afterwards by the Greeks, from its abundance of Honey. The birth-place of Diagoras the Philoſopher, hence ſurnamed Melius, but more properly Ἄθεος, or the Atheiſt: the firſt who in thoſe dark times of ignorance, abſolutely denyed that there was a God. Protagoras Deos in dubium vocavit, Diagoras excluſit, ſaith Lactantius of him. It is now called Milo, round in form, and containing 80 miles in compaſs. The ſoyl ſufficiently fruitful in corn and oyl, but defective in wine. Here is great plenty of marble curiouſly beſpotted, and no ſmall ſtore of milſtones; as alſo great quantities of pitch, and brimſtone, and ſome ſulphury or hot ſprings, good for many diſeaſes. The chief town of it called Milo alſo.

9. SERIPHUS, 20 miles from Delos, memorable of old for the education of Perſeus, the ſon of Danæ. It is reported of this Iland, that the Frogs bred there are naturally mute; but ſuch as are brought from other places, keep their natural tone: from whence Proverbially, ſilent and ſullen perſons were called Ranæ Seriphiæ. It is now called Serphena, a ſtony and rocky Iland, and hath a town of the ſame name.

10. CI, by ſome called CEOS, and now Zea, oppoſite to the Promontory of Achaia called Sunium, in compaſs about 50 miles; made towards the Weſt in faſhion of a Creſcent or half-Moon. Mountainous and hilly, except towards the North. By Pliny ſaid to have been torn from Eubœa by a ſudden violence of the Sea, many men periſhing in the waters. Of old times beautified with three fair townes, 1 Julis, 2 Carthæa, and 3 Careſſus; of which there is nothing now remaining.

Others there are whoſe names occurre amongſt the Antients, as Miconus, now called Micole; 12 Cythnus, now Cauro; 14 Syphnus, now Stfino; 15 Therafia or Theuſia, now Santorini; 16 Cimolis, called formerly Echinuſa, but now Polino; 17 Olyarus, now Quiminio; 18 Sicenus, now Sicino; 19 Polyegros, now Falconara; 20 Amurgos, now Murgo, one of the biggeſt of them all, but not elſe obſervable.

The SPORADES, ſo called from σπείρω, ſpargo, eo quod in mari ſparſæ ſunt, & non in circulum coactæ, becauſe they lie diſperſed and ſcattered; not formed into a Circle, as the Cyclades are. In number twelve, viz. 1 Anaphe, ſo called by the Argonautes, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀναφανείσης σκοτώσης, becauſe the Moon did ſuddenly, and beyond her natural courſe, appear unto them, then grievouſly diſtreſſed by tempeſt. Apollo worſhipped here, is hence called Anapheus. It is now called Nimſio. 2 Aſtypalea, now Stampalia, in compaſs 88 miles; by ſome of the Antients called Theon Trapeza, or the table of the Gods. In Aſtypale, the chief Town of it, was Apollo worſhipped, from hence ſometimes called Aſtypaleus. 3 Helene, ſo called from that fair Greek Dame, whom Paris is here ſaid to have firſt deflowred; now called Macroniſo. 4 Los, fifteen miles from Naxos, where Homer is ſaid to have been buried: But others find his grave at Naxos, and ſome at Chios; the difference being almoſt as great about the place of his burial, as the place of his birth. Then are 5 Laguſa, 6 Phocuſa, 7 Phacaſia, 8 Philocandros, 9 Schinuſa, 10 Strybia, of little note either in Poetry or ſtory. And finally Thera, not far from Ægina, before mentioned, formerly called Calliſte; but named thus by Theras a Theban Gentleman, the ſon of Auteſion, conducting hither a Colony of Spartans and Minyans, (theſe laſt of Theſſaly) caſt out of Lemnos by Pelaſgus: in memory of whom, as the founder of their name and Nation, the Ilanders uſed to celebrate an Annual Feaſt. A ſedition after happening amongſt this people, the weaker partie under the conduct of one Battus, admoniſhed ſo to do by the Oracle of Apollo, paſſed over into Africk, and there built Cyrene: the birth-place of the Poet Callimachus, who aſcribes his Original to this Iſland, as himſelf thus witneſſeth. Sporades.

Καλλίστη μεν πάτρωϊς, τὸ δ' ὕστερον ὄνομα Θήρη,
Μήτης ἐμοὶ πατρίδος ἠμαθόεσσα.

That is to ſay:

Calliſte, which men Thera now do call,
Of my dear Country, the Originall.

X. CYTHERA, now called Cerigo, lyeth in the bottom of this Sea, not above five miles diſtant from Capo Malo in Peloponneſus; formerly called Porphyris from the abundance of Marble, whereof the Iland yeelds good plenty. In compaſſe about 60 miles, enriched with a delightful ſoyl, and many Havens, but thoſe ſmall, and unſafe, and very difficult of entrance: environed on all ſides with rocks, of themſelves inacceſſible, by which defended from the Turks, who hitherto have ſuffered the Venetians to enjoy it; to whom it fell in the diviſion of the ſpoil amongſt the Latines, ſo often ſpoken of before. It had a Town of the ſame name; ſome two furlongs from the Haven ſtood the Temple of Venus, (the antienteſt dedicated to that godeſs which the Grecians had) and therein her Statua in complete Armour, like another Pallas. Out of this Temple (the ruines whereof are ſtill to be ſeen) was Helen the wife of Menelaus, willingly raviſhed by Paris the ſon of Priam; but not enjoyed by him, til he had brought her to a ſmall Iſland of the Sporades, by her name called Helene, as before is ſaid. From the devotions of this people paid ſo duely to her, did Venus get the Adjunct of Cytherea; by which often called in the Poets. Thus, for one, in Virgil.

Parce metu Cytherea, manent immota tuorum Fata tibi.

That is to ſay:

Drive fear fair Cytherea from thy mind,
Thou thy ſons Fate immovable ſhall find.

And ſo I paſs from the Ægean to the Cretan Sea, obſerving this only by the way, that moſt of the 69 Kings, which accompanied Agamemnon in the warre of Troy, were Kings only of theſe ſmall Ilands; or elſe of other places as inconſiderable for wealth and potencie: every ſmall town and territorie having in thoſe early times, amongſt the Grecians (when ambition had not taught the great ones to devour the leſs) a peculiar King.

The ILANDS of the CRETAN SEAS.

The CRETAN SEA is properly that part of the Ægean or Ionian Seas, which lieth about the ſhores of Crete, and formerly was under the command and power thereof: as in thoſe times, the Sea about Carpathos, another Iſle of the Ægean, had the name of Carpathian; and that about Icaria, the name of Icarian; though ſituate in the Ægean alſo. The Iſles hereof are 1 Crete, 2 Claudi, 3 Dia, and 4 Letoa: for Melos and Cimolis, named by Ptolemie amongſt the Ilands which adjoin on Crete, have been alreadie ſpoken of amongſt the Cyclades, in the accompt whereof they paſſe by conſent of Writers.

1 CRETA, now Candie, hath on the Eaſt, the Carpathian Sea; on the Weſt, the Ionian; on the North, the Ægean; on the South, the African or Libyck. In form extending Eaſt and Weſt, with three points or Promontories, whereof that towards the Eaſt, called antiently Samonium, is now called Cabo di Salamone; that on the South-weſt, looking towards Africk, formerly named Hermea, now

Crete. Capo Grabaſſe; and finally that on the Northweſt towards Peloponneſus, of old called Cimarus, and now Capo Cheſtin. This laſt directly oppoſite to Malea, a Promontory of Laconia; the Sea betwixt them being ſo troubleſom and tempeſtuous, eſpecially on Laconia ſide, that at laſt it grew into an ordinary caveat, Maleam prætervectus obliviſcatur quæ ſunt domi, viz. that he which was to ſail by the point of Malea, ſhould lay aſide the care of all other matters, and attend his preſent ſafety only.

It hath in ſeveral Ages, and in ſeveral Authors, obtained ſeveral names: by Homer and Euſtathius called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities then contained in it; by Plinie and Solinus, Macaros and Macaroneſos, that is to ſay, the happy Iland, from the goodneſs of the ſoil, and temper of the Air. By Stephanus, Idæa, from Ida, a famous Mountain of it; by Giraldus, Telchionia, from the Telchini, the Prieſts of Cybele, who was here had in great requeſt. At the preſent, Candie, either à candore, from the whiteneſs of the rocks wherewith environed; or from Candie the Metropolis or chief town thereof. But the general name, which hath prevailed moſt in all ſorts of writers, is that of Crete, ſo called quaſi Curcta, by a Syncope, or abbreviation from the Curetes, the firſt inhabitants hereof: who together with the Corybantes and Telchini, were the Prieſts of Cybele, the principal godeſs of this Iland; and they ſo called ἀπὸ τῆς κουρᾶς, from their tonſure, or ſhaving of the head. A cuſtom much in uſe amongſt the Prieſts of ſome of the Pagan Deities, and poſſibly enough from them tranſmitted to the Church of Rome. And to this Etymologie I do rather incline, than either to derive the name from Crete, the ſon of Jupiter, and the Nymph Idea; or from Crete, the daughter of Heſperus: though both theſe have their Authors alſo. Nor dare I to reject the conceit of Bochartus, who fetching the Etymons of moſt people from the Punick language or Original, will have the Cretans to be deſcended from the Cerethites, a Nation of the Philiſtins, well known in Scripture: the word Cereth being abbreviated into Creth, from which into Crete and Cretans, is no difficult paſſage. But in my mind his conjecture is better than his proof. For though it may be granted without inconvenience, that the chief arms of the Philiſtins, were their Bow and Arrows, as appears 1 Sam. 31. 3. and that the Cretans antiently were expert at thoſe weapons alſo: yet this concludes no more that the Cretans are of the race of the Philiſtins, than that almoſt all Nations elſe had the ſame Original; the Bow and Arrows being the ordinary weapons of moſt people formerly, til cuſtom and experience trained them up to others of a later date; as he himſelf acknowledgeth in many places of his excellent and elaborate tractates.

In reference to the heavenly bodies, it is ſituate under the beginning of the fourth climate, ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is no more than 14 hours and a quarter. And in relation to the earth, ſet in the middle of the Sea, at ſo even a diſtance from Europe, Aſia, and Africk, as if naturally deſigned to be what Ariſtotle hath pleaſed to call it, the Lady and Miſtreſs of the Sea. For it is diſtant from Peloponneſus, an hundred miles, as many from Aſia the leſſe, and not above 150 from the ſhores of Africk: So verifying that of Virgil, Creta Jovis magni medio jacet inſula Ponto.

Joves birth-place Crete, a fruitful land,
In the middle of the Sea doth ſtand.

It is in length 270. in breadth 50 miles, in compaſs about 590. The ſoil is very fruitful, eſpecially of wines which we call Muſcadels, of which they tranſport yearly 12000 Buts: together with Sugar-Candie, Gums, Honey, Sugar, Olives, Dates, Apples, Orenges, Lemmons, Raiſons, Melons, Citrons, Pomgranats. Yet as other Countries of the like hot nature, it is not a little deficient in corn; the moſt or greateſt part of which is yearly brought hither from Peloponneſus.

The Iland is very populous, inſomuch that it is thought that upon any ſudden occaſion, the Seigneury of Venice can raiſe in it 60000 men able to bear arms. The people have formerly been good ſea-faring men; a vertue commaculated with many vices, which they yet retain, as envie, malice, and lying: to which laſt ſo infinitely addicted, that an horrible lye was called proverbially Cretenſe mendacium. This fault was aimed at by the Poet Epimenides, a native of this Iland, whoſe words thus cited by S. Paul in that to Titus, cap. 1. v. 12.

Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί.

The Cretans alwayes lyers are;
Unruly beaſts, of labour ſpare.

To which this Proverb may be added, viz. Τρία Καππὰ κάκιστα, that is to ſay, There are three Nations whoſe names begin with the letter K, worſe than any others; viz. Καππαδόκαι, Κρῆτες, Κίλικες, the Cappadocians, Cretans, and Cilicians: though ſome I know apply this Proverb to the Cities of Corinth, Capua, and Carthage, beginning all with the ſame letter, and all conceived to be very dangerous to the State of Rome. At this day they are ſick of their old diſeaſes, as great Lyers, and as idle as ever formerly; covetous withall, and very ſubtile, impatient of labour, and not caring to learn any ſcience perfectly: only well practiſed in ſhooting, to which accuſtomed from their youth, and therein thought more expert than the Turks themſelves.

The language generally ſpoken is the Greek tongue, though the Gentleman and Merchant by reaſon of their dependence on the State of Venice, ſpeak Italian alſo. Both languages uſed alſo in divine vine offices; the people being generally of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but the Latine service uſed alſo in many places, ſince the ſubjection of this Iland to the Venetians. Converted firſt unto the faith by S. Paul the Apoſtle, who having planted the Goſpel of life amongſt them, left the watering of it unto Titus, whom he made Biſhop of this Iſle: recommending unto him the care of the Churches there, with power of Ordination and Eccleſiaſtical cenſure, as appears clearly by the Text. Which power, that it belonged to Titus as Biſhop, and not their Evangeliſt only, is affirmed expreſly, not only by the ſubſcription of the ſaid Epiſtle, where he is plainly called ὁ Κρητῶν ἐκκλησίας πρῶτος Ἐπίσκοπος, the firſt Biſhop of the Church of the Cretans: but by the concurrent teſtimonies of Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l.3. c.4. S. Ambr. in præfat. ad Tit. S. Hieron. in Tit. c. 1. v. 5. and in his tract de Scriptor. Eccleſiaſticis. Theodoret cited by Oecumen. in præfat. ad Ep. Tit. Oecumenius himſelf in Tit. 1. and finally by Theophylact, in his preface to the ſame Epiſtle. All which in plain terms call him Biſhop, and the Biſhop of Crete; according to that ſenſe and meaning of the word Epiſcopus, as it was uſed in their times diſtinct from Presbyter. The Church hereof whileſt wholly under the Greek Patriarchs was governed by four Archbiſhops, and 21 Biſhops. But ſince the ſubjection of this Iland to the State of Venice, there is but one Archbiſhop, which is he of Candie the chief City, and eight Biſhops only: beſides the titular Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who hath there his reſidence; ſome Prelate of the Latine Church having been alwaies honoured with that empty title, ever ſince the recovery of that City from the Weſtern Chriſtians. Crete.

Famous was this Iland amongſt the Antients for many things, memorized both by the Poets and old Hiſtorians. For here reigned Saturn in the firſt ages of the World, father of Jupiter, born here, and ſecretly nurſed in the hill called Ida. For ſeeing that by the compact betwixt Saturn and his brother Titan, Saturn was to enjoy the Kingdom for his own life only, but all his male children to be murdered as ſoon as born; Jupiter, by the care of his mother Cybele, was conveyed away, and ſecretly nurſed in Mount Ida, as before was ſaid: the crying of the Infant being drowned by the noiſe of loud-ſounding Cymbals, purpoſely uſed by his Rockers to avoid diſcovery. Whence afterwards the Corybantes or Prieſts of Cybele, uſed in her ſacrifices the like muſical inſtruments, continually ſounding, and withall ſhaking of their heads (like Fidlers) in an antick and ridiculous manner. Alluding whereunto thus the Poet Claudian.

Non te progenitum Cybeleius ære canoro
Luſtravit Corybas.

That is to ſay:

No Cybeleian Corybas that day
That thou waſt born, did on his Cymbal play.

Here alſo lived Minos and Radamanthus, whoſe Laws were after imitated in the prime Cities of Greece; and who for their equitie on earth, are feigned by the Poets to be (together with Æacus) the Judges in Hell. In this Iland alſo lived the lewdly-luſtful Paſiphae, wife of Minos, who is fabled by the Poets (if it be a fable) to have doated on a white Bull, who they ſay, begat on her the Minotaure: Dædalus having framed for her an artificial cow, into which ſhe conveyed her ſelf, and by that means obtained her deſire. The fable is thus expounded, that Paſiphae was in love with Taurus, one of Minos Secretaries: whoſe company by the pandariſm of Dædalus ſhe enjoying, was delivered of two ſons; one called Minos, the other, Taurus. And whereas it is ſaid, that the Minotaure was ſlain by Theſeus, like enough that the annual tribute of 7 children which the Athenians paid to Minos, was laid up in ſome priſon, Minos and Taurus being the keepers or jaylors. As for the action of Paſiphae, I think it not altogether impoſſible to be true, conſidering how Domitian, to verifie the old relation, exhibited the like beaſtly ſpectacle in his amphitheatre at Rome: for thus ſaith Martial.

Junctam Paſiphaen Dictæo, credite, Tauro;
Vidimus: accepit fabula priſca fidem.
Nec ſe miretur (Cæſar) longæva vetuſtas,
Quicquid fama canit, donat arena tibi.

The fable's prov'd a truth; our eyes did ſee
The Cretan Bull ſport with Paſiphae.
What cauſe hath then antiquity to glory?
We ſaw it done, ſhe only heard the ſtory.

Finally, here was the ſo much celebrated Labyrinth, made by Dædalus for the including and ſafe keeping of the Minotaurus; ſo full of various windings and turnings, that when any one was got to the end thereof, it was impoſſible for him to come out, but by the help of a clew of threed. By this Minotaur (half a man, half bull) the children of the Athenians paid yearly to Minos in way of tribute, are ſaid to be murdered; til killed by Theſeus ſon of Ægeus King of Athens, with whom Ariadne the daughter of Minos falling in love, taught him a means to kill the Monſter, and gave him the clew of threed before ſpoken of, to conduct him out again: the moral or hiſtorie whereof hath been ſhewn before. Nor muſt it be forgotten, that Strabo the Geographer who flouriſhed in the time of Tiberius Cæſar,

Crete.

Cæſar, was of Cretan parents (though born in the City of Amaſia, in the Realm of Pontus) which adds unto this Iland as much true renown, as any of the fictions or ſtories, (be they which they will) of the former times.

Things moſt obſervable at the preſent are theſe that follow, 1 That it breeds no ſerpents, nor venemous worm, or ravenous or hurtfull creature; ſo that their Sheep graze very ſecurely without any Shepheard. 2 If a woman bite a man any thing hard, he will hardly be cured of it; which if true, then the laſt part of the privilege foregoing (of breeding no hurtful creature) muſt needs be falſe. 3 They have an herb called Alimos, which if one chew in his mouth he ſhall feel no hunger for that day, if Quade may be believed who ſpeaks it. 4 Here is (beſides many other medicinal herbs) that called Dictamum, or Dictamnos, of eſpecial virtue againſt poiſon, either by way of prevention or preſent cure; peculiar only to this Iland: it affordeth great ſtore of Laudanum, a juyce or gum forced with incredible labour out of a certain tree Ciſto, of which the mountains yeeld abundance; good to cauſe ſleep, if moderately and carefully taken, but if not very well prepared and taken with moderation, it brings the laſt ſleep upon a man, out of which not to be awakened, till the ſound of the laſt Trumpet raiſe him.

Chief Mountains of it, 1 Ida, now Pſiloriti, ſituate in the midſt of the Iland, begirt about with many fair and pleaſant villages, ſheltred by it from the violence of wind and Sun, the hill being ſo high, that from the top hereof both ſides of the Iland may be eaſily ſeen. Here Jupiter is ſaid to have been ſecretly nurſed, from hence called Idæus. And at the bottom of it the Cretans uſe to ſhew ſome tracts of the antient Labyrinth, being indeed no other than the ruines of ſome larger Quarry: the Labyrinth made by Dædalus being ſo defaced in the time of Pliny, that he knew not where to find any ruins of it. 2 Dicte, now called Sethia, in ſome places Laſti, ſo high, that all the winter long it is covered with ſnow; yet all the ſides thereof garniſhed with Cypreſs trees; a mountain of ſuch fame, that the whole Iland ſometimes had the name of Dictæa, the City Dictynna, the Promontory Dictynnæum, and the Herb Dictamnos, all ſeeming to take name from hence. 3 Leuci, a long chain of hils, ſo named from the whiteneſs of them, now called De Marara, and by ſome La Spachia.

Rivers of any eminence here are few or none. The principal of thoſe that be, are 1 Melipotamus, 2 Scaſinus, 3 Epicidnus, and 4 Divotro, towards the North; 5 Populiar, towards the Eaſt, and 6 Limens, towards the Weſt: none of them navigable, or capable of Ships of burden, ſcarce of little Barks. But that defect ſupplyed by the neighbouring Sea, which affordeth many Creeks and Bayes, ſome capacious Havens, and great ſtore of fiſh, among which a kind of bearded mullet reckoned among the delicacies of the antient Romans. By the convenience of which Harbours, their Fiſh-trade, and the ſituation of it in the midſt of the Sea; the people antiently were eſteemed ſo good Sea-faring men, that when the people of thoſe times did tax a man with any incredible report, they uſed to ſay, Cretenſis neſcit pelagus, meaning thereby the matter to be as improbable as for one of Crete to be no Sayler.

In former times there were reckoned in this Iland an hundred Cities, thence called Hecatompolis, of which about 40 were remaining in the time of Ptolemie: for ſo many of their names he gives us. Thoſe of moſt note were 3 Gnoſſus, the ſeat-royal or Court of Minos, whence Ariadne, the daughter of Minos, had the name of Gnoſſis; in former times called Ceratus, from a little River of that name running not far off. 2 Cydon, or Cydonia, a Midland City (as the former) memorable for an excellent kind of Apple, which the Latines call Poma Cydonia, amongſt whom they were in great requeſt, as they are at this day, (though by the name of Adams apples) amongſt the Turks; the moſt antient of all the Cities of Crete, many of which were at firſt Colonies of this; for which reaſon it was called commonly mater urbium. 3 Eleuthera, as Ptolemie; Erythræa, as the printed Copies of Florus, corruptly call it, one of the firſt Cities taken here by the Romans. 4 Miletum, mentioned by Strabo, though omitted by Ptolemie, the place in which S. Paul left Trophimus ſick, as is mentioned 2 Tim. 4. 20. which happened when the Apoſtle hovered about that coaſt, as is ſaid Act. 27. 7, 8. &c. For that it could not be that Miletum to which he congregated the Elders of Epheſus, appeareth by his being at Hieruſalem, Act. 21. 19. and other circumſtances of the ſtory. 5 Cortyna, nigh to which ſtood the Labyrinth made by Dædalus: memorable alſo for a reed, growing on the River Lenæus, (near to which it ſtood) of which they made their ſtrongeſt Arrows, by Virgil, Æneid. 11. called Spicula Cortynia; as alſo for a light garment much uſed by Hunters, which Claudian calls Cortyniam veſtem, apparelling Diana the great Huntreſs with it. 6 Dictamum, as Ptolemie; or Dictynna, as Pliny cals it, ſo named from the hill Dicte, near to which it is ſituate; one of the chief Cities of the North parts of this Iland; as 7 Ampelas, ſo named from its plenty of vines was upon the South. 8 Minoa, a Port Town (now called Altomara) ſo named from Minos, in the Eaſt; and 9 Corytus, on a Promontorie of the ſame name in the Weſt ſide of it.

But theſe and almoſt all the reſt ſpoken of by Ptolemie, being ſo deſtroyed by time and wars, that the ruines of them are hardly viſible, we muſt behold it in the preſent condition and eſtate thereof: divided into four parts or Provinces, according to the names and number of the four chief Cities, that is to ſay, 1 Sittia, 2 Candie, 3 Rhetimum, and 4 Canea.

In the firſt part called SITTIA, lying towards the Eaſt, are 74 Villages, and but 17 Pariſhes, of which ſix only are of the Church of Rome, the reſidue holding the Communion of the Church of Greece; the principal whereof are 1 Sittia, or Cytia, conceived by ſome to be the Ciſteum of Ptolemie; a ſmall Town, but populous and very well fortified. 2 Gerapetra, betwixt Sittia and Candie, ſeated on the Sea ſide on a lofty rock, at the bottom whereof is ſaid to be a dangerous whirl-pit, ſuppoſed to be the Panormus of Ptolemie. 3 S. Macor, the dwelling place of one of the Biſhops of the Latines.

Crete.

2. In the ſecond part hereof called the Territory of CANDIE, lying directly Weſt of Sittia, are reckoned 465 Towns and Villages, making up amongſt them 99 Pariſh Churches; whereof 77 are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, the other 22 only of the Church of Rome. Of theſe the principal, 1. Candia, an Archbiſhops Sea, the Metropolis or head City of the Iland, which takes name from hence; ſituate on the North-coaſt hereof towards the Ægean, beautified with a ſafe and commodious Haven, and fortified ſo ſtrongly, that it ſeems impregnable; affirmed by ſome to be the Matium of the Antients; but I find no ſuch place in Ptolemie, or in Ortelius his Theſaurus. The City fair and large, built for the moſt part of free-ſtone, with low roofes, after the manner of Italy, the ſtreets broad and ſpacious: from whence a fair and pleaſant plain leadeth to a place called the Cave of Minos, reported by the common people to be the Sepulchre of Jupiter. 2. Malviſin, 3. Themene, 4. Caſtell novo, 5. Bonifacio, 6. Belvedere, 7. Mirabello, of which little memorable.

3. In the third part, being the territorie of RHETIMO, lying North-weſt of the territory of Candie, are accounted 265 Towns and Villages, making up 44 Pariſhes, whereof 36 are Grecians, and but 8 of the Latines. The chief of which are 1. Rhetimo in the ſhore of the Northern Sea, as Candia is, well fortified, and a Biſhops Sea; but not elſe obſervable. 2. Melipotamo, an Epiſcopal Sea alſo, ſo called of the River Melipotamos, on which it is ſeated. 3. Agiſtiman, 4. Mandrus, 5. Lappa, hardly worth the naming.

4. In the fourth and laſt part hereof, being the territorie of CANEA, taking up all the Weſt of the Iland, are contained 240 Towns and Villages, diſtributed into 47 Pariſhes: of which 33 are of the Greek Church, and the 14 remaining of the Church of Rome. Thoſe of moſt note are 1. Canea, built by a Colonie or Plantation of Venetian Gentleman on the North Coaſt alſo, ſuppoſed to ſtand in the ſame place where once Cydon did; ſecond to none but Candie for wealth and beauty, but far before it for the commodiouſneſs of the Port, commonly called Porto della Suda, capable of more than a thouſand good Gallies at a time, and therefore ſtrongly fortified with two Citadels, or Caſtles, on each ſide of the Haven, one; as the door and entrance of the Country. 2. Chiſamo, in Latine called Cyſamum, old and decayed, the wals thereof only holding good againſt the ruines of time, ſituate in a low mooriſh place towards the Ægean. 3. Selino, built upon a hill on the Sea-ſide, oppoſite to Chiſamo. 4. Sfachia, or Spachia, ſituate on the foot of the mountains, of old called Leuci, now della Spachia from this Town: unwalled, but fortified with a Caſtle, built for a place of refuge againſt the Incurſions of ſuch Pirats as annoyed the Coaſts; in which the Governour for his part hath his chief aboad. By which account it will appear that in the whole Iland are no more than 1044 Towns and Villages, 207 Pariſh Churches: of which there be but 48 which are accompted Members of the Church of Rome, the reſidue 159 in number, retaining their Communion with the Church of Greece.

As for the ſtory of this Iland, we can aſcend as high as the times of Saturn, for his Antiquity affirmed to be the ſon of Uranus and Veſta, or of Heaven and Earth: who better favoured by his Mother, obtained the Kingdom of Crete, his elder brother Titan being quite excluded. Hereupon wars ariſing betwixt the Brethren, it was ordered thus, that Saturn for his own life ſhould enjoy the kingdom, which after his deceaſe ſhould return to the Titans: and for performance of this contract the ſons of Saturn to be ſtrangled as ſoon as born. But Cybele the wife of Saturn unawares to her husband, preſerved firſt Jupiter, and after other of her ſons, which coming to the knowlege of Titan and his ſons, they made war againſt Saturn, but in concluſion were ſubdued by the aid of Jupiter: whence grew the Fable of the Titans warring againſt the Gods, Saturn, and Jupiter his ſon, being after reckoned in that number. The Titans being vanquiſhed, a new war aroſe betwixt Saturn and Jupiter, occaſioned only (as many unnatural wars ſince theſe times have been) by fears and jealouſies: which ended at the laſt in the flight of Saturn, Jupiter became ſole King of Crete, reigning there in great power and honour till the time of his death: and dying was interred at Gnoſſus, with this inſcription or Epitaph in old Greek letters, ὁ Ζεὺς τοῦ Κρόνου, that is to ſay, Jupiter, the ſon of Saturn. After his death worſhipped by the blind Gentiles, as the chief of their Gods; and honoured frequently with the title of Πατὴρ ἀνδρῶν τε θεῶν τε, the Father both of Gods and Men, though moſt incongruouſly and abſurdly, as Lactantius noteth, there being many thouſands living, in and before the times of Saturn, when Jupiter was yet unborn. But to proceed, he being dead, Minos begotten by him on Europa, ſucceeded here: who wiſely taking the advantage which the convenient ſituation of the Iland gave him, made himſelf maſter of the Seas; and afterwards enlarged his Dominions, by the conqueſt of the Megarenſes and Athenians, upon which laſt he impoſed amongſt other hard conditions, a tribute of ſeven male children yearly, to be kept as hoſtages; determined after three years, by the valour and good fortune of Theſeus. But Minos being ſlain in Sicil, and his poſterity extinct, the Cretans would no longer admit of Kings, but governed themſelves after the manner of a Common-wealth, or Free State: the Laws and Ordinances whereof firſt deviſed by Minos, were of ſuch eſteem, that they were much imitated by Lycurgus, and are at large deſcribed by Ariſtotle in the 2d. Book of his Politicks, ch. 8. Under this government it continued till the Romans, having taken in all the reſt of Greece, picked a quarrel with them. For though it was pretended that they had been aiding unto Mithridates in his war againſt them, yet Florus ſtates the matter rightly, affirming, that the war was undertaken on no other ground, but ſola nobilem inſulam vincendi cupiditate, a covetous deſire only of ſubduing ſuch a wealthy Iland. And to this war they went with ſo proud a confidence, that M. Antony who commanded in it, carryed more chains with him to bring home his Priſoners, than Arms to conquer them. An inſolence which he paid right dear for, his

Navy

Crete. Navy being vanquiſhed by the Cretans, the bodies of his ſlain ſouldiers hanged upon the Maſts, and himſelf periſhing in the action, by a fit of ſickneſs. Metellus, who ſucceeded him in that charge went on more ſucceſsfully, firſt taking Gnoſſus, Eleuthera (or Erythræa, as Florus calls it) and Cydonia, their principal Cities; and not long after all the Iland: uſing the vanquiſhed Ilanders with ſuch inhumanity, that moſt of them poiſoned themſelves to avoid his cruelty: rewarded with no other honour for ſo great a victory, then that he got the ſurname of Creticus; his triumph being denied by the faction of Pompey, againſt whoſe will he had put himſelf upon that ſervice. Thus added to the Roman Empire, it was united unto Cyrenaica by Auguſtus Cæſar, both making up one Province only, governed by a Proconſul till the death of Nero: afterwards ſeparated from it, but the time I find not. During the reign of Conſtantine, in 36 years together there fell no rain, ſo that this Iland was in a manner wholly deſolated. But Helena the mother of Conſtantine having obtained rain for it by her prayers to God, it was again new peopled by ſeveral Colonies brought out of Ægypt, Syria, Greece, and the parts adjoyning. By Conſtantine made a Province of the Dioceſe of Macedonia, it continued a member of the Eaſtern Empire till the time of Michael Balbus, when ſubdued by the Saracens: from whom recovered under the more fortunate conduct of Nicephorus Phocas, who came unto the Empire Anno 963. In the diviſion of the ſpoil amongſt the Latines, it was firſt given to Boniface, Marqueſs of Montferrat, by whom ſurrendred willingly to the State of Venice, who had a mind to be poſſeſſed of all the Ilands of that Empire: he being recompenſed with the Kingdom of Theſſalie, the fair and wealthy City of Theſſalonica, and many Towns and territories in Peloponneſus. Under that State it ſtill continueth, in vain attempted by Selymus the ſecond, in the year 1571. at what time he invaded and conquered Cyprus: and gallantly defended for this year laſt paſt, againſt all the forces of Ibrahim the late Grand Signeur. What the ſucceſs of this war will be we ſhall ſee hereafter.

For the defence hereof againſt the inſurrections of the Inhabitants, who did at firſt ill brook the Venetian Government, there are ſome ſtanding forces kept in conſtant pay; beſides ſuch as are maintained in ſeveral Garriſons, the City of Canea having in it no fewer than ſix companies of ſouldiers; Candie 2000 ſouldiers, and the leſſer Cities proportionably: over which there is ſet ſo ſtrong a guard, that a natural Cretan is not permitted to enter weaponed into any of them. And for the preſervation of their intereſt in it from a forein power, they have furniſhed the Iland with 70 or 80 Gallies for the defence of the ſhores: and have exceedingly fortified the Haven of Suda, with two ſtrong Caſtles, this Haven being capable of more than 1000 Veſſels, and therefore meritoriouſly reputed the door and entry into the Country. It is reported, that the King of Spain, Philip the ſecond, did offer unto the Venetians for this Haven, money more than enough; but it could not be accepted. For though the Spaniard ſeemed only to intend the retreat and relief of his own Navy, when he ſhould undertake any expedition againſt the Turk; yet the wiſe Venetians ſaw, that by this Haven he might at all times awe, and when he liſted, ſurprize the whole Country.

II. The other Ilands of this Sea, as of leſſer note, will be paſs'd ouer in few words. The firſt of which is called CLAUDA, mentioned Act. 27. 16. ſituate on the South-weſt of Crete, by Mela called Gaulos; wherein in Plinies time was a Town or City named Gaudos; now called Golo, with the Iland. 2. DIA, now Standia, a very ſmall Iland, and of little note. 3. LETUA on the South-eaſt of Crete, now called Chriſtiana. And 4. ÆGILIA, or Ægialia, by Pliny, Æglia, more in the Sea towards Peloponneſus; now called Ceterigo by Sophianus. Of which, and others of leſs note (if leſs may be) there is no more to be ſaid, but that they have always followed the fortunes of Crete, on which they ſeem to have their principal dependence.

The ILANDS of the IONIAN SEA.

The IONIAN SEA is ſo called either from Ionius, the ſon of Dyrachius, whom Hercules having ignorantly killed, threw into this Sea, giving that name unto it to preſerve his memory, as Didymus is of opinion; or from Iona, a Region in the extremity of Calabria, as Solinus; or from Io, the daughter of Inachus, as Lycophron the Poet hath it. It containeth all that part of the Mediterranean, which lieth from the Ægean or Cretan Seas unto the Adriatick, from which parted about Epidamnum (otherwiſe called Dyrrachium) as is ſaid by Ptolemie: or rather at the ſhooting out of the Acrocerauneau hills, as affirmed by Pliny and other writers; and ſo along the ſhores of the two Calabrias, to the Iſle of Sicil. Chief Iſles whereof which paſs in the accompt of Greece, (for of thoſe lying on the Coaſt of Italy we have ſpoke elſewhere) are 1. the Strophades, 2. Zacynthus, 3. the Echinades, 4. Cephalenia, 5. Corcyra, and 6. Ithaca.

1. The STROPHADES are two ſmall Ilands, now called Strivali, lying againſt Meſſene in Peloponneſus; famous for nothing but the Harpies, ravenous birds, affirmed to have the faces of women, but the talons of Vultures, ſent by the offended Gods, (as the fable goeth) for the puniſhment of Phineus King of Arcadia, who had put out the eyes of his ſons by a former wife, at the inſtigation of their Step-dame. For which ſo plagued by theſe Harpyes, that he could ſet no meat on his Table, whereſoever he was, but theſe ravenous creatures firſt devoured it, and then bewrayed the diſhes in which it was. Much pitied by the Argonautes, whom he had curteouſly entertained, they ſent Zethus and Calais the winged iſſue of Boreas and Orythia, who drave them thence, and having purſued them to thoſe Ilands, turned back again: whence the name of Strophades. Under which fable was con-contained the ſad condition of ignorant or unhappy Princes, devoured by Flatterers, Informers, and falſe accuſers, by whom their name and Government was made diſtaſtful; til by good counſel they had purged their Courts of ſuch ugly monſters: concerning which Alphonſus King of Naples was uſed to ſay, that theſe Harpyes had left the Strophades, and dwelt at Rome. They are inhabited only by ſome few Greek Friers: and in one of them there is a ſpring of freſh water, which hath his fountain in Peloponneſus, and paſſing under the Sea, ariſeth here. The Greek Prieſts are called Caloirs, quaſi καλοὶ ἱερεῖς, boni Sacerdotes. About 30 in number: they wear long hair, never eat fleſh, and but ſeldom fiſh: feeding uſually on herbs, olives, oyl and the like. They never go out of the Ilands, neither do they, on any occaſion, permit women to come amongſt them. They all labour for their ſuſtenance, ſome in tillage, ſome in vineyards, ſome in fiſhing, ſo that among very many of them, three or four only can read. But of theſe ſomewhat hath been ſaid elſewhere already. Zant.

2 ZACINTHUS, or Zant, is 60 miles in compaſs; and diſtant from Peloponneſus 20 miles; ſo called of Zacinthus ſon to Dardanus. The countrey is wonderfully ſtored with oil, wines, currans: of which laſt they made yearly 150000 Zechines, for their own coffers; and 48000 Dollars, which they pay for cuſtom to the Signeurie of Venice. They were a very poor people when the Engliſh uſed to traffique there firſt, but now they grow rich and proud. At our Merchants firſt frequenting the countrey, they much marvailed to what end they bought ſo many currans, and demanded whether they uſed to dye cloathes, or fat hoggs with them; for ſo they themſelves did: but now they have learned a more profitable uſe of them. Here are alſo very good ſalt-pits, freſh water plenty, but little or no wood, and leſſe Corn; their ground being husbanded, as the caſe ſtands with them, to their better advantage: but ſo that many times they are ready to ſtarve, if either the wind or the Sea prove croſſe unto them, and hinder them from fetching their proviſions both of fleſh and corn out of Peloponneſus. In which reſpect they are fain to hold fair Quarter with the Turkes, conſidering how eaſie it is for him to diſtreſſe them for want of victual. The Iland is much troubled with earthquakes, commonly once a week; in regard whereof they build their houſes very low; and when they perceive them coming, the Prieſts are to ring the Bels, to ſtir the people to prayers. They have a cuſtom here at Weddings to invite many young men whom they call Compeers; of which every one giveth the Bride a Ring. Which done, it is accompted as deteſtable a ſin as Inceſt, to accompany her in any carnal kind; and therefore they chooſe ſuch to be their Compeers, who have formerly been ſuſpected of too much familiarity with her.

The Iland is very populous and well inhabited, but the people of a ſpiteful and vindicative nature, not to be reconciled, if angred. It containeth in it 48 Towns and Villages, the chief whereof which paſſeth by the name of a Citie is called alſo Zant, ſtretched out about the length of a mile on the foot of a mountain, but in bredth not anſwerable: beautified with a fair and convenient Haven opening towards Greece, ſafe from the danger of Pirates, though not of winds, capable of great fleets of ſhipping, both for bulk and number; and ſo frequented from all parts, that he who hath a mind to goe out of it, need not ſtay for a paſſage: yet notwithſtanding this great concourſe and reſort of ſtrangers, the Town is rather rich, than well built or beautiful: the ſtreets hereof uneven and rugged, and the buildings, by reaſon of the often Earthquakes, very low. On the Eaſt ſide of it, on a round ſteep Mountain, ſtandeth a very ſtrong Caſtle, a little Citie of it ſelf, well garriſoned, impregnably fortified, and of a verie difficult entrance: which commandeth not the Citie and Harbour only, but a great part of the Sea adjoining. Upon the wall thereof continnually ſtands a watchman, to deſcrie what ſhipping is at hand, and hangeth out as many flags as he diſcovereth Veſſels. And over the door of the Town-hall (the better to inſtruct the Magiſtrates in their publick dutie) it is ſaid theſe Verſes are inſcribed.

Hic locus 1 odit, 2 amat, 3 punit, 4 conſervat, 5 honorat,
1 Nequitiam, 2 pacem, 3 crimina, 4 jura, 5 probos.

Thus Engliſhed by George Sandys, whence I had the Latine,

This place doth 1 hate, 2 love, 3 puniſh, 4 keep, 5 requite,
1 Voluptuous riot, 2 peace, 3 crimes, 4 Laws, 5 th' upright.

In matter of Religion, the people being generally Greeks both in birth and language, are for the moſt part of that Church alſo; but ſome adhere unto the Latine, each partie having their own Biſhop: of which the Greek Biſhop hath his Cathedral in the Church of S. Nicolas, near unto the Haven (which it giveth name to) and therein a Monaſterie of Caloirs, or Monks of Baſil; the Latine Biſhop hath his reſidence and Cathedral within the Caſtle, and therein a Convent of Franciſcans. The Jews have in this Town their Synagogue alſo: but there are not many of them, if not lately increaſed. In civil matters they are ſubject to the State of Venice, the Governour hereof (whom they call the Providore) having his reſidence in the Caſtle, aſſiſted by a Chancellour, and two Counſellours, (all Gentlemen of Venice) whom they change every third year. The fortunes of this Iland in former times, and by what means it fel to the Venetias, we ſhall ſhew anon.

The ECHINADES are certain little Ilands, or rather great rocks, now called Curzolari, famous for no-

Cephalenia. nothing but the great battel of Lepanto, fought nigh them betwixt the Venetians and the Turks: the Turks having in their Navy 207 ſail of ſhips, the Venetians and their confederates but 145 of all ſorts. But it pleaſed God to give the victorie to the weakeſt: the iſſue of it being ſuch, that the Turks loſt 29000 men, who were killed in the fight; 39000 more which were taken priſoners; 140 of their Gallies, 400 piece of Ordnance, and 200 Chriſtian Captives, which were then redeemed: the Chriſtians buying this great victorie with the death of 7656 men or thereabouts; too great a price, could it have been purchaſed with a leſſe. A victorie obtained not far from the point of Actium, wherein Auguſtus overcame the Navie of Marcus Antonius; and thereby got the Empire to himſelf alone, of which before he was but Joint-tenant with his Adverſarie. So that this place ſeems to be marked out for a Stage of eminent actions; and that this latter Naval fight was but the ſecond part of the firſt.

But to return unto theſe Iſlands, they ſtand juſt againſt the mouth of the River Achelous; of which thus the Poet, Turbidus objectas Achelous Echinadas exit.

Fierce Achelous with the Sea is mixt
Where the Echinades (great rocks) are fixt.

Theſe Ilands are in number five, feigned by the Poets to be ſo many Naiades, or Sea-Nymphes, whom Achelous the River God upon ſome diſpleaſure Metamorphoſed into theſe Rockie Ilands. But the truth is, that they were cauſed by the dirt and mud, which this River carried with it into the Sea, where at laſt it ſetled to firm ground. Of which himſelf ſaith thus in Ovid.

Fluctus noſtriq; marisq;
Continuam deducit humum, pariterq; revellit,
In totidem, mediis (quod cernis) Echinadas, undis.

The fury of the Sea-waves, and mine own,
Continual heaps of mud, and Earth drew down;
Which parted by the inter-running Seas,
Made, as thou ſeeſt, theſe five Echinades.

4. CEPHALENIA.

CEPHALENIA, the moſt populous Iland of this Sea, is ſituate over againſt Acarnania, part of the Province of Epirus, having on the South-Eaſt, Zant; on the North-weſt, Corcyra, or Corfu. In length containing 80 miles, 40 in bredth, the whole compaſs being reckoned at 160. Once called Tetrapolis, from the number of four Cities in it: but three of them were decayed in the time of Ptolemie, who takes notice of no more than one, and that of the ſame name with the Iland. Woody and mountainous in moſt places; but the mountains intermixt with Valleys, and the Woods with champagn: plentiful in Wheat, Honey, Currans, Manna, Oil, incomparable, though not long-laſting Muſcadels; as alſo in Cheeſe, Wool, Turkies, and Powder for the dying of Scarlets. So deſtitute of water, as having no River and not many Fountains, that when their Cattel would drink, they gape both morning and evening to receive the dew diſtilling inſenſibly from the clouds.

The people are for the moſt part Greeks, ſome few Italians, naturals of the Signeury of Venice, being intermixt: the whole number of the Inhabitants computed at 6000 families; the number of the towns and villages to 200 or thereabouts. The principal whereof 1 Cephalenia, fortified with good works, and a very ſtrong Caſtle. 2 Argaſtolie, an Haven town, diſtant ſix miles from Cephalon; the Port thereof capable of a ſufficient Navie. 3 Sydre, another Port-town alſo, lying towards the South.

As for the fortunes of this Iland, it was firſt called Melena; after Teleboas: and being known by that name, was made ſubject to Thebes, by the valour and good conduct of Amphitryon, the Theban General, by whom Pterelas, the King hereof, was ſlain in battel. During which warre, and the ſtay of Amphitryo in this Iland, it hapned that Cephalus, a noble Athenian, having by miſadventure killed his wife Procris with an Arrow, which he ſhot at a Deer, not daring to abide in his own countrey, fled unto Amphitryo his old friend, then newly victorious over the Teleboans: who pitying his caſe, made him the Governour of this Iſland, (ſince from his name) called Cephalenia. Having continued for ſome time in the power of the Thebans, it paſſed, together with Zant, and ſome other Ilands, into the hands of the Macedonians; from whom in the declining of their affairs, the Achæans got the Iſle of Zant, and the Ætolians, Cephalenia: But long they had not held them when the Romans began to look towards Greece, who under colour of ſetting the Continent at libertie, made themſelves maſters of both the Iſlands, that ſo they might at leiſure poſſeſſe the whole, as in fine they did. In the diviſion of the Empire they fell as parts of Greece, to the Conſtantinopolitans: and on the taking of that Citie by the Weſtern Chriſtians, they fell with almoſt all the reſt of the Ilands, to the State of Venice: the Governours whereof retaining Corfu, and ſome others of moſt importance in the hands of the Signeury, permitted theſe, (as many other of leſſe note) unto private Adventurers. At the concluſion of the peace betwixt Mahomet the Great, and the State of Venice, theſe two, with Neritos or Leniadia, (ſpoken of in Epirus) were ſeiſed on by that Tyrant in deſpight of that treatie or concluſion; as belonging unto private perſons, not to the Republick: recovered afterwards by the Venetians in the reign of Bajazet the ſecond, in the name of the State, and as parts thereof ſtill governed and defended by them. Corcyra and Ithaca.

6. CORCYRA.

CORCYRA (now CORFU) more antiently was called Phæacia; but took this latter name from a Nymph ſo called, whom Neptune is reported to have here deflowred. Situate over againſt Epirus, from which 12 miles diſtant, ſtretched out from Eaſt to Weſt in the form of a Bow, the length thereof being 54 miles, 24 the breadth: and ſo the biggeſt of theſe Seas. Commodiouſly ſeated for the trade and eſtate of Venice, as the Center of their Dominion, and command by Sea.

The Southern parts hereof are mountainous, and defective in water, much ſubject to be blaſted with Southernly winds, and therefore they ſow little corn, and plant leſs fruits. The Northern parts levell and delighfull, adorned with whole Groves of Lemmons, Orenges, Figtrees, Olives, and Pomegranates; enriched with plenty of grain, abundance of Wines, great ſtore of Oil, and Olives, and moſt excellent Honey. Bleſt with a very temperate and healthfull Air, made Odoriferous by moſt pleaſant and ſweet-ſmelling fruits, which grow moſt plentifully in each part hereof. Alcinous, who ſo courteouſly entertained Ulyſſes after his ſhip-wrack, was once King of this Iland: whoſe Gardens, anſwerable to the natural delights and ſweetneſs of it, are ſo much celebrated by the Poets. One of which thus.

Quid bifera Alcinoi referam pomaria voſq;
Qui nunquam vacui pradiſtis in æthera Rami?

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words,

Why ſhould I name Alcinous fertile ground,
And trees which never without fruit are found?

Towns of moſt note and ſtrength herein, 1. Pagiopoli, 2. Caſtello S. Angelo, of good eſteem in reſpect of many others, but far ſhort of 3. Corfu, the chief and ſtrongeſt of the Iland, which the Turks have found by their frequent repulſes to be impregnable. For it is ſituate at the foot of a Mountain, on the top of which are built two inacceſſible Fortreſſes, as being ſtrongly fenced with a natural Rock. The one is called The Old Fortreſs, and the other, The New: juſtly eſteemed the chief Bulwarks of Venice, whoſe Trade and Power would ſoon decay, ſhould theſe Forts be loſt. For which cauſe the two Governours (for each Fort hath one) are ſworn before the State of Venice, never to hold intelligence with one another, by word or writing: leſt by the treachery of the one, the other might be wrought alſo from his faith and duty. Neither is their command here for more than two years; their commiſſion then terminating, and new ſucceſſors being ſent them. The Town inhabited for the moſt part by Grecians, as is all the reſidue of the Iland: beautified with one of the moſt commodious Havens in all the Adriatick, and the reſidence of an Archbiſhop. A Town of ſuch a publick concernment, in regard of the ſtrength and ſituation, that it is accompted of as the key of Venice, and one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarkes of Chriſtendom againſt the encroachment of the Turks. The ſtory of it ſince diſmembred from the Eaſtern Empire, at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines, we have had before.

7. ITHACA.

ITHACA, now called Val de Campare, lieth on the North-Eaſt of Zephalenia, being in compaſſe 50 miles: moſt famous for the birth of Ulyſſes, the ſon of Laertes; Of which thus the Poet.

Effugimus ſcopulos Ithacæ, Laertia Regna,
Et terram altricem ſævi execramur Ulyſſis.

From th' Ithacan Rocks, Laertes Realm we fled,
And curs'd the Land which dire Ulyſſes bred.

It was alſo called Dulichium, or elſe there was ſome other Iland of that name, not far from Ithaca, whereof Ulyſſes was alſo King; who is hence called Dulichius Heros, among the Poets: and in this Taunt of Ajax to him, Dulichius vertex ſignifieth the head of Ulyſſes.

Sed neq; Dulichius, ſub Achillis caſſide, vertex,
Pondera tanta feret;

Achilles

Achilles helm's too great a weight, I trow,
For weak Ulysses head to undergoe.

But as weak a man as Ajax thought him, he was the Master-wit of Greece, for the times he lived in, and one that did as good service in the war of Troy, as the best sword-man of them all. A warre to which he went somewhat unwillingly, as fearing the sad consequences and events thereof: insomuch that he feigned himself mad; ploughing the shore, and sowing salt in stead of corn. But Palamedes, to make trial whether this was real, or but counterfeit only, cast young Telemachus the son of Ulysses before the Plough: which he observing, either drove the Plough besides him, or lifted it over him. Discovered by this means, and engaging with the rest in the Trojan war, he found out the design of Thetis, and brought Achilles to it also; in the course whereof, by his wit and courage, he did very good service: associated with Diomedes in the action against Rhesus King of Thrace; and with Palamedes in forraging the Country for provisions. By his policy was the Palladium stollen out of Troy, and consequently the City taken and destroyed; whose fate depended on the preservation of that fatal Relick. After the ending of the war, which held out ten years, he was with-held from Ithaca ten years longer by winds and tempests, and the displeasure of the Gods which favoured Troy: in which he saved himself from the inchantments of the Sirens, the allurements of Circe, the cruelty of Polyphemus; and after many dangers came home in safety. A man of so compleat a vertue, that Homer maketh him the pattern of a temperate and prudent man, in the Books called Odysses, (by his name as the Greeks pronounce it) as he doth Achilles, in his Iliads, of a compleat and perfect souldier.

The Country is generally very rockie, and barren, exceeding plentifull of Goats, but no Hares live in it: inhabited for the most part by Pirates and exiles, men banished out of civill society, and willingly acknowledging no Superior over them: but subject, if to any, to the State of Venice; which hitherto hath maintained these Ilands against the Turks, though many times attempted by them in the most prosperous times of their arms and victories. For the Venetians being gratified at the taking of Constantinopole by the Latines, with almost all the Ilands of the Ægean and Ionian Seas (as being a people strong in shipping, and so most able to preserve a possession of them:) some of the greatest and most considerable, either for their riches, or commodiousness of situation, were furnished with convenient garrisons in the name of the State. The rest they did bestow on the better sort of Citizens, to be defended and made good at their own costs and charges; who accordingly possessed themselves of one, two, or more of them, as they were of ability to set out their Gallies for the keeping of them: the Signeurie having nevertheless a care of all, and to that end keeping a Fleet at Sea continually under one of their Admirals: whereby they did not only preserve those Seas from the Genoa Pirats, but for long time defended all their Islands also aswell against the Greeks, as the Turkish Emperors. But all the Isles of the Ægean being lost to the Turk, except Cythera, and Tenos on the European, and Carpathos, or Scarpanto on the Asian side: they have now only Crete with the Isles adjoining, and those of the Ionian Sea, under their command, and these (but especially the Isle of Crete) endangered at the present by the Turkish Tyrant.

Thus having took a view of the severall Provinces and Isles which belong to Greece, according to the antient and present state of each particular: let us next take a view of the Grecian Emperors, who have had here their principal residence, and possessed the whole, though for a while their Empire was extended over all the East; as they here follow in this ensuing Catalogue of

The Constantinopolitan, Græcian, or Eastern EMPERORS.

A. Ch.
331	1	Constantine, surnamed the Great, having reigned 21 years in Rome, translated his imperial Seat to Constantinople which himself had founded.
341	2	Constantius, the second son of Constantine, in the division of the Empire, had for his partage Thrace, Constantinople, and all the Provinces of the East. After the death of his two Brethren he remained sole Emperor, but resided for the most part in the East; a great Patron of the Arians; and as great a Persecutor of the Orthodox Christians.
366	3	Julian, surnamed the Apostata, son of Constantius the Brother of Constantine the Great; at first a Christian, afterwards a professed enemy of the Gospel: fortunate in his wars against the Almans, Franks, and other Transalpine Nations, whilst he was a Christian: prodigiously slain in the Persian war, when become a persecutor.
368	4	Jovian, or Jovinian, chosen by the Army, a religious Prince, made peace with the Persian, and setled the affairs of the Christian Church: who being dead, Valentinian, one of mean birth, but great abilities in war, was elected Emperor.
368	5	Valens, the Brother of Valentinian, made partner in the Empire with him, ruled in Constantinople, and the East; Valentinian taking more delight in Rome, and the Western parts. A great Patron of the Arian faction, and the first who brought in the Goths on this side of the Danow, whom he placed in the desert parts of Thrace, to the destruction of the Empire and himself to boot.

382 6 Gratian, the eldest son of Valentinian, succeeded his father in the West, and his Uncle Valens in the East; after whose death he left Italy and the West, to Valentinian his younger Brother. Distressed by the Goths, he made Theodosius partner in the Empire with him, and was treacherously murdered by Andragathius, at the appointment and command of the Tyrant Maximus.

383 7 Theodosius, a Spaniard born, revenged the death of Gratian on the Tyrant Maximus, and of Valentinian the 2d. on the traytor Eugenius. He vanquished the Goths, utterly suppresst the Pagan superstitions, which till his time continued even in Rome it self; and strengthened the Church of Christ with good Laws and Ordinances.

399 8 Arcadius, the eldest son of Theodosius, succeeded his Father in the East, as his Brother Honorius did in the West: the Roman Empire after this last division of it, being so distracted and torn in pieces, that it was never since united.

412 9 Theodosius II. son of Arcadius, made peace with the Goths, whom he imployed against the Hunnes and Persians, his more dangerous Enemies, and caused the Ephesine Council to be called against Nestorius.

454 10 Martianus, Lieutenant to Theodosius, succeeded his Master, and maried with Pulcheria his Masters sister; he called the Council of Chalcedon against Dioscorus.

461 11 Leo, a Thracian born, elected by the joint consent of the Senate and Souldiery, sitting the Council of Chalcedon; the Acts whereof he approved and ratified.

478 12 Zeno, the son-in-law, and Lieutenant of Leo, sent Theodorick and the Goths into Italy against Odoacer: A Tyrant and a great drinker, in one of his drunken fits, buried quick by his Empress. In his time Constantinople was almost wholly destroyed by fire; in which perished amongst other things 120000 Volumes of good Manuscripts.

494 13 Anastasius, a mean Officer of the Court, by the power and favour of the Empress created Emperor; a great Patron of Eutiches; yet fortunate in his wars against the Persians and Arabians. In his time Constantinople besieged by the Scythians, was likely to have fallen into great distress, if Proclus, a famous Mathematician, like another Archimedes, had not fired their Gallies.

521 14 Justin, the son of a Thracian shepherd, and Captain of the Guard unto Anastasius, a Catholick Prince, and Patron of the Orthodox Clergy, whom he called from banishment.

528 15 Justinian, the Sisters son of Justinus, with whom first consort in the Empire, recovered Africk from the Vandals, by Belisarius, and Italy from the Goths, by Narses: and finally reduced the laws of Rome into form and method.

566 16 Justin II. Nephew of Justinian, instituted the Exarchate of Ravenna, and lost a great part of Italy to the Lombards. Unable of himself to oppose the Persian, he chose 577 17 Tiberius, one of his chief Commanders, to be consort with him, who afterwards succeeded in in sole command.

584 18 Maurice, a Cappadocian born, fortunate in his wars against the Persians, from whom he recovered Mesopotamia in the time of Tiberius; by whom at his return maried to Constantine his daughter, and declared his Successor. Refusing to ransome some of his Souldiers, taken prisoners by Caganus King of Avares, he lost the affections of his army.

604 19 Phocas, a common Souldier, in a military tumult chosen Emperor, murdered the Emperor Mauritius, with his wife and children; and made Pope Boniface supreme Bishop or head of the Church: slain in a popular tumult by the common people for his lusts and cruelties.

611 20 Heraclius, a noble man of Constantinople, chosen by the general consent, repaired the ruines of the Empire, vanquished the Persians, recovered Hierusalem out of their hands, and brought home the Crosse unto Constantinople in triumphant manner, whence the feast called Exaltatio crucis, September 14. In his time Mahomet began to disperse his dotages.

641 21 Constans or Constantine II. son of Heraclius, unfortunate in his wars against the Saracens, who prevailed in all places; picking a quarrel with the Romans he defaced Rome, robbing it of all the choicest Ornaments, which the Goths and other barbarous people had left: and ransaking the Isle of Sicil, was there slain by the women.

670 22 Constantinus III. son of the former Constantine, from his long or early beard surnamed Pogonatus, repulsed the Saracens from Constantinople, but could not hinder the Bulgarians from passing over the Danow.

987 23 Justinian II. son of Constantine the 3d. subdued Mesopotamia, Armenia, and some part of Persia; forcing the Saracens to sue for peace, and become his tributaries. Against whom Leontius on the one side, and Absimarus on the other, severally taking arms were declared Emperors; Justinian taken by Leontius, hath his nose cut off, and his person committed to custody: but making an escape, by means of Trebellin King of the Bulgarians, recovered his Imperial dignity; and being too violent in the pursute of his revenge, was finally murdered at the Altar by the command of

713 24 Philippicus Bardanes, Admiral of his Navy, elected Emperor by the Souldiers, a great enemy of Images, which he caused to be cast out of the Church: whereby incurring the displeasure of 715 25 Anaſtaſius II. called alſo Artemius, his principal Secretarie, who thruſt himſelf into the Empire; forced to relinquiſh it by that army which he had raiſed againſt the Saracens: in which tumult the City of Conſtantinople was ſacked and ſpoiled.

717 26 Theodoſius III. made Emperor in this tumult by the Souldiers, hearing of the approach of Leo, Commander of the Eaſtern Armies, reſigned the Empire, and took Orders to preſerve his life.

718 27 Leo Iſauricus, in whoſe time Caliph Zulciman beſieged Conſtantinople the ſpace of three years, and when by cold and famine 300000 of the Saracens were ſlain, they deſiſted. At this ſiege was that fire invented, which we for the violence of it call wild fire; and the Latines, becauſe the Greeks were the Authors of it, Græcus ignis: by which the Saracens ſhips were not a little moleſted. He was alſo a great Enemy to Images, for which cauſe hated by the Pope and Clergie of Rome, who gave him thereupon the nick-name of Iconomachus.

741 28 Conſtantinus IV. ſon of Leo, ſurnamed Copronymus, for that when he was baptized, he berayed the font; followed his Fathers zeal in removing Images, which created him much trouble; one Artabardus being choſe Emperor againſt him, but at laſt defeated.

777 29 Leo III. ſon of Conſtantine Copronymus, honored with the Adjunct of Porphyrogenitus, but commonly called Leo the 4th. (Leontius the Uſurper, (as I conjecture) being reckoned for one) an enemy of Images, and fortunate in his wars againſt the Saracens.

782 30 Conſtantine V. the ſon of Leo and Irene, firſt governed the Empire with his Mother, by whom at laſt ſupplanted, and deprived of ſight, he dyed of a melancholy.

798 31 Irene, wife of Leo the 3d. firſt conſort with Conſtantine her ſon, and afterwards ſole Empereſs of Conſtantinople: for her better ſupport in which eſtate ſhe ſided with the Popes of Rome, and called the ſecond Councel of Nice for defence of Images. In her time Charls, ſurnamed the Great, was by the Pope and People of Rome created Emperor of the Weſt. For the Popes knowing their own greatneſs to grow out of the ruines of the temporal power, committed the Empire of the Weſt unto the French Princes: whereby the Greek Emperors became much weakened; and the French being the Popes Creatures, were in tract of time brought to their devotion. In following times, when Frederick Barbaroſſa, was by Pope Alexander the 3d. pronounced non-Emperor; Emanuel of Conſtantinople ſued for a re-union of the Empires: but the crafty Pope returned this anſwer, Non licere illi conjungere, quæ majores ejus de induſtria diſjunxerunt: Let no man preſume to joyn, what the God of Rome, the Pope, hath put aſunder.

803 32 Nicephorus a Patritian, made Emperor by the Souldiers, perſwaded that Irene had made choiſe of him to be her Succeſſor: ſlain in a pitcht Field againſt the Bulgarians.

812 33 Michael, ſurnamed Curopalates, from his office, (the Mayre of the Palace as it were) Husband to Procopia, the Daughter of Nicephorus, aſſumed the Empire: which, finding his own weakneſſe, he did ſoon relinquiſh, and betook himſelf unto a Monaſtery.

814 3 Leo. V. ſurnamed Armenius from his Country, General of the Horſe to Michael, demoliſhed the Images which his Predeceſſors had ſet up; ſlain in the Church during the time of Divine ſervice.

821 35 Michael II. ſurnamed Balbus, having murdered Leo, aſſumed the Empire; unfortunate in his government, and dyed of madneſs.

830 36 Theophilus, the ſon of Michael Balbus, an enemy of Images, like his Father, and as unfortunate as he; loſing many battels to the Saracens, at laſt dyed of melancholy.

842 37 Michael III. ſon of Theophilus, firſt with his Mother Theodora, who took unto her ſelf the ſupreme command; and after of himſelf ſole Emperor; his mother being made a Nun.

865 38 Baſilius, ſurnamed Macedo, from the place of his birth, made conſort in the Empire by Michael the ſon of Theophilus, whom he baſely and treacherouſly murdered; killed caſually by a Stag.

886 39 Leo VI. for his learning ſurnamed Philoſophus, the ſon of Baſilius, a vigilant and provident Prince; moſt of his time, with variable ſucceſs, ſpent againſt the Bulgarians.

912 40 Conſtantine VI. commonly called the VII. ſon of Leo Philoſophus, firſt under his Unkle Alexander, next under Zoe his mother, and after under Romanus Lacopenus, governed the Empire: by which laſt ſo miſerably depreſſed that he was fain to get his livelyhood by painting. But Lacopenus being depoſed and turned into a Monaſterie by his own ſons, Conſtantine at laſt obtained his rights, and reſtored learning unto Greece.

961 41 Romanus, the ſon of Conſtantine.

963 42 Nicephorus, ſurnamed Phocas, firſt Governor or Protector to the young Emperor Romanus; after whoſe death created Emperor by the Army, he recovered Antioch, Cilicia, and the greateſt part of Aſia minor from the power of the Saracens; ſlain in the night by John Zimiſces, his wife Theophania being privy to it.

971 43 John Zimiſces, Emperor in the place of Nicephorus Phocas, governed the Empire better than he did obtain it; vanquiſhing the Bulgarians, Roſſes, and others of the barbarous Nations: and left it at his death to the ſons of Romanus.

977 44 Basilius II. surnamed Porphyrogenitus, as many of the Emperours had been before him, in regard that at their births they were wrapped in purple (which the Greeks call Porphyrie) the Imperial colour: subdued the Bulgarians, and made them Homagers to the Empire.

1027 45 Constantinus VII. or VIII. brother of Basilius, and with him partner in the Empire; after whose death he governed three years by himself, but did nothing memorable.

1030 46 Romanus II. for his prodigality surnamed Argyropolus, husband of Zoe, the daughter of Constantine the 8. drowned in a Bath by the treason of his wife and her Adulterer.

1035 47 Michael IV. surnamed Paphlago from his Country, first the Adulterer, and afterwards the husband of Zoe; but died very penitent.

1042 48 Michael V. surnamed Calaphates, a man of obscure birth, adopted by Zoe, whom he deposed from the Government, and turned into a Monasterie. Out of which being again taken, in a popular tumult, she put out the eyes of Calaphates, and being then 60 years of age, bestowed both the Empire and her self upon 1043 49 Constantine IX. surnamed Monomachus, formerly husband to a Neece of Romanus the 2.

1055 50 Theodora, sister unto Zoe, after the death of Constantine, managed for two years the affairs of the Empire, with great contentment of all people. But grown in age surrendred it to

1057 51 Michael VI. surnamed Stratiotticus, an old, but militarie man, deposed within the year by

1060 52 Isaacius, of the noble family of the Comneni; valiant, of great courage, and diligent in his affairs: which having managed for two years, he left it at his death, with consent of the Senate and people, to 1063 53 Constantine X. surnamed Ducas, a great Justiciar, and very devout, but exceeding covetous, whereby he became hated of his subjects, and contemned by his enemies.

1071 54 Romanus III. surnamed Diogenes, maryed Eudoxia the wife of Constantinus Ducas, and with her the Empire. Took prisoner by the Turks, and sent home again, he found a faction made against him; by which Eudoxia was expelled, himself at his return, deposed, and so dyed in exile.

1075 55 Michael VII. the son of Constantinus Ducas, surnamed Parapinacius, by reason of the famine which in his time happened, made Emperour in the aforesaid tumult. But being found unable for so great an honour (the Turks prevailing in all places) he was deposed again, and put into a Monasterie.

1081 56 Nicephorus II. surnamed Bolionates, of the house of the Phocas, succeeded in the place of Parapinace, deposed within 3 years by the Comneni.

1084 57 Alexius Comnenus, son of the Emperour Isaacius Comnenus, obtained the Empire: in whose time the Western Christians with great forces prepared for the recovery of the Holy Land. Of whose purposes being very jealous, he denyed them passage through his Country; in the end forced to find them victuals and other necessaries.

1113 58 Calo-Johannes, the son of Alexius, had a good hand against the Turks, from whom he took Laodicea and some other places of importance. He also vanquished the Scythians or Tartars passing over the Ister, most of which he either slew in battel, or sold as captives; permitting the remainder to abide on this side that River. He also conquered the Servians and Bulgarians, transporting many of them into Bithynia.

1142 59 Manuel, or Emanuel, the younger son of Calo-Joannes, an under-hand enemie to the Western Christians, and an open enemie to the Turks; by whom intrapped in the dangerous streights of Cilicia, and his Army miserably cut off, he was on honorable terms permitted to return again.

1180 60 Alexius II. son of Manuel, deposed and barbarously murdered by Andronicus, the Cousin German of his father, with his wife and mother.

1183 61 Andronicus Comnenus, confined by Manuel to Oenum in Paphlagonia, by reason of his dangerous & ambitious practices; after his death, pretending to reform the State came unto Constantinople: first made Protector, afterwards consort in the Empire with yong Alexius. Whom having barbarously slain, and got the Empire to himself, he was not long after cruelly torn in pieces in a popular tumult.

1185 62 Isaacius Angelus, a noble man of Constantinople, and of the same Comnenian race, designed to death by Andronicus, was in a popular election proclamed his successor; deposed by Alexius his own brother, and his eyes put out.

1195 63 Alexius Angelus, deprived his brother, and excluded his Nepew from the Empire; but it held not long.

64 Alexius Angelus II. son of Isaac Angelus, who being unjustly thrust out of his Empire by his Uncle Alexius, had recourse to Philip the Western Emperour, whose daughter Mary he had marryed: who so prevailed with Pope Innocent the 3. that the Army prepared for the Holy Land, was employed to restore him. On the approach whereof Alexius the Usurper fled; Alexius the young Emperour is seated in his Fathers throne, and not long after slain by Alexius Ducas. In revenge whereof the Latines assault and win Constantinople, make themselves Masters of the Empire, and divide it amongst them: alotting to the Venetians Candie, many good towns of Peloponnesus, and most of the Islands; to Boniface Marques of Montferrat the Kingdom of Thessaly; to others of the Adventurers other liberal shares; and finally, to Baldwin Earl of Flanders, the main body of the Empire, with the title of Emperour. The ſeat of the Empire of the Greeks being transferred unto Nice a City of Bithynia in the Leſſer Aſia by Theodorus Laſcaris, ſon-in-law to Alexius the Uſurper, continued there til the regaining of Conſtantinople by the Greeks again; after it had been 60 years poſſeſſed by the Weſtern Chriſtians.

EMPEROURS of the LATINES in CONSTANTINOPLE.

1200 65 Baldwin, Earl of Flanders, firſt Emperour of the Latines reigning in Conſtantinople, taken in fight by John King of Bulgaria, coming to aid the Greeks, and ſent priſoner to Ternova, where he was cruelly put to death.

1202 66 Henry, the brother of Baldwin, repulſed the Bulgarians out of Greece, and dyed a Conquerour.

1215 67 Peter, Count of Auxerre in France, the ſon of Peter, youngeſt ſon to Lewis the Groſſe of France, and Husband of Yoland the daughter of Henry, ſucceeded in the Empire after his deceaſe: cunningly entrapped by Theodorus Angelus a great Prince in Epirus, whom he had beſieged in Dyrrachium. But of an Enemy being perſwaded to become his gheſt, was there murdered by him.

1220 68 Robert, the ſon of Peter, having ſeen the miſerable uſage of his beautifull Empreſſe, whom a young Burgundian formerly contracted to her, had moſt deſpitefully mangled, cutting off both her noſe and ears; died of hearts grief as he was coming back from Rome, whither his melancholy had carried him to conſult the Pope in his affairs.

1227 69 Baldwin II. ſon of Robert by a former wife, under the protection of John de Brenne the titulary King of Hieruſalem, ſucceeded in his fathers throne: which having held for the ſpace of 33 years; he was forced to leave it: the Citie of Conſtantinople being regained by the Greeks, and the poor Prince compelled to ſue in vain for ſuccours to the French, Venetians, and other Princes of the Weſt. And though both Philip the ſon of this Baldwin, and Charls of Valois, Father of Philip de Valois French King, in right of Catharine his wife, daughter of that Philip, did ſometimes pleaſe themſelves with the title of Emperours of Conſtantinople, yet neither of the two had ever any footing or poſſeſſion there.

The EMPIRE reſtored unto the GREEKS.

1260 70 Michael VIII. ſurnamed Palæologus, extracted from the Comnenian Emperours, Emperour of the Greeks in the City of Nice, moſt fortunately recovered Conſtantinople; the town being taken by a party of 50 men ſecretly put into it by ſome Country labourers under the ruines of a mine. Preſent in perſon at the Council of Lyons, at the perſwaſion of the Pope he admitted the Latine Ceremonies into the Churches of Greece; for which greatly hated by his ſubjects, and denied the honour of Chriſtian burial.

1283 71 Andronicus II. vexed with unnatural wars by his Nephew Andronicus, who rebelled againſt him.

1328 72 Andronicus III. firſt partner with his grandfather, afterwards ſole Emperour.

1341 73 John Palæologus, ſon of Andronicus the 3. in whoſe minoritie Contacuzenus his Protector uſurped the Empire, and held it ſometimes from him, and ſometimes with him, till the year 1357. and then retired unto a Monaſterie: leaving the Empire unto John, during whoſe reign the Turks firſt planted themſelves in Europe.

1384 74 Andronicus IV. the ſon of Johannes Palæologus.

1387 75 Emanuel Palæologus, the ſon of the ſaid John, and brother of Andronicus the 4. in whoſe time Bajazet the ſixt King of the Turks did beſiege Conſtantinople; but found ſuch notable reſiſtance, that he could not force it.

1417 76 John II. ſon of Andronicus the 4.

1420 77 John III. ſon of Emanuel Palæologus, in perſon at the Council of Florence for reconciling of the Churches; in hope thereby to get ſome aid from the Weſtern Chriſtians, but it would not be.

1444 78 Conſtantinus Palæologus, the brother of John the 3. In whoſe time the famous Citie of Conſtantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great, 1452. the miſerable Emperor, who had in vain gon from door to door to beg or borrow mony to pay his ſoldiers, (which the Turks found in great abundance when they took the City) being lamentably trod to death in the throng. Now concerning this Empire of the Greeks, we may obſerve ſome fatal contrarieties in one and the ſame name: as firſt, that Philip the father of Alexander laid the firſt foundation of the Macedonian Monarchy, and Philip the father of Perſeus ruined it. Secondly, that Baldwin was the firſt, and Baldwin the laſt Emperour of the Latines in Conſtantinople. Thirdly, that this town was built by a Conſtantine, the ſon of Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch: and was loſt by a Conſtantine the ſon of a Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch alſo. And fourthly, the Turks have a Prophecie, that as it was won by a Mahomet, ſo it ſhall be loſt by a Mahomet. So Auguſtus was the firſt eſtabliſhed Emperor of Rome, and Auguſtulus the laſt: Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, the reſtorer; and Darius the ſon of Arſamis, the overthrower of the Perſian Monarchy. A like note I ſhall anon tell you of Hieruſalem. In the mean time I will preſent you with a fatall obſervation of the letter H, as I find it thus verſed in Albions England.

Not ſuperſtitiouſly I ſpeak, but H this letter ſtill
Hath been obſerved ominous to Englands good or ill.
Firſt Hercules, Heſione, and Helen were the cauſe
Of war to Troy; Æneas ſeed becomming ſo outlaws.
Humber the Hun with forein arms did firſt the Brutes invade, Helen to Romes imperial Throne, the Britiſh Crown convey'd.
Hengiſt and Horſus, firſt did plant the Saxons in this Ile:
Hungar and Hubba firſt brought Danes, that ſwayed here long while.
At Harold had the Saxon end, at Hardie-Cnute, the Dane:
Henries the firſt and ſecond did reſtore the Engliſh raign.
Fourth Henry firſt for Lancaſter did Englands Crown obtain.
Seventh Henrie, jarring Lancaſter and York, unites in peace:
Henry the eighth did happily Romes irreligion ceaſe.

A ſtrange and ominous letter; every mutation in our State being as is it were uttered by it.

What were the Revenues of this Empire ſince the diviſion of it into the Eaſt and Weſt, I could never yet learn. That they were exceeding great, may appear by three circumſtances, 1 Zonaras reporteth, that the Emperour Baſilius had in his treaſury 200000 talents of gold, beſides infinite heaps of ſilver, and other monies. 2. Lipſius relateth, how Benjamin a Jew in his diſcourſe of Europe, ſaith, that the cuſtome due to the Emperors, out of the victuals and Merchandize ſold at Conſtantinople only, did amount to 20000 crowns daily. 3. We find, that at the ſack of Conſtantinople, there was found an invaluable maſſe of gold, ſilver, plate, and jewels, beſides that which was hid in the earth. For ſo the covetous Citizens choſe rather to imploy their wealth, than afford any part of it to the Emperor: who with tears in his eyes, went from door to door to beg and borrow mony, wherewith he might wage more ſouldiers for the defence of the town.

The arms of the Empire were Mars, a croſs Sol between four Greek Betaes of the ſecond: the four Betaes ſignifying, (as Bodin ſaith) Βαριλεὺς, Βασιλεὼν, Βασιλεόων, Βασιλεῦσι,

It may perchance be expected that we ſhould here make an additionall Catalogue of thoſe Turkiſh Emperors, who have reigned in Conſtantinople, ſince the taking of it: and being they are poſſeſſed of Greece and do now inhabit it, that we ſhould here alſo ſpeak of the Turks themſelves, their cuſtoms, forces, policies, original, and proceedings. But the diſcourſe of thoſe things we intend to reſerve for Turcomania, a Province of Aſia, from whence they made their firſt inundation into Perſia, and afterwards into other parts of the World now ſubject to them, the only Province which retains any thing of their name. And though the Peninſula called antiently Taurica Cherſoneſus (now part of Tartaria Procopenſis) be within the bounds of Europe alſo: yet we will defer the deſcription and ſtory of it, till we come to the affairs of the Tartars; and will here conclude our diſcourſe of Europe, and prepare for Aſia.

And ſo much for GREECE, the laſt of the Provinces of EUROPE.

COSMOGRAPHIE,

The Third Book

CONTAINING THE

CHOROGRAPHIE and HISTORIE

of the Lesser and Greater

ASIA,

And all the principal Kingdomes, Provinces, Seas, and Isles thereof.

OF ASIA.

ASIA is bounded on the West, with the Mediterranean, and Ægean Seas, the Hellespont, Propontis, Thracian Bosphorus, and the Euxine Sea, the Palus Mæotis, the Rivers Tanais and Duina, a line being drawn from the first of the two said Rivers unto the other, by all which parted from Europe; on the North, it hath the main Scythick Ocean; on the East, the Streights of Anian (if such there be) the Indian Ocean, and Mare del Zur, by which separated from America; on the South, the Mediterranean, or that part of it which is called the Carpathian sea, washing the shores of Anatolia; and the main Southern Ocean, passing along the Indian, Persian, and Arabian coasts: and finally, on the South-west, the Red Sea or Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Africk. Environed on all sides with the Sea, or some Sea-like Rivers, except a narrow Isthmus in the South-west, which joyns it to Africk, and the space of ground (whatsoever it be) betwixt Duina, and Tanais, on the North-west, which unites it to Europe.

It took this name, as some will have it, from Asia, the daughter of Oceanus and Thetis, the wife of Japetus, and (by him) mother to Prometheus: as others say, from Asius the son of Atis, a King of Lydia, from whence that Country first, afterwards all Anatolia or Asia minor, and finally, the whole Continent, had the name of Asia. Others again (but more improbably) derive the name from Asius the Philosopher, who gave the Palladium unto the Trojans; in memory whereof that Country first, and after the whole Continent did receive this name. But these Originations being very uncertain, Bochartus (out of his great affection to the Punick or Phœnician language) will have it called so from Asi, a Phœnician word, signifying Medium, or the middle: because Anatolia, or the Lesser Asia, which gives name (as he conceiveth) to the Greater also, lieth in the middle, as it were, betwixt some parts of Europe and Africa. And so far the Conjecture doth find countenance from some antient writers, that Asia is said by Plinie to be inter Africam & Europam, to be betwixt Africa and Europe; by Mela, Medium nostris æquoribus excipi, to be embraced in the middle of two Seas (he meaneth Pontus Euxinus, and the Mediterranean) and finally, by Eustathius (conceive them all of Anatolia, or the Lesser Asia) μέσην ἀμφοῖν ἔχειν διάθεσιν, to have a middle situation betwixt Europe and Africa. But by what name, and on what grounds soever it be called by the Greeks, and Latins; it is otherwise, and with better reason called in holy Scriptures by the name of Semia; as being that portion of the world, wherein the whole posterity of Sem had their seats and dwellings; if the observation of Maginus be of any weight.

It is situate East and West, from the 52. to the 169 degree of Longitude; and North and South, from the the 82 degree of Latitude, to the very Æquator; ſome onely of the Ilands lying on the South of that Circle: ſo that the longeſt Summers day in the Southern parts, is but twelve hours only; but in the moſt Northern parts hereof, for almoſt four whole moneths together no night at all. And for a meaſurement by miles, it ſtreteches in length 5200. and in bredth 4560 miles.

This Country hath heretofore been had in eſpecial honour, 1. For the Creation of man, who had his firſt making in this part of the world; 2ly, Becauſe in this part of it ſtood the garden of Eden, which he had for the firſt place of his habitation; 3ly, Becauſe here flouriſhed the 4 firſt great Monarchies of the Aſſyrians, Babylonians, Medes, and Perſians; 4ly, Becauſe it was the Scene of almoſt all the memorable actions, which are recorded by the pen-men of the holy Scriptures; 5ly, Becauſe that here our Saviour CHRIST was born, here wrought he moſt divine miracles, and here accompliſhed the great work of our Redemption; 6ly, And finally, becauſe from hence all Nations of the World had their firſt beginning, on the diſperſion which was made by the ſons of Noah, after their vain attempt at Babel.

The chief Mountains of this great Continent, not limited within the bounds of any one Province (for of thoſe we are to ſpeak in their ſeveral places) are 1. Mount Taurus, which having its beginning in Lycia, a Province of Anatolia, palleth directly Eaſtwards to the Indian Ocean: and reckoning in its ſeveral windings and turnings, with its ſpurs and branches every way, is ſaid to be 6250 miles long, and 357 m. broad. This Mountain, or rather ridge of hils, divideth the Greater Aſia, as the Æquator doth the World, into North and South: memorable for three difficult paſſages from the one to the other, the firſt out of the reſt of Anatolia into Cilicia, called Pylæ Ciliciæ; the ſecond out of Scythia or Tartarie, into Turcomania, called Caucaſiæ Portæ; and the third out of Scythia into Perſia, called Portæ Caſpiæ. Of which, and of the whole courſe of this Mountain, more at large hereafter. 2. Imaus, which beginning near the ſhores of the Northern Ocean, runneth directly towards the South; dividing the Greater Aſia (as the Meridian doth the World) into Eaſt and Weſt, and croſſing Mount Taurus in right Angles, in or about the Longitude of 140. This on the North of Taurus hath no other name among the Latins, than Imaus only; and by that name divideth Scythia, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum: but by the Tartars is called Altay; by ſome writers, Belgion. And on the South-ſide of that Mountain is known in Ptolemy by the name of Bitigo, extending from Mount Caucaſus, or ſome other Branch of the Taurus, to the Cape of Comari, in the Southern Ocean: ſuppoſed by ſome to be Mount Sephar, mentioned Gen. 10. v. 30. of which we ſhall ſay more alſo when we come into India.

The eſtate of Chriſtianity in this vaſt Continent is in ill condition, diſcountenanced and oppreſſed, though not quite extinguiſhed. For all the great Princes and Commanders of it being either Mahometans or Pagans; the moſt that can be hoped for of the Chriſtian Faith, is a toleration or connivence: and that not found but with an intermixture of ſuch afflictions, as commonly attend diſcountenanced and diſgraced Religions. Yet is not Chriſtianity ſo over-powered either by Mahometaniſm, or Paganiſm, but that in Aſia the Leſſer, Syria, Paleſtine, and Armenia, a great part of the Inhabitants do retain the Goſpel, under their ſeveral Patriarchs and Metropolitans: differing in ſome few points from one another; but in many from the Church of Rome, with which they hold neither correſpondency nor Communion. Nor want there many Chriſtian Churches in the Empire of Perſia, nor in thoſe of Tartarie and the Indies, antiently planted in thoſe Countreys; beſides the late increaſe thereof in the Eaſtern Ilands, by the diligent preaching of the Jeſuits, and ſome late Factories there ſetled by the Engliſh and Hollanders: of all which I ſhall write in place convenient.

In reference to the Roman Empire, whoſe Dominion did not often extend beyond the River Euphrates, this Continent conteined only three Dioceſes, or Juridical Circuits; that is to ſay, the Dioceſe of Pontus, Aſia properly ſo called, and the Oriental: which with the Dioceſes of Thrace and Egypt, were under the command of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; the greateſt Officer of power and juriſdiction, next to the Emperors themſelves, in the Roman Monarchie. And theſe three Dioceſes conteined in them to the number of thirty ſeven Provinces, viz. the Provinces of Bithynia. 2 Helenopontus. 3 Pontus Polemoniacus. 4 Galatia Prima. 5 Galatia Salutaris. 6 Honorius. 7 Paphlagonia. 8 Cappadocia prima. 9 Cappadocia ſecunda. 10 Armenia prima, and 11 Armenia ſecunda, conteined in the Dioceſe of Pontus, and governed by the Vicarius or Lieutenant thereof. II. the Provinces of Pamphylia. 2 Lycia. 3 Caria. 4 Piſidia. 5 Lycaonia. 6 Lydia. 7 Phrygia Pacatiana. 8 Phrygia Salutaris. 9 Aſia ſpecially ſo called. 10 Helleſpont, and 11 the Iſles of Anatolia, making up the Dioceſe of Aſia: whereof the three laſt were governed by a peculiar Officer, called the Proconſul of Aſia; the others by the ordinary Lieutenant or Vicarius. III. The Provinces of Iſauria. 2 Cilicia prima. 3 Cilicia ſecunda. 4 Cyprus. 5 Phœnices. 6 Phœenices Libani. 7 Syria. 8 Syria Salutaris. 9 Paleſtina prima. 10 Paleſtina ſecunda. 11 Paleſtina Salutaris. 12 Euphratenſis. 13 Oſroene. 14 Meſopotamia, and 15 Arabia, conſtituting the Dioceſe of the Orient, under the Comes Orientis. The reſt of Aſia ſubject unto the Parthian or Perſian Kings, beſides thoſe of India (and of many Regions and Countreys not then diſcovered) was never conquered by the Romans: and therefore not within the compaſs of this diſtribution.

At this time Aſia ſtands divided amongſt 6 great Monarchs; that is to ſay, the Turk, commanding all thoſe parts and Provinces, which antiently belonged to the Roman Empire: 2ly, The Perſian, ruling in all the Provinces beyond Euphrates, poſſeſſed by the Perſian Kings in the time of Alexand: the great, or the Arſacidæ or Parthians in the times of the Romans: 3ly, The Great Cham of Tartarie, commanding over all the North parts of Aſia, antiently known by the name of Scythia: 4ly, The King of China, governing in that large and populous Country. 5ly, The King of Barma, whoſe dominion comprehends all or the greateſt part of India beyond the River Ganges; and 6ly, the Great Mogor, whoſe Empire is extended over all India on this ſide of that River. And ſome there be who in the deſcriptions of this great Country, follow this diviſion. But for our parts, for the better underſtanding of the Greek and the Roman ſtories, and the eſtate of the Aſſyrian, Babylonian and Perſian Monarchies, to which the holy Scriptures do ſo much relate; we ſhall conſider it as divided into the Regions of 1. Anatolia, or Aſia Minor. 2. Cyprus. 3. Syria. 4. Paleſtine. 5. Arabia. 6. Chaldæa. 7. Aſſyria. 8. Meſopotamia. 9. Turcomania. 10. Media. 11. Perſia. 12. Tartaria. 13. China. 14. India; and 15. the Oriental Ilands.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR.

ANATOLIA or ASIA MINOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from the greater Aſia; on the Weſt, with the Thracian Boſphorus, Propontis, Helleſpont, and the Ægean Sea, by which parted from Europe; on the North, with Pontus Euxinus, called alſo the Black Sea, and Mare Maggiore; and on the South, by the Rhodian, Lydian, and Pamphylian Seas, ſeveral parts of the Mediterranean. So that it is a demi-Iland, or Peninſula, environed on all ſides with waters; excepting a ſmall Iſthmus or neck of land extending from the head of Euphrates to the Euxine Sea, by which joined to the reſt of Aſia.

It was antiently called Aſia Minor, to difference it from the reſidue of this great Continent; afterwards Anatolia, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς, from the more Eaſtward ſituation of it, in reſpect of Greece; and now Natolia by the Turks, with little deviation from the former name. But here it is to be obſerved, that as this Leſſer Aſia was a part of the greater, and the Dioceſe of Aſia, a part of Aſia the Leſs: ſo was Aſia properly and ſpecially ſo called, but a part only of the Aſian Dioceſe; the Lydian Aſia, a part of Aſia properly ſo called, and the Proconſular Aſia, but a part of that. The limits of Aſia the Leſs, and the ſeveral Provinces contained in the Aſian Dioceſe, have been ſhewn already. And as for that part hereof which had the name of Aſia properly and eſpecially ſo called, it contained only the two Phrygias, both the Myſias, Æolis, Ionia, Lydia, and Caria, which falling unto the Romans, by the laſt Will and Teſtament of Attalus, the laſt King of Pergamus, were by them made into one Province, and called Aſia, after the name of the whole Continent; this being as it were the earneſt-penny, to make ſure the reſt. So witneſſeth Strabo, where he ſaith Ῥωμαῖοι ἐπαρχίαν ἀπέδειξαν τὴν χωρὰν Ἀσίαν προσαγορεύσαντες ἀπὸ μέρους τινὸς ἐλαχίστου τῇ ἡπείρῳ, Lib. 13. And for the Lydian Aſia, that contained only ſo much of the Roman or proper Aſia, as antiently did belong to Lydia; that is to ſay, Lydia it ſelf, together with Æolis and Ionia, and ſome parts of the Greater Myſia adjoyning to it. Which as it had originally the name of Aſia, from Aſia a chief City of it near the foot of Mount Tmolus, which both Suidas, and the Great Etymologiſt have taken notice of; before that name became to be communicated to the Greater Continent: ſo it retained that name to it ſelf in ſeveral, diſtinct both from the Greater, and the Leſſer Aſia; as alſo from the Aſia propria of Ptolemie, and others of the antient writers. And of this Aſia only is it, which the Scriptures ſpeak; both in the Book of the Acts, and the Revelation: the ſeven Churches mentioned in the one being found in this Lydian Aſia, and the paſſges in the other concerning Aſia, not to be underſtood of any, but of this alone. For whereas it is ſaid Acts 16. That when they had gone throughout Phrygia, and the Region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt to preach the Word in Aſia; after they were come to Myſia, they aſſayed to go into Bithynia, and came down to Troas: moſt clear it is, that neither Galatia, nor Bithynia, though Regions of the Leſſer Aſia; nor Phrygia, Myſia, or Troas, all Regions of the Proper Aſia; were any part of that Aſia which the Scripture ſpeaks of. So alſo where it is affirmed, that upon St. Pauls preaching and diſputing for two years in Epheſus, all they which dwelt in Aſia heard the word of the Lord: Acts 19. ver. 10. It is not to be meant of any but the Lydian Aſia, whereof Epheſus at that time was the principal City. So alſo Acts 19. verſ. 22, 26, 31. and Chap. 20 verſ. 18. Finally, for the Proconſular Aſia, which together with Helleſpont and the Iſles, made up a government a part, exempt from the command of the Vicarius, or Lieutenant of the Aſian Dioceſe, it contained only Æolis, and Ionia, with the South part of Lydia, or the Countries lying about Epheſus. So witneſſeth S. Hierom for the Chriſtian writers, where he affirms, that although all the whole Peninſula have the name of the Leſſer Aſia; Specialiter ubi Epheſus Civitas eſt, Aſia Vocatur; yet more particularly the parts adjoyning unto Epheſus have the name of Aſia. And this appeareth by the diſtribution of the Provinces before laid down, where Lydia is reckoned for a Province of the Aſian Dioceſe, diſtinct from the Proconſular Aſia, which we now inſiſt on.

So having cleared our way in regard of the name, proceed we next unto the Region, or place thus named, according to the notion in the largeſt latitude; extending from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, and from the Euxine Sea to the Mediterranean. By which account it reacheth from the 51 to the 72 degree of Longitude, and from the 36 to the 45 degree of Latitude: the length hereof from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, being eſtimated at 630 miles; the breadth from Sinus Iſſicus in Silicia, to the City of Trabezond, at 210. As for the ſituation of it, in reference to the Heavenly bodies, it lyeth almoſt in the ſame poſition with Italy, extending from the middle Parallel of the fourth Clime, to the middle Parallel of the ſixt: So that the longeſt ſummer day in the Southern parts, is about fourteen hours and a half; and one hour longer in thoſe parts which lie moſt towards the North.

The temperature of the air is exceeding ſound, and the ſoil generally exceeding fruitfull; abounding in moſt excellent paſtures, which breed a notable race of Horſes, of very good ſervice in the wars, if backed with European Riders; it being a by-word amongſt the Turks, that the Horſes of Aſia, and the Horſemen of Europe are of greateſt action. It was antiently very plentifull of all fruits, both for uſe and pleaſure, as ſtill it would be were it cultivated as in former times. Once very populous, and repleniſhed with goodly Cities, now in a manner waſte and deſolate; lamenting the deſtruction of 4000 Towns; ſome of them deſtroyed by Earthquakes, (the falling likneſs of moſt great Cities in the Eaſt) but moſt by war; and have little now to boaſt of but the commodiouſneſs of the Havens, which are very many; though moſt of them but meanly traded, as in a Country ill manured, and of little manufactures.

Bithynia.

The people antiently, eſpecially thoſe of Greek original, and the Nations bordering on the Euxine, were very warlike and induſtrious: the reſt, eſpecially the Lydians, and thoſe of the greater Phrygia, as idle and effeminate, wholly addicted to their pleaſures. All of them at this time affected with the ſame diſeaſe; inſomuch that the Turks, (unleſs compelled thereto by extreme neceſſities) never inroll their Children in the number of Janizaries. The greateſt part of them generally profeſſe the Chriſtian faith; but overpowred by Mahometaniſm, which is here moſt prevalent: all followers of the Church of Greece, and ſubject all (except thoſe of Iſauria and Cilicia) to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. And as they are of the Communion of that Church, ſo they retain the Greek Liturgies for Sacred Offices; not ſo well underſtood amongſt them as in former times, when it was more generally ſpoken there than it is at the preſent; now over-topped in moſt places by the Turkiſh and Sclavonian tongues. And though in former times, by reaſon of the many Greek Colonies planted in this Country, the Conqueſt of it by Alexander the Great, and the ſubjection of it to the Syrian Kings of the Macedon race, that language became generally underſtood amongſt them; inſomuch as three of the Greek Dialects, viz. the Dorick, the Ionian, and the Æolick, were ſpoken here: yet did it never ſo prevail, as to become the Vulgar language of the people, or to extinguiſh any of the Vulgar tongues. For it is ſaid of Mithridates King of Pontus, that he underſtood two and twenty languages, without any Interpreter; which were no other than the languages of ſo many Nations ſubject to himſelf, whoſe Dominion was contained for the moſt part within Aſia Minor.

Principal Mountains of this Country, are Hermione in Pontus, Argæus in Cappadocia, Ida in the Leſſer Phrygia, Olympus in Myſia, Tmolus in Lydia, Amamus in Cilicia, and finally Antetaurus, and Scordiſcus in Armenia Minor: Out of which, for the moſt part, flow the chief Rivers hereof, that is to ſay, 1. Iris (now Caſilmach.) 2. Thermodon. 3. Hallis (now Ottomangruch.) 4. Parthenius (now Diſop.) 5. Sangarius (now Sangri.) All of them falling in the Euxine Sea. 6. Aſcanius. 7. Rhyndacus. 8. Æſapus, and 9. Granicus, paſſing into the Propontis. 10. Simoeis. 11. Scamander, called alſo Xanthus, ending their ſhort courſe in the Helleſpont. 12. Caicus. 13. Hermus. 14. Cayſtrus. and 15. Meander, loſing themſelves in the Ægean. 16. Calbis. 17. Xanthus, called alſo Lycus. 18. Limyrus. 19. Cataractes, diſchanelling into the Mediterranean; and 20. Melas, adding to the waters of the great river Euphrates. Of moſt of which we ſhall ſpeak more particularly in their ſeveral places.

In reference to the State of Rome, it contained the whole Diocele of Pontus, except Armenia the Greater; the Aſian Dioceſe intirely, without any exception; and the peculiar juriſdiction of the Proconſul of Aſia; together with the Provinces of Iſauria and Cilicia, parts of the Dioceſe of the Eaſt. But becauſe the names of many of thoſe Provinces were of new invention, and ſome of them of as ſhort continuance, we will conſider it according as it ſtood divided antiently, and before the Romans had made any conqueſts in it, into the Provinces of 1. Bithynia. 2. Pontus. 3. Paphlagonia. 4. Galatia. 5. Cappadocia. 6. Armenia Minor; which (together with Armenia Major) made up, though in other names, the Pontick Dioceſe. 7. Phrygia Minor. 8. Phrygia Major. 9. Myſia the Greater and the Leſſer. 10. Æolis and Ionia. 11. Lydia. 12. Caria. 13. Lycia. 14. Lycaonia. 15. Piſidia. 16. Pamphilia. 17 the Province of the Rhodes, all comprehended under the command of the Vicarius and Proconſul of Aſia. 18. Iſauria. 19. Cilicia, parts of the Dioceſe of the Eaſt, as before was ſaid.

1. BITHYNIA.

BITHYNIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Pontus, and the River Sangarius; on the weſt, with part of the Euxine, the Thracian Boſphorus, and part of the Propontis; on the North, wholly with the Euxine; and on the South, with Myſia, and Phrygia Minor: Formerly called Bebrycia, afterwards Mygdonia, and at laſt Bithynia, and that as ſome ſay from Bithynius, once a King hereof; more probably from the Thyni, a people of Thrace, who paſſed over the Boſphorus, and ſubdued it, called therefore by ſome writers Thraſia Aſiatica. So witneſſeth the Poet Claudian, ſaying, Thyni Thraces erant, quæ nunc Bithynia fertur.

By Juſtin the Hiſtorian it is called by the name of Metapontus, by reaſon of its neighbourhood to the Euxine, and the Pontick Regions.

The Country naturally rich, and in thoſe parts hereof which lie next the Boſphorus, oppoſite to Conſtantinople, ſo plentifully enriched with fruitfull hills, and pleaſant Orchards, when kept by the more curious Chriſtians, that it was thought not to be inferiour to the ſo much celebrated Tempe: now robbed of all thoſe former beauties by the careleſſeneſs of the Turks, who affect neither art, nor ſumptuoſitie, in their retirements and delights.

Chief Rivers hereof are Phillis. 2. Sangarius, now called Sangri, both falling into the Euxine Sea; this laſt ariſing from Mount Dindymus, in the furtheſt parts of Phrygia Major; and making two long reaches in his journey hither. 3. Aſcanius, which riſing alſo in Phrygia Major, but more near the borders of this Country, falleth into the Propontis, making the Bay called Sinus Aſcanius. Which with a lake in the ſame Country called Lacus Aſcanius, doth plainly manifeſt, that the Bithynians are derived from Askenaz, the ſon of Gomer, and grand-ſon of Japhet.

The

The Principal Towns hereof are 1. Scutari, over against the Haven of Constantinople, called anciently Chrysopolis, for that there the Persians received their tribute from the other Cities of all these parts of Asia Minor. An ample Town, well garrisoned within, and surrounded round about with most pleasant Orchards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royal Seraglio. Not far off is a Tower called the Maiden-Tower, serving both for a Fort and watch-tower; and being furnished for defence with 20 pieces of Ordnance. 2. Calcedon, on the same shore also, a Colonie of the Megarenses, called blind by the Oracle, for neglecting Byzantium, and choosing the lesse convenient place for their habitation. And yet did Constantine the Great resolve upon the same place also for his Regal City; but changed his resolutions on a kind of miracle: it being observed, that when his workmen began to draw the plat-form, some Eagles conveyed away their lines to the other side of the Bosphorus, and let them fall directly upon Byzantium. Memorable after that for the fourth General Council there assembled by command of the Emperour Martianus, for repressing the heresie of Nestorius, in which were 500 and 30 Bishops: now so decayed, that it can only shew some few of the ruines of it; Scutari being risen on the fall thereof. 3. Nicomedia, so called from Nicomedes King of Bithynia (the son of Zipes, and grandchild to that Bithynian King, who so valiantly defended his own and his Countries libertie against Calantus, one of great Alexanders Captains) by whom founded: Situate on the top of an hill, environed with a pleasant and delightfull plain, honoured with the seat and residence of many of the Roman Emperours, when their affairs called them into the East, before the building of Constantinople; on that occasion made the Throne on which many of Gods Saints received the Crown of Martyrdom, especially in the persecution under Diocletian. In those times wealthy, and of fame, now much decayed; but notwithstanding well inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, for the commodiousnes of the fresh springs which are thereabouts. 4. Libussa, betwixt Nicomedia, and the River Ascanius; memorable for the death and sepulture of the famous Annibal, who to prevent his being made prisoner to the Romans, when Prusius King of Bithynia intended unworthily to betray him, here made away himself by poyson. 5. Prusa, founded by another Prusius, whose name it beareth; a large and wealthy City as most in Asia: honoured for a long time with the residence of the Turkish Kings, till the removal of their seat to Adrianople, by Mahomet the first; and still ennobled with the sepulture of the Princes of the Ottoman race, except the Emperours themselves. By the Turks called Bursa. 6. Nicæ, or Nicæa, by the Turks called Neichia, but most commonly Isnichs, situate near the fennes of the River Ascanius, occasioned by the frequent overflowings of that River: by some affirmed to be the Metropolis of Bithynia; but I think Nicomedia hath more right to claim that honour. First named Antigonia, from Antigonus the founder of it; and afterwards Nicæa, by the name of Nice, wife unto Lisimachus: both of them Captains of the Great Alexander; which last had the happinesse to survive the overthrow of the former, and was the longest liver of those great Commmanders. Sufficiently famous both in Ecclesiastical and Civil story, for the first General Council there holden, by the appointment of Constantine the Great, Anno 314. for settling the peace of the Church, then miserably distracted by the Arian Heresie. The number of Bishops there assembled, no more than 318. yet of such high esteem for learning and piety, that never Council hath been held in so great an Honour. Here was also held the Council by the Empress Irene, for establishing the veneration of Images; that passing by the name of the Nicene Council, the Acts thereof might be of greater reputation amongst ignorant men. In which it was decreed by such doubty Arguments, as Let us make man after our own Image, once mainly insisted on by a Legate of the Eastern Churches; that they should be reverenced and adored in as ample and religious manner, as the blessed Trinity it self. This City was also the Imperial City of the Greek Emperours, after the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, and there continued till the expulsion of the Latines, under these Emperours of the GREEKS residing at NICE.

A. Ch.

1200 1 Theodorus Lascaris, son-in-Law to Alexius Angelus the Usurper, upon the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, passed over into Asia, and fortifying the City of Nice, made it the head City of his Kingdom, containing Bithynia, both the Phrygias, both the Mysias, Lydia, Æolis, and Ionia.

1223 2 John, surnamed Ducas, the husband of Irene daughter of Theodore Lascaris, succeeded his Father-in-law in the Empire; to which he added Pontus, most of the Isles of the Ægean, and not a few places of importance in Thrace it self.

1256 3 Theodorus II. the son of Ducas.

1259 4 John II. the son of Theodore the second, an Infant of about six years old, supplanted first, and after cruelly deposed and deprived of sight.

1259 5 Michael Palæologus, descended from the Imperial family of the Comneni, first took upon him as Protector of the Infant-Emperour, and afterwards as his associate in the Empire: in which confirmed by many fortunate successes, as well against the Latines, as some Greek Usurpers in Thessalie and Peloponnesus, especially the taking of Constantinople; he deprived the young Emperour of his sight, made himself sole Emperor, and left it unto his posterity, who held it with a great deal of trouble and continual disquiets, till the year 1452. when conquered by Mahomet the great, as before was said. But this recovery of Constantinople was the losse of Nice, taken not long after the removal of the Imperial seat, by Sultan Ottonar, Anno 1299. who presently thereupon took on himself the stile of King, from which before he had abstained.

Pontus.

As for the fortunes of the Bithynia it ſelf, I look upon the Bithynians as a Thracian people, whom both Strabo, and Herodotus ſpeak of, as the founders of the name and Nation. Of ſuch a King of theirs as Bithynius, I find ſome mention in my Authors; and poſſibly it might be he who had the leading of the Thyni, or Bithyni, in this expedition; that being the name rather of his Nation, than his proper Family. But for the line of Kings which held out till the flouriſh of the Roman greatneſs, they begun to reign here ſome few generations, before the time of Philip, & Alexander, the Macedonians: by which laſt, having other imployment, & lying out of the road towards Perſia, they were little troubled. Calantus one of Alexanders Captains, made an expedition into their Country, and was vanquiſhed by them: and afterwards they had to do with one of the Lieutenants of Antigonus, (one of Alexanders greateſt Princes;) who though he humbled them for the preſent, yet got he neither title nor poſſeſſion by it. And thus they held it out till the time of Pruſias, ſo ſhuffling with the Macedonian and Syrian Kings, that betwixt both they ſtill preſerved their own eſtates. This Pruſias, when the Romans became ſo conſiderable, as that no danger need be feared from Greece, or Syria, peeced himſelf with them: and having aided them in their wars againſt Philip, and Antiochus both, and moſt unworthily promiſed to deliver Annibal (who had fled to him for ſuccour) unto their Embaſſadors; made all ſure on this ſide. His ſon and Succeſſor Nicomedes, being outed of his kingdom by Mithridates King of Pontus, and reſtored again unto it by the power of the Romans, held it as their Feudatarie, as did Nicomedes, his next Succeſſor, ſurnamed Philometor: who dying without iſſue in the time of Auguſtus, gave his whole Kingdom to the Romans. By them, with the addition of that part of Pontus which lay next unto it, it was made a Province of their Empire, by the name of Pontus and Bithynia, continuing ſo till the diviſion of that Empire into the Eaſtern and Weſtern; when falling to the ſhare of the Conſtantinopolitans, and with them to the power of the Turkiſh Tyrants, who do ſtill poſſeſs it.

2. PONTUS.

PONTUS is bounded on the Eaſt, with Colchis, and Armenia; on the Weſt, with Bithynia, and the River Sangarius; on the North, with the Euxine Sea; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, Paphlagonia, Galatia, and Cappadocia. So that it taketh up the whole length of Anatolia, or Aſia Minor, from Bithynia, to the River Euphrates, which parts it from Armenia Major; but not of anſwerable breadth: and gives name to the Sea adjoyning, à Ponto regione illi adjacente ità appellari, as Ortelius hath it; called from hence Pontus by the Latines, the adjunct of Euxinus comming on another occaſion, which we have ſpoken of before. A Country of a large extent, and therefore divided by the Romans (when Maſters of it) into theſe four parts, viz. Metapontus, or Pontus ſpecially ſo called. 2. Pontus Galaticus. 3. Polemoniacus, and 4. Pontus Cappadocius.

1. PONTUS, ſpecially ſo called, or Metapontus, bordering on Bithynia, and bounded on the Eaſt with the River Parthemius, which divided it from Paphlagonia; had for the chief Cities thereof, 1. Claudiopolis, ſo called in honour of Claudius, the Roman Emperour, as 2. Flaviopolis, in honor of Flavius Veſpaſianus; and 3. Juliopolis, in honor of the Julian family; all midland Towns. 4. Dioſpolis, on the Euxine Sea, ſo called from a Temple conſecrated to Jupiter, of great reſort. 5. Heraclea, a Colonie of the Phocians, called for diſtinctions ſake, (there being many of that name) Heraclea Ponti: memorable of late times for being the ſeat or reſidence of a branch of the Imperial family of the Comneni; when at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians, David and Alexius Comneni fled into theſe parts: the firſt fixing here his Royal reſidence, commanded over this part of Pontus and Paphlagonia; the other poſſeſſing himſelf of Cappadocia and Galatia, made Trabezond his Regal or Imperial City. But theſe two Empires, though of the ſame date, were of different deſtinies: that of Heraclea and Pontus, being partly conquered by the Greek Emperours reſiding at Nice, and partly ſeiſed on by the Turks in the beginning and firſt fortunes of the Ottoman family; the other keeping up the Majeſty and State of an Empire, till the year 1461. when ſubdued by Mahomet the Great. 6. Phillium, at the mouth or influx of the River Phillis, upon which it is ſeated. 7. Amaſtris, the fartheſt Town of this part towards the Eaſt, on the Sea-ſide alſo; once of great ſtrength; but taken by Lucullus, together with Heraclea, Sinope, Amiſus, and other Towns, in the war againſt Mithridates, the great King of Pontus.

2. Eaſtward of Pontus, ſpecially ſo called, or Metapontus, as Juſtin the hiſtorian calls it, lyeth PONTUS GALATICUS, ſo named, becauſe added to Galatia in the time of the Romans. The chief Cities whereof were 1. Sinope, pleaſantly ſeated on a long point or Promontory, ſhooting into the main; remarkable in antient ſtory for the birth and ſepulture of Mithridates, before menrioned; & in the later times for being the chief ſeat of the Iſfendiars, a noble family of the Turks; who had taken it with the reſt of this tract from the Comneni, and held it till the ſame year in which the Empire of Trabezond was ſubdued by Mahomet. Firſt built by the Mileſians, and continuing in a free eſtate, til taken by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus, and made the Metropolis of that kingdom. 2. Caſtamona, the head City of the Principality of the Iſfendiars, before mentioned; preferred by them for ſtrength and conveniency of ſituation, before Heraclea. or Synope. 3. Themiſcyra, now called Favagoria, ſeated on a ſpacious plain near unto the Sea, and antiently giving name to the Province adjoyning. 4. Amaſia, the birth-place of Strabo the Geographer, remarkable in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories for the Martyrdom of St. Theodorus, and of late times for being the reſidence of the eldeſt Sons of the Grand Signeur, ſent hither as ſoon as circumciſed, never returning back again till the death of their Father. Accompted now amongſt the Cities of Cappadocia, and the chief of that Province: a midland Town, as alſo is 5. Cabira, cal'd afterward Diopolis, memorable for the great defeat which Lucullus gave there unto Mithridates; more for the trick which Mithrid. ther put upon Lucullus. For being wel acquainted with the covetouſ-neſs of the Romans, he ſaw no better way to ſave himſelf and the reſt of his forces after the defeat, than to ſcatter his treaſures in the way which he was to take; that by that means his enemies might ſlacken the purſuit to collect the ſpoils, and he preſerve himſelf to another day; and ſo accordingly it proved. 6. Comana, to difference it from another of that name, called Comana Pontica; to which other, being of Cappadocia, or Armenia Minor, Mithridates came in ſafety by the trick aforeſaid, and thence eſcaped unto Tygranes the Armenian King, with 2000 horſe.

3. Eaſtward of Pontus Galaticus lies POLEMONIACUS, ſo calld by the Romans either from Polemonium a chief Town of this tract, or from Polemo the laſt King hereof; after whoſe death this Kingdom came unto the Romans. Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Polemonium on the Sea-ſide, ſpoken of before. 2. Hermanaſſa, a Sea-town alſo. More in the land, 3. Neo-Cæſarea (now Nixaria) the Metropolis of Polemoniacus, when made a Province of it ſelf. 4. Zela, enlarged by Pompey, and called Megalopolis; by Conſtantine laid unto the Province of Helenopontus. 5. Sebaſtia, ſo called in honour of Auguſtus, whom the Greeks called Sebaſtos; a place of great ſtrength, and one of the firſt Towns in the Leſſer Aſia, which held out againſt Tamerlane: in revenge whereof, when he had took it, he cauſed 12000 men, women, & children, to be moſt cruelly buried alive in ſome hollow pits, which he had digged for that purpoſe. Nigh to this City is Mount Stella, where Pompey gave Mithridates his fatal overthrow: where alſo Tamerlane with an Army of 800000 of his Tartars, encountred with Bajazet the Turk coming to the relief of Sebaſtia, with an Army of 500000 fighting men. The iſſue of which fight was this, that Bajazet having loſt 200000 of his ſouldiers, was himſelf taken priſoner, and carried by the inſolent Conqueror in an iron cage, againſt the bars whereof he beat out his brains. 6. Barbaniſſa. 7. Megaloſſus. 8. Gozalvia, &c. not much obſervable in ſtory.

In this part of Pontus is the riſe and fall of the River Thermodon, on the banks whereof the Amazons, a ſort of warlike women, are ſaid to dwell; ſo called either quaſi ἀμάζας, becauſe they uſed to cut off their right pappes, that they might not be an inpediment to their ſhooting; or from ἀ and μάζα, ſine pane, becauſe they uſed not to eat bread; or from ἀμαζὼν, becauſe they uſed to live together. They were originally of Scythia, and accompanied their husbands to theſe parts, about the time of the Scythians firſt irruptions into Aſia, in the time of Seſoſtris King of Ægypt. The leaders of this people into Cappadocia, where Plinos and Scolpythus, two young men of a great houſe, whom a contrary faction had baniſhed. They held a great hand over the Themiſcyri, who inhabited this Region, and the Nations round about them. At laſt they were by treachery all murdered: But their wives now doubly vexed, both with exile and widowhood, and extremity of grief and fear producing its uſual effect, deſperateneſs; they ſet upon the Conquerors, under the conduct of Lampedo and Marpeſia; and not only otherthrew them, but alſo infinitely inlarged their Dominions, and for ſome time continued in great reputation: the names of whom, or of ſo many of them at leaſt as occur in ſtory, we ſhall here ſubjoyn.

The Amazon Queens.

1 Lampedo, Marpeſia, } First Queens of the Amazons in theſe parts.

2 Orteva.

3 Antiopa, whoſe ſiſters Hippolite and Menalippe, challenged Hercules and Theſeus to ſingle combate, and were at laſt hardly vanquiſhed, to their eternal credits.

4. Pentheſilea, who came with a troop of brave Viragos, to the aid of Priamus King of Troy: ſhe invented the Battail axe, and was at laſt ſlain by Pyrrhus, ſon to Achilles. Long after her death reigned Thaleſtris, who came to Alexander, being in Hyrcania, and plainly told him that ſhe came to be his bedfellow; which done ſhe returned; and at laſt by little and little this female Nation was extinct. They uſed in matters of copulation, to go to their neighbouring men thrice in a year: if they brought forth males, they ſent them to their fathers; if females, they kept them, and trained them up in all diſcipline of war and courage. Of theſe more elſewhere.

4. The moſt Eaſtern part of Pontus, called CAPPADOCIUS, for that it bordered on that Province, and for a time was added to it by the Romans; extended from Polemoniacus to Colchis, and the River Euphrates, the utmoſt boundaries of this Country. Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1. Pharnacia, built by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus. 2. Ceraſus, by Conſtantine laid unto the Province of Polemoniacus, from whence Cherries were brought firſt to Rome, An. V. C. 680, called therefore Ceraſa by the Latines; brought firſt into Italy by Lucullus, at the end of his war with Mithridates, no leſs deſerving for that ſervice to be made a God (as wittily Tertullian ſcoffs it) then Bacchus was for his tranſplanting of the Vine from the Eaſtern Countries. 3. Iſchopolis, on the Euxine Sea, as the others are. And ſo is alſo, 4. Trapezus, now Trabezond, the Imperial City of the Comneni, here reigning over Cappadocia, Galatia, and theſe parts of Pontus. An Empire founded firſt by Alexius Comnenus (Nephew of the great Tyrant Andronicus Comnenus by his ſon Emanuel) who at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians, fled into theſe parts, which willingly ſubmitted unto his command, Anno 1200. Here his poſterity flouriſhed in great proſperity, preſerving the Majeſty of the Empire in a better meaſure, than the Conſtantinopolitans themſelves, till the time of David the laſt Emperour; in whoſe reign the City of Trabezond, and therewith all the whole Dominion belonging to it, was taken by Mahomet the Great; the poor Emperor led priſoner unto Greece; and there cruelly murdered. A famous Emporie, and ſpecially for the trade of fiſh, caught by the people on the ſhores of the Euxine Sea; here ſalted, and from hence tranſported in great quantities, to Conſtantinople, Caffa, and other places. And for their better help herein, it is ſaid that there is a Mountain not far from Paphlagonia this City, affording a black ſtone, which being beaten in a Mortar ſerves inſtead of ſalt, wherewith they ſea ſon the fiſh, which they ſend abroad. A City honoured heretofore with the reſidence of the Lord Deputies, or Lieutenants of the Grecian Emperor; for defence of the out-parts of the Euxine againſt the Perſians; and now the Station of ſuch Gallies, as are maintained by the Grand Seigneur, to ſcour the coaſts of the Black Sea, and ſecure their trade. More in the land ſtand 5 Zephiriam, 6 Aza, 7 Cocalia, 8 Cordyle, and many others named in Ptolemy, but not elſe obſervable.

The antient Inhabitants of this Country were called LEUCOSYRI, or White Syrians, governed by a race of Kings deſcended from the Royal houſe of Achmenes King of Perſia. The firſt of them called Mithridates, one of the ſeven Competitors for the Perſian Kingdom, on the death of Cambyſes. But that honour falling on Darius (of which more hereafter) he ſeated himſelf in theſe remote parts of Aſia Minor; the Anceſtor of many great and puiſſant Princes, but none more memorable than one of his own name, Regum Orientis poſt Alexandrum Magnum Maximus, the moſt potent King of all the Eaſt ſince the time of Alexander the great, as my Author hath it. A Prince of great abilities both in war & counſel, and one who longer held it out againſt the Romans, than Pyrrhus, Annibal, and the great Kings of Macedon, and Syria, had done together. This was that famous Mithridates, who being once a friend and confederate of the Romans, took their part againſt Ariſtonicus; who would not conſent to the admiſſion of the Romans unto Pergamus, according to the will of Attalus. Afterwards, conceiving an ambitious hope to obtain the Monarchy of Aſia, in one night he plotted and effected the death of all the Roman Souldiers diſperſed in Anatolia, being in number 150000: in like manner, as in after times the Engliſh, taught perhaps by this example, murdered all the Danes then reſident in England; and the Sicilians maſſacred all the French, inhabiting Sicilia, as we have formerly declared. He diſpoſſeſſed Nicomedes, ſon to Pruſias, King of Bithynia; Ariobarzanes, King of Cappadocia; and Philomones, King of Paphlagonia, of their eſtates; becauſe they perſiſted faithful to his enemies of Rome. He excited the Grecians to rebell, poſſeſſed himſelf of Athens, and divers places of importance in Greece, Thrace, and Aſia; and allured all the Iſles: except Rhodes, from their obedience to the Romans. And finally, having diſturbed their victories, and much ſhaken their eſtate, for the ſpace of 40 years, he was with much ado vanquiſhed by the valour and felicity of L. Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey the Great; three of the greateſt Souldiers that ever the Roman Empire knew. Yet did not the Roman puiſſance ſo much pluck down his proud heart, as the rebellion of his ſon Pharnaces, againſt him; which he no ſooner heard, but he would have poiſoned himſelf; But having formerly ſo uſed his body to a kind of poiſon allaied, (which from his inventing of it, we now call Mithridat) that the venom could not work upon him; he ſlew himſelf. He is ſaid to have been an excellent Scholar, and to have ſpoken perfectly the languages of 22. Nations; the languages of ſo many Nations which were ſubject to him. But neither his learning nor his courage could preſerve him from thoſe common miſeries, which ordinarily attend a falling greatneſs. And ſo ended this long and tedious war, exceeding troubleſom to the Romans, but withall very beneficial. For under colour of having given aid to Mithridates, they took in Crete, Galatia, Colchis, Iberia, and both Armeniaes: inſomuch as it is truly ſaid by L. Florus, totum penè Orientem & Septentrionē involvit, that in his ruines he involved both the Eaſt, and North. But to proceed, after his death the kingdom continued unto his poſterity, but Tributaries to the Romans, til the time of Nero: when Polemo the laſt King hereof dying without iſſue, it was cantoned & divided into many parts, and laid unto the Provinces of Bithynia, Galatia, and Cappadocia; only that part of it which was called Polemoniacus, retaining the dignity of a Province, diſtinct and ſeparate. And ſo it remained til the reign of Conſtantine the great, who changing the names, leſſening the bounds, and increaſing the number of the Provinces; left only the Province of Pontus and Bithynia, in the ſtate he found it. And for the reſt, he caſt it into two new Provinces, that towards the Eaſt, retaining the name, but not the bounds of the old Polemoniacus, wherein were the Cities of Trapezus, Neo-Cæſarea, Ceraſus, Comana Pontica, Palæmonium, and Petræorum Civitas, called afterwards Juſtiniana; of which Neo-Cæſarea was the Metropolis. That towards the Eaſt, ſeparated from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia, by the River Parthemius, he cauſed to be called Helenopontus, by the name of his Mother; and thereunto aſſigned the Cities of Amaſia the Metropolis of it, Ibora, Euchaita, Zela, Andrapus, Ægeum Climacus, Sinope, Amiſus, and Leontopolis. But this diviſion held not long, both being united into one, and called Helenopontus, by Juſtinian; continuing after that a member of the Eaſtern Empire, till the coming of David and Alexius Comneni from Conſtantinople; whereof the one reigned in Heraclea, and the other in Trabezond, as before is ſaid. But their eſtates being overthrown, it remains wholly to the Turks, who do now poſſeſs it.

The Arms of the Emperous of Trabezond, the greateſt Princes of theſe parts, till the Turks ſubdued them, were Or, an Eagle volant Gules.

3. PAPHLAGONIA.

PAPHLAGONIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Halys, by which parted from Cappadocia; on the Weſt, by the River Parthemius, which parteth it from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia; on the North, with that part of the Kingdom of Pontus, which was named Galaticus; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, and Galatia. So called of Paphlago the ſon of Phineus, eſtated in it by his Father, who had newly conquered it.

The Countrey was but ſmall, and of little power, and conſequently the Cities were not very many, and of no great note. The principal of ſuch as were, were 1. Gangra, obſervable for a Council holden there in the Primitive times, Anno 339. commonly called Synodus Gangrenſis. 2. Conica, or Coniata, of ſo convenient a ſituation, that it was entrenched and fortified by Mithridates, when he was maſter of this Countrey. 3. Pompeiopolis, raised out of the foundations of some lesser town, by Pompey the great, and by him so named. 4. Germanopolis. 5. Xoana. 6. Andrapa, called afterwards Nova Claudiopolis, to difference it from another City of that name in Pontus. Galatia.

This Province, though but small in circuit, was heretofore the seat of four different Nations, viz. 1. The Tibareni, of whom it is said, that they never waged war on any enemy, but they faithfully certified them before-hand, of the time and place of their fight. 2. The Heptacometæ. 3. The Mossynoeci, both which were a people so beastly and shameless, that they used to perform the work of generation in publique; not knowing that Multa sunt honestè facta, quæ sunt turpia visu: And 4. the Heneti, to whom the Ventians, as we have already said, do owe their first original. The Kings which ruled in this Country, derived themselves from Philomones, who assisted Priamus King of Troy in his defence against the Greeks; in memory of whom, this Region for a while was called Philomenia. Applying themselves unto the times, they were alwaies favourable to the strongest, serving the Persian, and submitting to Alexander as he passed that way; and so maintained their estate without much molestation, til the time of Mithridates King of Pontus: who finding them firm unto the Romans, then growing to great power in the Lesser Asia, deprived Philomones, then King hereof, and took the kingdom to himself, fortifying the chief towns and places of it. Restored again unto his kingdom by the power of the Romans, he gave it to them at his death. But the Countrey being very much wasted, and most of the Cities of it destroyed and desolated in the course of that war; it was not thought worthy a particular care, and therefore laid unto Galatia. Not reckoned a distinct Province in the time of Saint Peter, who writing to the Jewes, dispersed in Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, Asia, and Bithynia, takes no notice of this Paphlagonia; nor was it otherwise esteemed than as a member of Galatia, in the time of Ptolemie. Afterwards it was joyned to Pontus, by the Emperour Constantine: part of it after that, with some parts of Pontus and Bithynia, being made into a new Province by the Emperour Theodosius, and called Honorius, in honour of his son Honorius; whereof Claudiopolis, a City of Pontus properly so called, was made the Metropolis. But by Justinian the name of Honorius being abolished, and that of Paphlagonia revived again; the whole Country, as before limited, was governed by an Imperial Officer, whom he called Prætor Justinianus: continuing under the command of the Constantinopolitans, till the taking of that City by the Latines. After which made a Member of the Empire of Trabezond, till the conquest of it by the Turks, by whom called Rom.

4. GALATIA.

GALATIA is bounded on the East, with Cappadocia; on the West, with the River Sangarius, and some part of Pontus specially so called, or Metapontus; on the North, with Paphlagonia; on the South, with Lycaonia. So called from the Galls, who having ranged over Greece, passed into Asia, and brought a great part of it under their command: but being broken by Attalus King of Pergamus, and drove out of Mysia and the lesser Phrygia, were at last confined to this Country. It was also called Gallo-Græcia, from that mixture of Galls and Grecians; who uniting into one body when they came for Asia, where commonly called Gallo-Græci. By Suidas, Græco-Galli, and the Country suitably Græco-Gallia. Which mixture of Grecians notwithstanding, the Galls (being both the greater and prevailing Partie) not only preserved their own Language, but in short time made it the common Language of the whole Country. And it continued so till S. Hierom's days, who telleth us in the Preface to his Commentaries on S. Pauls Epistle to this People, that it was Simillima Trevirensium, a language like to that of the Trevers, or people of Triers. A sure and certain Argument of their first Original.

The Country very plentiful of all manner of fruits, even unto voluptuousnes; and providently provided of the stone called the Amethyst, which is said to preserve from drunkennes the man that weareth it. The name doth signifie as much, derived from A privativum, and μέθυσος, ebrius, which cometh from μέθυ, signifying wine.

The people had a custom in their publique funerals, to cast letters fairly written, into that last and fatal fire, wherin the dead body was to be burned; supposing that their friends should read them in the other world. Much given to Sacrifices, in the number and frequency wherof they excelled all Nations: insomuch that Athenæus telleth us of one Ariamnes a rich Galatian, that he feasted the whole Nation for a year together with the Sacrifices of Buls, Sheep, Swine, and other provisions, boyled in great Caldrons made for that purpose, and distributed amongst them in Tents and Boothes erected for that entertainment. A brave flash of a vain-glorious hospitality.

Rivers of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with their neighbouring Nations, as Halys, Sangarius, and some others. The Towns of most consideration in it were, 1. Ancyra, on the banks of the River Sangarius, the chief City of the Tectosages, a Gallick Nation, and the Metropolis of the whole Country; memorable in Church-story for a Synod here held in the Primitive times, An. 299. called Synodus Ancyrana, but of most note at the present for the making of Chamlets, now called Angauri. 2. Olenus. 3. Agrinama, Cities of the same people also. 4. Tavium, or Tanium, (for I find both names) the chief City of the Trocmi or Trogmi, where was a brazen statue of Jupiter, whose temple there was a privileged Sanctuary. 5. Androsia. 6. Phabarena, Cities of that nation also. 7. Thermæ, a Roman Colonie, so called of the hot Baths there; the chief City of the Toliboski, as Ptolemy, or Tolistobogi, as Strabo nameth them. 8. Talachbachora, belonging also to that people.

Besides the Nations above named, here dwelt also the Byceni and Proseliminitæ; who had also their peculiar Cities, mentioned by name in Ptolemy but of little or no observation in the course of story. Of all

Cappadocia. all which Nations, only the Tectosages were of Gallick Original; who with others of their Countrymen under the conduct of Belgius and Brennus, having ransacked Pannonia and Illyricum, fell at last into Macedon; where having tyrannized a while, and laid waste the Country, they were at last vanquished and expulsed by Antigonus Gonatas. After this overthrow, under the conduct of Lammorius and Lutorius, they ferried over the Hellespont, and subdued almost all Asia Minor on this side the Taurus; employed there by those petty Kings and States against one another: their reputation grown so great, that no Prince thought himself secure without their alliance, or able to make war without their assistance. The very Switzers of that age; as mercenary, but more faithful unto those that hired them. But being over-rigorous in compelling their neighbor Princes to become their Tributaries, and too severe in the exacting of their Tributes; they inforced Attalus King of Pergamus, by whose favour they had setled about the Hellespont, to become their enemy. Vanquished by him, they were constrained to contein themselves within the bounds of this Province, which from them in the following times was called Galatia, and Gallogræcia. Here for a while they kept their antient courage and estimation, molesting many times their neighbors, and sometimes setting themselves to hire in the wars of others: but in the end they lost both courage and esteem, and were Galls only in name, retaining little in them of their Ancestors valour. For as most plants and trees lose much of their vertue, being transplanted into another soil: so these men lost their native courage, strength, and hardiness, being weakned by the Asian pleasures and delicacies. And as Tully saith, for a man to be good in other places, is no mastery; but in Asia to lead a temperate life, is indeed praise-worthy: so might one have said to the Galls, that to be couragious and patient of travel amongst the mountains, was no whit to be admired; but to have continued so amidst the delights of Asia, had been indeed meritorious in them. But these men were so far from assailing the Romans in the Capitol, that they lost their own Country to Manlius, a Roman General. A war which Manlius undertook for no other cause, but that they had been aiding to Antiochus against the Romans; nor was there any memorable act performed herein, but that of Chiomena the Kings wife, who being ravished by one of the Roman Captains, took her advantage whilst he busied himself in telling the money agreed on for her ransom, to cut off his head; which she presented to her husband. But Manlius got little honour by this success, not being welcomed with a triumph, at his coming home, according to the Roman custom; because he undertook the war of his own accord, without commission from the Senate. And yet the Senate was content to enjoy the fruits of it, keeping the Galatians as their Subjects, and the Kings their Feudatories. This hapned An. U. C. 564. After which time, I find Deiotarus, by consent of the Romans, to reign here as King: who siding with Pompey in his war against Cæsar, incurred the anger of the Victor; and had died for it, had not Tully pleaded his cause, and obtained his pardon. But he being dead, his Country in the time of Augustus was made a Province of the Empire; Lollius Paulinus being the first President or Governour of it: enlarged afterwards with the addition of Paphlagonia, and some part of Pontus, from whence called Galaticus. Reduced to its first bounds by the Emperour Constantine, and divided into two Provinces by Theodosius; the one called Galatia Prima, the other Salutaris, from its medicinal waters. Of both which Ancyra remained the Metropolis. In the falling of the Eastern Empire it was partly seised on by the Turks; not totally come into their hands, till the subverting of the Empire of Trabezond, upon which it depended. By the Turks at this day called Chianger.

5. CAPPADOCIA.

CAPPADOCIA is bounded on the East, with Armenia Major, and some part of Armenia Minor; on the West, with Galatia; on the North, with Pontus Polemoniacus, and Cappadocius; and on the South, with Lycaonia, and the rest of Armenia Minor. So called of a River, as Plinie telleth us, which runneth betwixt it, and Galatia.

The Country very plentiful of wine, and most kind of fruits, rich in mines of Silver, Brass, Iron, and Allom: affording also besides a mean sort of Alabaster, good store of Chrystal, Jasper, and the Onyx stone. But the greatest wealth hereof is their breed of horses, infinite almost in numbers, and fit for any service they can be put to. And this is universal, in all parts of the Country, but not the other: there being some parts of it mountainous and very barren, especially about the spurs and branches of the Amitaurus; which is a chain of hils thrusting out of the Taurus, and bending themselves unto the North, upon the edges of this Country, and the two Armeniaes. Here is also in this Country the mountain Argæus, said to be of so great an height, that from one of the summits or tops thereof, a man of perspicuous eyes may discern the Euxine on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other.

The People of this Country in the time of the Romans were of ill report, so vicious and lewd of life, so monstrously addicted to all kind of wickedness, that besides the share they had in the old Greek proverb, of τειὰ Καππὰ κάκιστα, they had some proverbs to themselves: Καππαδόκης, & Καππαδόκιον τέρας, that is to say, a man of Cappadocia, and a Cappadocian Monster, being used proverbially, to signifie a man most extremely wicked. The words so used by Gregory Nazianzen, speaking of Gregory or George, the Arian Patriarch of Alexandria, if either Suidas or Erasmus, two right learned Criticks, understand him rightly. And they made good the Proverb in the times of the Gospel: Gregory that bloody butcher of Alexandria, Auxentius, Asterius, Eustathius, principal Patrons of the Arians, and that Arch-Heretick Eunomius, being all of this Country. Yet such is the influence of Christianity, where once entertained, that this lewd disposition of the Cappadocians was so corrected and restrained by it; that this Countrey afforded as many godly Prelates, and couragious Martyrs, as any others whatsoever. Highly commended for it by Nazianzen before remembred; who with Gregory Nyssen, and and St. Basil, all learned and religious Bishops, were all Cappadocians. And amongst many Martyrs of great faith and constancy, St. George, a noble Cappadocian, Colonel or Tribune of souldiers under Diocleſian, more celebrated in the Churches both East and West, than any other Saints in all the Calender, the blessed Apostles and Evangelists excepted only, and for that reason made Patron of the Order of the Garter by K. Ed. the third. Finally, it is reported of these Cappadocians, that they were not only morally wicked, but naturally venemous also; insomuch that if a Serpent did bite any of them, the mans blood was a poison to the snake, and killed him. Cappadocia

Principal Rivers of this Country, were 1. Halys, spoken of before, which had here its fountain and Original; the end of Crœsus Empire both in site and fate, the utmost bound of his dominions on that side: which purposing to pass over in his way to Media, which he intended to invade, he was encountred with, and vanquished by Cyrus the great King of Persia. 2. Iris, which ariseth in this Country also, and passing thorough it, and a part of Pontus, dischanelleth it self, as the other doth, in the Euxine Sea.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Mazaca, beautified and enlarged by the Emperor Tiberius, after the uniting of this Province to the Roman Empire; and in honour of Augustus Cæsar, by him called Cæsarea: the Metropolis of Cappadocia, and the Episcopal See of renowned St. Basil. 2. Nyssa, the See of Gregory, surnamed Nyssenus, the brother of Basil. 3. Nazianzum, the Episcopal See of another Gregory, surnamed Nazianzenus: three men, which as for the piety of their conversation they were not equalled in those times; so for their admirable abilities in all kind of learning, nothing inferiour to the most eminent of the antient Grecians. 4. Tyana, the Metropolis of Cappadocia secunda, after the subdivision of it by the Emperour Valens. 5. Archelais, in the Præfecture of Garduacreta, so called from Archelaus a Cappadocian King, the founder or repairer of it. 6. Comana, for distinctions sake called Comana Cappadocia, to difference it from another of that name in Pontus; by Ptolemie placed, I know not why, in Armenia Minor, as is also Nyssa before mentioned. Memorable in old times for a Temple consecrated to Bellona, whose Priests, and other inferiour Officers of both Sexes, amounted in the time of Strabo to 6000 and upward; for maintenance of whom the Priests received the Revenue of the Region next adjoyning to it; in honour next unto the King, and commonly of the same kinred also. 7. Dio-Cæsarea; called formerly Cabira, as we find in Strabo. 8. Faustinopolis, so called in honour of Faustina, wife of the Emperour Antoninus. 9. Andraca. 10. Phiara, 11. Salambria. 12. Campe, spoken of by Ptolemie, with many others as obscure, and not worth the naming. Of more note, though not found in the antient Writers, is 13. Erzirum, situate on the very confines of the Greater Armenia, for that cause made the Rendez-vous, or place of meeting for the Turkish Souldiers when there is any expedition in hand against the Persian; at which place also after the ending of the war for the present year, they are disbanded and sent home to their several quarters. And 14. Pterium, not named in Ptolemie; but memorable for the great battel fought in sight thereof, between Crœsus King of Lydia, and Cyrus of Persia; in which Crœsus having lost the field, and with it his Kingdom, found the Oracle true (though not in the sense which he expected) that Crœsus passing over the River Halys, should overthrow a great estate, as indeed he did; but it was his own, and not the Persians.

That the Cappadocians are derived from Togarma, the Son of Gomer, hath been so fully proved already in our General Preface, that we shall not trouble our selves to repeat it here: Nor shall we need to say more in confuting of their opinion, who would fetch Capithorim out of Egypt from the rest of his brethren, to plant him in this Country, than hath there been said. Their fortunes in the former times I find little of: subjected by the Persian, with the rest of Asia Minor, after the overthrow of Crœsus, who before had given the law unto it, as to the Phrygians, Paphlagonians, Bithynians, Mysians, and others of the neighbouring Nations. By Cyrus given, together with Atossa his Sister, to Pharnaces a noble Persian, who had saved him from the fury of a ravenous Lion running upon him with full mouth, as he was a hunting. A nobly loyalty, and no less royally rewarded. From him descended Ariarathes King hereof in the time of Alexander the Great; continuing stedfast in his duty to the Crown of Persia, when almost all the rest of the Kings of Asia yeelded to the Enemy. Nor did Alexander call him to account in his march for Persia. But after his decease, Perdiccas having the command of the Army, set upon him, vanquished him, and most cruelly crucified him, together with as many of his kinred as could be found. One of his sons, who fortunately had escaped this slaughter, spying his time, when the Macedonians were at wars amongst themselves, recovered his estate again, and passed it over to his off-spring: continuing in his line, without any subjection, till the time of that Ariobarzanes, who by Mithridates was deprived of his dominion, as was told before. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he became their Homager, holding, as did his Successors, by their curtesie only: Continuing yet in state of Kings, till the death of Archelaus the last King hereof. Who having angred Tiberius for not attending on him when he lived at Rhodes, during the life-time of Augustus, as did others of the tributary States and Princes; was by him then possessed of the Empire, cited unto Rome under colour of projecting somewhat against the State. Where the old Prince, even spent with Age, the Gout, and some other diseases, had without question been condemned by the servile Senate; but that one of the witnesses deposed, that he had said, that if ever he went back into Cappadocia, Tiberius should find, quales sibi nervi essent, what a man he was. Which moved such a laughter in the Senate, the old King being neither able to sit nor stand, that he was dismissed: Tiberius thinking that he could not punish him more effectually, than to let him live. A favour which the old King construed to the best, and in the way of gratitude, bequeathed his kingdom at his death to the Empire of Rome. Being added to the Roman Empire, it was exceedingly inlarged by the addition of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Pontus: and so it stood in the time of

Armenia Minor.

Ptolemy, who reckoneth Pontus Galaticus, Cappadocius, and Polemoniacus, as parts and Members of this Province. Divided beſides thoſe into theſe eight Præfectures, that is to ſay, Clanianienſis, Sargaranſene, Gardiocreta, Cilicia, Tyanidis, Lycaonia, Antiochiana, and Cataonia. But Pontus, Lycaonia, and Antiochiana (he means Piſidia as I take it) being made Provinces of themſelves, by the Emperour Conſtantine; it returned unto its natural bounds, and made one Province of the Empire, of which Caſarea, as is ſaid before, was the Metropolitan: and ſo remained, till the Emperour Valens, a great Patron of the Arian faction, of purpoſe to deſpight St. Baſil, who oppoſed that Hereſie, created another Province out of it, called Cappadocia ſecunda, whereof the Metropolis was Tyana. After this it continued part of the Eaſtern Empire, til the erecting of the new Empire of Trabezond; together with which it fell unto the hands of the Turks; by whom the whole Province with the addition of Pontus, is now called Amaſia, after the name of that City, which the Beglerbeg of Anatolia honoureth with his reſidence; and is ſaid to yield yearly to the Grand Seigneur 60000 Ducats.

6. ARMENIA MINOR.

ARMENIA MINOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Major; on the South, with Mount Taurus, which ſeparates it from Cilicia; on the Weſt, and North, with a long chain of Hills, called Mons Scordiſcus, by ſome called Mons Amanus, by others Anti-Taurus, according to the change of places; by which divided from Cappadocia. Of the reaſon of the name hereafter.

The Country of the ſame nature with Cappadocia, before deſcribed; in ſome parts overgrown with Mountains, by which, and by the River Euphrates ſo incloſed and fenced, that it is difficult of entrance: in others pleaſant and delightfull, well watered with ſweet ſtreams, and ſome fair Rivers iſſuing out of the Mountains, the principal whereof is Melas, ſo called from the blackneſs of the water thereof, which falleth into the Euphrates.

Divided in the time of the Romans into theſe four Regions, that is to ſay, Laviana, Aravena, Melitene, lying on the Euphrates; Mariana more within the land towards Cappadocia: each of which had their ſeveral Cities, whoſe names are to be found in Ptolemie. The principal 1. Melitene, the chief City of the Region ſo called, and the Metropolis of the leſſer Armenia. Called afterwards Malaxia, and now Suur: the territory thereof abounding in Oyl and Wine, not inferiour to the beſt of Greece. The City ſaid by Onuphrius to be a Colony of the Romans; much ſpoken of by Euſebius, and other writers of Eccleſiaſtical ſtory, for the piety of the Chriſtians there inhabiting in the fiery times of Perſecution. 2. Nicopolis, and 3. Oromandus in the Mountain Countries; the former built by Pompey, in memory of his victory there obtained againſt the forces of Tigranes, King of Syria, and both Armenias. 4. Garnace, a well-fortified town, mentioned by Tacitus in the twelfth book of his Annals, and by him called Gorneas. 5. Cucuſun, and 6. Arabyſſus, memorable for the exile of St. Chryſoſtom, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, confined unto theſe places by the power and malice of the Empreſs Eudoxia, by whom hated for his Orthodoxie in points of faith; who dying afterwards at Comana of Cappadocia, was there interred.

This Country was once part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians by their incurſions and Colonies poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and gave unto it the name of Armenia Minor: continuing part of their eſtate till the war of Mithridates againſt the Romans; who being diſcomfited by Lucullus, fled with two thouſand horſe to the Court of Tigranes the Armenian, who had maried his daughter. By whom at firſt neglected, and not ſuffered to come into his preſence; but afterwards on the apprehenſion of the common danger, more eſteemed and ſet by: inſomuch that his royal entertainment there, and the refuſal of Tigranes to yeeld him up when required by the Romans, occaſioned Lucullus to bring his forces into theſe parts, ſubduing all before him to the banks of Euphrates. His victories being ſeconded by Pompey, and confirmed by Auguſtus, this Country was made a Province of the Roman Empire: the greater Armenia, lying on the other ſide of that River, though conquered alſo in that war, not being taken into the accompt of the Roman Provinces, till the time of Trajan; Auguſtus thinking it an high point of wiſdom (as no doubt it was) not to extend the Empire beyond thoſe banks. After this it continued Roman, till the declining times of the Eaſtern Empire; when waſted by the Perſians, and ſubdued by the Turks; by whom called Genech, or as ſome ſay Pegia.

And ſo much of the Provinces of the Pontick Dioceſe, lying within Anatolia, or Aſia Minor; converted to the Chriſtian faith by the two great Apoſtles of the Jews and Gentiles; as appeareth by St. Paul's Epiſtle to the Galatians, and St. Peter's to the Strangers diſperſed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia.

7. ASIA PROPRIA.

Come we now to the ASIAN Dioceſe, and firſt to that part thereof which Ptolemy and others (for the reaſons ſpoken of before) call Aſia Propria. Antiently the moſt rich and flouriſhing part of all this Peninſula; and ſo affirmed to be by Tullie, who telleth us that the tributes which the Romans had from other places, hardly ſufficed to defray the publick charges for defence thereof, Aſia verò tam opima eſt & fertilis, ut & ubertate agrorum, & varietate fructuum, & magnitudine paſtionis, & multitudine earum rerum quæ exportentur, facilè omnibus terris antecellat. But as for Aſia (ſaith he) it is ſo fertile and ſo rich, that for the fruitfulneſs of the fields, variety of fruits, largneſs of paſture-grounds, and quantity of commodities which were brought from thence, it very eaſily excelled all other Countreys. The fortunes of the ſeveral Provinces we ſhall ſee anon. Brought under the command of the Perſians, they continued ſubject to that Crown, for ſome generations: but at laſt taken from them by the Grecians, under the proſperous enſigns of victorious Alexander. After whoſe deceaſe, the Empire being divided among his Captains, Aſia fell to the ſhare of Antigonus, whoſe ſon Demetrius ſeized on the Kingdom of Macedonia, and left Aſia to Seleucus Nicanor, King of Syria and the Eaſt, being alſo one of Alexanders heirs. The ſixt from this Seleucus, was Antiochus called the Great, who waging war with young Ptolomy Philopater, King of Egypt, committed by his father to the protection of the Romans; and otherwiſe practiſing againſt their eſtate, provoked the Senate of Rome to ſend Scipio (ſurnamed from his Aſian victories) Aſiaticus, againſt him; who compelled him to forſake Aſia, which the Romans preſently took into their poſſeſſions. But finding it agreeable to the preſent eſtate of their Affairs, (the kingdom of Macedonia ſtanding in their way) to make further uſe of Eumenes King of Pergamus, and the people of Rhodes, who had been aiding to them in the former war, they gave unto Eumenes the Provinces of Lycaonia, Phrygia, Myſia, Ionia, Lydia; Lycia and Caria to the Rhodians: knowing full well, that they could eaſily take them back again, when they ſaw occaſion. More hereof in the ſtory of the Kings of Pergamus; on the deceaſe of Attalus the laſt King thereof, theſe Provinces returning fully to the power of the Romans. Phrygia minor.

It contained only after the accompt of Cicero, the Provinces of Phrygia, Myſia, Caria, Lydia, as he reckoneth them up in his Oration for Flaccus: computing the two Phrygias for one Province only, and comprehending Æolis and Ionia, under that of Lydia. But for our more punctual and particular proceeding in it, we will conſider it as divided into 1 Phrygia Minor. 2 Phrygia Major. 3 Myſia. 4 Æolis and Ionia, or Aſia more eſpecially ſo called. 5 Lydia, and 6 Caria.

8. PHRYGIA MINOR.

PHRYGIA MINOR, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Myſia, interpoſing betwixt it and the Greater Phrygia; on the Weſt, with the Helleſpont; on the North, with the Propontis; on the South, with the Ægean Sea. Called Phrygia from Phryx a River in the Greater Phrygia; or as ſome ſay, from Phryxus, the ſon of Athamas King of Thebes, who flying from the treacherous ſnares of his Mother-in-law, did here ſeat himſelf. Minor was added to it to diſtinguiſh it from the other Phrygia, which being the bigger of the two had the name of Major. It was alſo called Phrygia Helleſpontiaca, from its ſituation on that Streight: and Troas, from Troas the chief City of it; by which name it occurreth in the book of the Acts. It was called alſo Epictetus, but the reaſon of the name I find not, except it came from the Epicteti, a People dwelling on the Eaſt parts of Bithynia, and conſequently near this place.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. Scamander, on whoſe Banks ſtood the renowned City of Troy, honoured by Heſiod with the title of Divine Scamander: in which the Virgins of this Countrey a little before they were to be maried, uſed to bath themſelves, and to ſay theſe words, λαβε σ μῦ Σκαμανδρε παρθενίαν, that is to ſay, Take O Scamander my Virginity. Which opportunity Cimon an Athenian taking, clapped a Coronet of Reeds upon his head, like a River-god, and ſo deflowred Callirhoe a noble Virgin, then betrothed to another: occaſioning thereby the leaving off of this fooliſh cuſtome. It was alſo called Xanthus by the Poets, Xanthumq́ bibiſſent, as in Virgil; and watered a little Region called Lycia, whence Ovid in his firſt Epiſtle uſeth Lyciam haſtam, (Sanguine Tlepolemus Lyciam tepefecerat haſtam) to ſignifie a Trojan Spear. But of this more anon in the greater Lycia. 2. Æſapus, parting this little Region from the Leſſer Myſia, the boundary of it on the North; as the Promontory called Lectium, is the furtheſt point of it towards the South. 3. Simoeis, now called Simores, falling into the Helleſpont not far from the Promontorie called Rhœteum (memorable for the Statue and Sepulchre of Ajax;) but riſing out of Mount Ida, an hill of this Region, on which Paris (being by his Father expoſed to the fury of wild Beaſts) judged the controverſy of the golden ball in favour of Venus; reſpecting neither the great riches of Juno, nor the divine wiſdom of Pallas, but tranſported with a ſenſual delight, fatal in the end to the whole Country.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Dardanum, or Dardania, the Town and Patrimony of Æneas. 2. Aſſus, mentioned Acts 20. v. 13. by Plinie called Apollonia; who telleth us that the earth about it is of ſuch a nature, that it will conſume a dead body in forty days. 3. Trajanopolis, whoſe name declareth its founder. 4. Lyrneſſus, on the Sea-ſide, oppoſite to the Iſle of Lesbos, deſtroyed by Achilles and the Greeks in the very firſt beginnings of the Trojan war, who brought thence amongſt other captives the Lady Briſeis, reſerved by Achilles to himſelf for his part of the bootie, and after taken from him by Agamemnon, which cauſed ſuch a deep diſpleaſure in him, that he would not goe into the field, till ſhe were reſtored. 5. Sigæum, the Port-town to Troy, near a noted Promontory of the ſame name. 6. Troy, ſituate on the River Scamander, the beauty and glory of the Eaſt; called Ilium, and Pergamus for the reaſon to be ſhewn anon. A famous Town, from the people whereof, all Nations deſire to fetch their original. The beauty of it may be (as ſome write) yet ſeen in the ruines, which with a kind of majeſty entertain the beholder: the walls of large circuit, conſiſting of a black hard ſtone cut four-ſquare; ſome remnants of the Turrets which ſtood on the walls, and the fragments of great Marble Tombs and monuments of curious workmanſhip. But certainly theſe are not the ruines of that Ilium, which was deſtroyed by the Grecians, but 7. Troas, or New Troy, built ſome four miles from the ſituation of the old, by Lyſimachus, one of Alexanders Captains; who peopled it from the neighbouring Cities, and called it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in honour of Alexander the Great, who begun the work, but lived not to bring it to any perfection. In following times called

Phrygia minor.

Troas only, and by that name mentioned Acts 20. v. 6. then the Metropolis of this Province, now a ruine only; but every day made more ruinous than other by the Turks, who carry daily the ſtones and Pillars of it to Conſtantinople, to adorn the houſes of the Baſſas. 7. Scamandria, a ſtrong piece, but of later foundation; cunningly ſurpriſed by Ottoman the firſt King of the Turks, in the time of a funeral. Now concerning old Ilium, the buildings, glories, and fall of it, take this ſtory with you.

The KINGS of TROY.

A. M.

2487 1 Dardanus, ſon to Corinthus King of Corinth, having killed his brother Jaſius, fled into this Country, where he built this City, calling it Dardania; according to that verſe of Virgil, Dardanus Iliacæ primus pater urbis, & autor.

Both of Troy Town, and Trojan race,
Dardanus the firſt founder was.

2518 2 Erichthonius, of whom little memorable. 75.

2593 3 Tros, the ſon of Erichthonius, who ſo much beautified and enlarged the City of Dardania, that from thenceforth it was called Troja, and the people Troës. By ſupporting the unnatural malice of Saturn againſt his ſon Jupiter, he loſt his own ſon Ganimedes: who being taken priſoner by Jupiter, who carried the Eagle for his Enſign, is by the Poets ſaid to have been ſnatched up to Heaven by an Eagle. 60.

2653 4 Ilus, the ſon of Tros, who built the Regal Palace called Ilium; and did withall ſo enlarge the City, and added ſo much Ornament and beauty to it, that it is frequently called Ilium, and the People Iliaci. The many Towers and Turrets of it, were of his erection, which being by the Greeks called Πύργοι, and ſometimes Πύργαμα, occaſioned the whole City to be called Pergamus. 54.

2707 5 Laomedon, who new-built Troy: which afterwards Hercules and the Grecians (juſtly conceiving diſpleaſure againſt the treacherous King) twice took and defaced; Laomedon himſelf being ſlain the later time. 36.

2743 6 Priamus, who re-edified Troy; but giving leave to his ſon Paris to raviſh Helena, wife to Menelaus King of Sparta, forced the Greeks to renew their antient quarrel: who after a ten years ſiege, forced the Town, having loſt of their own men 860000. and killed 666000 of the Trojans, and their Aſſociates, A.M. 2783. So as that of Ovid was moſt true,

Jam ſeges eſt ubi Troja fuit, reſecandaq; falce, Luxuriat Phrygio ſanguine pinguis humus.
Corn fit for ſithes now grows where Troy once ſtood,
And the ſoyl's fatted with the Phrygian bloud.

Concerning the taking of this Town, two things are to be conſidered. Firſt, whether the Grecians in theſe ten years lay continually before it: and it ſeems they did not; but that rather they did beat up and down, waſting the Country, and robbing the Seas for the firſt nine years; and in the tenth only laid a formal ſiege. This is the more probable, becauſe that in the tenth year of the war, Priam is recorded by Homer in the third of his Iliads, to have ſat on a high Tower, and to have learned of Helen the names and qualities of the Greek Commanders: which he could not be thought ignorant of, if they had ſo long together lain in eye-reach. Secondly, by what means the Town was taken: and here we find a difference. For ſome Hiſtorians tell us, that Æneas and Antenor, being either weary of the war, or diſcontended that it was not managed by their ſole advice, or otherwiſe corrupted by the Grecians, betrayed it to the enemy: but this Virgil could not brook, as prejudicial to his Æneas, whom he intended to make the pattern of a compleat Prince. He therefore telleth us of a wooden-horſe, wherein divers of the Greek Princes lay hidden, which by Sinon, one of the Grecians, was brought to Troy-gates: and that the people deſirous of that monument of the enemies flight, made a breach in their walls, the gate not being high enough to receive it. And that this fiction of Virgil might be grounded on hiſtory, it is thought by ſome, that over the Scæan Gate where the Greeks entred, was the portraiture of a large and ſtately horſe: and by others, that the walls were battered by a wooden Engin called an Horſe, as the Romans in after-ages uſed a like Engin called a Ram. Neither of which is much improbable: but with me perſwade not the integrity of Antenor or Æneas, for whoſe ſakes the fable of the wooden horſe was firſt invented.

The City being thus deſtroyed, the Trojans who remained in the Country, when Æneas and Antenor had forſaken it, began to think of ſome other place for their habitation: which having often ſhifted, they fixed at laſt by advice of an Oracle, ſome four miles from the former; giving it the name of Ilium. A poor and ſorry village when Alexander came thither; who in the Temple of Minerva, (the only one they had, and a mean one too) offered up his own ſhield, and took down another, which he uſed after in his fights againſt the Perſians; honouring it with gifts, and promiſing the people to rebuild and inlarge their City. But what he lived not to make good was performed by Lyſimachus, who gave it the name of Alexandria, next called the Alexandrian Troas, at laſt Troas ſimply. A free City it continued till the war of Mithridates againſt the Romans; in the courſe whereof Fimbria a Roman Queſtor having ſeditiouſly ſlain the Conſul Valerius Flaccus in Bithynia, and made himſelf Maſter of the Army; being refuſed entrance here as a thief and a rebel, beſieged the City, and in the ſpace of eleven days took it. And when he boaſted that he had done as much in eleven dayes as Agamemnon and the Greeks could do in as many years, one of the Ilians tartly anſwered, That they wanted ted an Hector to defend them. Afterwards Julius Cæsar, emulous of Alexanders attempts, and descended from Julus of Trojan race, restored them to their liberty, and inlarged their territories: a Colonie, and an University of the Romans of no mean esteem. But time and war, and the barbarity of the Turks, have brought it unto rubbish, as before was said. Phrygia major.

In the distributing of the Provinces of the Roman Empire, this little Region, with that of Mysia Helleſpontiaca adjoining to it, made up the Province called by the name of Helleſpontus, subject with Æolis, Ionia, and the Asian Isles, to the exempt jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia. Following the fortunes of Constantinople till the taking of that City by the Latines, it became then subject to the Greek Emperors residing at Nice; conquered not long after by the Turks of the Selzuccian family. In the division of whose Empire on the death of the second Aladine, the whole Province of Helleſpont, with part of the greater Mysia, and Æolis, adjoining to them, and some part of Lydia, were seized upon by Carasus, a man of great power amongst the Turks, who here erected a small kingdom, called from him Carasia, or Caraſi-illi; long since swallowed up by the Ottoman race, in the time of Orchanes, son of Ottoman, and the second King of that house.

9. PHRYGIA MAJOR.

PHRYGIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Galatia; on the West, with Mysia, interposed betwixt it and the lesser Phrygia; on the North, with Metapontus, or Pontus specially so called; on the South, with Lydia. Called Phrygia for the reasons before laid down; the word Major being added for distinctions sake, because the greater of the two.

The People of this Country were antiently more superstitious than the other Asians, as appeareth by the rites used in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and some other Godesses: said to be also the Inventors of Augury, and other kinds of Divination. And yet for the most part men of after-wits, and all for had I wist; whence the Proverb, Sero sapiunt Phryges, applyed to those who wanted forecast, and knew better to lament misfortunes than to keep them off; and used not to bethink themselves of what would follow, till it was too late. A people noted for effeminacy and lightness of conversation; and for fear they should not of themselves be wanton enough, their very Musick was so fitted as to dispose them to lasciviousness. Where by the way, I find three sorts of Musick spoken of amongst the Antients: the first, that which Aristotle calleth ἠθικὸν, because it setled and composed the affections; and Boëtius, the Lydian Musick, because much used by that people, before corrupted by long ease and ill example. It consisted principally of long notes or Spondees, such as is that supposed to be which Elisha called for, Kings 1.ch.3.v.15. to invite the spirit of prophesie to him; and was played by David before Saul, to drive away the ill spirit from him. And of this sort was the Church-Musick of the Primitive times, fitted to calm mens passions, and raise their devotions; ut per oblectamenta aurium (as Saint Augustine hath it) assurgat animus ad pietatis affectum, that by the pleasure of the ears the passions might be calmed, and the soul inflamed with pious and devout affections. The second sort is that which Aristotle calleth πρακτικὸν, or Active, (as the other ἠθικὸν or moral) commending it before the other in the education of youth, because more stirring them to action; consisting of Dactiles, or one long note, and two short ones, by him and Boëtius both called Dorian, as most peculiar to that people. The third and last by the Philosopher called ἐνθουσιαστικὸν, or ravishing, because it unhingeth the affections, and stirreth men to lascivious gestures, and wanton thoughts; consisting of short notes or Tribrachies. Boëtius terms it Phrygian, as most in use amongst this loose and ungoverned nation; such as the French Musick in our age. A sort of Musick forbidden to be used by Aristotle, but upon the Theatre, for contentation of the rude and unpolished people, by reason of that influence which it had upon mens behaviour. Mutatâ Musica (saith the Orator) mutantur & mores; Curandum itaq; ut Musica quàm gravissima & sedatissima retineatur; that is to say, the change of Musick maketh an alteration of manners; care therefore to be taken in the Common-Wealth, that the Musick be composed and grave, and such only used. But see how far this fidling humor hath led me out of the way; I return again.

The Country very rich and pleasant, well watered with the Rivers Sangarius and Marsyas. Of which the former hath its spring or fountain in this Country, but his fall in the Euxine; on the banks whereof standeth the City Gordium, and many others of good note. The later was so called from one Marsyas, who striving with Apollo for preheminence in Musick, was by him flead; which fact (say the Poets) was so lamented, that from the tears of the mourners grew this River. The chief Towns 1 Gordion, the seat of Gordius, who from a plowman being raised and chosen King of this Kingdom, placed the furniture of his wain and Oxen in the Temple of Apollo, tied in such a knot, that the Monarchy of the world was promised to him that could untie it; which when Alexander had tried and could not undo it, he cut it with his sword. 2 Midæum, the seat of Midas, son to this Gordius, who being not a little covetous, intreated of Bacchus, that what ever he touched should be turned into gold; which petition granted, he was almost starved, his very victual turned into gold, 'til he had repealed his wish; and afterward for preferring Pan's Pipe before Apollo's Harp, his head was adorned with a comely pair of Asses ears. 3. Colosse, where dwelt the Colossians, to whom Saint Paul writ one of his Epistles. 4. Pessinus, where the Godess Cybele being worshipped, was called Dea Pessinuncia. The Romans were once told by an Oracle, that they should be Lords of the world, if they could get this Godess into their possession. Hereupon they send to the Phrygians to demand it. The Phrygians willing to please a potent neighbour, especially the Romans, being their Country-men, as descended from Æneas and his Trojans, granted their request, and the Godess is shipp'd away for Rome. But behold the unluckinesse of fortune. The Ship, Godess and all made a stand in Tiber; neither could it be advanced forward by force or art. It hapned that one of the Vestal Virgins named Claudia, being suspected of unchastity, resolved to put her self upon this experiment: and fastning her girdle to the ship, prayed to the Godess, that if she were causelesly suspected, the ship might be suffered to go forward, which was no sooner heard than granted, Claudia drawing the ship up the water to Rome, where I leave the people wondering at the miracle, as well they might. But to return unto the City, it stands in the borders of Galatia, and is by some made to be the City of Gordius, and the Gordian knot placed in it also; but neither rightly. Not far off stood the mountain Dindyme, overlooking the City, in which the Priests of Cybele had their usual residence, thence called Dindymene. 5 Apamea, situate not far from the banks of Meander, antiently a most flourishing Emporie, and the Metropolis of the whole Countrey, till Constantine divided it into the two Provinces of Salutaris, and Pacatiana: making 6 Synnada, the Metropolis of the first. 7 Hierapolis, and 8 Laodicea, two noted Cities in those times, the principal of the other Province. 9 Juliopolis, and 10 Tiberiopolis, so called from the Emperours to whose honour dedicated. 11 Dorylæum, &c. Not known unto the antient Writers, but of more note in modern stories, are 1. Sagnta, the habitation of Etrogul, Father of Ottoman the first King of the Turks. 2 Chara-chisar, by the Grecians called Melampyrgus, or the Black Tower. 3 Billexuga, 4 Einegiol, places of consequence and importance, taken by the said Ottoman from the Christians, in the first rise of his fortunes.

As for the Phrygians, they descended (as was shewn before) from Gomer the eldest son of Japhet, and Askenaz the eldest son of Gomer: of which, Gomer first placed himself in the mountainous Countries of Albania, and afterwards in the more pleasant plains of the Greater Phrygia, where the City of Cimmeris (the posterity of Gomer being generally called Cimmerians) did preserve his memory. And as for Askenaz, he first took up his dwelling in the Lesser Phrygia, and the banks of the Hellespont; where was antiently a City and Territory called Ascania, some Isles adjoining called Insulæ Ascaniæ, the name of Ascanius also very frequent in Troy it self. An antient people they were doubtless, esteemed the antientest of the world by Psamnuticus King of Egypt, upon this experiment. Desirous to inform himself to what Nation the privilege of Antiquity did of right belong, he caused two children to be kept in a fold, where they were suckled by goats; all mankind being prohibited upon very great penalties, to have recourse to them. All the language which the children learned from their speechlesse nurses, was no more than Bec, which in the Phrygian language signifieth bread; and being of no signification at all in any other which was then known to the Egyptians, gave up the Verdict on their side. But other Nations of the world not yielding to this sentence, by a Writ of Errour, or an Ad melius inquirendum, impannell'd a new Jurie; wherein it was pronounced on the Scythians side, Scytharum gens semper antiquissima. Where by the way, Goropius Becanus makes the like use of this experiment, to prove the High-Dutch to be the Original or Mother-tongue of the world: because Becker in that language signifieth, as with us, a Baker, or a maker of Bread. In this Countrey reigned Niobe, who preferring her self before Latona, the mother of Phœbus and Diana, had her children slain before her face by an unseen means, and was her self turned into a stone, as the Poets fable. Here also reigned Tantalus, who being rich, and wanting wisdom to make use of it, is feigned to stand in hell up to the chin in water, and that too under a tree whose fruit toucheth his lips; yet both the one and the other flie from him, when he offereth at them. Of which thus Ovid,

Tibi Tantale nullæ
Deprenduntur aquæ, quæq; imminet, effugit arbor.

In English thus,

Thou canst not, Tantalus, those waters tast,
The tree just at thy lips, flies off as fast.

But this race of Kings being worn out by the tyranny of time or war, the Phrygians were made subject to the Kings of Lydia; continuing under their command till the conquest of Lydia by the Persians, with which they fell together to the Crown thereof, not made the stronger by the accession of effeminate Subjects. Gained from them by the sword of Alexander, they fell unto Antigonus one of his great Captains, and on his overthrow at the battel of Ipsus, to Seleucus the Conquerour, the first King of that race: following the same fortune after that with the rest of Asia, til they came to be possessed by the Romans, and made a Province of that Empire. But Constantine laying to it the Greater Mysia, made two Provinces of it: the one called Salutaris, from some miraculous cures there wrought by the Arch-Angel Michael, as was then generally believed; the other called Pacatiana, from Pacatianus, who in the time of the said Constantine was Prafect for the Pratorium of the East, and divers years before had begun his honors with the Lieutenantship of Britain. In the declining of the Constantinopolitans, it became a prey unto the Turks of the Selzuccian Family; possessed by them till the death of Aladine, the last King of that race: when seized upon, together with the Greater Mysia, and those parts of Lydia which lay next unto it, by Aidin, a great Turkish Prince, and made a peculiar Kingdom, called by his name Aidinia, or Aidin-Illi; extorted shortly from his heirs by the house of Ottoman.

10. MYSIA.

Interposed betwixt the two Phrygias lyeth the Countrey of MYSIA, bounded on the East, with Phrygia Major; on the West, with Phrygia Minor, and the Ægean Sea; on the North, with parts of Bithynia, Bithynia, Propontis, and the Helleſpont; and on the South, with part of Lydia, Æolis, and the Ægean. So called from the Myſians, the Inhabitants of it. Myſia.

Whether theſe Myſians were originally a Phrygian Nation, or ſome inter-lopers which thruſt in afterwards amongſt them, I find not determined. Moſt probable it is, they were natural Phrygians; being as ſuperſtitious in the worſhip of their ſeveral Deities, as any Phrygian of them all; and that they had this name given them by the Lydians, from the abundance of Beech-trees which grow amongſt them, by them called Myſæ. A people of ſo baſe and contemptible quality, that it grew into a common proverb to call a fellow of no worth, Myſiorum poſtremus.

The principal Mountain of this Country is that called Olympus, ſituate in the north-parts hereof bordering towards Bithynia: which as it is called Olympus Myſius, to difference it from Olympus in Greece; ſo the people of the Greater Myſia, where this Mountain is, are called Olympeni, to difference them from the Myſii or Mœſi of Europe. And as for Rivers, thoſe of moſt note beſides Æſopus, parting it from Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia, are 1. Caicus, on whoſe banks ſtands the City of Pergamus, and from thence paſſeth into the Ægean Sea, at the Bay of Elæa; and 2. the famous River of Granicus, which hath his fountain in Myſia Major, and paſſing through Myſia Minor, falleth into the Propontis. A River memorable for the Victory which Alexander obtained on the banks hereof, in his firſt eſſay againſt the Perſians: by whom upon the firſt noiſe of his preparations he was ſo ſlighted, that Darius K. of Perſia, gave command to his Lieutenants reſiding in Aſia Minor, that they ſhould take him alive, whip him with rods, and ſo convey him to his preſence; A notable example of the pride and folly of the Perſians. But Alexander ſoon taught them another leſſon. For though the Perſians were poſſeſſed of the higher banks of the River, with an intent to ſtop his paſſage; yet he reſolved to charge them in the face of their ſtrength: knowing full well, that if he could beat them on a place of ſo great advantage, he ſhould not only leſſen them in point of reputation, but beget an opinion of himſelf that he was invincible. And ſo accordingly it proved, the Perſians being vanquiſhed by him, and all the Kingdoms and Provinces of this Aſia, ſubmitting to him on the noiſe of the Victory (as an Enemy not to be reſiſted upon equal terms) ſome few Towns excepted. And therefore it was wiſely adviſed by Machiavel, that he who takes upon him to defend a paſſage, ſhould with his ableſt forces oppoſe the Aſſailant; becauſe in all Invaſions where the Nations invaded have been beaten upon a great advantage of place, as defence of Rivers, Streights, and Mountains, they do not only diſhearten their Souldiers from dealing afterwards on even ground with that enemy, but leave no hope unto their fellows and partakers, of being ſuccoured and defended by ſuch weak Protectors. Which caution if the Perſian Commanders had obſerved either here, or at Pylæ Ciliciæ, ſpoken of hereafter, Alexander had not ſo eaſily ſubverted the Perſian Monarchy. But the fatal period of it was now drawing on, and the men either naturally Cowards, or elſe prodigiouſly beſotted.

It is divided commonly into Myſia Minor, or the Leſſer Myſia, which lying on the Weſt towards Troas and the Helleſpont, is called ſometimes Myſia Helleſpontiaca; and joyned unto Troas by the Emperour Conſtantine, made up that Province which he called the Conſular Helleſpont: and Myſia Major, called from Olympus which was in it, Myſia Olympena, and the Inhabitants Olympeni; which joyned by that Emperour to the weſtern parts of Phrygia Major, made up that Province which he cauſed to be called Phrygia Salutaris, for the reaſon formerly delivered.

Places of moſt obſervation in the leſſer Myſia, were 1. Abydus, ſtanding on the narroweſt of the Helleſpont, oppoſite unto Seſtos in Thrace; firſt built by the Mileſians with the conſent of Gyges K. of Lydia, to whom the Country then belonged. Memorable both in the antient and modern ſtories. In antient ſtory for the famous reſolution of the Inhabitants, when beſieged by Philip the father of Perſeus King of Macedon. For being brought by him into ſome diſtreſs, and hopeleſs of good conditions from him, the young men of the town who had bound themſelves by oath to die rather than fall into his hands, ſet fire thereof, & barbarouſly ſlew themſelves, with as many of the women & children as could be met with. Which news being brought to Philip, moved ſo litle compaſſion, that he ſaid he would give the Abydeni 3 days leiſure to die; and therfore would not ſuffer any of his ſoldiers to enter the Town, then ſet open to him, either to take the ſpoil therof, or hinder this bloudy execution, til the 3 days end. In Modern ſtory no leſs memorable for the taking of it by the Turks, in the reign of Orchanes the ſon of Ottoman, through the treaſon of the Governors daughter: who bewitched with the perſon & valor of Abderachmen, a young Turkiſh Gallant, whom ſhe had beheld from the Towers of the Caſtle, threw a letter to him as he drew neer the wall; wherein ſhe manifeſted her affection, and promiſed to make him maſter of that fortreſs, if he would perſwade his General to raiſe the ſiege, and come with a ſtrong party in the dead time of the night to receive it from her, which was done accordingly. The town continuing ever ſince in the power of the Turks, well fortified, and one of the two Caſtles ſpoken of before, which defend Conſtantinople on that ſide from all force by ſea. 2 Cyzicus, ſeated in the Propontis, in an Iland of the ſame name alſo, but ſo near the Continent, that it joyned to it by 2. bridges. The Metropolis of the Conſular Helleſpont, by conſequence an Arch-biſh. See in the proſperous times of Chriſtianity; as were all other Cities in the Roman Empire, which were the Mother-Cities or Metropoles of their ſeveral Provinces. A town of wonderful ſtrength & beauty, when firſt known to the Romans, called therfore by L. Florus, the Rome of Aſia, who gives this character alſo of it, Cyzicū nobilis civitas, arce, mœnibus, portu, turribuſq; marmoreis Aſiaticæ plagæ littora illuſtrat, that is to ſay, that the noble City of Cyzicum by the excellency of the Walls, Bulwarks, Haven, and Towers of Marble, doth beautifie and illuſtrate the ſhores of Aſia. Honored amongſt many other goodly & magnificent buildings, with a glorious Temple the pillars wherof being 4 Cubits thick, and 50 Cubits high, were each of one intire ſtone only; the whole fabrick all of poliſhed Marble, every ſtone joyned unto the other with a line of Gold. In vain be-ſie ged by Mithridates in the time of his war, who loſt before it by the ſword, peſtilence, and famine, no fewer than 300000 men, and yet could not force it. Afterwards ruined by an Earthquake, the falling Sickneſs of the Eare, as before is ſaid, it could never be reſtored to its former luſtre: the very ruins of it daily made more ruinous, by tranſporting the ſtones and Marbles to Conſtantinople, for the Embelliſhing of that City. 3 Lampſacus on the ſame Propontis, in which the beaſtly god Priapus was worſhipped in as beaſtly a figure: quem non denudo (as wittily Lactantius ſcoffeth it) ne quid appareat riſu dignum; ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the Syrian or Phœnician Baal, ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures. For this and on ſome other reaſons, Alexander had conceived againſt it ſuch an high diſpleaſure when he was in Aſia, that he reſolved to raze it to the very ground. And ſeeing Anaximenes coming to him as an Ambaſſadour from the Town to obtain his favour, commanded him to hold his peace; and ſware as by way of prevention, that he would deny whatſoever he requeſted of him: whereupon Anaximenes intreated him to deſtroy the City, which now for his oaths ſake he could not do; and ſo this wicked City at that time eſcaped. 4 Parium, ſo called, as ſome ſay, from Parius the ſon of Jaſon, a Colonie at firſt of the Mileſians, of the Romans afterwards: Troas and this, the only two Roman Colonies in all the Province. By Homer called Adraſtia; as Lampſacus in the ſame Author, is called Pityuſa. More in the land, are 5 Scepſis. 6 Hiragerme, both mentioned by Ptolemy, but of more antiquitie than fame.

Chief Cities in MYSIA MAJOR or OLYMPENA, are 1. Dainta, in the North-parts, not far from Olympus. 2 Apollonia, near a large Lake ſacred to Apollo, in the ſame parts alſo. 3 Palæ Scepſis, or Scepſis Vetus, on a Bay of the Ægean Sea, joyning upon Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia. 4 Adramyttium, mentioned Acts 27. where Saint Paul took ſhip to go to Rome. 5 Antandrus, on the ſame Sea alſo, now called Saint Dimitri; named at firſt Cimmeris from the Gomerites or Cimmeritans here inhabiting (which ſheweth that Myſia antiently was a part of Phrygia) afterwards Edonis, and at laſt Antandrus, and that either becauſe built or repaired rather by the men of Andros, an Iland of the Ægean, ſpoken of before, amongſt the Cyclades; or becauſe the Grecians having taken Polydorus the ſon of Priam, from the King of Thrace, received this City for his ranſom or rather in exchange for him, as the word doth intimate. 5 Protoſelene, on the ſame coaſt alſo. More in the land, 6 Præpemiſſus. 7 Trojanopolis. 8 Alydda, of which little memorable. 9 Pergamus, the Regal City of this tract, ſituate in a goodly plain on the banks of the River Caicus; of a ſmall Town or Fortreſs made a ſtately City by the Kings hereof, and beautified with an excellent Library containing 200000 Volumes; for the writing or tranſcribing whereof, Parchment was here firſt invented, which from hence to this day is called Pergamenum. Here alſo were thoſe coſtly hangings firſt invented which we now call Tapeſtry; by the Romans called firſt Aulæa, from Aula, ſignifying a Hall; the Hall of Attalus King hereof (by whom invented) being the firſt room furniſhed and adorned herewith. Here was born Galen the famous Phyſician, living very healthfully to the age of 140 years: his health preſerved to ſo great age, by theſe means ſpecially. 1. Never eating or drinking his fill. 2ly, Never eating any thing that was raw. 3ly, Alwaies carrying about him ſome ſweet perfumes. Finally, this was one of the ſeven Churches to which Saint John writ his Revelation. For though it were originally a City of Myſia, yet being near unto the borders of Lydia, it was reckoned as a City of the Lydian Aſia; within the limits whereof thoſe ſeven Churches were all comprehended.

As for the Kings hereof which flouriſhed here for ſome ages in ſuch wealth and ſplendor, they came but from a poor and obſcure original. The firſt of them one Philetærus, an Eunuch, belonging to Antigonus, one of the Great Alexanders greateſt Captains; and after his death to Lyſimachus K. of Thrace, by whom truſted with his money and accompts. Fearing the fury of his Maſter then grown old and tyrannous, he ſeized on the Caſtle of Pergamus, and therein on 90000 talents, which he offered with his ſervice unto Seleucus, the firſt King of Syria. But both Lyſimachus and Seleucus dying ſhortly after, he kept the money to himſelf, and reigned in this City as an abſolute King; leaving the kingdom at his death to his Brother Eumenes, no better man than a poor Carter, til raiſed by the fortunes of this Eunuch. Eumenes furniſhed with mony, though of no great territory, was able by the Galls and other Mercenaries, not only to preſerve himſelf againſt the Syrian Kings, who laid claim to his City, but alſo to enlarge his bounds as he ſaw occaſion. But the main improvement of this kingdom hapned in the daies of Eumenes the ſecond, the ſon of Attalus, the brother and ſucceſſor of this Eumenes: who being uſeful to the Romans in their wars againſt Philip of Macedon, and Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, was liberally rewarded by them with the Provinces of Lydia, Phrygia, Æolis, Ionia, Troas, and both the Myſias; which they had taken from Antiochus in the end of that war. The reſt of the affairs hereof, till it fell in fine unto the Romans, take here in this ſhort Catalogue of

The KINGS of PERGAMUS.

A. M.

3668 1 Philetærus, the firſt King of Pergamus, of whom before. 20.

3688 2 Eumenes, brother, or as ſome ſay, the brothers ſon of Philetærus, vanquiſhed Antiochus, ſurnamed Hierax, in a fight near Sardis, and awed Seleucus Callinicus, both Kings of Syria. 22.

3710 3 Attalus, brother of Eumenes, reſtored Ariarathes the Cappadocian to his kingdom, and diſcomfited the Galls, compelling them to keep themſelves within the Country ſince named Galatia. A Confederate of the Romans, and by them much courted.

3754 4 Eumenes II. ſon of Attalus, gratified by the Romans with the ſpoils of Antiochus. He was an hereditarie Enemie to the Kingdom of Macedon, which he laboured the Romans to deſtroy, destroy, as in fine they did; and thereby finding no more use of these Pergamon Kings, began to grow to less liking with them. Asia spec. Dict.

3782 5 Attalus II. Brother of Eumenes, to whom the Kingdom was offered by the Romans in the life of his brother, then less gracious with them; but he most gallantly refused it, to the great indignation of the Roman Senate.

3792 6 Eumenes III. brother of Attalus the second, and Tutor or Protector to his Nephew Attalus, in whose minority he governed the estate, as King.

3813 7 Attalus III. son of Attalus the second, succeeded on the death of his Uncle Eumenes, and having held the Kingdom but five years only, deceased without issue, and bequeathed it by his last Will unto the Romans. But before the Romans had possession of so great a Legacy, Aristonicus the base son of Eumenes, made himself master of Mindus, Colophon, Samos, and many other Towns and estates hereof. Against whom the Romans making war were aided by the greatest part of the Asian Kings; not seeing their own danger and destruction to draw near unto them, by letting such a potent neighbour come amongst them, to undo them all. But the Romans got little by this war, though they had the better of it. For being now made masters of the riches and sweets of Asia, they took with them their vices also: growing thereby to great riot, and unparalleld luxurie; which overcame the rigor and severity of their former discipline, and made them apt for faction, and those bloody quarrels, which proved the ruine of their State. So truly was it said by Justine, Sic Asia facta Romanorum, cum opibus suis vitia quoque sua Romam transmisit. This kingdom, taking it in the largest extent thereof, being thus subdued and setled as a Roman Province, had the name of Asia, according to the name of the Greater Continent; by Ptolemie, and others, called Asia Propria: continuing under the subjection of the Roman Emperours, til the translating of the Imperial seat unto Constantinople; as after that unto the Emperours of the East, till conquered piece-meal by the Turks of the Selzuccian family. Which being ended in the person of Aladine the second, those parts hereof which lay next Troas, made up the Kingdom of Caraſan, or Caraſa-Illi; as those which had been laid to the Greater Phrygia, made up the Aidinian: both of them swallowed up long since by the Ottoman Kings, the Accessories running the same fortune as the Principals did.

II. ASIA SPECIALIUS DICTA.

Besides the Proper Asia spoken of before, containing all the Provinces of the Pergamon kingdom, there was one part hereof which antiently had the name of Asia, before it was communicated to the greater Continent, or this whole Peninsula. This for distinctions sake the Romans called the PROCONSULAR ASIA; because committed to the government of one of their Proconsuls (who had his residence in Ephesus, the principal City of this Province) together with the Consular Hellespont, and the Province of the Isles of Asia. This we have spoken of before, as also how the Countrey lying about Ephesus, had more especially the name of Asia, than any other: so specially, that Erasmus thereupon inferreth, that by Asia in the New Testament, (but more peculiarly in the Acts) is meant that part of Asia only in which Ephesus standeth.

This being agreed on for the name, we shall bound it on the East with Lydia, whereof it was antiently a part; on the West, with the Ægean Sea; on the North, with Mysia; and on the South, with Caria. And having so bounded it, we shall divide it into the two Regions of ÆOLIS, and IONIA: that of Æolis lying on the North, towards Mysia; as Ionia doth upon the South, towards Caria: possessed both of them by Greek Nations, and of them so named.

Principal Towns in ÆOLIS, are 1. Acarnea, over against the Isle of Lesbos, the Royal seat sometimes of the Tyrant Hermias; who being once a Scholar of Aristotles, but unworthy of so good Master, seized on this City, and here committed so great cruelties, that at last he was taken by the people, sewed in an Oxes hide, and so baited to death. 2 Pitane, on a little River so named, falling into Caicus, not far from the influx or fall thereof into the Ægean; in which Town they had an Art of making bricks which would swim on the water. 3 Elæa, on the mouth of Caicus, the Port-Town to Pergamus. 4 Myrina, afterwards in honour of Augustus, called Sebastopolis. 5 Cene, by Strabo called Cane, by Mela, Cannæ, not far from a Promontorie of the same name. 6 Cuma, the principal and greatest of all Æolis, the birth-place of Ephorus a learned man of elder times; and the habitation of Sibylla, sirnamed Cumana, to difference her from Sibylla Cumæa, so named from Cumæ, a City of the Realm of Naples. 7 Phocæa, a Colonie of the Athenians, so named from the multitudes of Sea Calves (the Greeks call them Phocæ) which thrust themselves ashore at the building of it. The people hereof over-burdened by the Persians, and impatient of so great servitude as was laid upon them, forsook their Countrey, binding themselves by a fearful oath, never more to return unto it and after many and long wanderings came at last into Gaul, where they founded the famous City of Marseilles.

The Inhabitants of this little Region are by Josephus said to be descended of Elisha the son of Javan who therefore calleth them by the name of Elisæi. And it is possible enough that so it was. Elisha being planted in Greece, where he gave name to Elis, one of the Provinces of Peloponnesus; from whence some of his race in succeeding times might pass over into Asia, and possess those coasts. For that they were a Greek people, is confessed by all; the Æolick dialect or phrase of speech, taking name from hence. Not otherwise much mentioned in the course of story, than as partakers of the same fortunes with the rest of their Asian neighbours before related, and so not necessary to be now repeated.

IONIA, as a larger tract, requires a more particular and punctual description. For here the River Asia spec. dict.

Lycus falleth into the Mæander, and here Mæander and Caystrus, two of the most famous Rivers of Asia Minor, (of which more hereafter) fall into the Ægean. Here is the renowned City of Ephesus, honored with one of the worlds seven wonders, the long abode of S. Paul, and the death & sepulture of Saint John; the Promontory Trogyllium, with a little Isle adjoyning of the same name, mentioned Acts 20. v. 15.

Principal Cities of this tract, are 1. Myas, on an arm of the Sea, assigned by Artaxerxes, together with Lampsacus, and Magnesia, to Themistocles; when being banished his own Country, he fled to his greatest Enemy for entertainment; and there met with more safety than Athens would, and more honour than it could afford him; So that he well might say (as he often did) Periissem nisi periissem. And on the other side, the King was so overjoyed at his coming to him, (as having now upon his side the man who had most hindered him in the Conquest of Greece) that many times in his sleep he was heard to clap his hands, and say, Habeo Themistoclem Atheniensem. In after times, the water drawing further off, the soyl brought forth such an innumerable multitude of fleas, that the Inhabitants were fain to forsake the City, and with their bag and baggage to retire to Miletus: nothing hereof being left but the name and memory in the time of Pausanias. 2. Erythra, memorable for the habitation of one of the Sibyls, from hence called Sibylla Erythræa; of which Propheteſſes we shall speak more when we come to Africk. 3. Lebedus, of most note in the elder times, for those publick Plaies which were here annually held in the honour of Bacchus. 4. Clazomene, situate on a small Ilet, near unto the shore, of much esteem amongst the Romans for the wines there growing; and no less honoured by the Asians for a beautifull Temple of Apollo seated near unto it. 5. Priene, the birth-place of Bias, one of the seven wise-men of Greece. 6. Ipsus, renowned for the great battel betwixt Antigonus and Seleucus, two of Alexanders chief Commanders; the Victory wherein falling to Seleucus, with the death of his Adversary, estated him in all the Conquests of his Master, except Egypt only. 7. Teos, the birth-place of Anacreon, that lascivious and drunken Poet, hence surnamed Teius; the Ovid of the Grecians both for wit and wantonesse: of both which it may well be doubted, whether the smoothnesse of the verse, or the wantonesse of their expressions, be the more predominant. 8. Smyrna, a fair and antient City, on a Bay thence named the Bay of Smyrna: the greatest part whereof lay towards the Sea, but the fairest on the side of an hill overlooking the waters. Destroyed by the Lydians, it was re-edified by Antigonus and Lysimachus, two of Alexanders great Commanders; of good accompt in the time of the Romans, and one of the seven Asian Churches, to which Saint John inscribed his Revelation. Much traded and frequented to this very day, especially for Chamlets, Grograines, and such stuffs; made for the most part at Ancyra, the chief Town of Galatia, and here vended to the forein Merchant. For government of the trade whereof, and of other commodities of these parts, the English Merchants have an Officer called the Consul of Smyrna. In old time there was in it, amongst others, a goodly Temple dedicated unto Homer, said to be born in this City, and to have writ his Poems in a Cave hard by. 9. Colophon; most memorable for the Inhabitants of it, so skilled in horse-man-ship, that the side on which they served in war was sure of Victory; whereupon Colophonem addere, to put a good end to any business, grew into a Proverb. It was also another of those Cities, which so ambitiously contended for the birth of Homer; of which there were seven in all, as the old Verses tell us, saying,

Septem urbes certant de stirpe insignis Homeri,
Smyrna, Rhodos, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athenæ.

Whether Homer purposely concealed his Country, that all places might challenge him for their's, I am not able to say: But sure I am that Paterculus speaketh it in the commendation of Hesiodus (the next Greek Poet after him in course of time) that he had specified his birth-place: Qui vitavit ne in id quod Homerus inciderit, patriam & parentes testatus est. 10 Ephesus, the Metropolis of the Roman Asia, and the seat of the Primate of the Asian Diocese: memorable in the purest times of Christianity, for being the Episcopal See of Timothy the Evangelist, the first Bishop hereof; 2ly. In that St. Paul directed to the people of it, one of his Epistles; and 3ly. for the burial of St. John the Apostle, who by some learned men of the elder times, is said to have gone alive into his Grave, and that he is not dead, but sleeping; building that thought upon that saying which went abroad among the Brethren, that that Disciple should not die. John 21. v. 23. And no lesse memorable amongst the Gentiles for that sumptuous and magnificent Temple here consecrated to Diana; which for the largeneſse, furniture, and workmanship of it, was accompted one of the wonders of the World. The length thereof said to be 425 foot, 220 foot in breadth; suppported with 127 Pillars of Marble seventy foot in height; of which twenty seven were most curiously engraven, and all the rest of Marble polished. The model of it contrived by one Cteſiphon, and that with so much Art and curiosity of Architecture, that it took up two hundred years before it was finished. When finished it was fired seven times, the last time by Erastratus, only to get himself a name: which hapning on the same night in which Alexander the Great was born, gave occasion to that weighty but witty scoff, that Diana (she was counted one of the Godesses of midwifery) could not attend the preservation of her Temple, being then busied at the birth of so great a Prince.

As for those Iones, or Ionians, they were no doubt the descendants of Javan, the fourth son of Japhet, as hath been shewn before in our general Preface: but whether they came hither out of Græcia, or passed from hence into that Country, hath been made a question. The Athenians boasting of themselves to be Aborigines, men growing as it were out of the Soil it self, without any Ancestors; report that those Ionians were a Colonie of their Plantation. But Hecataus in Strabo doth affirm the anticontrary, Saying, that the Athenians or Iones of Greece, came from thoſe of Aſia; for that Attica was antiently called Ionia, Plutarch in the life of Theſeus doth declare expreſly. Moſt probable it is, that Heccataus was in the right; theſe parts of Aſia lying ſo directly in the way from the valley of Shinaar unto Greece, that Javan may very well be thought to leave ſome of his company here, when he ferried the reſt over to the oppoſite Continent. I know Pauſanias ignorant of their true antiquity, deriveth them from Ion the ſon of Xuthus, and grandchild of Deucalion: wherein he came ſo near the truth, though he miſſed the men, that it was the Grandſon of that man who eſcaped the flood, from whom both the Athenians and thoſe Ionians had their true original. In regard of which relations betwixt the Nations, the Athenians gave aid to thoſe Ionians againſt the Perſians; who on the overthrow given to Cræſus, pretended to the Lordſhip or Dominion of Aſia, and conquered them in the time of Cyrus, the firſt Perſian Monarch. Upon which ground, and the ſending of freſh aid to them upon their revolt in the time of Darius, that King firſt undertook the invaſion of Greece: Xerxes and the ſucceeding Kings purſuing that firſt quarrel with great animoſities. After this yeelding to the times they followed the fortune of the ſtrongeſt, ſubject ſucceſſively to the Perſians, Macedonians, Romans, Conſtantinopolitans, and Turks, till the death of Aladine before mentioned: when both Æolis and Ionia got a new name, and are now called Sarcan, from Sarachan a Turkiſh Captain, who on the death of that Aladine ſeiſed upon this Country, and erected here a petit Kingdom, long ſince ſubdued by thoſe of the race of Ottoman.

LYDIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Phrygia Major, and ſome part of Piſidia, from which ſeparated by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the Weſt, with Æolis and Ionia, or Aſia ſpecially ſo called; on the North, with the Greater Myſia; on the South, with Caria. So called from Lud, the ſon of Sem, by ſome of whoſe poſterity it was firſt inhabited. In the full Latitude and extent thereof, as antiently, comprehending Æolis and Ionia, the adjoyning Provinces, it made the Lydian Aſia ſpoken of before; within the verge whereof all the ſeven Churches were contained, mentioned by Saint John in the Revelation.

The people of this Country are ſaid to have been the firſt coyners of money, the firſt Huckſters and Pedlers, and the firſt inventers of dice, ball, cheſs, and the like games: neceſſity and hunger therunto enforcing them, according to that of Perſius, Artis Magiſter, ingeniiq; largitor venter. For being ſorely vext with famine, in the time of Atis, one of the progenitors of Omphale, they deviſed theſe games; and every ſecond day playing at them, beguiled their hungry bellies. Thus for 22 years, they continued playing and eating by turns: but then ſeeing that themſelves were more fruitfull in getting and bearing children, than the ſoil was at that time in bringing forth ſuſtenance to maintain them; they ſent a Colony into Italy under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, the ſon of Atis, who planted in that Country, called at firſt Tyrrhenia, and afterward Tuſcany.

This Country was alſo called Mœonia, and was thought to have been the native ſoil of Homer, in regard that Colophon and Smyrna, two of the ſeven contending Cities, and thoſe which ſeem to have moſt colour for their claim, were antiently accounted as parts of Lydia, as was ſaid before. Hence Homer hath the name of Mœonides, and Mœonius Vates: and in ſome Authors Carmen Mœonium is uſed for Homers Poetical abilities, as Carmine Mœonio conſurgere, in Ovid. Bacchus is alſo called ſometimes by the name of Mœonius; but for a very different reaſon, viz. becauſe antiently there were no trees in all this Country but the vine only.

Principal Mountains of this Country are 1. Sipylus, and 2. Tmolus, this laſt of moſt accompt in regard of the great fruitfullneſe of it, covered over with Vines, and yeelding abundance of the beſt Saffron. Chief Rivers of it are 1. Hermus, which riſing out of Phrygia Major, paſſeth only by the skirts hereof, and ſo falleth into a fair Bay of the Ægean, opening towards the Iſle of Clazomene. 2. Pactolus, which riſing at the foot of Mount Tmolus, falleth not long after into Hermus; famous amongſt the Poets for its golden ſands. 3. Cayſtrus, no leſſe notable for the abundance of Swans which ſwim thereon, whoſe fountain is in Phrygia Major alſo, near the borders hereof; and his fall in the Ægean alſo over againſt the Iſle of Samos. 4. Mæander, which riſing out of a branch of the Taurus, in the furtheſt parts of the ſaid Phrygia, towards Lycaonia; paſſeth by Magneſia, and endeth his courſe in the ſame Sea, near the City of Epheſus. A River famous for its many turnings in and out, 600 at the leaſt, as Pruſeus counteth them. Of which in general thus the Poet,

Mæander toties qui terris errat eiſdem,
Et lapſas in ſe, ſæpe retoquet aquas.

That is to ſay,

Mæander wandring in the ſelf ſame ſoil,
Whoſe waters meeting do as oft recoil.

And in another paſſage thus.

Quique recurvatis, ludit Mæander in undis.

Mæan-

Lydia.

Mæander plaies his watry prancks,
Inhis ſo many winding banks.

The Country by reaſon of theſe Rivers was exceeding fruitfull, abounding in all ſorts both of wealth and pleaſures, well cultivated and manured above ground, and under-neath inriched with prodigal veins of Gold and Silver, and ſome precious gemmes. Which made the people, after their overthrow by Cyrus, to become more ſenſual and voluptuous, and leſſe fit for action, than any plot of their new Matters could have brought them to; had not the natural delicacies of the ſoil it ſelf contributed to the advancement of their deſign. And yet before they were ſufficiently infamous for their luxury, and exceſs of riot, when beſt ſeen in wars: ſo that it is a marvail they were able to prevail on the neighbour Nations, and bring them under their command; as in the times of ſome of Cræſus predeceſſors, it is ſaid they did. Unleſſe perhaps they did participate of the temper of Mœcenas, the great favorite of Auguſtus Cæſar, of whom Paterculus hath left this Character: ubi res vigiliam exigeret erat ſanè inſomnis, providens, & agendi ſciens; ſimulac aliquid ex negotio remitti poſſit, otio ac mollitie penè ultra fœminam fluens, No man more vigilant than he in times of buſineſs, nor woman more effeminate in his times of leiſure.

Principal Cities of this Country were 1. Sardis, on both ſides of Pactolus, the ſeat royal of Cræſus, and the Kings of Lydia; till the conqueſt of Lydia by the Perſians. After which time, being taken by the Græcians, it ſo ſtartled Xerxes, that he commanded one of his Attendants, to ſay aloud every day, whilſt he was at dinner, that the Grecians had taken Sardis; continuing that Memento till it was recovered. Which courſe (I note this only by the way) was commonly obſerved in the Parliaments of France, as long as Calice did remain in the hands of the Engliſh; and might be profitably revived, till again recovered from the French. Overthrown by a moſt terrible Earth-quake (to which diſeaſe moſt of theſe Aſian Cities had been very much ſubject) it was re-edified again at the coſt of Tiberius; continuing long after the Metropolis of this Province, and one of the ſeven Churches of the Lydian Aſia, of which the holy Spirit took ſuch ſpecial notice. The others (beſides Pergamus, already mentioned in the Greater Myſia, and Epheſus, and Smyrna, in the Proper Aſia) were 2. Philadelphia, near, or on the banks of the River Cayſtrus, the ſecond City in accompt next to Sardis it ſelf: and honoured with the dignity of a Metropolitan, as appeareth by the Acts of the Conſtantinopolitan Council, where Euſtathius Biſhop hereof doth ſubſcribe himſelf, Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Φιλαδελφέων Μητροπόλεως, Biſhop of the Metropolis of Philadelphia, in the Province of Lydia. 3. Thiatyra, honoured with the ſame privilege alſo, as appears by the conſtant Order, obſerved as well in the Civil as Eccleſiaſtical Catalogues of the Cities belonging to this Province. The reaſon whereof (for otherwiſe it was contrary to the practice both of Church and State, to have in one Province more than one Metropolis) was the reſpect had to thoſe ſeveral Churches, in regard of their primitive antiquity, and the foundation of them by St. John the Apoſtle, as it was generally believed. 4. Laodicea, by Ptolemy placed amongſt the Cities of this Province, as it ſtood in his time, and before: but afterwards laid by Conſtantine to the Greater Phrygia, and made the Metropolis thereof (which honour Hierapolis had before enjoyed) it being well obſerved by Strabo, that the Romans did not diſpoſe of their Provinces according to Nations; ἀλλὰ κατ' ἄλλον τρόπον διατάξαι τὰς διοικήσεις, ὃν ἂν τὰς πολιτικὰς διαιρέσεις, but according to thoſe diſtricts, or Circuits, in which they kept their Courts of juſtice. Next unto theſe, there were of eſpecial conſideration. 5. Magneſia ad Mæandrum, ſo called becauſe ſituate on that River, to difference it from 6. Magneſia penes Sipylum montem, another of the ſame name near the hill Sipylus. The firſt aſſigned over to Themiſtocles, together with Myus and Lampſacus, as was ſaid before. The other memorable for the great battel fought near unto it, betwixt Antiochus and the Romans; the loſs whereof falling unto Antiochus, occaſioned the loſs of all his Aſian Provinces on this ſide of Taurus, and the payment of 15000 talents for the charge of the war, beſides ſome other hard conditions then impoſed upon him. 7. Alabanda, oppoſite to Magneſia on the other ſide of Mæander, the people whereof, immediatly on the overthrow of Antiochus, not only ſent Ambaſſadors to Rome to congratulate with them, as many other Nations did; but built a Temple to it, and appointed Anniverſary Games to be celebrated in the honour of that new-made Goddeſſe. A thing more to be wondred at in the Roman Senate for receiving, than in this poor people for beſtowing on their City ſo divine an honour. 8. Trallis, on the banks of Cayſtrus, to the Inhabitants whereof, Ignatius that Reverend Biſhop and godly Marty, writ the Epiſtle ad Trallenſes.

That the Lydians were derived from Lud the ſon of Sem, is teſtified by the general conſent of ſuch antient writers as treat of the diſperſions of the Sons of Noah: to which opinion the nearneſs of the names of Lud, Ludin, and Lydi, (or Λύδοι, as the Grecians call them) ſeems to give good countenance. Nor ſhall I here diſpute it further, as a point unqueſtioned: the tale of Lydus, I know not what Nobleman that ſhould name this Country, being taken up amongſt the Greeks, for want of more certain truths. Once ſetled here, they grew up ſuddenly to a kingdom; Amongſt the antient Kings whereof are numbred Manes as the firſt, Cotis, and Atis, and then Aſius, (from whom Lydia firſt, and after all the Continent, had the name of Aſia) as his immediate Succeſſors. After them I find mention of one Cambletes, ſaid by Athenæus to be ſo great a Gormandizer, that in his ſleep he eat his wife; and finding her hand in his mouth next morning, ſlew himſelf for ſhame: and of another named Andramytes, as infamous for his filthy luſts, as Cambletes for gluttony. But the race of theſe Kings ending in Omphale, the miſtreſs of Hercules, who made that valiant Champion ſpin amongſt her Damoſels; the Heraclidæ or poſterity of Hercules ſucceeded next: of whom there is no conſtant and continued ſucceſſion till the time of Ardiſius, the 19. in order of that line; who began his reign not long before the building of the City of Rome. Under his ſucceſſors the affairs hereof ſo exceedingly proſpered, eſpecially under Haliattes the Father of Cræſus, that Phrygia, Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Myſia, Caria, Æolis, Doris, and Ionia, acknowledged themſelves Vaſſals to this Crown: conceived both in wealth and power to be equal to the Ægyptian, Babylonian, or Median Kingdoms, till the Conqueſt of Syria and Egypt, by Nebuchadnezzar, gave him the preheminence. But being come unto the height it received a fall in the perſon of Cræſus, the Succeſſor of him who ſo much advanced it. The Kings hereof from the time of the ſaid Ardiſius, take in order following. Caria.

The KINGS of LYDIA.
